ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT

The committee met at 3.15 o'clock, p.m., in committee room No. 1.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, we are going to deal with the estimates of The Department of Trade and Development. I am going to ask the minister (Mr. Randall) to introduce the heads of his departments. Members should direct their questions to me, then to the minister who can then decide whether to answer the questions or whether he will direct them to his staff.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): All right, Mr. Chairman. I am told I can sit down; I do not have to stand. No work to do today.

Gentlemen, I will introduce the directors of the departments: My deputy minister, Mr. S. W. Clarkson, whom you all know; Mr. K. Croswell; Mrs. Cameron's assistant who looks after the bookkeeping; J. W. Ramsay, of special projects; Mr. W. A. Fowler, trade and industry division; Mr. A. Clark, immigration branch, Mr. J. J. Graham and Mr. Ross Radford of trade and industry; and Mr. P. Goyette of Ontario Housing Corporation; Mr. A. Etchen and Mr. D. B. Grant of Ontario Development Corporation; and Mr Don Holland of the research section.

Mr. Chairman: Any questions on vote 2201?

An hon. member: Does the minister have an opening statement?

Mr. Chairman: He has not. We are starting right off with questions.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I apologize for not knowing the format. I thought we were going to follow the same procedure as in the House, when the minister made a statement and the official opposition made its statement and the New Democratic Party—

Mr. Chairman: There is nothing wrong—the member for Grey-Bruce—there is nothing wrong with you going ahead and making your statement. I understand you are representing your party. Would you like to make your presentation?

Mr. Sargent: Was that not the format of these estimates last year?

Mr. Chairman: Well, the minister can decide whether or not he wants to make any opening remarks, and he does not care to make any. But it is quite all right for you to go ahead with your remarks.

Mr. Sargent: Well, I certainly have a lot to say about the operation of this department. I do not think anyone should play down the importance of our analysis of these very important departments of the Treasury, and it seems to me we should be hearing from the minister and possibly the members of the opposition.

Why I am concerned is the fact that for too long this department has gone along irresponsibly, not being responsible to anyone. And I am amazed to find that in the analysis throughout the year on these estimates we are probably losing about $75 million unnecessarily in this department; and yet they claim that it is one of the most successful, I guess, of government operations, only losing $75 million.

At the outset may I remind the minister that the main function of government is the allocation of resources and from my analysis I am still of the opinion that the allocating of resources in this province and the great moneys distributed by this department reveals the most flagrant abuses in the distribution and handling of public funds that I have ever seen in 30 years of public life.

Over the years I have been increasingly critical of this department. This has been tempered, however, by my high regard for the business ability of the minister; and along with that my admiration for his stick handling, his continual ability to do many political hat tricks. I have seen him pull a lot of stuff out of the hat and a lot of the time he uses business bluffs, but basically that is what this department has been set up to do—to be a public relations agency, a catch-all, a big umbrella for the government to distribute largesse and curry favour for the party.

And going back, this department was set up under the very able hands of Robert Macaulay. The motivation then was to control the distribution of money to serve the party well. Over the years this has served the party very well. And now we have quite an umbrella here, we have trade and industrial development, immigration, research and development, Ontario Economic Council, exposition development, Ontario Development Corporation and the OHC.

Now included in this umbrella we have the big business catch-all, we have the new Harbour City, the world's fair exposition, the film making, the million dollar Ontario Place, the business junkets—you name it.

Everything, Mr. Minister, everything in this whole department is geared to big business. And let us have a look at it.

The first vote, 2201, is $3 million worth of spending, roughly, $2.9 million. This includes $1.25 million in films for PR for big business. The second vote, a $3 million vote, includes half a million dollars for travelling expenses, $1 million for trade fairs; all for big business.

The third vote, a third of a million dollars, is for selecting skilled immigrants for big business. The fifth vote, a fifth of a million dollars, is geared to support big business. The sixth vote, $9 million, is for Osaka and Ontario Place.

Right? To this point, we have these six votes and have come to the sum of $18 million for and on behalf of big business. And to date not one penny is for the small, independent businessman.

But we are only getting started. We have $18 million now for big business; but the sector of our economy, in the free enterprise system, that keeps the ball rolling, that supplies the money to do all these things, supplies most of it or at least part of it, is the small independent businessman.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: I am getting to the fact that this whole department is geared for big business, but not one cent is spent in the interest of the small independent businessman.

Mr. Minister, could you tell me how many small independent businessmen there are in Ontario today? I do not know, but I can tell you that in one city there are 1,200 retail stores, and this is only one category of the independent small businessmen in our economy.

I am not entirely blaming the minister for this mess that we have to talk about today. He inherited this government policy when he took over, and they can thank God they have a man who has the ability to run this scandalous operation. If we could end up with something for the good of the other part of the economy, then we will have served our purpose in discussing the estimate.

But I can tell you this, in one city of 1,200 retail stores—and these people are in a very hazardous business, the retail business—the best studies available by the Mercantile Credit Agency indicate that the average retail store lives only 66 months. In this city of 1,200 stores we are talking about, 30 of these go out of business every month, or 360 stores yearly. On the other hand, 32 new stores are established monthly only to lose their capital in a few months.

But getting back to the vote, we have already committed $18 million on behalf of big business. Now let us see what other goodies we have in these votes.

In vote 2207, we see the terms of reference for the Ontario Development Corporation.

The terms of reference are:

The Ontario Development Corporation makes or guarantees loans and provides technical, business and financial services to encourage and assist in the development and diversification of industry in Ontario.

That is a real horse laugh. Technical and business and financial assistance! That is a lot of nonsense. The only reason for any assistance in the last eight or 10 years of my watching this department, is that you screen the people who come to you for money to find out what political stripe they are and if it is going to help the party to put the loan in that area.

Now I suggest to you, and I will try to prove, that this whole department is a political tool of the government.

But as I said, these loans we have made represent $18 million for big business at this point; and on top of this, in this Ontario Development Corporation, we will have millions of dollars from Ontario's taxpayers, a lot generated by these small independent businessmen. Hundreds of thousands generate this money which is given in millions of dollars to U.S. firms in the excess profits bracket across the border. We are making them forgiveness loans from money generated by small independent businessmen; yet the small independent businessman here in Canada, in Ontario, cannot go to the bank for a loan of five cents.

So we give these forgiveness loans to the American corporation in the belief that it creates an incentive. Now Mr. Minister, I have made the statement that I feel this department is a tool for these purposes. And once and for all, and for the last time, I want to prove this point to you. I remember I once had a chance to put this on the record partly. And throughout the years this department, as it is today, has continued to do this. In 1962, when this department was formulated by Mr. Macaulay, I was in Owen Sound, not politically motivated. The ODC was formed, and the hon. Mackinnon Phillips had the Tory seat. Fairfield Manufacturing came along, and we got the first loan of the ODC.

Now, any time I brought this up in the House, I have had the whole government opposition to heckle me and nail me down, and it never got on the record what I had to say. The minister continually scoffed at it.

But I have grown up politically, Mr. Minister. You do not scare me any more. In fact, no one has ever scared me, but I have not had a chance to put the case.

I tell you, sir, and Mr. Chairman, I tell you today that if anything I say is not correct, I stake my seat on it, and I give you my word of honour I will leave the House if I see it is not true.

So, Mr. Minister, let no one say that I am not saying the truth.

Mr. S. Apps (Kingston and the Islands): That does not prove what you said.

An hon. member: Or what is to come!

Mr. Sargent: What is to come?

I cannot back up what it says in the books, because no one knows what the hell is in the books. We just play by guess and by god as to what is in the book.

But when I went to Owen Sound, it had been requested and approved, and we had the first loan. And for a while the industry that had it settled down. But the directors found after about a year of operation that it was not going to go. So they met in May. But the Ontario elections were on, and I was the Liberal candidate.

So the director of the company got in touch with Mr. Etchen's office and said, "We want to close this operation." Mr. Etchen's office said, "No, keep it going. Keep the money going in." At this point, it was $170,000—I do not know what it was; it does not matter. The election battle was continued, the plant continued to lose money, but the money kept coming in from ODC to a Conservative riding.

The directors of the company could not figure out why he could not close the operation, because it would never pay. On election day, the member for Grey-Bruce became a Liberal, and he won by about 10 votes. The next morning the order came through: "Close the plant." And there were 30 or 40 people who lost their jobs.

That was my first association with this department, and over the years it has never changed one iota. For instance, I was talking to the minister about a trip I made to the United States. I came down to see about mobile housing, because there was a young chap in Owen Sound who was very successful in business, and he was going into the mobile housing field. So I went down and got him the dope on mobile homes in the United States, and I came back with the information that two-thirds of all the new homes in the United States last year were mobile trailers and mobile homes.

The minister was impressed. I told the minister about it. I brought him back the file and gave it to him. I told him the FHA had approved mobile homes and motor homes for federal grants and that we would be well advised to consider that in Ontario. The minister was impressed; he said he thought he would talk to Ottawa about it. He was encouraging me on the fact that this was a good operation; in the future it could satisfy the need for housing.

A few weeks ago, this man said that he has $200,000 in orders and now where would he build a plant; he needed to expand. He went to the ODC, at my suggestion, to get a loan. He has been turned down. He needed the loan to expand and improve his business operation, to elevate his properties. He was turned down, but the hon. provincial Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) made a request for up to $50,000 to renovate two aircraft hangars in Centralia, and that was approved.

In a letter to Mr. Woods on April 21—Mr. Woods will have received this—he thanked Mr. Woods and said, "I am sorry, you have two sets of values; I do not qualify." In fact, he says, "I am not in the Conservative riding." That is a matter of record; the minister knows this. This man today is very successful; he visits anybody; but he cannot get credit; he cannot get bank credit; he may have to go out of business. He has $200,000 in orders sitting there, but he cannot get any help from this department.

We have the conventional loans for 1969—well, there are 39 loans made here, and 32 of them are made in the riding where there are Conservative members. The first loan was made to Port Arthur; the next one to Mr. Simonett; Mr. Villeneuve; hon. James Auld; Mr. Guindon; Alex Carruthers; hon. Mr. MacNaughton; Ian Deans got one too for Wentworth. This is one for Mr. Gilbertson, René Brunelle.

An hon. member: I would say that is coincidence.

Another hon. member: Well, we are a little closer to power than they are.

Mr. Sargent: Leo Bernier; Pat Reid; Elmer Sopha; J. Stokes—there are three in a row there—Erskine Johnston; Ray Connell; J. R. Simonett; F. M. Cass; Clarke Rollins; George Gomme; the hon. James Auld. And the member for Kingston and the Islands did a great job—he scored pretty heavily, did he not?

An hon. member: Read them all.

Mr. Sargent: Norris Whitney; Fern Guindon—that is out of 10 to date, and he is not even helping.

An hon. member: Right!

Mr. Sargent: Rev. Downer; Alex Carruthers; Donald Paterson; Eric Winkler; James Allan; the hon. Charles MacNaughton again; John Spence got one or two; Lorne Henderson; Ken Bolton; James Allan; Russell Rowe; William Newman Gordon Innes; Douglas Kennedy; Hugh Edighoffer; Charles MacNaughton again; Rev. A. W. Downer; Glen Hodgson; Harry Worton; Don Deacon; Allan Reuter—32 out of 39.

An hon. member: These are the first 32—

Mr. Sargent: Thirty-two of thirty-nine; thirty-two all the same.

Mr. Chairman: I just counted about 14 in opposition members' ridings—maybe I do not count well.

An hon. member: You may find that it is important.

Mr. Sargent: We find out that this department has been loaning these forgiveness loans in large amounts to American corporations.

An hon. member: Can I ask a question? Are these ODC loans or are they EIO loans?

Mr. Sargent: It is a combination of both—EIO and ODC. In 1969 there were 39 loans.

An hon. member: Just for one year?

Mr. Sargent: The year 1968 was not a hell of a lot better. It is pretty well the same picture. You know back over the years, that is the ball game, as it were, insofar as these very civil people are concerned. I think they take the policy from the government. I have come to them—Mr. X let's say, and I know the people—I have come to them repeatedly. I know I have not a chance of a snowball in hell of getting my deal through. Never once have I gotten a deal through. But they lead me down the garden path, have the men go back and forth hopefully to do all this nonsense and nothing happens.

In the motel field—I happen to know the great need for help in the motel field—we provide about $200 million of tax revenue at least through room rents and restaurant meals tax to the government, and in the last four years there have been four loans put through.

Who were they put through for? Mr. Caswell, the head of the Conservative Party up north got a $100,000 loan. The Seagrams group, for Holiday Inn, received a $435,000 loan.

Mr. Chairman: Could I interrupt? Once the bell rings we must adjourn until the vote is over and then we can come back. So we will adjourn now until the vote is over and then resume.

The committee resumed at 3:55 p.m.

Mr. Chairman: Is the member for Grey-Bruce ready?

Mr. Sargent: Give me a minute will you, sir, please?

Mr. Chairman: Sure, okay!

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Before the bell rang, I was discussing the conventional loans and the EIO loans and I apologize to the Chair and to the minister that there is something I left out. I will start again.

I had neglected to read the fact that under Eric Winkler of Grey South, I did not read that there was a loan of $81,000 for General Signet of Canada in Owen Sound and RBW, Owen Sound, $22,000. These are loans that I would have nothing to do with. They are not requests of mine. They were in the area of big business.

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey South): They are of no value to you either.

Mr. Sargent: That was a dirty remark. They are very important to our economy and I think it is nice. We have to live the odd wee bit too.

But going back to my previous submission, I think it was 39 loans and it is significant that in many of these loans I did not give you totals; as in the Frontenac-Addington area of Mr. Simonett, there is a loan for $65,000 to Mr. MacPherson, $435,000 to Mr.—

Mr. Apps: That was not in Mr. Simonett's riding, that was in the riding of Kingston and the Islands.

Mr. Sargent: You are wrong. It is Frontenac, I am positive of that.

Anyway they went for six or seven loans. The point of my position is that the members who were held in high regard by the heirarchy in Queen's Park, they get all the action.

Mr. Apps: Can I make a comment, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: I do not think you can, member for Kingston and the Islands. The same rules apply here as they do in the House and you are not allowed to do it in the House.

Mr. Sargent: I am not—

Mr. Apps: Mr. Chairman, in that connection, I would like to point out to the members that for the past three years, two large companies have closed down in Kingston. There was Fairbank Morse with a loss of over 200 jobs and the Kingston Shipyards with approximately the same.

Mr. Chairman: Why did they close down?

Mr. Apps: I do not want to blame some other government so I am not going to tell you why they closed down. We are going to have to persuade others to come to Kingston. I might mention here that those that have located there do not come anywhere close yet to making up the deficit that has taken place with the loss of those two other companies.

I might also mention the fact that these are not big business loans. They are smaller loans for smaller companies, and not only do they help the smaller companies here, they help our economy a great deal.

I, for one, am very thankful that we have such a policy to enable us to try to take up some of the slack that has taken place with the loss of two large companies lost to Kingston.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I will go along with the member for Kingston and the Islands. I am very happy that he has been able to do that, and if we have helped him, that is our job but you must realize that Kingston had a loan of $500,000—that was the first loan under EIO—and they also received a loan of $475,000, a conventional loan.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Half a million was a conventional loan.

Mr. Sargent: Well, my figures—

Mr. Peacock: And $475,000 was under EIO.

Mr. Sargent: Well my figures are the EIO was $500,000 and $475,000 was conventional.

Getting on to Belleville; they had four loans under the member Mr. Clarke Rollins; Carleton Place, George Gomme has five loans there.

An hon. member: The loans were a part of the vote.

Mr. Sargent: About $1 million is the total there. Brockville has at least five loans. Napanee has a $500,000 loan. Whitney has $500,000 for the Campbell Soup company. Renfrew has two loans; Cornwall has eight loans. Simcoe, James Allen has seven loans totalling about half a million dollars. In Cobourg, Rowe has about $1 million worth in five loans. William Newman has about $500,000 in three loans.

In other words, I think we can establish the fact that in 1969, the Tory members did not do badly.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: In eastern Ontario, that is where you fellows are going to have to win your votes next time. You are handling that area well.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Going back to 1968, the pattern is the same. You will find that in 1968 the figure is $6,297,000 in ODC loans. I have not got a total for the EIO loans, there was about $15 million in EIO loans.

The fact is that Centralia was a big winner in 1968. They had about $1 million in loans there, a number of seed loans. Cobourg had four loans, Tillsonburg had three loans, Fort William and Port Arthur had four loans, Glengarry had five loans.

Mr. J. R. Smith (Hamilton Mountain): How many did they want?

Mr. Sargent: There were two loans in Bruce county to Walkerton for Canada Packers and Union Carbide. Union Carbide is an American corporation. Canada Packers, as we all know, is a very close friend of the government. They are in a very healthy financial position.

Mr. Winkler: Can I ask you about the addition Union Carbide planned in Walkerton? Would it have gone there without this loan? Would it have been established in Walkerton? I ask you that.

Mr. Sargent: I do not know.

Mr. Winkler: Yes or no.

Mr. Sargent: I do not know—

Mr. Winkler: The answer is no.

Mr. Sargent: I do not know whether that is correct or not. But we have established the facts beyond a doubt. I think, the facts speak for themselves.

I repeat, for eight years, industry has come to these people for help. The disturbing fact is, Mr. Minister, why the hell do you not tell them you are not going to give them a chance in the first place? We would never let people who come down here, and drive back and forth and back and forth, to come in here. We lead them down the garden path and nothing happens.

This is wrong, because these people have as much right as you have to that money. More so, because they need it. The free enterprise system is built on people starting small and getting big. That is our system. That vote we had up in the House was indicative of something.

You are selling us down the river to the states. No hotel will feel like getting into this act, with the great amount of money they generate for the provincial Treasury—about $200 million this year in the hotel and motel resorts field, with the room tax and restaurant tax—and you loan them a measly four loans in five years.

You have the audacity to say that you will loan them $1 million next year, 20 loans at $50,000 each, in the province of Ontario. People who did get the loans in the hotel field were, as I said before the bell, the head of the Conservative Party, Dalton Caswell; Holiday Inn, Seagrams, got $35,000; and Long Beach Hotel in Brockville received $125,000.

That is the extent of what you do in that industry and it all goes to friends of the government. The ODC puts these people through the wringer. The one chap I talked to eventually had to go to the States to get some money.

In a release by the minister on June 26, 1969, he said the policy shall be as follows: "The counties of Carleton, Frontenac, Hastings, Lanark, Leeds, Grenville, Lennox, Addington, Prescott, Russell, Prince Edward, Renfrew and the counties of Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry will all remain at $500,000"—all the Tory ridings. "The rest of the province will go down to $250,000."

Mr. Apps: You do not think that—

Mr. Sargent: I may not be putting my point very well, but I think that the position I have now is that the small businessman, as I want to point out, is not getting a square pitch for his tax dollars here. In other words, the—pardon?

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): It could be a lot worse—

Mr. Sargent: Well, I do not go along with Benson's thinking at all, but I do want to say that what we are talking about in this vote is the fact that you have the power to empower these gentlemen to distribute $18 or $75 million of our money geared to the American takeover of our economy.

Mr. Winkler: Is that the $75 million—

Mr. Sargent: By and large.

Now most small independent businesses are Canadian-owned. If they are given help, they will grow. And that is what this free enterprise system that we are all so proud of and the minister is part of, is all about—even if we have to work 60 or 70 hours a week.

But today the small, independent businessman has to finance his own inventory, his equipment and accounts receivable and so on, without one penny of help from the bank.

If any one large receivable account fails to pay a businessman, a small businessman in Ontario today, Mr. Minister, if it fails to pay that money, if it fails to come in, the payroll cheque bounces and the man is out of business. A bank authority made this statement two weeks ago in Owen Sound; that come June 25, 25 per cent of the small, independent businesses in Ontario will be bankrupt. We are talking about six weeks away and it is very timely.

We see the largesse that you distribute to American corporations, in tax or forgiveness loans, when we cannot—the small business sector—cannot borrow a nickel whether it is a shoe retailer or a cement block manufacturer. The biggest one in that area folded on Monday; he went bankrupt. He thought he was very affluent but he could not pay his payroll. He went down the pipe.

Construction business, restaurant business, department store, jeweller, you name it. They are a great silent majority in this province, hundreds of thousands of them. They belong to no union.

How do they go about getting justice in this department; or from our monetary system through free enterprise? How do they do it? They have no union. They have a right to live. They go to the toilet like everybody else, they have pimples; but they have got to pay their bills.

They have a right to access to bank credit. Take any one of the above classes, whether he has three employees or 50 employees. If he is up to his line in credit today, he will be out of business tomorrow if he cannot meet a payroll because he cannot get any more credit at the bank. That is the rule today.

We are told, we feel that this great silent majority generates the great portion of this money you are giving away. Of the $4 billion that you expend here, they generate a great portion of it. But they cannot participate in this giveaway programme in this department.

Mr. Minister, if I thought it would help I would get a demonstration started—because it seems the only way you can get anything done today is to demonstrate, to get your point across. But how do hundreds of thousands of small businessmen in this province demonstrate?

How would we get a message across to them that we needed them down at Maple Leaf Gardens to show the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) of this province or the minister of this department? How would we get them down there to see this?

If I thought it would help, I would call a mass rally at Maple Leaf Gardens by, say June 5 if you would not give us legislation on behalf of the small businessman by June 1. You have in your wisdom, or lack of it, or party policy, you have the right to give away all these scores of millions of dollars, tax free, to American corporations.

In my estimation you are selling us down the drain. And if the minister or his government is not obsessed, Mr. Chairman, with the formulating solutions to the problem of foreign ownership, may I say along with my colleagues in the Liberal Party and a lot of Ontario citizens, that we are concerned. I suggest to you, Mr. Minister, and to the government, you are playing right down the line, handing over our economy on a plate.

Instead of taking the steps to do the things necessary to retain the control of our economy and thus maintain our independence, we are acquiescing to becoming a colonial dependency of the United States. It should be our role here, proudly, to be no different from the British, the French, the Swiss, or all the emerging parties of the world—and the United States—in wanting our independence, to maintain our independence.

You may call this nationalism, and so it is. But it amounts to respect, loyalty and enthusiasm for one's country and the legitimate optimism and confidence for our future. We have our acres of diamonds in this province, right in our own backyard. Through this list I have given you here, of millions of dollars of loans to U.S. corporations, you have sold us out completely, with no controls on foreign investment and ownership in Ontario; using taxpayers' money to sell them out to U.S.-based and owned companies.

So I say, Mr. Chairman, it is time that someone stood up, especially in our party, who cares about our free enterprise system, and said that we will put the authority of the Ontario taxpayers, through their government, against the foreign-owned capital.

Foreign investment last year, the bulk of it American and most of it in Ontario, now amounts to $34 billion. It is a force so great that it has created its own magnetic field and feeds upon it completely. Since 1947, American investment has been cascading into Ontario at the rate of $3 million a day and now two-thirds of our manufacturing capacity is foreign-owned.

Nine out of 10 of the large plants in this province are controlled by American corporations; and taking the route of Mr. Randall and his sell-out policies, we in Ontario are political and economic satellites of the United States.

With regard to foreign subsidiaries here in Canada and in Ontario, there is a complete lack of minority interest in their equity stock distribution. There are no Canadian representatives on their boards of directors and the export policies set by the parent organizations in the United States are against Canadian interests in many cases. They are mulcting our national resources, and are reluctant to even process these raw materials before shipping them to the United States.

We have even United States depletion allowances on our mining and oil industries set in the States and these are granted.

To summarize this situation, we have this great largesse in forgivable loans of millions of dollars to American corporations. It is a matter of record that when Eric Winkler was a member of the federal House, when the House in its wisdom decided to put a tax on the advertising revenues of Time and Life magazines, it became evident this was going to pass and it did pass through the House of Commons. A directive came from the White House in Washington to cancel legislation by the House of Commons in Ottawa; not to tax Time and Life magazines. The power was in the White House in Washington telling the Canadian government that they could not tax Time and Life magazines.

Mr. Chairman, I submit to you that if that power has gone that far, then we have gone pretty well down the pipe as far as the American takeover of our economy is concerned.

In the final analysis—the minister may or may not agree with this—many economists tell us we are in the midst of a depression today in this economy. This makes it more important, Mr. Minister, that you view very seriously the need to set up immediate emergency funds for the small independent businessman in Ontario before we break the back of our free enterprise system.

In today's Toronto Star, there is an editorial on the Greene speech made in the USA.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): That was a good speech.

Mr. Sargent: I agree with you, it is time we Canadians were proud of our country and the right to be a nation of our own and, as I said, not become an economical and political satellite of the United States.

It has come to the serious position that we have in this economy of ours, a situation where 50 per cent of the people in this province own 8.3 per cent of the wealth. So that gives them an average estate of $1,800, enough to cover their furniture, their clothes, their television set; and perhaps a rundown car.

Another group of 18.4 per cent of our people are worth about $6,000 on the average; another 21.89 per cent have $15,000 average estates. We end up by having 90 per cent of the people having eight per cent of the wealth; so we have come pretty well down to the situation where we do not control our resources, we do not control our economy. A man can sit in Washington and call a strike any time he wants in our economy.

So we here are, Mr. Minister and gentlemen, assessing a vote—a total of possibly $75 million in this vote—and I think that as Canadians we should do something about the policies that the minister tries to lean on as incentives—that is the forgivable grants to industry. If that is the route you are going to travel, if you find that is the route you will have to maintain to keep the employment and the economy up, then it follows that we have a large segment of 100,000 businessmen who have a right to live too.

I am concerned about what is happening, Mr. Minister. First I am concerned about the fact of the extent of the military control of the United States government and the fact that we are now literally bound to the United States, economically bound to the United States. And the strength of the military there may well, in 10 years, result in complete military control there. The thought of economists and thinkers is that that is the road being followed. Everything I say, in the finalizing of my comments on these estimates now, is that we are, by honouring and okaying these forgiveness loans to American concerns without giving the other sector of our economy a fair break, helping this to come about. My plea is for small industries, small businessmen, which we must help to maintain their solvency, so they may be able to live and to keep in business.

I say today you are compounding the whole bit. That is not meant personally. I know that is not your desire, but I would like to quote in closing, Edmund Burke's eulogy of Charles James Spotts, who said:

He well knows what snares are spread about his past, from personal animosity and possibly from popular delusions, and speaking to you he says he has to put aside his ease, his security, his interest, his power, even his popularity.

He is abused for his supposed motives, but calumny and abuse are essential parts of triumph. He may live long, he may do much. But here is the summit, he can never exceed what he does this day.

I think you have a decision to make, as to what route you will take as far as the free enterprise system in Ontario is concerned.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Windsor West.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, I do not have any statement—

Mr. Chairman: Would you mind standing up?

Mr. Peacock: Do we have to stand up to the microphones?

Mr. Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Peacock: I am disappointed the minister has not introduced his estimates with a statement to the committee, that is the usual practice in the House. In the last several years in which I have participated in the consideration of the estimates of this department, the minister's opening statement has usually been quite helpful in bringing us up to date on the activities of the department and all the various areas in which it is engaged.

I think I should like to proceed item by item asking a series of questions relating to the total impact of the department on the economy of the province and out of that draw the themes and conclusions for debate when the committee reports to the House.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think that is a good solution.

May I just say to the two members who spoke, Mr. Chairman, it was not any attempt on my part to duck the issue and not make a speech. I have been kidded for the last seven years that I am a man of a few million words, and I thought I would give you a break this year. It was my understanding that we could come into the committee and after the Chairman introduced me and I introduced my staff, you start asking questions and you get specific answers to specific questions. I thought that was the reason for the committee.

Then when we went into the House, as at the last session, you all had an opportunity to tell me whether I was doing a good job or a lousy job, and then I had a half hour to rebut.

Now I might—as the Liberal member for Grey-Bruce has made some comments perhaps I should just touch on a few things that he mentioned before we proceed.

I just want to point out to him that he has mentioned, I guess for publicity purposes, about a hundred times this afternoon giving money to great American companies; and also the number of loans we made and read out the names and addresses of the members in the House whose constituencies got those loans.

First of all, let me say there were not 39 loans last year, there were 234 loans. And 100 per cent Canadian ownership got 136 of them, 100 per cent foreign ownership got 90 of them; and the next ownership classification, majority Canadian—

Mr. Sargent: Would you give us those figures again, please?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. One hundred and thirty-six wholly Canadian owned—

Mr. Sargent: Why were we not given those figures?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know, I am just telling you what I have. If you had asked for them, you could have had them. But I said there were 234—

Mr. Sargent: Just a moment, Mr. Chairman. We asked for the loans made by this department and we have a list of 39 loans, that is all we have. Now if you have something we do not have I would like to see them.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We will show them to you.

Mr. Sargent: Well do not take that attitude that—

Hon. Mr. Randall: As of—excuse me, maybe I—

Mr. Sargent: If we have the information, we will—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Excuse me, may I just finish what I am saying?

As of March 25 there was a total of 234 loans under the EIO programme. Now that is since the programme started. And 136 of them were Canadian owned, wholly; 90 were foreign owned, wholly; so it is not giving all these loans to American companies.

Two were Canadian and foreign ownership, mixed ownership. The mixed ownership would be Canadian and American; and mixed ownership foreign would be anywhere but the United States, and there were six there, for a total of 234.

Now on the dollars expended: on the Canadian ownership companies there was $16.95 million; on the American ownership there was $17.71 million. So the dollars were almost within $1 million of each other.

Mr. Sargent: Why did they get a penny?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Now wait a minute, just wait a minute now! I listened to you very carefully, I did not interrupt, let me finish my story.

So $17.71 million went to American companies and the balance, totalling $35,520,000 went to Canadian and majority Canadian-owned companies.

Let me point out the jobs created by these companies—Canadian ownership as against American. Immediately there were 4,674 jobs created by Canadian-owned companies that got these EIO loans—4,674, going to 8,966 as estimated by the companies themselves in the next five years.

Foreign-owned companies, that is primarily American—I would say it is all American—3,289 jobs going to 8,214 in the next five years.

Then the jointly-owned companies—

Mr. Sargent: You are projecting this are you?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Sure, these are company figures—what they expect they will do as the company gets underway. And jointly-owned companies, 164 jobs going to 412.

Now I think it is obvious from that, Mr. Chairman, that the loans did not all go to large American companies as the hon. member spelled out here this afternoon. I think we do an injustice to our American friends when we continue to take them apart on something that they are not responsible for, because they happen to want to invest in Canada.

Mr. Sargent: That is the whole thing.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Just a minute.

Let me also say, Mr. Chairman, that when we set up the EIO programme—if you can tell me how you can set it up just to make sure that all the loans go into a Conservative member's riding, I would like to know, because the 936 municipalities all have a right to make an application for an EIO loan and to be qualified as a designated area. You read off 14 or 15 members in your own party and the other two parties who have got loans.

As far as I am concerned, it does not make a difference whether they get a Liberal, an NDP or a Conservative member, or no member. If they qualify as a municipality, they get a loan; if they come in with their application form and if they can meet the requirements of the EIO programme.

There is no political skulduggery, as far as I am concerned, when it comes to making these loans to the kind of people we want to make them to.

As far as American companies are concerned—I suppose we will get into this before we are finished here. Our friends in the NDP have some comments to make.

Mr. Peacock: Is that not a weirdo programme?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right. We will have a lot of those around today. We are having difficulty with some of the economic weirdos, as you recognize.

I just suggest to you that if you can sort out the—

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, on a point. As the minister is going on to something else—at least he has made his point—may I ask him a question on this section here?

How can we intelligently analyse what you are saying when we do not have access to the reports you have? We asked for—my note here from our research department says these figures were not made available to us. We were told that the sheets you now have for 1968 and 1969 contain all loans.

Now you had better—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You might check with Mr. Etchen and Mrs. Fryer on that.

Mr. Sargent: You can recheck them with Mr. Etchen and Mrs. Fryer! You are a rock-in-the-sock type of guy. You sit up there, and you have something down below that you are going to throw back at us. I want to know what we are talking about and I want to listen to all those notes in your hand.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We will give you the list. We would be glad to give it to you.

Mr. Sargent: There is no way that you can tell me—I read out 39 loans here and 32 of them are made in Tory ridings.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You did not read seven opposition members here. I think you read about 14, if I remember correctly.

Mr. Sargent: I will stand here all day. I do not give a damn what you say. I think this thing is a political tool and I am going to prove it.

The fact is, I have gone back repeatedly as a member for my riding and I cannot get to first base because—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well maybe you should not bring in deadbeats all the time.

Mr. Sargent: That is all I hear.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You bring a guy in when he is bankrupt. Bring him in before he goes bankrupt and we can help him.

Mr. Sargent: I can tell you that this man I talked to you about—the last loan I went to you about—this man's credit rating was excellent and you know it. You had your people check him out, but you would not give him a loan; but you gave Mr. MacNaughton a $50,000 loan for something not as good as that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will prove to you before we get finished here the reason why the man did not get a loan.

Mr. Sargent: But before you do, do not take too long. Do not ever try to leave with this group the fact that this whole department is not politically oriented. The proof of the pudding is in where the loans go.

Mr. Apps: If you are going to encourage industry to go into eastern Ontario where could they go except in a Conservative riding?

Mr. Sargent: Your batting average is pretty good. You have about 10 more.

Mr. J. R. Smith: Mr. Chairman, on that particular point, the grants—there was only one grant made in Wentworth county and that was to Archie McCoy Limited. Surely that could not be political? He is a prominent and very highly respected Liberal in the province of Ontario while the member happens to be a Conservative. What more could you ask?

Mr. Chairman: I think as members of this committee we should deal with this vote item by item. We will go ahead and discuss this a second time, if we do not do that now. Let us deal with vote 2201.

Has the minister any more to add to this vote?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. I just want to point out that in 1969-1970 there were 127 loans made; 87 in 1968-1969 and 20 in 1967-1968 brings it to 234 which is the total I was mentioning a few moments ago.

There were 127 loans made in the 1969-1970 fiscal year so where you get your information from I do not know.

I am just assuring you that from my figures these are the number of loans we made. Perhaps Mr. Etchen could add to that.

Mr. Chairman: Excuse me for a moment, Mr. Etchen, you must use the microphone.

It is put on tape—there is no way they can hear you.

Mr. A. Etchen (Ontario Development Corporation): Perhaps I will repeat that. I was called by Miss MacDonald of the Liberal office and she asked me specifically for a list of the preferable loans and of the forgivable loans. I asked her if this is what she wanted and she said yes; and I said: well you have left it rather late in the day. But we made a special effort and within an hour we had the information and Miss MacDonald sent a messenger over to get it.

Another lady called me to ask some questions about it. I asked her specifically if this was what she wanted and she said: yes. Thank you very much for your courtesy and for the trouble you took to give me the information."

Now if Miss MacDonald or anybody else had asked for any breakdown we would have been happy to give it to her.

Mr. Sargent: Did she ask you for EIO loans and conventional loans?

Mr. Etchen: Yes she did.

Mr. Sargent: What year?

Mr. Etchen: Well, for the year 1969.

Mr. Sargent: And this is what she received—these 39?

Mr. Etchen: She asked for them for the specific year 1969.

Mr. Sargent: Well do I have to owe you an apology. I am talking about the fact that 39 members got loans and 32 of them are Conservatives.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, Mr. Chairman, to clear up any confusion, the hon. member talks about 39 loans; he meant that loans went to 39 constituencies of which 32 were represented by Conservative members.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, it is not true! But I think this is the difference. The figures you have got, as Mr. Etchen has pointed out, were given to your girl and they were the figures that we are using today—127 loans, in fact I think it has gone up. If you say there are 133, then you have got a few more than I have got in my book, but there were 127 loans in the 1969-1970 year and again I go back and say that there were 936 went out to municipalities. They all approach us on the same basis, they are based on the point system, as you know, and if they qualify, they are designated as an EIO area. And what kind of a member is in there, I could care less. It does not make a particle of difference to me.

Mr. Sargent: You will never convince me.

Hon. Mr. Randall: And we do not tell the industry where it should go. It must make up its own mind because one thing that we have to remember is that it must go where it can operate in a viable economy. Otherwise, if a guy folds, our money goes down the drain. He says: "Well, you steered me into the wrong area." So we do not have a programme of steering industry in. It must go on its own basis.

I had a man in the other day that started a plant and he said: "Well, they have taken me to Mr. Radford." He took this man to 30 different places before the man made up his mind and he made it up on his own. He saw 30 municipalities and then he made up his mind where he wanted to go. We did not make it up for him. So if he does not exist in that area, it is not our fault. We have given him the best of 30 municipalities and he can make his own mind up.

Now, let me just cover one other point and then I think we should go on. I can appreciate the member's concern about the small businessman, but in the main you must be talking about the small retailer—

Mr. Sargent: I am not.

Hon. Mr. Randall: —because the small businessman can come to us the same as anybody else. He must bring a balance sheet in; he must be able to substantiate his own equity in it; he must have a viable concern or at least have a 30 per cent chance of succeeding.

But we can not run a pork barrel and just hand out money to anybody who walks in off the street and says: "I have got an idea. I would like to start a business." He must bring in a balance sheet and the facts as we analyse them. The authorization for a loan has to go to our cabinet. It has to go to the board of directors of ODC and when it goes through, it has been thoroughly checked, I can assure you.

Now if a man comes in late and he has not got that information, I can understand why negotiations take time. And week in and week out we have a number of those. They come in and they do not have the information. We send them back and it is months before they ever come back with the proper information. If they go bankrupt in the meantime, I cannot help that and neither can the taxpayer.

Mr. Sargent: I would like you to tell me, Mr. Chairman, how many applications have you received over the years for loans to the hotel industry?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think we can—

Mr. Sargent: Just a moment now, you are talking about your policy on making loans, that you do not show favouritism to the Tory party. How many applications for loans have you had from the motel and hotel industry and resort industry? Hundreds, hundreds!

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, but—

Mr. Sargent: And who gets the loans? Your Tory people get the loans.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It may be a coincidence.

Mr. Sargent: Oh, come on! The president of the Tory association up north, Holiday Inn, the members of Rochdale—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me just suggest to you—

Mr. Sargent: Do not con me too.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not take that kind of talk from anybody.

Mr. Sargent: Well you are going to take it from me.

Hon. Mr. Randall: This government is not playing politics with this programme—

Mr. Sargent: You have been conning them for eight years down here—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do not forget it, do not forget it!

Mr. Sargent: You have been conning them for eight years and I am getting fed up with it, too.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You have made this same speech for seven years. I am getting tired of that canned speech of yours over the seven years.

Mr. Sargent: And you will hear it some more, too.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am glad to hear it, but you had better be specific.

Mr. Sargent: How much more specific can I be, Mr. Chairman, when I say you have had hundreds of applications for motel loans and four loans are granted to your Tory people. What do you do?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have not had hundreds of loans.

Mr. Sargent: Pardon me?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have not had hundreds of loans.

Mr. Sargent: Applications.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Applications are coming in from every tourist operator in the country. Most of them are running a mama-papa business and how do you—

Mr. Sargent: Do not try to con me as you have the rest of the people of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am not trying to con you. Nobody could con you, my friend, you are too smart.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: I would like to have an apology from you for saying that people from my area were deadbeats.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I did not say they were deadbeats. I said that when people bring in businesses which are already bankrupt—

Mr. Sargent: You told me not to bring down deadbeats—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I said, do not bring in anybody who is already bankrupt—

Mr. Sargent: All right. Okay—

Hon. Mr. Randall: If you want an apology, I would be glad to apologize. You know we made loans up in your area. We look at anybody you bring in but it has to be based on their balance sheet.

Mr. Chairman, I am sorry for the friction here this afternoon; it was not intended I can assure you.

I appreciate my friend's concern for the small businessman and I am just trying to point out that this government is not in business. It has not got enough money to finance every small businessman who walks in off the street, any more than the chartered banks have. Today, there is more concern than ever because the chartered banks have walked away—

Mr. Sargent: Federally there is the small business administration loan. There is nothing here in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Pardon?

There is nothing here at the present time to take care of small retailers. But any small businessman can walk in and talk to us and you know it. If he can make an application, he brings in his balance sheet. If he qualifies, he can get a term loan. He can get an EIO loan if he goes into a designated area.

But, sir, you cannot hand out EIO money or any other money on a hand-out basis just because the guy walks in off the street. We get thousands of them walking in off the street and we are not in a position to give a loan to everybody who says "I have gone everywhere else. I cannot get any money and the federal government has shut off my bank credit and I must go to the ODC".

Mr. Sargent: So you give forgivable loans to the American corporations?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is your opinion and I do not agree with you. I pointed out—

Mr. Sargent: You said $17 million here.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well I lent $16 million; we have an EIO programme. What do you do? Discriminate against the Americans who are here paying taxes, employing people and paying—

Mr. Sargent: Would they not expand to get that?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, they are just the same as the Canadians; they would not be here.

Mr. Chairman: Let us deal with these items. We will have this debate later on. First of all, we have vote 2201—

On vote 2201:

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): On the first vote, Mr. Chairman. By way of basic policy, there is one area I would like to explore with the minister for a moment.

In pursuit of economic development across the province you are trying to focus in on those areas where there is slow growth with the provision of EIO loans. You have said northern and eastern Ontario and we get into an argument as to whether or not there is fair proportion in terms of the slow growth areas as opposed to the faster growth areas.

What I want to ask you is that when you have got an area where you have a pocket of economic stagnation which has become chronic, do you take any special action?

Now let me illustrate, and I am thinking of the Cornwall area. Here is a rich area, as I understand it from talking to the local people. It started on the downgrade 10 years or more ago when one of the major plants folded up. Two thousand of the work force were turned out, relatively unskilled and many of them never yet refitted in a permanent way into the labour market.

The consequences, tragically, of the sea-way have been that most of the business has been taken to the American side so that you have had a gradual decline. Today, it has resulted in an unemployment rate of 18 per cent. Now 18 per cent is comparable to the kind of figures that we have been hearing with regard to Cape Breton Island and other chronic unemployment areas across this country.

The local people argue that the EIO loans have gone to one or two big companies—Kraft, for example. Most of the rest of them would go to little companies that do not bring great amounts of employment opportunities, and furthermore they are companies that generally are paying wage levels very little above the minimum wage. In short, they have not really contributed to rebuilding the economic base.

Now if you have got that kind of a festering sore, economically, does the government map out a broader programme that might assist in rebuilding the economy in the area and rescuing it from a chronic unemployment situation? And if so, what are the components of it?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know if we are getting off the vote or not, but maybe I—

Mr. Chairman: Yes, I think we are actually. This does not come under vote 1201; I would say it would come under 1206, does it not?

Mr. MacDonald: Would you like that in another area?

Mr. Chairman: Would you like me to take it—

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well let us take it in the proper sequence and then we can give you more detail on it, if you do not mind.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 2201.

Mr. Apps: Mr. Chairman, in connection with item 4 of 2201, special studies, films and advertising. As I understand it, most of your loans to small businesses go for equipment and similar things like that. The crying need for small businesses now is for operating capital, and in many areas, with the tightening of bank restrictions, you operate at a certain loan rate and it is impossible to go any higher than that.

This, along with the fact that collections are so tough—because everybody is feeling this restraint—makes it very difficult for all small businesses to operate even normally, let alone expand, if they have a chance. It is just impossible, because they are not able to get the operating capital to do it.

I am just wondering, in this particular area, whether there are any studies being made of possible ways of enabling legitimate and deserving small businesses to acquire the operating capital they need to expand or even maintain their present volume in the business.

Mr. Chairman: I think we should deal with this section of 2201. I think we should deal with items 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: So we take the main office first, which is item 1. Are you on 2201? Thank you.

Mr. A. W. Downer (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Chairman, I would like to pour a little bit of oil on troubled waters, and I am sure that the good member for Grey-Bruce would agree with me on my appeal this afternoon.

I am not critical of this department, and not critical of the minister. I think he is a super salesman. He has done a good job for Ontario. I had a few pieces from the table, and I am grateful for those few crumbs that we got from the table, and I hope we will get more assistance as the years go by.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Downer: It is all right; the crumbs are all right too. It helps out in our area very much.

An hon. member: But why should we have crumbs?

Mr. Downer: But I would like to appeal to your sense of fair play and generosity today, sir, for a particular thing. This has to do with the riding in Dufferin-Simcoe—and it is a Conservative riding, but that is not the reason I am asking you for this favour.

In our town of Collingwood we have a band, the Collingwood Collegiate Band, and they represented Ontario and Collingwood at Expo 67. They were down at San Antonio, at Hemisfair, in 1968, and then they received an invitation from the government of Japan to come to Expo 70 in Osaka, and they decided they would try to do it. They have raised most of the money needed for that trip. Now let me say that the government of Japan has promised to look after accommodation while they are there.

The local people, as I say, have raised most of the money required for the trip on their own, but we need a little extra. Since they are going to play at the Ontario pavilion, the Canadian pavilion and the amphitheatre in Japan, I think they are representing us. I would like to say that it is a recognition for Collingwood, a recognition for Ontario, and a recognition for Canada. I think the very least we could do is to give a little grant to the town of Collingwood, or to the band of Collingwood, which is going to represent our area, this province, at Osaka.

I would like to say this. I noticed there is $500,000 for travelling expenses in the estimates. All we ask is just a little bit of that, or of the $3 million for the Osaka fair. After all, we could easily siphon just a few dollars off that $3 million.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Stay away from that $9 million for Osaka, that is not right!

Mr. Downer: Okay, but the fact remains that we would like your department to give us just a little cream from the top of the milk, or perhaps just a little milk, and we would be satisfied.

I think we have done a good job in this area and I would like to suggest this committee go on record as supporting a suggestion that Mr. Randall's department see fit to make this grant. Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will say it is in consideration, how is that?

Mr. Chairman: Next in consideration? The member for Windsor West.

Mr. Peacock: Could you tell us under which programme of the main office vote the Metro waterfront development is placed?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That would be under planning, promotion and advertising, under special studies.

Mr. Peacock: I know the leader of the New Democratic Party, the member for York South, wants to raise this matter. Before he returns, Mr. Chairman, under that same programme item—planning, promotion and advertising—could the minister tell the committee the amount to be appropriated for advertising? Specifically, can he tell us what amount would be expended on the “buy Canadian” programme, or is that still going?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Can I tell you when we come to that vote?

Mr. Peacock: I thought we were at—we are still on item 1?

Mr. Chairman: We are still on the main office.

Mr. Peacock: Right, well I am looking at main office. We do not have to approve that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is under planning, promotion and advertising.

Mr. Chairman: Planning, promotion and advertising, which would be the third one.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well we assume that the first item vote is approved.

Mr. Chairman: Main office.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Main office vote is approved.

Mr. Chairman: The first vote is approved. Main office?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Administration and financial services. Are they approved, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: We have to take it item by item, which is what we are doing. So we are under main office at the present time.

Mr. Sargent: Would not an advisory committee—we are on 2201, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): The first one is the main office, which is under 2201.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, let us take the main office.

Mr. Chairman: All right, we have administration and financial services next, right? Carried?

Planning, promotion and advertising, now this is the one you wanted.

Mr. Sargent: The member for Kingston and the Islands was speaking about that.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Peterborough.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister just what special studies are being carried out under that particular vote. Please specify those studies.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Special studies?

Some of the special studies we have done under that vote have concerned such things as, in the past there has been the CNE study, to find out what we could do with the CNE—how we could assist the CNE. That, of course, we took care of in 1968. Then we carried on with a similar study in 1969, and we are carrying on with a similar study in 1970, only about 10—

Mr. Pitman: All on the CNE, of course?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, in other words, the Shortt-Reid report I think came out in—it was a joint report by Metro, the province, and the CNE, to discover what they could do to the CNE after Expo 67 closed.

We undertook to take a look at the CNE operations and see what we could recommend, and, as a result of that course—

Mr. Pitman: Is this the Ontario building that is—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, that was the Canadian National Exhibition itself. Now in 1969, under the studies we are doing right now—this is the Ontario Place. As a result of those early studies we developed Ontario Place. With Ontario Place we must study the kind of thing that is going to happen out there and what the people expect when Ontario Place is finished—what services they want, what they want to see out there. That is a continuing study which we are doing under these special studies.

Mr. Pitman: Could I ask what kind of people are being involved in this study of Ontario Place?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, we use consultants in some areas. Perhaps, Mr. Ramsay, you have got a list of all those people we have used? Would you like to make a comment?

Mr. J. W. Ramsay (Special Projects): Under that vote, Mr. Chairman, we have consultants, engineering reports, testing the project throughout the whole duration of the project.

We do attendance studies at the CNE to find what people like about the CNE, what they do not like; travelling distances, studies that help us to gauge where our audience will come from when we open and what it is that they are looking for. We did these similar type of studies for Expo 67. This is normal.

Mr. Pitman: Do you have any sort of appropriation? I wonder if you have any continuing effort to involve as large a number of people as possible in Ontario Place? I think there is a general feeling that really the old idea of a building with stuff in it—either industrial materials, or things of various kinds—is really going out. So it is going to be tremendously important that Ontario Place be different, far different, than the kind of buildings we had at Expo 67. Indeed, different from what we have at Expo 70. I am just wondering to what extent you are bringing in sociologists, to what extent you are bringing in economists, to what extent you are bringing in artists and people who are in the media field?

In other words, are we putting enough in the input, the input of—

Mr. Ramsay: Well, I hope we are. We are doing innovative studies on what people are looking for. I think we have a topnotch media team on it. We are using all the media in Ontario Place; we are also getting audience participation in it, outside activities—

Mr. Pitman: To what extent are you getting audience participation?

Mr. Ramsay: Well, at the current time we have a programme where we have two or three young ladies and two men from the department that go around and address various groups—any groups—anything from yacht clubs, church groups and specialists on the subject. We go out to these meetings deliberately to solicit the feedback and to find out what it is that they would like to do.

The project has been under way for only a year. This summer on the weekends, when the buildings are closed—and this should be in about another five weeks, starting in July—we would like to start Sunday afternoon tours of the site with people. We can try some exhibit concepts. This we would hope to do in the course probably of the peak of CNE time.

We do have the problem of construction still going on in the site, but we are doing just about everything we know to insure that the exhibits will be successful. Then there are these static type of exhibits such as we had in Expo 67.

Mr. Pitman: I am more interested in the extent to which you have concerned yourself with young people. Are you doing anything to get them in from schools? These are the only people who are really going to be turned on by it or turned off by it.

Mr. Ramsay: I think they will be turned on. We have not yet done groups. We have had some people in on it. We cannot accommodate as many as come to us with ideas and sit down and debate, really, with everyone. We are on a very rigid schedule. We open in 12 months, for example. In less than 12 months we will be open.

Mr. Pitman: Have you ever considered something in a newspaper, asking people to send in ideas on what kind of a thing Ontario Place should be? After all, it has to represent the entire province. Have you ever considered something like that?

Mr. Ramsay: I had considered it, but the thing that would worry me would be, frankly, that you would get something like 50,000 replies and think of the sheer staff related to trying to work it out and sort it out.

But we do go out on motivational studies, asking people what they think of some of these things. For example, on Expo 67 we did two prior planning studies: on what Expo 67 meant to the people of Quebec and what kind of presentation they expected from Ontario. We did the same thing in Ontario: what type of presentation did they want, what type of presentation did they expect that we would do? We found that they expected that we would be there in a black box with heavy industrial exhibits and everything else. But they hoped that we would go in on a very imaginative and striking manner with good staff and things like that; and we did.

Mr. Pitman: Did you do that with Osaka too?

Mr. Ramsay: No.

Mr. Pitman: Was that same motivation study made there?

Mr. Ramsay: No. It is not—

Mr. Pitman: This may not go over as well with the Japanese people. I want to address this to the minister. Is that one of the reasons why you think that there has been so much feeling that Osaka has not been as successful?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I do not think so. I think that the reason we are getting a little flak out of Osaka is that people like ourselves go out and expect to see the same thing that we saw, at the 1967 world's fair and the things in most of those buildings are entirely different. If you had a look at it—

Mr. Pitman: I cannot afford to go. You will have to tell me about it.

Hon. S. J. Randall: Maybe we can send you. Our point is that it was pretty hard to decide what would sell in Japan. It seems that during the first month or six weeks, mostly rural people were coming. As I said one day in the House, they travel in lots of 100 or 200. A fellow waves a flag and blows a whistle; and do not get in the way or you will get trampled. They go into the buildings and go right through; what they are doing is collecting buildings; they are not watching the exhibits.

For instance, we have a screen there that is 90 feet wide by 38½ feet high, and they walk right by a white screen to the exit door; they would not wait to see what comes on—I guess the fellow with the flag was moving, so they moved.

But now General Kitching tells us they are starting to get many more people from places like Tokyo—the young Japanese businessman and businesswoman and the young couples, who are not really real orientals. I think that what we have done is recognize that we must make some changes with what I call the modular communication vehicle, because there were 9,000 pictures flashing on in 13 minutes.

I think that even I would be boggled with that. But it sounded like a hell of a good idea when you started.

British Columbia and some of the other pavilions are into the same kind of a problem. So we have broken that up to make sure that we still have the same kind of a show and it is easier for them to watch.

Whenever you run a show like that, you will have to make changes, and I said again this afternoon, we are even trying to get our picture down from 26 minutes to 22 or even 19, because the more action you can get in the shortest period of time, the more people you can get in.

But wherever you run a show, you are never going to have 100 per cent acceptance, and in particular where people go all the way from down here and they have seen Expo 67. They say, "I do not like it as well." They have got something to compare it with now, and before they did not.

But I think the point is that we are not at all unhappy with our expenditures in Osaka; we think it is a good show in the main. We have some critics and then we have others who compliment it. You can take the critics and add them all up and you will find it is about 50-50 for and against. But our feeling is that it is attracting good attention. We certainly could not keep pace with the Canadian government; they are spending about $20 million, as you know.

Mr. Pitman: How much are we spending?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We are spending $2.8 million and we will get back $1 million in salvage, or we will use it at Ontario Place.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Windsor West.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask, in connection with the special studies on the CNE, if the minister or Mr. Ramsay could tell us the amount to be expended this year. Is the CNE itself sharing in the cost of the special studies?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, the CNE is not in on this one. The one we are doing now is, I think, a $60,000 figure; is it not, Mr. Ramsay?

Mr. Ramsay: Just for Ontario Place.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Just for Ontario Place! We have a $60,000 study under way there now for Ontario Place.

Mr. Peacock: This is in addition to the capital costs which come up in a later vote? Now this is added to it?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, this is in addition to the capital costs.

Mr. Peacock: And the CNE had no share in any of the 1969-1970-1971 expenditures on the special studies?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The CNE shared in some of the earlier studies, like the Shortt-Reid report. Right, Mr. Ramsay?

Mr. Ramsay: Yes, sir, and we are working with the CNE and we are on the current CNE planning committee. Most of the basic, fundamental reports related to the new CNE have been done, and they are now being done, by members of the Metro planning commissions, CNE staff and some by ourselves.

Mr. Chairman: The member for York South would like to ask a question?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, we have had a fair amount of discussion in the House by the way of elaboration and questions before the orders of the day on Harbour City, but Harbour City obviously should not be viewed in isolation—it is only part of the whole waterfront development. It seems to me, Mr. Minister, that there is one extremely unfortunate aspect of this whole development.

Mr. Sargent: We are talking about vote 2206.

Mr. MacDonald: Pardon? No, I am talking about promotion and policy in relation to the main vote. I do not want to get into Harbour City per se.

I think there is one very unfortunate aspect of this whole development and that is you have come up with a concept, but this concept has been conceived and developed behind the scenes with very few people involved; but a few top people in Metro and the city of Toronto. When it is unveiled, it is presumably then going to be handed over to the corporations which are being set up. But may I draw to your attention, Mr. Minister, that in the city of Toronto's official plan there are no fewer than 14 mentions of the waterfront.

In other words, it was very, very much in their minds as they drew up the plan. And significantly, when the official plan was brought up before your colleague, the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough), he was responsible for making certain that this clause was put in that plan, and I quote:

Notwithstanding any other provisions of this plan, council will consider large-scale development proposals, such as the proposed central harbour or Metro centre development, which have a major impact on the structure or character of the city, only in light of a study of the area undertaken for the purpose of recommending policies for adoption in part two of this plan. Council will not make any amendment to the zoning bylaws to permit such development without first adopting such policies as may appear necessary in light of the study in part two of the plan.

In other words, all of the details with regard to specifics on the waterfront, if they are going to conform with the official plan which your colleague insisted should go in as a specific point in the official plan, will have to become part of part two. As you know, part two means that the details of it are presented and there is an opportunity for public meetings and for full participation of not only everybody who is going to be involved in its implementation, but everybody who is going to be affected by its consequence—the citizenry at large.

Now I think the unfortunate thing, if this plan is as brilliant as you think it is, if the concept is so great in its future implementation, is that you have turned off in anger a lot of people who are intensely interested; and their interest should be encouraged in the development in the waterfront. What I want—because we have never been able to get it with any real assurance in the House—

Mr. Sargent: Who needs it in the first place?

Mr. MacDonald: —is an assurance that the government policy as a whole, not just your aspect of it, but the Minister of Municipal Affairs' aspect of it is going to be implemented and to make certain that before any final plans are drawn up for the waterfront, the involvement and fulfilment of the requirements of the Toronto city plan are going to be met, that there will be full opportunity for participation of all of these citizens, groups and citizens.

Now a week or so ago my colleague in the House the member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick) asked a question of Mr. McKeough. Mr. McKeough's comment and specific reference to a supplementary question of Mr. Renwick—"Would the minister tell us to what extent he envisages some participation of the people who are going to be immediately affected in the development of the plans?"—was: "Of course, they would be affected in a number of ways. They would be affected first of all by the expenditure of municipal funds through the conservation authority."

Well you see that is so narrow in its concept. We all know that we are going to be affected by having to pay the bills. We do not need to be told that. But once again, he underlined it. Even the Minister of Municipal Affairs, who is responsible for putting that commitment in the official plan, was not alive and alert and willing to assert the right of a broader group in the community to participate before the plans are finalized.

Now from your point of view, as a man who has as much as anybody to do with it, and in fact more than any other minister up to this date, what assurance can you give—not only to us but more important to all of these people in the city whom you have turned off and whom you will anger so that their initial reaction is going to be one of hostility rather than enthusiastic reception—what assurance are you going to give to them that they can play their legitimate role as is laid down in the official plan?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well first of all let me just say this: I think you are referring in the main to the Metropolitan waterfront plan, that is the whole plan.

Mr. MacDonald: The city plan.

Hon. Mr. Randall: And they came to the government when that plan was completed and Mr. Allen, the former chairman of Metro, had big signboards down on the waterfront: "This is your new waterfront." But nobody, as a whole, nobody had crossed a "t" or signed a document. And as I said in the House the other day, prior to that and after that was introduced there have been 101 plans for the waterfront; and so far there are only two things going on, Ontario Place and the Star building.

Insofar as the waterfront is concerned, we met with the city officials. We have a list here as long as a wet week of all the people we have discussed the programme with to get their help and their ideas. And out of those discussions we have put together a package for the simple markets.

Mr. MacDonald: Well really, Mr. Minister—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Wait a minute now, let me finish. We have a programme now for the centre. The programme that we asked the conservation authorities to undertake is the one that is going to take 15, 20, maybe 30 years.

Chairman Campbell said: "Can you give me some assurance that we can get underway with that programme; maybe out off the Scarborough Bluffs or out around Pickering or down the other side of Etobicoke."

So we worked out a programme whereby the conservation authority, with their approval, could look after everything in that Metro waterfront plan from Coxwell Avenue east and the Humber west. And they have the staff, the engineers, the planners, to do that. When they decide what they want to do, then they will come back to the government through the conservation board and say how much money they need to go ahead with it and when they are going ahead and what they are going to do. And people again will participate, I think, in any plans that we have.

Now we come back to the centre waterfront programme. Off the CNE, as you know, we are building Ontario Place because that is replacing the government building in the exhibition grounds. That programme is underway.

Now we come to the centre part. In Toronto Bay, which is controlled by the harbour commission and the city of Toronto, we have no jurisdiction in there whatsoever. We do not want any jurisdiction in there because it is private property on the mainland, on the main shore where it is being sold to Campeau and people like Mr. Campeau. But when we started to look at the plan and they asked for permission to sell off Harbour City as a commercial undertaking, we said: "Well, just a minute. Let us take a look at who owns which." It is then that we ran into the titles of who owned the land.

In order to protect the citizens of this province who have an interest in that land—I think you would criticize us, and quite rightly, if we said, "just go ahead and help yourself". And if you had found them building a high-rise tower by Mr. Campeau on that present airport out at the island, and they had made themselves several million dollars, you would say: "Well, the harbour commission certainly made a fancy profit at the expense of the Ontario taxpayer."

So it was necessary for us to find out first of all who owned the land. How can you have citizen participation until you know what you are talking about? So we had to solve the problem of land.

The mayor came to see us with his group. A couple of months ago we met with the Prime Minister. They said what they would like to see done and we said: "All right, we will undertake to put it together for you and see if we can come up with a plan that you will accept and that we can help you with."

We had a meeting with the harbour commission and the mayor and his councillors a few weeks ago and do you know what happened? Somebody took what was called the Act to form the corporation. It was an illustration of what could be done; and the first thing we knew we read it in the newspaper. So how do you keep these things from not becoming public property till you have all agreed on it?

Now it was a look-see, it was an offer to put a corporation together and how it could work and also to meld all the difficulties with regard to the land. It no longer matters now who owns the land—whether it is the Toronto Harbour Commission, the city of Toronto, Metro or ourselves. If we all put into the pot and it is a non-profit organization, it does not matter who owns the land.

After we got that done, we said that what we now have to do is let people have a look at what would happen out there—an illustration of a concept. And that is simply all we have; an illustration of a concept. Whether it will look like that when it is finished—if it ever gets started and the city of Toronto has to make a decision—we do not know.

I told you in the House the other day that it is not a unilateral decision on the part of this government. The city fathers and the mayor will have to make up their minds whether they want to develop the waterfront anyway out there. Whatever they want to do, they have to make up their minds.

Next week we will be presenting the model and further information to the people who are going to be responsible for building it. After that point, I think, participatory democracy comes in and the people can come in off the street and have a look at it. It has not been sold up to that point. It is a picture they can come and have a look at. The Chinese say a "picture is worth 10,000 words". I do not know how you could ever get all these citizens' groups in to talk about the waterfront if they could not visualize anything.

After next week they will be able to visualize it and take it home. It is spelled out and I think I spelled it out in words, not only in the House but also to the press. What the press does with some things, of course, I cannot be responsible for. I have suggested that it is an illustrated concept that can happen on the waterfront if the parties involved want to see it happen. That is the way it will be presented to the city fathers, I would hope, next week.

May I just finish? When that has been done, let me assure you, as far as my government is concerned, we are not going to force any concept on anybody. We say: "There it is; there is the model. If you think it has merit, we will help you. We will set up the corporation. We will help you set up the whole programme."

Mr. Sargent: Why are you there in the first place?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have every right to be.

Mr. Sargent: Why? What right do you have to stand up like that?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Wait a minute—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Wait a minute!

All I am saying is that the people who you and I talk to—you say they have been turned down. There is only one newspaper I know of which has turned it off and they are entitled to their opinion the same as we are. The other two Toronto newspapers seem to be quite happy with what they have heard and seen so far and they have not seen any more than the third newspaper, I can assure you.

As far as the citizens' groups are concerned, we would hope that when the city fathers have a look at it they say to us to go ahead and show it to the public at large. That is exactly what is going to happen after next Wednesday, Mr. Ramsay. We are making a presentation to the council. Some of the planners involved, the people who are involved in this—and that will be public knowledge—can ask any questions they like. They can come in and look at it; they can make suggestions. I can assure you as far as my government is concerned, we are not going to push anything the city of Toronto does not want.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to belabour this point. Let me make this point very clear. I do not object to you being in there because, quite frankly, there was a real confusion in terms of the ownership of the land and it is a little reassuring to discover that a minister like you, who normally has prided himself on his free enterprise principles, has a little socialistic concept of public ownership and retaining it. It is rather good that on occasion you grasp the essentials of life and its development on this planet.

Fine on that, but what I want are assurances that when we get to the stage of working out what might be the various parts under plan 2 of it, that there will be full participation. Rightly or wrongly—you say only one paper is turned off, the other two are turned on—well, they are promoting this whole concept. They are promoters like you and they do not seem to be turned off, but there are an awful lot of good citizens' groups and an awful lot of people who have a legitimate right to be consulted have been left out.

The Toronto Planning Board—God help us, the Toronto Planning Board surely should be an integral part of the whole thing—and it has been making statements to the effect: "What is going on? We are really not in the picture. We hear there has been a meeting with the mayor or with certain other unnamed top officials." Now, if the Toronto Planning Board feels it has been out of developments up until now, what will the various organizations—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Can I ask you a question? People elect the mayor and the council, and surely we must go to the mayor and the council to get their concurrence with this plan before we call the Toronto Planning Board. I would think the Toronto Planning Board would have the good common sense to recognize that their superiors, their bosses, must make a decision first. You know what happened to me in the House. We often have it happen in the House. A minister makes a statement and one of your people says: "How come the press has got the copy before I got it?" Now we cannot place ourselves in that position.

Mr. MacDonald: You appear to have answered my question, but you have not really; because the fact of the matter is that no more than a month or six weeks ago, even the mayor said he had no real contact. So, within the last four to six weeks, he appears to have been brought into the picture, to say nothing of all of the skilled and expert civil servants.

Now if these people in varying stages have been brought in, it is a pretty elite kind of group that has come to the decision. I am pleading with you that you make certain, or we will try to get your colleague to make certain, that from this point forward you live up to the commitments that are laid down in the official plan of full participation and of full study and input of ideas. I was a little disturbed by Mr. Ramsay's comment that if you ask for them you get 50,000 ideas and that is the problem. Well you know, democracy is a problem if you ask everybody to participate. But if you do not ask everybody to participate and a few people run the show, that is not democracy.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I agree with you. I think the people should participate, but they have to know what they are participating in.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay.

Hon. Mr. Randall: This is the point I want to make; that we want the people to participate because this is a major undertaking. It is going to change the whole face of Toronto, undoubtedly, and they have to participate, but I do not think they can participate if they walk in and you do not have anything for them to look at and they say, well, that is a harebrained scheme if ever there was one.

Look at the criticism when they came to Buckminster Fuller's scheme. You take the bottom of Yonge Street and you go all the way up to Eaton's and you knock the buildings over and put subways under. A lot of people said, this fellow must have fallen off a high chair and hit his head on something.

Now the idea is not a bad one if you have the kind of money that you can go ahead and push it with. And we say that this project we have here is feasible and we have been looking at all the feasibles in this thing. We have put it together and said, well now we have something to look at.

We did the same thing with Ontario Place, we made it public as soon as we had decided what we were going to do and how we wanted to do it. We let people have a look at it and there has not been any objection to Ontario Place. Most people think it is—

Mr. MacDonald: What is the point of objecting, the decision is cut and dried?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well it is another building.

Mr. MacDonald: But that is nonsense. It is not just another building.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is a provincial building; that is a provincial building. No, what you are talking about on the waterfront, my friend, is a whole new satellite community and a satellite community should be something people should participate in and this is what we say they should do, but they have to have a look at it first, they have to see what they can participate in. They have to see it; they have to feel it; they have to touch it.

Mr. MacDonald: The city of Toronto Planning Board has a report that was presented on April 3 which raises 18 policy issues for discussion. Now, maybe if they operate—

Mr. Sargent: What vote are you on, Mr. Chairman? What vote are you on?

Mr. Chairman: We are on planning and this has to do with planning.

Mr. Sargent: He is talking about Harbour City; and Mr. Apps was up next—

Mr. Chairman: Yes I know Mr. Apps was up next, but actually there is money in this vote for planning and this is what the member is talking about.

Hon. Mr. Randall: There is money in this vote and we are talking about research planning.

Mr. MacDonald: The only point I am making is that this report contains no fewer than 18 policy issues. Now I would have thought that rather fuller, wider participation in the discussion of these policy issues might have helped in the creation of the concept, to say nothing of the details which round out the concept. But are you going to give us the assurance that there is a willingness on the part of the government to participate in such discussions and not only a willingness, but a willingness to take the initiative and make dead certain that there is an opportunity for public participation? Because when Mr. McKeough gets up and says the citizens can participate because they are going to be paying the bills, we know that without him telling us.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Kingston and the Islands.

Mr. Apps: On the same question. Mr. Chairman, I do not resent what is happening along the waterfront in Toronto, I think it is high time this be made a beautiful area. The thing that I sometimes resent is the fact that I sometimes get the impression that Toronto is the only place that has a waterfront.

Mr. MacDonald: You have got one in Kingston; you have problems there.

Mr. Apps: Well we have a fine waterfront in Kingston and we are getting some of it developed by private enterprise, but the point remains that if you are prepared to help Toronto beautify its waterfront then I think you should be prepared to help any other city that has a waterfront to do the same thing.

Mr. MacDonald: That is why I asked the question the other day.

Mr. Apps: The first question I would like to ask you is would you be prepared, and on what basis, or how do you go about getting approval of The Department of Trade and Development for other cities to get help in developing their waterfront?

Hon. Mr. Randall: All I can suggest is that if you have an idea of what can be done to your waterfront, come and see us and let us have a look at it. I do not think anyone in this government is going to turn down a viable proposition. And let me just point out that the waterfront programme we are looking at right now is a self-liquidating project. It is not a gift; it is not developing another part. It is a satellite city that over the years, we have 13 or 15 years, will liquidate itself without one dime of the taxpayers' money.

Mr. Apps: Mr. Chairman, this is not confined to the city of Toronto. We have other cities in the same situation trying—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh, I know it is not.

Mr. Apps: The point I am making is, all right, we are doing this for the city of Toronto. Fine, more power to them. I agree with it, but I think we should be prepared to do the same thing for other areas and we in Kingston certainly will be getting in touch with you in that connection—

Mr. MacDonald: What is your problem there?

Mr. Apps: Well, our problem is not as serious as maybe some of your people try to make out—

Mr. MacDonald: It is so.

Mr. Apps: —but this is an area where private enterprise is going ahead, and I think doing something very beneficial for the city of Kingston. But there is more to our waterfront than what is being done by them at the present time. This is what I am talking about.

Secondly, in relation to planning, I would like to cover these other three points. You do a lot of planning for big projects. I would like to ask you if you would do some planning on small projects. It would help, to a great extent, what has been called the small businessman here. First of all, a lot of companies go bankrupt. Provincial sales tax has already been paid. There is no way on earth you can get that sales tax back. You have paid the money; you have not got it back. The company has gone bankrupt, and this—

Mr. Chairman: I think you are out of order.

Mr. Apps: No, I am talking about planning.

Mr. Chairman: Oh, you are talking about planning. What are you—

Mr. Apps: I am talking about special studies. Is that not what we are at now?

Mr. Chairman: That is right. We are on planning, promotion and advertising.

Mr. Apps: Right! Now what I would like to have you do is take a look at this. This is The Department of Trade and Development; you are trying to help industries. You take a look at this and see if there is any way in which a reasonable solution can be worked out whereby companies could be reimbursed for the sales tax they have never collected—that they have paid out but never collected because of the bankruptcy of the company. Now, that is number one. I think this would be a help to many small companies.

Secondly, when your sales tax representative comes into a company, all work stops. Period. They do nothing for about a week, except to try to get the information that your people require in order to make sure that these companies have paid their sales tax properly. They receive no reimbursement from that whatsoever. Nothing.

The federal government does make a very small reimbursement for the collection of their 11 per cent sales tax. I would like you to have a look at that to see if there is any way in which at least a small fee could be charged by the company to do the work that is required. I realize it comes under The Department of Revenue, but you are here to try to help companies and I am putting this in as a request to see what can be done in that connection.

The third one, of course, is whether there is any way in which you can aid smaller businesses in obtaining a little more operating capital. They will not get it from the banks. The banks are pretty mandatory people. They say, no, that is it, regardless. They have not got any money and so the small firms cannot have any extra money even if they deserve it. The banks say: "Well, we would like to do it but our head office says no, we cannot make any more loans."

In this particular time this is very important and I realize that this may be an insurmountable problem and it may not just be possible to do, but you have a section of special studies, so would it not be a good idea to see if anything can be done to alleviate this particular situation which, I can assure you, is a serious one?

Mr. Chairman: Any comments?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will look that over. The first item, of course, deals with Treasury and Economics so I will pass on your comments to them. As far as bank credit is concerned, we are dealing today in a very difficult situation and I do not think this government, or even the federal government, has sufficient money to take care of all the people that cannot get an overdraft or bank credit today, and it is highlighted by the fight against inflation.

I think the other day, when the bank rate in Ottawa dropped a half of one per cent, that immediately the reserves went up another one per cent so it made it tougher than ever for the small businessman, or the fellow who is on the market, to get money. I must come back and say I do not know where this government, or even the federal government, is going to get sufficient funds to bankroll every small manufacturer or retailer who says: "I am shut off at the bank."

As much as we recognize that if the guy goes bankrupt we have to find a new industry to put there to sop up the jobs. I see the difficulties. I just wonder where we are going to get the funds.

Mr. Apps: I can understand the difficulty, but it is a serious situation.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I know it is.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Sargent, Grey Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I fully agree with the member from Kingston and the Islands. He is very much on target and he knows what he is talking about.

It is incredible that we do not have a minister who, if he was not used to doing big wheel jobs all the time, could think like an ordinary small businessman. But he is lost in the human touch. He does not know what is going on in the area of small business. I can tell you he does not. I think that for a government that is in as much trouble as you collectively are in this province, I think if you do not know it—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You should be helping us.

Mr. Sargent: Pardon me?

Hon. Mr. Randall: You should be helping us because the next time we are going to the polls, why you are going to be the new minister.

Mr. Sargent: I would not think so.

Mr. Chairman: I do not know whether that exactly comes under this vote or not, but whoever—

Mr. Sargent: I do not think I would, because I do not think I would have the patience that you have to sit up and have guys like me giving you hell.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I usually get it at home. Go ahead.

Mr. Sargent: I admire you all for the job you do, but this is my role and I do it very badly sometimes. I want to say, that you are in a mess—your government—you are living in a nightmare. You tell me, Mr. Minister, the motivation.

Who casts the die to shoot a wad like $8 million in the first guesstimate, like we had a guesstimate of $5 million for a science centre which ended up costing $30 million. That money belongs to five million people throughout the province, not the two million that live here in Toronto. It belongs to the people who live outside Toronto in the rest of the province. So you make the decision, then, to spend x millions of dollars on things called Ontario Place; and where do you get the sagacity to launch a programme like Harbour City? It is not your problem whether Harbour City is a fait accompli—whether it works or not.

You have enough problems with the out-lying 117 ridings, but you are concentrating all your spending here in Toronto on the lakefront and God knows what else.

The member for Kingston and the Islands says, would you give us a similar project on our waterfront, and you actually say you will look into it.

Quit kidding! You have no right to be doing things like that. That is not a function of government to spend money across the province like that, or in this place either. It is the allocation of resources on behalf of the people and you are allocating the resources here to the votes in Toronto and to big business and that is not your function. You have no right to be spending on these projects here in Toronto.

Having said that, if you are going to continue on the vote I want to talk about the studies in this vote. But first of all, if a member wants to talk about Harbour City—

Mr. Pitman: Yes, that is the subject.

Mr. Chairman: Yes, there is Mr. Pitman for Peterborough who would like to—

Mr. Pitman: I have just two points I want to make. I will not make any great demands for us. I just have two points. One is what I regard as the structure of the city—

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): I expect he wants a new constituency.

Mr. Pitman: —that there is a concept whereby participation is something that takes place after, really, the die has been cast and everything is over. Essentially it is all over. I think this is what is wrong with most of the participation which takes place with people in regard to projects of this nature. If you really want the people of Ontario—the five million people that the member for Grey Bruce talked about—if you want them to feel they are a part of Ontario Place or have some role in Harbour City or whatever other project is becoming a part of Toronto or Queen's city, the provincial capital. For heaven sakes get some participation at the beginning!

Now the minister said that you cannot have them participate when you do not know what it is all about. Well that is the next point I want to make: on what the nature of planning is in the 20th century as I see it. It is not, I think, developing a plan, a single plan, in such a way that you present a single plan to good people and say: "There it is. Now this or nothing." You know, it is sort of like the 1935 election. It is "King or chaos."

I do not think that this is the kind of alternative which we have the right to present to people—whether it is Harbour City or whether it is Ontario Place. It is as if you have a group of alternatives. You balance off what is recreational, what relates to housing, what is urban renewal, what is public and private and you present a series of alternatives and you say that this is what we can do with the harbour of Toronto or we can provide this, or if you give a group of meaningful purposes where there is some selection of alternatives, rather than simply this or nothing; this or we go back to the mess we have down there now.

Those are the only two points I want to make. Because this minister is more and more becoming a minister of development, I think that his department should be very clear of what the structural participation is. A meaningful structure of participation, is not simply getting 50,000 people at the end after it has already been settled.

Secondly, I think it relates to giving a series of alternatives, and we are living in an age now of computers, and all kinds of methods whereby we can provide these kinds of alternatives. I suggest to the minister that that is the way it has got to be from now on.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Windsor-Walkerville, are your remarks going to be in the same vein.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): On planning generally, but not on this particular portion.

Mr. Chairman: Would you like to make comments?

Mr. Peacock: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Peacock, Windsor West.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, I had a thought similar to that of the member for Peterborough in respect to what to the choices and the illustration that the minister and Mr. Ramsay spoke of, to be offered next week, would contain. I fear that perhaps the member for Peterborough is right, that there is going to be one monolithic plan to be presented to Mayor Dennison and the members of the city of Toronto council and the planning board.

I know he is reluctant to talk about details at this time, but I think in some manner the minister has got to indicate to us whether the choices will be built into the planning that is now being done in preparation for the presentation next Wednesday to the city of Toronto.

I suspect, along with the member for Peterborough, that given the minister's background in business he will write what he thinks is a pretty good plan and he will bring all the motivational and market research that he can muster behind it to sell it, in the same manner that Mr. Ramsay described studies being carried on in support of the Canadian National Exhibition Association.

You come up with the idea; you know how to market it and I think that is your attitude towards it, that you will sell it. And given the kind of relationship between the city and its electorate and citizenry, you probably count on acceptance by the city. So that is why I say that the illustration, or the presentation next week, has got to have the choices built into it that the Community Planning Association or the Metro Toronto planning boards have listed as the 18 points referred to by the member for York South.

Mr. Chairman: Do you want to make any further comments?

Mr. Peacock: Will they contain—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would say that the plan that will be presented actually will be a very, very flexible one. We recognize that it is a major undertaking. Perhaps it is one of the first in North America, if not in the world. And it is not a decision that is easy for anybody to make including the officials of the city of Toronto—including the planning officials of the city of Toronto. I think when they see the plan that we give them next week and they talk to their various groups who elect them to office, whether it be the planning authorities or municipal officials, I would think with the flexibility that will be in that plan and presented in the way that we will present it, they can make a decision whether they want to change it, or whether they want it to be as big; whether they want it smaller; what the cost can amount to. I think everything they want, and the information they need to make a decision, will be there.

Now I can assure you from talking to the mayor and talking to some of the city officials that they feel the same as we do. This is a major undertaking for the city of Toronto and perhaps the province of Ontario. It could have a bearing on what would happen to satellite cities all over the world when this is presented. It is a city on water; it is like Venice, with parks—a little different—and when it is presented I think they can make up their minds how big they want it, how small they want it; what they want to do with it.

You have my assurance, and I told your leader this afternoon, we have no intention of selling anything. We intend to present it piece by piece, providing the information they want so they can take it home and study it. Then we are available for any consultations, whether it is citizens groups, or any other group that wants to talk to us, once the presentation has been made to the city officials.

But, first and foremost we must deal with the people who are responsible for running the city of Toronto and who will be responsible for authorizing or going ahead with the waterfront plan if they want to go ahead, or cancelling it if they want to cancel it. Thank you.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, just one other comment in regard to that. I accept the minister's necessity of dealing with the elected authorities. However, in answering questions in the House last week and the week before, he spoke of the likelihood that the development would result in a lower density of use—recreational or commercial or whatever other use—than now prevails on the mainland. I wonder if he is in a position to tell the committee now what area, what acreage, will be provided for the site of Harbour City. I believe in his answer to the questions in the House last week, he spoke of the entire Toronto islands' land area as being part of the—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Of all the Metro area that exists now, not one square inch will be touched. The parkland that is there now will not be touched. It will remain exactly as it is. The area we are talking about is on the mainland. That is, across the western gap where the old ball stadium used to be; all the rest of the land is to be created to the west of that.

Mr. Peacock: With all new land?

Hon. Mr. Randall: All new land where the water runs to 28 feet. There is only one area where an arterial highway comes down and it makes a bend. There are 15 acres of Metro park in there and—

Mr. Sargent: What authority have you to make that statement now?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Just a minute, now!

Mr. Sargent: What authority?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The road comes through there and if it does not make a jog, it goes over the top of a piece of Metro land which is roughly 15 acres. People are going to walk under it, play under it, do whatever they want under it. But if there are any objections made to Metro, then it can be swung to the left and kept within Harbour City. But I do not think there is any difficulty as far as chairman Campbell is concerned. We talked about it but this is a minor detail with reference to the whole plan. All the land is going to be built out of the new land.

Mr. MacDonald: Can I ask one question? Is there general legal acceptance of the proposition that you were asked about in the House when you replied to a question of mine that all new land by fill is provincial land?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right.

Mr. MacDonald: Is that accepted?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, that is accepted. Under The British North America Act, everything outside of the city of Toronto harbour belongs to the province of Ontario unless decided to somebody else previously. For instance—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): And that would be true, for example, in Kingston, if there was some fill—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, just a minute. In Kingston you are talking about Lake Ontario. If it is in the harbour, it belongs to the city of Kingston. Out in the lake belongs to the province of Ontario and every time they come to the government and say we want to use a water lot, permission has been granted, if they are going to use it for parks or for those purposes.

Remember, in this case, Harbour City was predicating the first harbour plan on all this land which is the property of the people of Ontario. This is where the discussions came in with regard to land ownership. When we say we will put, I think it is 1,615 acres of newly-created land out there, 625 new acres will be created to the west of the island which is the main part of the Harbour City property. That land is all the province of Ontario's at the present time under The British North America Act and nobody has disputed it.

Mr. Peacock: Is all the new land going to be in the lake or some of it in the bay?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, the bay will not be touched by it; there will be no land in the bay. The first harbour plan showed another island in the bay off the western gap and they finally recognized that that was not a good project. When we talked about the land that we could provide to the west of the island they forgot about their putting an island in the bay.

Mr. Chairman: Does this serve the same point?

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: Now, just a moment—

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, I want to come back to the matter of density. Is the minister able to give assurance that none of the offshore land—the Toronto Island airport which I believe is to be closed in the near future, and put under development, and the other island lands—will be considered within that area in which the Harbour City programme is redeveloped. You will not in any way consider reducing the density of the 7,000 people that you mentioned putting there from the city?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The Metro lands up to now have been left exactly as they are. In fact, when we are finished there will be another 125 acres of land created around the concept which will be turned over to Metro for parks.

Mr. Chairman: "Mr. Newman, Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask of the minister, getting away from the Harbour City development, if there have been studies throughout other parts of the province concerning waterfront developments, not necessarily on the grandiose scale such as we have for Harbour City, but possibly on a minor scale?

Hon. Mr. Randall: None of them have been brought to my attention. Whether they have been brought to lands and forests or not, I could not say, but not to us.

Mr. B. Newman: Has the department undertaken any type of overall studies for parts of the province that might indicate that certain areas would be better developed in a given fashion? I could specifically refer to possible studies in the Essex county area, seeing that we are blessed, or you could say plagued, by more watercraft than any other part of the province of Ontario and that possibly a large-scale marina development might have some economic impact and advantage to the given area.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, I think the development in those areas would come under regional development in the treasury and economics portfolio. Insofar as we are concerned, what I have suggested I said to my friend for Kingston and the Islands, if there is an area in any municipality or any city around Ontario that can be developed on the water and a greater use can be made of it, I think it is up to the municipal system to bring it forward and let us have a look at it.

I do not know whether it is feasible or not, but perhaps in the many areas you suggest a marina could be built and then it would be a good asset for that particular community. And for myself, I am over at the Toronto Island. I think it is a beautiful marina, but they had a hard job running it last year and making any money, and I had to go over last Sunday to see if I was going to have a slip over there this year because I brought my boat down from Lake Simcoe. I have got it in Oshawa and I want to keep it off Toronto Island for the summer. There is a beautiful spot over there. It is a good marina, but it has not been developed because Metro turned it over to a couple of fellows on a rental basis and there just was not enough money put into it. They were planning yacht clubs and a few other things that they have not yet developed. Although this year, I understand, new people have it and will develop it by making very good commercial projects over there without using any land that is now taken for parks.

Let us recognize that some of that land over there is bullrushes and sand and people never get to it.

Now Metro has taken that piece of land over there and developed quite a harbour out of it. But there has not been enough money put into it to generate a good commercial vehicle as yet. However, I would suggest to you if there are any areas that you know of where a marina could operate through the municipality's position insofar as economic circumstances are concerned, we would take a look at it.

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask of the minister who instigated the studies for Harbour City? Was that under your department or was that a request from the municipality?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well there was no request. What happened, of course, was there have been a number of studies on the waterfront, as you know. You have heard the name Marvo; I think it has come up at least 1,000 times within the last five or 10 years. They are great plans—on the mainland and over here where the ferries take off—but nothing was ever developed. People had options, but nothing was ever developed.

When we get into looking at the CNE problem and then get into replacing our own building at the CNE, and the Harbour City, the harbour commission had their own Harbour City plans. A man was to sell the property that they now own over there and on the mainland to people like Campeau.

Now if that had taken place, on much of that island area over there, for instance on the island airport, they would have built commercial buildings and then they would have been the richest harbour commission, I think, anywhere in the world.

Now when we get a look at it we say, well, if we are going to give border lots to the harbour commission, far better we develop it for the people. And this is how we came to our concept; I should say a concept put together so that we could develop that land for the people. We could build housing for an integrated community over there.

Now as I say, we are going to present the plan next week and everybody can take a look at it and see if it is a good plan—should we go ahead with it or should we not go ahead with it?

Mr. B. Newman: Well it could be that the idea of the planning is very good, Mr. Minister, but you made mention that this was a project of the department itself and not really suggested by the municipality. Why would you not treat other parts of the province in the same fashion? Why would you not come along and conduct similar studies in other places throughout the province of Ontario? Why do you simply favour the city of Toronto?

Mr. Sargent: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well I do not think we favour the city of Toronto. All I say to you, as I have said to my friend for Kingston and the Islands, if any of these fellows will come forward with a plan and ask for our help, we would be quite prepared to take a look at any plan they have and see if we can help them. As I said, we would get into it. And if you recall that Expo '67 drove everybody down here screaming their lungs out: "Montreal gets everything, poor Toronto gets nothing." And they even agreed to send back our old garbage cans to us.

Mr. Sargent: We will trade you hockey players any time.

Hon. Mr. Randall: All right!

So we got into the study because of Expo '67. People said, "What is Toronto going to do?" The exhibition itself is called a country fair.

There was a lot of criticism which I say was unjustified, but nonetheless the CNE had to take on a different physical character. There had to be something new in there.

So, when Mr. Robarts spoke out there—and I think it was August, 1968—Mr. Pearson was there and he said, "If the province will put up half a million dollars, I will put up half a million dollars."

Now that would just paint the flagpole, as you recognize. So far the federal government has not put up a five-cent piece, but the province has gone ahead and helped the CNE develop their property.

Mr. Chairman: Just a moment now, Mr. Newman has the floor.

Mr. B. Newman: The minister is still side-stepping the issue. The development of Harbour City was at the instigation of your department, not as a request on the part of the city of Toronto, or Metro at all. If you are going to instigate such studies in this area, there may be hundreds of other areas in the province that could probably benefit to a greater extent—because of their size, maybe even a small development could have a tremendous economic impact on them. Maybe some of these studies should, likewise, be conducted in other areas.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would suggest to you, sir, that if you have anybody who has an idea, tell them to come and see us.

Mr. B. Newman: But you see, this idea was your idea, so why not come along and implement similar types of studies for ideas in other areas?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Have you ever had the big thick book put out by Metro, "Toronto Waterfront?"

Mr. B. Newman: Do I have it?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, you get a copy. The Metro waterfront plan was put out a few years ago and this started people looking at the waterfront to see what could be developed. Out of that the harbour commission decided on Harbour City. This is where my friend said, "Are you going to fill in the bay?"

From that we got into the CNE studies, and into Ontario Place, and we said we will—

Mr. B. Newman: But you were not asked to do this study at all. You did it on your own.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We do a lot of things we are not asked to do, but—

Mr. B. Newman: This is the whole point that I am getting at. You did it on your own; why not do similar types of studies in other places?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Tell us what your potential is then?

Mr. Apps: Mr. Chairman, I would like to—

Mr. Chairman: Order! Is there a supplementary question?

Mr. Singer: It is not supplementary. We have got away from Harbour City. Surely you can wait your turn the same as anybody else?

Mr. Chairman: I think, Mr. Apps, that I will recognize Mr. Singer from Downsview. He has the floor.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I arrived a little late. I gather from what has been said that you have been discussing Harbour City—

Mr. Chairman: I must say there has been a lot of discussion about Harbour City and I hope that you do not—

Mr. Singer: It is difficult. Under the way the House is working now we move upstairs and downstairs.

However, as I understand from hearing what I did just in this last 10 minutes or so and what I have gathered in the House, the scheme as set up a year ago has pretty well been abandoned. There is now a new one and the announcements made by the minister that he had hoped—I think we have reduced it to that—that he hoped building would start in Harbour City in 1970 has sort of gone by the boards.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I did not say that.

Mr. Singer: Oh yes you did.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No I did not!

Mr. Singer: I can read chapter and verse quoted out of Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Come, come now. Do not put words in my mouth.

Mr. Singer: Let us not fight that one again. There is no immediacy on the minister's behalf that this thing is going to start this year, or next year, or in five years.

I would be summing it up correctly, I think, if the minister says, "Here are the plans and if you fellows like to, go ahead." Is that the present situation?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, that is not right at all.

Mr. Singer: I would like to know how this thing is going to be financed. Is the province doing anything more than just draw plans and saying this is a good idea and we will help?

Do you anticipate that either the city of Toronto, or the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto, on their own, and in light of their present difficulty with raising tax money and the present very substantial burden on municipal taxpayers, is going to be able to embark upon this kind of development, even though you call it "self-liquidating?"

Who is going to pay for filling in the land? Who is going to pay for water services, for sewer services, for new roads, for all the other variety of things?

Is the province committing itself? Is it going to be part of this plan that the province is going to make capital advances to the full extent, or is this whole burden about to be thrown on the shoulders either of the Metropolitan Toronto taxpayer or the city of Toronto taxpayer?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Chairman, the proposed corporation outline was published inadvertently by one of the newspapers, I think two weeks ago. The hon. member was in Japan; I do not know.

We had a confidential meeting with the harbour commission and the Toronto council. The next night we read what the outline of the corporation was to be, and how the corporation would operate, in that night's paper. So it is pretty hard to keep these meetings confidential, once you start bringing in groups.

The project will be self-liquidating on the basis that everything in Harbour City will be—

Mr. Singer: Let me get one point quite clear. The plan does not envisage touching at all the existing Toronto islands and the parks?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right. I confirm that.

Mr. H. MacKenzie (Ottawa South): Will the airport remain or does it disappear?

An hon. member: Except there will be another 125 acres of water.

Hon. Mr. Randall: One hundred and twenty-five acres of parkland!

The proposal is that—it is public knowledge—when the corporation is formed, the province will have 55 per cent of the shares, the harbour commission will have 22.5 per cent, the city of Toronto will have 22.5 per cent. That is based on the amount of land each one is putting into the corporation. Is that clear?

There is sufficient value in there, on the land, and all I can suggest to you is that it is costing, at the present time, to fill in out there anywhere from $20,000 to $60,000 an acre, depending on where you are doing it. The land could sell out there, if you wanted to sell it, for $250,000 an acre minimum.

If anybody doubts those figures, I suggest you find out what Mr. Campeau was prepared to pay for the terminal warehouse, which is $600,000 an acre; and that site is nowhere near as valuable as the site that we are talking about and the site that we are building off the CNE right now.

There will be almost 1,100 acres of land out there. On the value of that land a debenture can be issued and the corporation of the province would be prepared to guarantee the debenture. It would require a small sum of money, what we call a small sum of money, to start. There would be no more than 2,000 units a year built out there when building starts, so you are not going to throw a mass of 50,000 or 60,000 out there. It will take 13 to 15 years, if they keep on schedule to complete it.

Mr. Singer: Two into 70 goes 35 years.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Pardon?

Mr. Singer: You have 2,000 people a year—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, housing units!

As the units are going out there, that is 2,000 units housing about 5,000 people—if this is the way the plan is accepted and works out—by the end of the fifth year there would be a sufficient cash flow back from the sale of acreage and commercial properties and rents and the sale of the houses for the corporation to carry itself.

This is worked out by Woods Gordon, not just by us; do not blame it on me. We have had it thoroughly checked by Woods Gordon, and checked by our own treasury department. On the basis of our facts and figures it would appear to us that it can be self-liquidating in 13 to 15 years.

It may be 20 years, depending on if there are any strikes, lockouts, walkouts, storms or what have you. But on the basis of the planning we see for a Harbour City development, whether it be this one or the one the people decide on in the city, if they accept it or reject it, that is the way it will be financed.

Mr. Singer: All right.

Now that is only part of the answer, because once you get land you say it has the value you attribute to it—I am not going to quibble with those figures—but it is going to take a minute or two to create that land and it is going to take substantial expenditure to create that land. While that land is being created which is going to take—what, a few years—who is going to do that financing. Because this new corporation at that point is selling nothing more than an idea. It strikes me that it might be difficult to float debentures on land that does not as yet exist. Is the province financing the initial expenses?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would not think so. If the province of Ontario is offering a debenture, I think you could even sell water lots in Florida.

Mr. Singer: I see. Are you telling us then that it is government policy that if these plans are approved, the province will immediately guarantee debentures to get the thing started? Is that what you are telling me?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is exactly what I said two weeks ago.

Mr. Singer: I see.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Just remember, they will be guaranteed by the province. That is why we are forming the corporation.

Mr. Singer: And where do the interest payments come in the meantime?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Pardon?

Mr. Singer: Until the money starts to flow back in, who does the intermediate financing? Is the province going to lend money to the corporation or is the city of Toronto or Metropolitan Toronto going to pay for it?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I would think that the corporation will borrow its funds either from the province of Ontario or through the debenture issue and as the debenture issue is issued. I do not know how many dollars of debenture will have to be issued. They have to have money in the kitty in order to keep the programme going. Whatever is required, it will be set up and financed as an officially-operated project. I would think by the end of five years we would be in a cash-flow position to take care of any of our obligations financially.

Mr. Singer: At the peak time of issue of debentures, to what extent are provincially guaranteed debentures going to be outstanding?

Hon. Mr. Randall: At the moment, I would not think there would be any more than $32 million.

Mr. Singer: Has the Treasury Board indicated that this is within the reasonable financing arrangements for the province of Ontario to assume obligations for another $32 million?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They have had a look at it, yes.

Mr. Singer: And what about the city of Toronto? What costs are they going to be put to?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not think the city of Toronto will be put to any cost, because most of your sewers and services are already at water's edge now. I guess you were not here this afternoon; the project itself will be financing all its own services in Harbour City—all its own transportation, financing the entire project.

We will not be calling for funds from any other source except the corporation.

They are just like a developer. The corporation will develop that project and will tie into the services already built there. When it comes to transportation, certainly there will be transportation facilities required if they buy the plan. There will be transportation facilities required to bring the people down to Harbour City development.

Mr. J. Renwick: Will the corporation have title to the land?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Pardon?

Mr. J. Renwick: Will the corporation retain title to Harbour City?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We think that is the way it should be. The buildings can be sold and we may need to change The Condominium Act. As you know today, in The Condominium Act you have an agreed per cent of the land, too.

Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen, it is now six of the clock. We recess now until eight o'clock.

It being 6.00 of the clock, p.m., the committee took recess.

Trade and Development Standing Committee

THURSDAY, MAY 14, 1970

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT

The Committee resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

On vote 2201:

Mr. Chairman: I would like to point out that there is problem picking up the interjections. As a matter of fact, you have to speak right into the microphone to have them recorded. If you find in Hansard that your interjections are not there, just remember it is pretty difficult because most of the microphones are not on.

Mr. S. Apps (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Chairman, can you allow us to sit down?

Mr. Chairman: Well they claim that you cannot sit down; they can hear a lot better if you stand up. That is the order that I got and that I am supposed to pass out to you.

Now we were discussing planning, promotion, and advertising. The first speaker I have is the member for Victoria-Haliburton.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Chairman, quite a few of my remarks were dealt with by the member for Downsview (Mr. Singer). However I would like to have a little clarification.

The minister mentioned the Metro area. The conservation authority was going to do part of this waterfront or have the responsibility for part of the waterfront. Could he tell me what part of the waterfront?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): If you have seen the Metro waterfront study, it embraces the entire waterfront from the other side, almost to Whitby. That is 50 miles on the Ontario waterfront here, and there was a section from Coxwell Avenue east and the Humber west that was turned over by Metro to the conservation authorities to look after. It is one of those—

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: It has not been approved yet?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It has not been approved yet, but this is what they hope to work out, that the conservation authorities will look after it.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Have your people worked with the conservation authorities on this part yet?

Hon. Mr. Randall: On what part?

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: On this part of their study? Is it their responsibility?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No. We had some things, but not too much to do. We had some things, if I remember. But in the first Metro study we made a contribution, but above—

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: The province did have representatives on the Metropolitan Toronto waterfront plan which started off in 1963 and went on for five years. This plan went from Whitby or Frenchman's Bay to Port Credit. Are the Toronto Harbour Commissioners responsible for the rest of it?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, the harbour commissioners looked after the inner bay and the city the rest.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: I am trying to get the jurisdictions here.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me put it this way. It is now being divided up into three areas. The conservation area that we talked about is controlled by Metro; there is the harbour itself which belongs to the city of Toronto and is controlled by the harbour commissioners. The areas outside the bay itself are controlled by the harbour commissioners and that is where the city of Toronto and ourselves and the harbour commissioners are looking at it for three years, as a joint operation.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: The other question I would like to ask is if on a similar project the province's participation is available to other areas in the province if they come up with ideas and proposals that look worthwhile.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think with the overall plan, the Metro waterfront plan, we could come up with some ideas if they could take the shoreline, that 50 miles of the plan, and come up with some ideas that the various municipalities bordering Lake Ontario wanted to institute. Chairman Campbell wanted to get some verification that Metro can see, so that we could get started on it. There is something in the east end which we have been talking about here that they want to get on.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): And share with the province?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Could be!

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Apps for Kingston and the Islands.

Mr. Apps: Mr. Chairman, I would like to comment further on providing help to other areas on the waterfront. I am inclined to think that if the department were to come to these areas and try to tell people what they should do with their waterfronts, they might run into a little bit of a problem about people from Toronto coming down and telling us what to do. I think that perhaps the best idea would be to leave it up to the municipalities concerned in that they would be interested in developing their waterfront. They should check with you people and determine what help, if any, they could receive; whether there would be special grants made available, whether you would give them help in planning; just what could be done.

If this could be done, I am sure that a lot of the areas with good waterfront properties would be talking to you about it. I do not know whether you are prepared to say right now just what you can do in that connection, but if you can I would appreciate your saying something about it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would think that they can make these approaches through their own regional development councils in those areas.

One of the first things I think they should look at is who controls the waterfront. If it is federally-controlled they would have to get clarification federally before they could do anything. If it comes under the province, they could get in touch with us or lands and forests. We could give them the information with reference to who controls the water that they are talking about.

Mr. Apps: That may be. Mr. Chairman, it is a pretty confused picture. In many areas the federal government has jurisdiction, other areas the city might own, and other areas might have private owners.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is what we found out here and that is why we took so long to sort it out.

Mr. Apps: It is a pretty confused picture. I think probably it needs somebody with a fair amount of knowledge to go over it all and determine just who owns what and the best way to get around it. Maybe your people should do something along that line.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think our recommendation is they should go to the regional council to see what could be done concerning development.

Mr. Apps: Well, I would not say the regional council would be the answer; it could be around here, but in some other area it would not. I doubt whether the regional council would be the body that could do it.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, I have just three brief questions, one of which I asked by way of an interjection just before the dinner recess, and I am sure it is on the record. I asked whether Harbour City would in fact hold title in perpetuity to the lands; and the minister's response, as I understand it, was that this was what was envisaged at the present time, bearing in mind the tentative nature of the plan as it is presently set.

The second matter is that there was a reference in the minutes of the city council quite recently about a letter, to which Mr. Clarkson, the deputy, was a signatory, and Mr. Wronski, and I believe two or three other people—

An hon. member: Mr. Taylor.

Mr. J. Renwick: —and Mr. Taylor from Municipal Affairs, the community planning branch. It was addressed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Roberts) about the waterfront plan, as the result of some study or some consideration that had been given by that small group. Is that document a public document, and could it be made available to us, or is it still in the nature of a private communication to the head of the government of the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would say it is a private communication at the moment. There are some things out of that document that were utilized, as well as the statement the harbour commissioners made about the corporations.

Mr. J. Renwick: Would you give consideration as to whether or not we could have it made available to us during the course of these estimates?

And the third question I have relates to the questions that the member for Downsview was raising before dinner about the financing plans. When these plans for Harbour City are unveiled, will you have any financial projection over a period of time; showing, for example, the length of the non-revenue-earning period and how long it is going to have to be financed as a deficit financing operation?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would think that would be part and parcel of our release, because everybody—including ourselves—wants to know what the dollar figure is. You must keep in mind that they are figures put together on a premise that there will not be any major changes in what we suggested. There may be changes, deletions or amendments; then, of course, the entire picture would have to be changed. But I think in order for people to get some—

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): That sort of lifts the lid off the pot a little bit.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, it is not restrictive as to what the project would cost, but what the investment would be out there. I do not think there will be too much difficulty in releasing the figures if we have them.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, within the framework of the plans you projected, that is an estimate you can make. I think that if you are talking about a 15- to 20-year period for completion, there should be a financial projection, because it would appear obvious that there would be a substantial period of deficit financing involved in the development of the project.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Windsor West.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, earlier, before we adjourned at 6 o'clock, and just now through the questions of the member for Riverdale, it would appear that once again we are facing a presentation next week with a rather narrow set of choices. I am wondering, given the information that arose this afternoon, whether the development of Harbour City can possibly include a mix of housing that would include housing for low-income families, housing for senior citizens and housing of a type other than high-rise that is amenable to the needs of persons earning low incomes or middle incomes who must, of necessity, rent their housing or buy it under one of the HOME programmes that the Ontario Housing Corporation has now established.

The reason I ask is that because of the figure that was mentioned of peak debenturing of $42 million over the life of the development, I wonder whether or not the interest rates on that amount of borrowing to finance the development services and construction of the project can possibly encompass the financing of low-income rental housing. It would appear that unless the department or the government or the Ontario Housing Corporation is going to be subsidizing the interest rates in some fashion on that debenturing, the cost of the project should include some element of mixed housing for not only those in the upper or middle income brackets, but those in the lower income bracket who must, of course, rent their housing or buy it on a very long-term basis as they do under the HOME plan. That leads me to ask, Mr. Chairman, if the minister has included in the presentation, the flexibility that they will permit the government to subsidize borrowing, the costs of borrowing, so that this kind of housing will be included in the development project.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me say that it is to be an integrated community. We had planned senior citizens and some public housing in there, as we are doing in all communities. The very fact that we control the price of land through the corporation, that it is not a development project such as the main land, leaves us to believe it is possible to get some low-income housing out there; not only through the Ontario Housing Corporation for those who must be subsidized the regular way, but also for families who want to purchase on the HOME plan. This is, basically, the idea of controlling that land over there at the prices we can control it at.

It is our opinion that we must have an integrated society over there. We cannot have all low-income people or all high-priced people, or we will not have an integrated community. But, yes, I think that the question you have brought up will be answered in our presentation. We will be giving you assurance that we will be having that kind of housing over there for those kinds of people.

Insofar as subsidizing interest rates, we say it is a self-liquidating project. We feel it can be self-liquidating with a mix of low-income housing and senior citizens in there. There was talk of putting in, we will say, the middle income people who will be buying the homes. We hope that we will be able to control the land ourselves and keep it, as your associate has said there, in the corporation; because we feel that the land should be controlled, at least the residential land.

In your commercial land there may be a different approach. We have not worked that out yet and we have not got down to details. That again, I think, will be one of the things that the city officials will wish to speak to us about.

Mr. Peacock: If you say you may not be able to control the commercial land, in terms of value or resale price, does that mean you will be surrendering title?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I said we are trying to consider both ways. We are trying to consider that if we want to get some money out of the commercial properties to make it possible for low-income people to live over there, perhaps we will have to sell off some property for commercial purposes. When I say commercial, I am talking about stores and service operations in the area for people living there. But we have not as yet made any decision as to what should be done there. If the project is accepted by the city and it is decided that it is feasible, then these are the programmes we will have to sit down and work out and see how we will control the land and at what prices.

Mr. Singer: I am interested.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Could the minister refresh my memory on the share of Ontario in these corporations?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Fifty-five per cent!

Mr. Singer: Fifty-five per cent! Then Ontario, in fact, is the boss.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You say the boss.

Mr. Singer: If you have got 55 per cent, you are the boss.

Hon. Mr. Randall: And we have six directors on the board, yes.

Mr. Singer: So if the scheme goes through, you, or whoever it is, is going to give direction. Right? You are in control?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think we should be, if we are putting up the money, do you not agree?

Mr. Singer: Ah, are you putting up the money?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, we are.

Mr. Singer: You are guaranteeing? Okay! Fine. Now that is number one.

The second point that concerns me very much—and this relates to the minister's very bad performance insofar as selling land is concerned is that he used provincial money to buy out people in Bramalea at the going market price.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You have not talked to people out there lately have you?

Mr. Singer: Oh I will talk to you about that when we get to the housing vote; but by your performance you shall be known.

When you got out to Bramalea and you bought cheap lots, you gathered in a profit of 50 per cent at the expense of the people of Ontario. Is it the same plan that when you now start renting or selling to people in Ontario you are going to make a profit on them? Are you going to keep the market price stabilized?

Hon. Mr. Randall: As I said a few minutes ago, we have not as yet arrived at a decision as to how the lands will be disposed of, but I am inclined to believe that the land will be leased.

Mr. Singer: I see. Is it going to be leased to all people in Ontario, no matter what their income is, on the basis of recovery over the whole scheme? Or are you planning to give some benefit to those people who fall below an average income earning level?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The plan that we envisage will be worked on the same basis as the HOME plan which now is a non-subsidy plan. However, where the low-income people come in, those that the hon. member for Windsor West is talking about, the Ontario Housing Corporation will become a landlord and pay the same taxes, the same costs, to look after senior citizens and the public housing tenants as it does on the mainland.

Mr. Singer: There is no reason to anticipate that any people who are in need of support from government are going to expect it out of Harbour City?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would not think so. I think it was—

Mr. Singer: No. If they are able to compete in the market, then they will be able to get accommodation there; is that not so? Is that about right?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Can you tell me anywhere around here where the people, the working people, can find a piece of land that they can afford to carry at their present income without moving into $34,000 to $45,000 homes, except under the HOME programme?

Mr. Singer: I am trying to get at your philosophy, Mr. Minister, as to whether or not you envisage this great scheme where Ontario is pledging its credit, putting up the money as being of benefit to those people who are not able to afford housing in the present market. I gather your answer is no.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think my answer is yes. We will be taking care of the same kind of people we are taking care of today, senior citizens, public housing and the HOME plan.

Mr. Singer: Are you going to give them any benefit?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well I do not know. We will see what benefits we have available.

Mr. Singer: Oh, I see, I see. The immediate answer is that you do not envisage any benefits to people who cannot afford housing.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You would not suggest we give it away before we get started.

Mr. Singer: I am not suggesting you give anything away, I am trying to get at what your philosophy is in Harbour City.

Hon. Mr. Randall: My philosophy is—

Mr. Singer: It is substantially, as I gather it, that you are going to go into the market to compete on a market basis. You are not going to give anyone any benefits other than the—

Hon. Mr. Randall: There will be a lot of benefit, if they can move in on their present income and get themselves a home or a condominium project similar to the HOME project.

Mr. Singer: If they could move in on their present income.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right.

Mr. Singer: The people who cannot move in on their present income are going to get no benefit out of Harbour City.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know: it is a hypothetical question.

Mr. Singer: It is not hypothetical.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, it is.

Mr. Singer: It is very important.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, it is not.

Mr. Singer: Certainly it is. If you look at the waiting list for public housing, it is not hypothetical at all.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are not making sense; you are not making a particle of sense.

Mr. Singer: Okay. We will let other people decide that.

Mr. Peacock: He has assured us that the carrying charges will be so great that they will preclude public housing.

Mr. Singer: The second thing that I want to question the minister about reasonably closely is his glib tossing off of the thought that sewers and water are going to be available. I happen to know by reason of my municipal experience that sewer and water facilities in downtown Toronto are badly overstrained and that the city of Toronto has substantial trouble in coping with the new high-rise office buildings that are presently being located. The city of Toronto is forced to put its taxpayers to substantial additional expense by reason of expanding sewer mains and replacing water mains. The whole system is old; it is not big enough. It was never designed to carry the capacity that it presently does. I wonder, in light of that knowledge, how the minister can glibly say that sewers and water are no problem, because it does not fit in with my practical experience. Could the minister expand on that one?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Ramsay, perhaps you could tell Mr. Singer whom you spoke to on the services.

Mr. D. W. Ramsay (Special Projects): Our consultants in our plan in the concept, felt the corporation was going to assume the cost of sewers or the services within the project.

Mr. Singer: This is a new provincial—

Mr. Ramsay: Yes, in the Harbour City area. We did also include in our cost estimate the cost of pumping stations, and so on, to put into the city system. But if it would call for an extension of the system at the Ashbridge's Bay area that is not included, because the nature of the expansion that would take place at the Harbour City project each year is approximately 2,000 units. At 3.1 people per unit it is in the nature of something like 6,000 people. This type of growth is going on throughout the city. As these units themselves, without the city having to assume any of the direct cost of the services, will be paying taxes the same as any other units, we felt that their share of the taxes would pay for the expansion of the facilities.

Mr. Singer: What I am trying to get at particularly, Mr. Ramsay, is that having investigated it, you must be fully aware of the fact that the services that run down Bay Street and Yonge Street, Bathurst Street and Dufferin Street, are old, tired and vastly overtaxed. You cannot really, in fairness, talk about 2,000 a year and an extra share in municipal taxes, unless you are prepared to talk about the end event of another 70,000 people on the water and sewage supply of the city of Toronto.

If you have followed the city of Toronto financing at all, you will recognize that one of the very serious problems they face is the tearing up of their streets and the replacing of their sewer mains, which are presently both sanitary and flood. They dump raw sewage in the city of Toronto. It has been an embarrassment as far back as the time of Mayor Phillips, who denies it ever took place.

Just go down and stand at the foot of Bay Street and watch when there is a storm. The raw sewage pours into the lake out of the city of Toronto. With 70,000 more people on that system, there just cannot be any question any more that you are going to have to rip up Yonge Street, Bay Street, Bathurst Street, Queen Street, Adelaide, Richmond, all those streets, in supplying the services.

What kind of an arrangement does this corporation anticipate it is going to make to supply municipal services for these 70,000 people?

Mr. Ramsay: Well, first of all, do you want me to answer this, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, go ahead.

Mr. Ramsay: Your description of the sewers and of the services, the Strachan Avenue sewers and others, is correct. These are going to have to be corrected. They are being corrected now with the crosstown intersections.

No matter what development takes place, anywhere within the city, these services are still going to have to be fixed up.

Mr. Singer: Only up to a point. If you have examined the population figures for the city of Toronto, you must accept the fact the population of the city of Toronto has been shrinking since 1953. Every year it goes down a bit. Any redesignation has never taken into contemplation a sudden influx of 70,000 new people.

The point I make is this: if this corporation is going to introduce 70,000 new people—and that is a lot of new people—into the city of Toronto, we are going to call on their services, water and sewage particularly, and sanitary and storms. Somebody is going to have to subsidize the city of Toronto for the payment of those additional new services.

Does this corporation believe it is going to do that or are you going to throw that back on the shoulders of the city of Toronto taxpayers?

Mr. Ramsay: In the cost planning that we did, in essence the cost of the sewers, expansion, corrections, and everything else, would go back on the total tax base of the city of Toronto, including the addition from the Harbour City, as presumably would the addition at Harbour Square, the cancelled development which has been improved and which has 20,000 people in only a five-year period. The other 20,000 people are in the Metro centre, and 5,000 people are at Bretton Place. If this project had assumed the cost of the expansion of the services for the total city, it would be uneconomical.

Mr. Singer: In essence, then, I do not think it is unfair to say that if this goes ahead, that the city of Toronto municipal taxpayer is going to be stuck with a substantial burden of the cost of expansion of the municipal services?

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I make one point? You are overlooking, my friend, all the things that Metro centre is going to put in there that will give revenue to the city of Toronto. You are overlooking the revenue from Harbour City from 2,000 units a year. There are not going to be 70,000 people out there overnight. We have said that a thousand times, but let us get the record straight. It will take 15 years at least, perhaps 20 years, to get 60,000 people out there. But I am just suggesting to you that you do not rush out and start tearing up Yonge Street or any other street tomorrow, because somebody accepts an illustrated concept of what could happen out there. I am quite sure there are knowledgeable people in the city of Toronto who, when they look at the concept, will sit down and say, "Okay, what is this going to cost the city of Toronto?" This is why the concept is being released, so the planners can look at it.

Mr. Singer: Okay!

Now the minister's remarks being accepted, I suggest to you that the immediate effect has to be that you are throwing the burden of the expansion of these important municipal services immediately on the shoulders of the city of Toronto municipal taxpayer.

The second question that bothers me very much is this question of the province guaranteeing debentures. This is an interesting idea. Where do you start and where do you stop? Are you prepared to guarantee debentures, not only to this new corporation, are you prepared to guarantee them for the Metropolitan Toronto and Region Conservation Authority, or the Junction Creek Conservation Authority or all the conservation authorities, all of whom have the same high objectives in mind? When do you decide it is important for the province to step in and guarantee an agency's debentures, which is supervised by the province and not directly a provincial enterprise, and when do you draw the line? When you say "yes" and when you say "no".

Bearing in mind that the minister and I represent an urban area right here, then fine, we are all for developing Metropolitan Toronto, North York, Don Mills, the city of Toronto and so on. But there are an awful lot of members here who are concerned—some expressed their views before 6 o'clock—about whether you are going to do the same thing for them. Where does the provincial policy lie when you come to say the province is going to guarantee, for this new kind of development, somebody else's debentures? Has the minister given any thought to that?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, we have given a lot of thought to it. Our thought with reference to the financing, and after talking to the Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton), is that we will deal with this one here as a private project. It is something entirely new, it has never happened before. We are quite prepared to have it come back and be analysed. It has to come back to cabinet. If the city says, "Well, we would like to go ahead"; after they are finished with it, it has to come back to the provincial cabinet. At that time, the provincial cabinet will have to look at it on the basis of what some of our friends said here tonight about whether it can be done in other areas. That is a government policy; I do not set government policy.

Mr. Singer: I think you are speaking now as a cabinet minister.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well—

Mr. Singer: On behalf of government policy. For instance, let us move along from Harbour City—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not make—

Mr. Singer: There is a great stretch of Ontario lakeshore just further west. The Metropolitan Toronto and Region Conservation Authority is very interested in developing that. Are you prepared to say that the province of Ontario is able to guarantee the debentures? Let us talk about Sudbury—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me ask you, what has the province done for the conservation authority up to now?

Mr. Singer: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Randall: What has the province done financially for the conservation authority up to now?

Mr. Singer: It has made grants, but it has not written a blank cheque for a guarantee of debentures. This is what I am trying to ask you about and this is what I am trying to get a positive answer on.

I was starting to tell you about Sudbury. I am interested on behalf of some clients of mine in the Junction Creek area.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are not going to move up there, are you?

Mr. Singer: No, I am not going to move there, but it is a very interesting development. This plan of the Junction Creek Conservation Authority is to build dams and stop rivers and reroute them, and so on. Their big problem is that they do not have enough money. Are you prepared to say to that authority, or to the Metropolitan Toronto one, or the Grey county one, or to the Essex county one, "We are going to guarantee your debentures?"

I think you have to be fair in this, because as reluctant as I am to agree on many occasions with the representations of the member for Kingston and the Islands, he made a valid point. He said if you are going to do it for Toronto, surely Kingston is entitled to a slice of the melon.

I think if you are announcing this kind of policy that you have to be somewhat consistent over the whole province, so that there are certain ground rules and there are certain reasonable plans. The government should be prepared to say, if there is a reasonable plan, we will be prepared to put our signature on your bond. At which point we enter into very serious consideration as to what extent do we, in this Legislature, allow people outside to spend our money for us. This is where you are going to into big trouble.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do you realize in this particular case the government has a substantial land holding?

Mr. Singer: It has a water holding. It has no landholding.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The land will be created.

Mr. Singer: But all you have is water.

Hon. Mr. Randall: All right. The land will be created and when the land has been filled in and the corporation has that asset, the province will own 55 per cent of it. Surely the province should be able to go out and raise sufficient money on the holding of land in the corporation. Now if they have a similar position in other parts of Ontario, I would assume that your question is an interesting one for capital policy.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): What do you—

Mr. Singer: No, but surely you have the same legal rights to all our lakes and rivers and so on? If you want to go out and create more land to the west of Harbour City there is nothing to prevent you. If you want to go out and create more land in Kingston there is nothing to prevent you. Or Georgian Bay, or all the hundreds of thousands of miles of shoreline that we have, you can do exactly the same thing.

What I am trying to get out of you, Mr. Minister with great respect—

Mr. Sargent: He does not know the answer.

Mr. Singer: —is some idea of whether there is any positive government policy, or whether you are trying to sell another one of your pet ideas without having studied the ramifications of it.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Backing up my colleague from Downsview, it is amazing to see him going down the line with us out-of-towners still—

Mr. Apps: We will take the money in Kingston.

Mr. Sargent: Your minister is up the old creek without a paddle right now. He does not know which way he is going to go.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You do not think so?

Mr. Sargent: Yes, I believe that the minister here and the government, both physically and financially, have taken on a package they cannot possibly handle at this time. You are almost on the verge of insolvency. You cannot pay your bills.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well now, come on!

Mr. Sargent: You know your financial nightmares and your—

An hon. member: You are going to wind up on the Ed Sullivan show!

Mr. Sargent: So I assume then, Mr. Minister, that we are married to the project?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, let me just correct that.

I said earlier, and I say again, and I want to make it perfectly clear, this is an illustrated concept of what can happen on the waterfront. Nobody is committed.

If the city of Toronto wants to go ahead, the province has said it is prepared to join in and help the city go ahead with the project. But nobody at this moment is committed to it.

Mr. Sargent: Why are you flying this kite then?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Because we think it is a good idea for the province of Ontario and the city of Toronto and Metro and the harbour commission to get a project like this off the ground. Can you stop and visualize how many millions of man hours of work are involved in this for people?

Mr. Sargent: Right, sir.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Can you imagine that? This is a make-work project and it is a make-work project for the 15 or 20 years ahead.

Mr. Singer: There must be some limitation.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It will be one of the greatest things that ever happened to Ontario. My job is to develop it, I am trying to develop it.

Mr. Sargent: We have $1 million worth of talent in this room. The type of help you have here is kind of practical. And we find that we are not committed to a programme, well what are talking about this for then?

Hon. Mr. Randall: When we started off we told you we were talking about an illustrated concept, but you keep getting yourself all crossed up that it is a fait accompli—that they have got to take it tomorrow and run with it.

Mr. Sargent: I think that you should tell the Chairman that he does not know what is going on, because we have been talking about this for two hours now.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is your fault not mine. I have been trying to tell you.

Mr. Sargent: I think that I expected something very different. I do not know what we are talking about.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are not listening.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Just a moment, my colleague and I talked of this thing during the day, and we wondered where you were going to end up. Here you end up not knowing what you are doing.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do not ever kid yourself that we do not know what we are doing.

Mr. Sargent: We are going on record as saying this.

Mr. Chairman: I just might tell the members that the interjections are not being picked up. If you will give me your name, I will give you a chance later on to have something to say.

I would just like the speaker to go ahead.

Mr. Sargent: The interesting thing about this whole piece is that here we are 117 representatives representing 7.5 million people, five million of them outside this city and we end up talking all the time about the problems of Toronto and how this government is going to make Toronto better. We are talking about 70,000 people, a handful of people.

The member for Kingston and the Islands, the member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman) and I, and all of us collectively, say other areas of the province can expect the same treatment as we are talking about now. I would like to have the minister tell us that this is only in an embryonic state, that they do not know whether they are going ahead—we are not committed to any money yet, sir?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We are not committed for anything.

Mr. Sargent: All right! Now you have enough to do that I can respectfully tell you to try and cover the beat you have; you are trying to do a job in a thousand.

I think you are really over the top alongside what you already have to handle. That is the city of Toronto's project and problem, not yours and mine, as members of this Legislature.

I am going along with the next vote, Mr. Chairman. Does that finalize Harbour City?

Mr. Chairman: No, no; there are a couple of speakers yet.

Mr. Sargent: Then I would like to make a statement for our caucus on its position. Can I do this?

Mr. Chairman: Is this on Harbour City?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: All 28 of us.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Is this your press release, Eddie?

Mr. Sargent: I never did like you. I take that back.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Why do you not sit down and I will tell a good story.

Mr. Sargent: I take that back.

No, our position at this time, in relation to this present vote—and there is no vote on the special studies which include Harbour City. Harbour City has been sincerely defined as a provincial initiative, in its present phase; it is a non-profit corporation which has been allowed to issue debentures which will be guaranteed by the province. Other areas of the province cannot. As the member for Kingston and the Islands says, injustice is part of our inheritance.

We all expect the same kind of treatment.

In our talks on Wednesday morning, members of the opposition showed us that they were opposed to the proliferation of granting of this privilege of raising money by debentures. This matter came up specifically in connection with the conservation authorities and their specific needs.

Some of the members even feel that the power of regional government to issue debentures is completely unwise in the present condition of the money market. It is thought that Niagara debentures, for example, would be very hard to sell, and they are being placed on the market in the province. For this reason the caucus found itself unable to support the idea of conservation authorities being permitted to raise money by this means.

However, it is true that the Metropolitan Toronto and Region Conservation Authority must have this power in order to carry out responsibilities to be assumed on the new waterfront plan to develop westward toward the Humber and eastward toward Ajax. You cannot have a harbour plan debenture and the outside plan financed otherwise, or they will not proceed with one another.

What will happen now is that the whole issue will be opened up, as some of the members feared it would. The purchase of land on the Niagara Escarpment will claim the same priority as the development of the recreational areas of the waterfront, so we will be forced into a new financing situation at the present time. It will prove most inflationary unless handled with the utmost care.

In summary, in the face of the Gertler report, the review of the pits and quarries of the Niagara Escarpment will have to be tied into the same timetable.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: I think we should have a little order here. The member for Grey-Bruce has the floor.

Mr. Sargent: The timing will be controlled by the inflationary effects of the government-planned acquisition.

The stage has been set tonight for a major debate on recreational lands and financing. We had expected this to occur in the Lands and Forests, or Energy and Resources Management estimates upstairs. However, this minister, with his plan for Harbour City, has started the ball rolling. He has opened up the whole question of financing for such projects.

This is for the record. We have it from the minister now that we have nothing to talk about. Will Mr. Chairman see this placed on the record in Hansard and move on to the next vote?

Mr. Chairman: We have some other speakers here.

Mr. Sargent: There is nothing to talk about.

Mr. Chairman: Oh yes, there—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale has the floor.

Mr. Peacock: There has to be a rule, Mr. Chairman, against reading caucus business in the committee.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I want to give credit where credit is due. I remember the campaign of 1967, when your leader, in great big bold type in the newspapers, promised, if he was elected, he would put up $250 million to develop the waterfront for the private developers, even if the province had to guarantee it. Now what we are doing is putting up money to guarantee to development down there for the people of Ontario, not for the developers. This is for people.

Mr. Singer: That is not so.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Not for developers!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, that is exactly the point I wanted to make. If I have any theme, the theme I want to talk about is the land use, the public land use of the waterfront area, whether it is 55 miles, or whether you talk about the whole of Lake Ontario shoreline, or whether you talk just about Harbour City. I have got two or three specific things I would like the minister to answer. Does he envisage that the Harbour City area owned by the corporation will have, at least on the perimeters of it, the right of public access for the whole of the citizenry of Toronto, or is it going to be an isolated private community?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No.

Mr. J. Renwick: In other words, all around the shoreline to whatever depth is considered necessary there will be public parkland or public beach facilities?

Hon. Mr. Randall: All the way through.

Mr. J. Renwick: All the way around the built-in land?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. And right through the harbour.

Mr. J. Renwick: Right through the harbour! So that there is not going to be any exclusive preserves on the shoreline for anyone?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No.

Mr. J. Renwick: All right. Could we move a little bit to the east and to the part that is agitating people in Riverdale riding and Beaches-Woodbine riding, to the question of the airport? Could the minister tell us, first of all, what he knows about this question of an airport in that part of the waterfront area?

Is it not also true, on the same theory that the minister propounded about the ownership of the land in the Harbour City area, that in fact there can be no airport along that part of the waterfront fronting on Riverdale and Beaches-Woodbine or out in the westerly part of Scarborough without the province of Ontario agreeing to it, because of the landfill which would have to take place, at least on part of it, in order to develop such an airport?

If that is so, can the minister give some assurance that there is not going to be an airport there; or if there is what the plans are to protect the community that borders on it?

Would he also, on another aspect of this, explain the extent of his knowledge of what other lands are owned by the Toronto Harbour Commission? Are they able, at some other point on the waterfront, or are other people on the waterfront, able to embark upon the commercial development that prompted the government to move in on this one in order to preclude the private commercial or other development of areas, not only at Harbour City but across the whole of the water?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me say, as I said earlier, that the province, if anyone, owns the water lot outside of the harbour itself that has not been deeded to any particular body. So that covers anything in Lake Ontario, as I said before, at the moment, till the titles are cleared up. I think you will notice that the harbour commission has been filling out a spit away outside the eastern gap for about 15 years.

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: This always happens. There are 2,500 acres in there that we are discussing. As you know, all shipping has moved down the bay to the east end, the Cherry Street end, so that they are looking at the container business with reference to a ship coming in, carrying containers and needing facilities. They have been talking to us about that 2,500 acres out there, which of course, is a long way from being 2,500 acres at the moment. I suppose it would be a good five years or so before it gets that far.

As far as the airport is concerned, let me just suggest this; if Harbour City is going to be built now or in the future, the present island airport must go. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. J. Renwick: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Somebody said the other day—and I have not counted them—that there are 63 locations in Ontario where it could go. None is on the lakefront at the present time that I know of.

Mr. J. Renwick: None is on the lakefront?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Not that I know of. I do not know where you would put it on the lakefront.

Then there is confusion when people talk about airports. Are they talking about the big jumbo jet and the big international airports; are they talking about what we have at Malton; or are they talking about the small airport we have over at Toronto Island? These are the three situations that I think people are confused on.

I do not know what the federal authorities are going to do about Toronto International Airport or Malton. We are not informed any more than you are at the present time, whether or how far they are involved in discussions, Mr. Chairman. I would not know. But we know that if the harbour commission—

Mr. Sargent: That is one thing that you should know.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If Harbour City is to be built, the Island Airport must be part and parcel of Harbour City. Insofar as the land along the waterfront going over to Bathurst Street is concerned, the warehousing over there, the foundry and brick factory, all that is privately owned. The viaduct, if the city or the province or Metro would buy today, would cost hundreds of millions of dollars. It will take a long while before it happens. With Metro centre going right behind it, it seems obvious that if I had an old foundry down there and the land was to be used for anything but a foundry, I would develop it into some kind of a commercial building or a high-rise that would bring in money. In fact, the city perhaps should encourage owners to do the same thing, take those parcels up and build something down there and pay taxes. Now that property all along there is privately owned, right over to where Campeau has bought that development off the harbour, down where the Toronto Star Building is. Beyond that, I do not know how much property the harbour commission owns, but I would think most of that Cherry Street area over there is harbour commission property; is it not Mr. Ramsay?

Mr. Singer: Are you going east now?

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes, it is going east now.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. Anything over to Cherry Street is probably harbour commission property.

Mr. J. Renwick: I would like the minister at least to express his views. If you have not any considered policy about it, at least express your views. Regardless of what development takes place in the south of the Metro centre area, where there are privately owned businesses, the foundry and other buildings, and also the area owned by the harbour commission through to Cherry Street, and whatever other lands it owns; including all the lands down to the waterfront area, is the minister prepared to say that he would like at least to see the policy of the government such that the public generally will have access, good access, to the waterfront?

It seems to me that any overall development of the waterfront area, even though parts of it may be developed privately, should have such a plan attached to it that will preserve to the rights of the citizenry generally, the right to get access to the whole of the waterfront, either by way of park or beach or whatever may develop. The day may come when the lake is cleaned up, and the day may finally come when in fact the citizens in Toronto, apart from those who own boats, may be able to make very good use of the waterfront the way they do at the Toronto Island now.

Would it be then, Mr. Minister, the proper policy, regardless of what the development is, to ensure the public access and the public use of the whole of the waterfront area? I am not talking about what the depth may be, it might only be a depth in some places of 100 yards, but at least the right people could get access to it in the way it used to be. Those old waterfront lots used to be called the Walks and Gardens, that area around where the old Walker's Hotel is at the present time.

I think there has got to be a public policy about it, and this is part of the same larger question of the beaches, the lake area and all the rest. There has got to be, in our opinion, a public policy that land use requires a general access by the public to the whole of that area.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I can only go back. I do not know too much about the details of the city in looking over the Campeau plan. Those plans have been changed half a dozen times in order to give people access, half the Campeau development, to the lakefront there. But if you look around the whole lakefront, where do people have access now? They can walk down a bunch of old pilings.

Mr. J. Renwick: Right. That is right.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We started over at Ontario Place and when we are finished with Ontario Place we will have the lagoons, and parks and swimming beaches there that you would never have off—

Mr. Sargent: And no money—

Hon. Mr. Randall: —that you never would have off the exhibition grounds before; plus the fact you will have quiet waters inside lagoons that will be a lot warmer. People cannot swim in Lake Ontario most of the time anyway to appreciate it. I think that you are going to find that all the waterfront area down there will become unpolluted over a period of time. But the rate of pollution there right now—with ships coming in, we took a look at the drainage off those old buildings there and the Don River, and we found three sewers coming off the exhibition grounds into Ontario Place—when the divers went down and they were shut off.

I do not know how long they have been running in there, but, thank God, nobody swam in there or they probably would have been found a long time ago. When you start to look at these projects on the waterfront and see what you can do with the waterfront, and make it possible for people to get to the water, this is the objective behind our concept of the Harbour City plan. More people will live and enjoy the water and the harbour front if this project goes ahead than ever before in their life. All you have to do is take a picture. I have got waterfront people right over to Cherry Street and some parts of Woodbine and they cannot get near the water.

Mr. J. Renwick: That then is your policy.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think when you see the concept you will recognize that is what we are trying to do—get more people to the waterfront and let them enjoy the water; let them get access to it.

Mr. J. Renwick: All right, now, on the question of the airport. At least at the present time, is it correct to say that the government is not aware of any plans of any kind to relocate any kind of an airport in the area bounding on the riding of Riverdale and the riding of Beaches-Woodbine—that is to the race track or beyond the race track?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I have heard of no plan to locate an airport.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Apps, Kingston and the Islands, no?

Okay, Mr. Peacock.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, earlier the minister said that the corporation which is to be set up, with the majority of the positions held by the province and the balance shared by the municipalities, would have a common ownership of the lands.

In respect of the financing, can the minister tell us what equity will be created for the corporation by the creation of the lands, the 1,100 acres he spoke of as being developed out of the waterfront—the underwater lots to be filled? Would this be a substantial part of the assets of the corporation with which it is endowed initially? If so, can he say approximately what value it would have and what relationship it will have to the capital financing of the corporation?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would think, as I said earlier, land in that general area would be worth a minimum of $250,000 an acre.

Mr. Peacock: Would you capitalize it at that value on the books of the corporation?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know at what price we would capitalize it, but that right now is the estimated value of the land for the purpose of capitalization, if we are going to capitalize. But what the financial figures will finally reveal remains to be seen. If the project is accepted, then we have to sit down and work out the details.

Mr. Peacock: Will that valuation, Mr. Chairman, provide any part of the capital structure of the corporation, or bear any relationship to the debenturing that the province will guarantee?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think, on the basis of that capital structure—and the guarantee of the province—that the bonds will not be too hard to peddle, as you will appreciate.

I do not think there is any difficulty in raising the kind of money we will require for that asset. Because we will not have to raise the money for the entire project. We will only have to raise what we need over the first five years and I estimate that it will be carrying itself, as I said earlier.

Mr. Peacock: One other question. The programme is going to take 15 or 20 years for completion, each year seeing 2,000 units of residential accommodation completed.

What provision, if I can ask, is going to be made for the quiet enjoyment of each group of 2,000 units of residential accommodation, while all this other development is going on around it?

Mr. Sargent: Oh, come on now.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me say that there will be some inconvenience. It is done in sections. I do not think that the inconvenience will be too bad.

I do not know. All I can do is guess that we can do it as quietly—

Mr. Sargent: The only—

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Haggerty, Welland South.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The minister left an impression here tonight that Harbour City is a sound investment for the province of Ontario. The question I would like to propose to him is that if it is this sound, why has not free enterprise entered in upon it?

I know that you are going to say—that the lands belong to the province. But the land can be leased and I think particularly of an area that I represent in the town of Fort Erie.

There is a development being carried on there now along the lakeshore; I think the minister is aware of it, Buttonwood. Now on this development the developers are going to spend some $50 million. It is going to provide residential housing, hotels, a marina and a shopping plaza.

If this can be done in this area by smaller developers who spent $50 million, surely this can be developed here in Harbour City by private enterprise?

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Is Hansard getting this? You are coming through clear eh? well I would just like to see—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Stan Randall is a socialist.

Mr. Chairman: If the member wants to stand up—

Mr. Haggerty: If the minister wants to—and I think we would have to agree with him on the Liberal side here that we welcome the idea that the province is getting into what they call a provincial loan fund, provided this can apply across throughout the province. There are other municipalities which need assistance too for development of their municipalities.

I would just like to leave these few comments with the Minister, but I am concerned why it cannot be done by private enterprise.

Hon. Mr. Randall: In the first place, it is the province that is creating the land. By holding title to the land, the province can control the cost of the dwellings going there, so that people can afford to live there.

All you have to do is look again—and I must keep using this same illustration—at the Campeau site on which—

Mr. Sargent: Bramalea.

Hon. Mr. Randall: As Mr. Campeau himself said, it will not be a building for the middle income families.

As far as the mainland is concerned, very definitely that is going to be an area for higher-income people. And, if the harbour commission had gone ahead on the original plans, they would have done exactly the same thing on the areas we are talking about—if we had signed the land bill—that they have done on the mainland, so that the people themselves would have never gotten a chance to get a home on the islands—in the new Harbour City over there.

And so, by the province controlling the cost of that land and the use of that land, more people can use it and use it at a price that they can afford. They can live within their means.

This is the reason the province has got into discussing the possibility of what can be done with the waterfront.

Mr. Haggerty: Do you mean to tell me that the average person in the province of Ontario is going to be able to go down there and rent a housing unit, or a dwelling?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know where you were this afternoon while we were talking about the homes over there.

Mr. Haggerty: Regardless of whether I was here or not this afternoon—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am not being sarcastic or facetious; I outlined this afternoon that the whole project is to try and get as many people over there as we possibly can under the HOME guidelines. And the HOME guidelines today are for land and building costing not more than $24,000.

But, inasmuch as the island over there, we believe, should be controlled by the province—should be controlled by the corporation—we would hold title to the land and, perhaps just let them buy the building. They rent the land so that they would be buying say, a $15,000 or $16,000 structure and the land rent would be the difference. In other words if maybe the land cost would be $7,000 or $9,000—but the land would never be sold. They would lease it; pay a lease rent on it. You see?

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Smith, Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. J. R. Smith (Hamilton Mountain): I would like to commend the minister of the department for this proposal. I think it is an exciting possibility for new dimensions in urban growth and development. I think one of the things that has been mentioned here tonight or this afternoon is the fact that it will certainly do a great deal to help to redevelop the downtown part of Toronto.

Likewise, those of us who come from large metropolitan areas face similar situations in our own communities. The need for redevelopment, reshaping of the cores of our cities, of course, has been one of the tragedies of the great cities of America. They have been allowed to decay at the core with the flight to the suburbs of many people.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister, through you, what provision or planning has taken place into the possibility of the incorporation of the air rights of the railway lines, east of the Harbour City properties?

Hon. Mr. Randall: You mean on Harbour City?

Mr. J. R. Smith: No, the adjoining lands. Have any discussions taken place with the railways concerned to have a joint form of development so that it is continuous?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Perhaps Mr. Clarkson can speak on that. He is a member of the committee that works with Metro centre and the discussions in reference to air rights will be covered by him.

Mr. S. W. Clarkson (Deputy Minister): A couple of years ago, the railways did unveil their plans for the redevelopment of the area now covered by the railways in the downtown area. Since that time, regular meetings have been held with the city planners and the Metro planners and all concerned. While no physical beginning has been made, a lot of the basic planning has been done and it is proposed that the western part of the railway tracks—that area north of Harbour City—will be a similar type of development with housing and an urban development for additional people. The number of people there is not as large as proposed in Harbour City, but there will be several thousand people eventually living in the area now covered by the railway tracks.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Does that answer your question?

Mr. Chairman: The member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, I want to raise two or three matters, and without detracting from the value of the project that the minister is discussing here tonight, I want to say that it falls into the category that one would expect from this minister and the grandiose, showcase type of development.

I would like to know first, though, if there is any record of the province using its collateral to raise money through debentures for projects within the municipality?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I cannot answer that question offhand.

Mr. Deans: I cannot answer it either, but my understanding from discussions I had during the time Hamilton was facing big difficulties in financing the civic square was that the province did not engage in using its financial strength in the market.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The difference is the province owns 55 per cent of this corporation.

Mr. Deans: The difference, is, I suppose, that in the Hamilton project they were in for about 25 per cent because of the sharing in agreement with the municipal and federal government. It seemed to me then, and it still does, that the province could well have used its borrowing powers to secure a lower interest rate or perhaps to easily secure the moneys to develop other municipalities in addition to what we are doing here.

There are two or three questions that come from what I have listened to being said. What if the province uses its borrowing power and reduces the amount of available money in the marketplace by that much? What becomes of developments of this type, if for example, it has not taken place on the development proposed for Saltfleet Mountain? One thing I noticed in the programme for that development was that there was no clear indication of how it was going to be financed. I am curious to know whether the province has undertaken the idea that maybe it will finance that project in a similar way to the Harbour City development which we are talking about. Or whether we can expect in terms of Saltfleet, for example, that the province would be prepared, since it owns all the land, which would be a sizeable investment, to undertake the debenturing in order to raise the moneys to develop that project?

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are talking about Saltfleet now?

Mr. Deans: I am talking about the fact in relation to the Harbour City development. Saltfleet when it is open, for example, is going to provide an entire community; it is going to be a city of its own, not unlike the city you are going to develop on the waterfront, except that it is not on the waterfront. It is going to be complete in a community way; it is going to be almost self-sustaining except there will be little industry—none at all. I am wondering at this point exactly—

Mr. Sargent: Are you wondering or wandering?

Mr. Deans: It is pertinent because we are talking about a new concept in developing the province of Ontario. The member for Grey-Bruce, if I may through the chair, always seems to have something to say, much of which is irrelevant. I am trying to find at this point whether or not this is likely to be the way this other project will be developed, whether you are prepared to undertake the same kind of financial arrangements to insure the complete development of a project which will provide for 70,000 people, as opposed to the one here which will provide for considerably fewer. If this is not going to be done, how do you intend to finance these other projects which are just as important, if, not more important, to the municipalities that are involved than this particular project here?

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I answer your question? In the first place the two projects you mention, Malvern and Saltfleet, are already self-liquidating projects and are on their way. The services have been provided to the site or will be provided to the site; the engineering is done at Malvern, particularly. At Saltfleet we have an agreement with the city of Hamilton and any services that go into the site are going in on land already purchased by the province and its partner, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The land has been purchased and that is our asset.

Mr. Deans: What is the asset here?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Wait a minute until I finish this one. The houses that go into Saltfleet will be built under the HOME programme and be financed by the people going in by taking out mortgages. As I say, it is a self-liquidating project all the way through. The shopping centre areas and the commercial areas will be sold out to the private developers who, in turn, will do their own financing and houses will be under the HOME programme, if mortgage money is not available as you know we have our housing development corporation that will handle the mortgages for those two projects if, by the time they are built, mortgage money is not available from private sources.

The difference between those two projects and Harbour City is that we are 55 per cent owner of the corporation, as I said earlier. The province, in order to get this new community organized and built—the first one we think in North America—is quite prepared to use its credit to back the debentures required to get this project off the ground.

As I said, perhaps before you came in tonight, we do not anticipate that any more than $32 million will be required. After that, the cash flow will finance the rest of the project because you will only be building 2,000 units a year. As those 2,000 units are built, leased or sold or whatever is going to be done with them, they will help finance the rest of the project.

Mr. Deans: The self-liquidating feature does apply to each—self-liquidating, perhaps, in a different way.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will just say, as I said in the House the other day, after this project has finished—say 13 or 15 years if we went on schedule—if there was enough left over in the corporation for a half-a-dozen beers, that is the way the corporation would wind up. It is a non-profit corporation.

Mr. Deans: I am always happy to hear the government getting into non-profit developments for the sake of providing the accommodations for people. But the problem that I see happening on this project—the project on the waterfront—is that the province of Ontario is, by virtue of its collateral, going to be able to raise the money, or to be able to guarantee the project's success. That is what is going to happen. You are going to guarantee that this project will be developed in the way in which it was planned. In the other instance, you have to rely—

Hon. Mr. Randall: The way it is eventually planned, when the planners get through—

Mr. Deans: I realized this chain. But if in the other instances, though you are going to have to rely on the commercial developer funding his own money, and assuming for once that the money situation got no worse but got no better, we would find ourselves in a very difficult position to meet any kind of deadlines or trying to develop either of the other two projects that I talked about in the way in which they were planned.

You are putting those municipalities at a disadvantage when you are prepared to undertake the guarantee for the city of Toronto, or the development of this project, while saying to the others that under the HOME programme we will help with the housing, but any commercial development, which makes the project a total package, has to be done by the private sector. What I want to get at is that if we find ourselves in five years, when it comes time to develop the remainder of the other two projects—I am particularly interested in the one at Saltfleet because it happens to be in my riding—but if we find ourselves in the position that the money situation has not changed, is the province of Ontario prepared to undertake the same kind of financial arrangements with those people that it is prepared to undertake on the waterfront in Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am not prepared to speak for the province five years ahead because I do not know what is going to happen five years ahead. But just let me tell you about Saltfleet. The commercial developers are already prepared to go ahead with Saltfleet as fast as they can get their buildings up and the money is available.

Let me also tell you about Hamilton. The reason your mayor of Hamilton and his financial advisers went to Germany is because, through ODC, I was prepared to make key money available for them to make the deal.

Mr. Deans: But it fell through.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It was not my fault. I said the ODC was prepared to assist them in getting their project in Hamilton off the ground. That is the big commercial development, government buildings and so on. I do not know what will happen five years from now.

The only alternative to giving you a no answer right now is to say, "Do we stand still and not do anything?" That is the point. If you ask me what we are going to do five years from now, I cannot tell you. All I can say, in the light of today's circumstances, in the light of the project we have envisioned here for the city of Toronto—and anywhere else if anybody brings one in, as the member for Kingston and the Islands was talking about today—we are prepared to look at it and see if it is a self-liquidating project and needs immediate financing. We can take a look at it, the same as we have this one. But what is going to happen five years from now, my friend, I could not guarantee. I hope at that time money is available.

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, this new Harbour City is going to be somewhat off the beaten track for the people I represent 900 miles north of here. Listening to this discussion and recalling an address given by Bert Stollard, the ombudsman for the North York Ratepayers Association, in this building last fall, got me thinking that perhaps a little bit of backwoods logic might help me to make a contribution to this debate.

With a reported 16 million gallons of raw sewage a day pouring into that harbour down there from the bypasses at the Humber River sewage treatment plant alone, really, how aesthetic and how attractive is this project going to be? The message I get is that harbour is getting more polluted by the day and it would seem to me that if you are really going to have equity in your investment down there, you had better clean up that water or see to it that the polluting that is going on is stopped in some way.

The indication I get is that the sewage treatment plants for this megalopolis are just not doing the job. The Humber River sewage treatment plant, I am told, was built for a capacity of 450,000 people in 1951 and is now serving close to 700,000, or an area which has close to 700,000. And this is the figure they give—16 million gallons of raw sewage a day going through the bypasses and, therefore, not being treated and going directly into the harbour. I would think the smell on that island after a while is going to be pretty rough and may not be quite as attractive, regardless of what buildings you put up there.

Two things: What are you going to do about the polluting that is going on continually in that harbour? And what kind of sewage treatment disposal system are you going to have for the new development that is going to go on down here?

Mr. Chairman: This matter was discussed before you came in, Mr. Knight.

Mr. Knight: I would still like to—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me make a fast comment on it. I think the pressures that are on to eliminate pollution today in all our waters are bearing fruit and bearing fruit very quickly. I spend quite a bit of time in Toronto Bay. The harbour commissioners tell me there is not a bay anywhere that is much cleaner than Toronto harbour because of the amount of water that pours in there from the western gap when there is a west wind, and the amount that pours in from the east when there is an east wind.

They tell me that bay can rise four feet at either end, whichever way the wind is blowing, and there is a constant carrying-in and carrying-out. If the water is polluted before it comes in, I can understand you are going to have some problems. When you see the concept of Harbour City, you will see the criss-cross of channels there which will allow water to get in and out so there is a constant movement of water. There will be no cesspool as far as we are concerned.

I would hope that what would happen would be similar to what the Star reported the other day about the woman in West Virginia who said she can feed her ducks out of the kitchen window and her husband goes swimming before supper and he rows across to the shopping centre. This is what we envision in our concept.

How long will it take to get the water clean? I want to go back and say that the very fact that we are building Ontario Place there means we will have cleaned up a cesspool situation that they did not know existed.

Mind you, ships are coming through that western gap, too. The ships will have to come through the eastern gap eventually, but I would think if the traffic is kept down to that end of the harbour—it is not going to stop it from flowing back this way if you get an east wind—I would think with all the controls they now have on ships throwing over their garbage and their bilge and dumping their oil and other things, dumping it into the bay down there, those things will be corrected over a period of time. I would be inclined to believe that this would be one of the better places to live and I would not worry about stagnant water. In fact, I will be the first customer when they build it down there.

Mr. Chairman: Does the member for Grey-Bruce want to speak on this section? I thought you made your final report on it.

Mr. Sargent: What are you talking about?

Mr. Chairman: We are still on planning, promotion and advertising. We are talking about Harbour City.

Mr. Sargent: Let us get down to our business then.

Mr. Chairman: Okay, we will take the next—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: How much money have you planned for promotion?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have no money planned for promotion. We have $175,000 for models and research and studies, and we have another $175,000 in this year to carry on the same projects.

Mr. Sargent: What do you have left? You have $175,000.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is in the figure for promotion and advertising, special studies—$1.25 million; it is in there.

Mr. Sargent: $175,000 for models. You say you have no commitments here, financially?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, we have no commitments.

Mr. Sargent: Where do you get the right to spend $175,000 on something that is not a fait accompli? Are you shooting craps with destiny?

Hon. Mr. Randall: My friend, the province has a right to allot funds to any department—

Mr. Sargent: That is my money. I live up north and I do not agree you should spend my money down in Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Randall: What was spent up in Owen Sound?

Mr. Sargent: You are not doing it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, tell us about it.

Mr. Sargent: The point is you take it upon yourself to spend $175,000 on a plan that is not even committed yet.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is not supposed to be committed, it is a look-see. How are you going to have a plan unless you spend some money?

Mr. Sargent: You are spending $175,000, sir, of taxpayers' money on a programme you are not even sure you are going to do yet.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right. But how do you know whether you are going to do it until you have a plan? What do you want to do, take it out of a cigarette box and say, "Here, I've got an idea?"

We do not know anything until—

Mr. Sargent: You do not know, but you are spending this money anyway?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have had discussions with the city, with Metro and the harbour commissioners and they are getting very excited. If they want to commit themselves, the plan is there.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Minister, if you were a private member and you have to run for re-election again and the people in your riding, who cannot pay their taxes, know that you are spending $175,000 on something you are not even sure of happening at all, for which there is no firm commitment in any way at all, I doubt if you would be re-elected. It is a shameful admission that you have made; that you are spending $175,000 of money on a programme you are not sure will even happen.

Mr. Lewis: I will have to agree with that. You will not be re-elected.

Hon. Mr. Randall: After tonight, I should be so lucky.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Victoria-Haliburton.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister if at any time he has conducted special studies with regard to small businesses in the field of governmental forms and information that is requested? And whether there is the possibility that these requests might be simplified or conducted in a way that would lessen the effort for a small business and be distributed across the full range of the year rather than having them all arrive at the end of February at tax time and things of this nature?

Mr. Chairman: I think you could raise that under 2202. I think it would come under that vote.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is under trade and industry.

Mr. Peacock: Just before we recessed, the minister was going to give me the figures for advertising expenditure.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The advertising expenditures for next year, special studies, films and advertising all incorporated, is $1.25 million.

Mr. Peacock: I asked earlier this afternoon if the breakdown for advertising was available?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, I can give it to you. For international advertising, there is $350,000 and for domestic advertising $450,000.

Mr. Peacock: That is all "Buy Canadian"?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Pardon?

Mr. Peacock: Is that all part of the "Buy Canadian" programme?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is part of the domestic advertising to shop Canadian, sure, to meet the import competition, to increase the domestic purchasing. We have an arrangement with Treasury Board, of course, on the sums of money. We can swing that money either into domestic or international, depending on which way the economy is going. Right now, of course, there are a great many imports coming in, if you recognize we are trying to make people conscious of the fact they should first of all have a look at Canadian before they buy foreign.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Pitman.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): I began the questions about three hours ago. I have looked at some of the other special studies. You mentioned the CNE, Harbour City, and that would be around that stall about 4 o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. Chairman: Would you like to answer that?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is all.

Mr. Pitman: Those are the only two special studies that have been going on, other than that?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. MacKenzie.

Mr. H. MacKenzie (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Chairman, first of all, could the minister tell us what the road is for, the fill road extending out about half a mile just east of the eastern gap?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Can I tell you what it is for?

Mr. MacKenzie: Yes, do you know what that—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, it was started on the basis that the Niagara current comes across Lake Ontario, as I understand it from the harbour commissioners—I am not an authority on it—and it washes against the banks over at Scarborough Bluffs and, as you know, the banks are deteriorating; they have actually been washed away. It brings that sand back along the shore of Lake Ontario and when there is an east wind and it fills in the eastern gap. That is why the major freighters have to take that eight-mile trip around the island and come in through the western gap and they have to keep dredging the eastern gap to get that sand out of there. So they ran that spit out, and already the sand is piling up against that and lessening the fill-in on eastern gap.

If you want to go back and look at some of the Admiralty maps that we have been looking at, to see who has ownership of land, you will find that the islands out there, which are now known as the islands, were just sand bars; that sand came off Scarborough Bluffs and was washed up the lake and formed in front of Toronto, and that is how the islands were formed. I can show you maps that go back to the early 17th century, and that is how the sand bars started. They gradually get bigger and bigger and, in fact, somebody said the other day, if you wait till the year 2000 the chances are all this fill-in we are talking about will be there.

Mr. Chairman: Does that section carry or have you got another question?

Mr. MacKenzie: I have got two more quick questions, Mr. Chairman. Could the minister tell us the total amount spent to date on Harbour City and, secondly, could he tell us, according to the planning here, what is the total estimated cost and how many dollars he expects will be spent before Harbour City really takes off.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We had $175,000 in our budget last year, and we have put in another $175,000 this year; that money is there to help prepare a concept, to make the studies necessary to present the Harbour City illustration to the people involved, such as Metro, the city of Toronto and the harbour commissioners. That is the province's contribution so far, as to what could be done to develop the waterfront; there is no money yet to put up buildings or to buy land or to dredge, or to do anything else at the present time.

Mr. MacKenzie: Then you have not really looked at the total outlay for the main part before you—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes we have. We have looked at it, and I have quoted some figures this afternoon. I said the project would take possibly 13 to 15 years, maybe 20 years, and the estimated price, if the concept that we have available today is approved, would be around $500 million total.

Mr. MacKenzie: I heard that figure, Mr. chairman, but my concern is that before the city buys it and before anybody else buys it, before you move on, before the project is a fact, you have $350,000 now; I suppose you have another $1 million to be spent in addition?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, I do not know. I think we have got adequate money this year to complete the studies and make the presentations we want to make, and after next week it will depend on whether the other two partners, the harbour commissioners and the city of Toronto, are interested in going ahead. And, of course, they will not be interested until they have had their authorities, their planners, the public and everybody else, take a look at it.

Mr. Chairman: Section carried?

Mr. Haggerty: One more question. Is this an election promise?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Not a bit.

Mr. Chairman: Well, that section is carried. We will go on to—

Mr. Sargent: Will you spend like sums of money around the balance of the province for similar studies?

Mr. MacKenzie: You have got a good proposition by bringing in Eddie to go to work on your behalf.

Mr. Chairman: That section is carried.

Information services. Any questions on information services? Carried.

We have the women's advisory committee.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, on this women's advisory committee, I would like to ask the minister how long this is going to continue with a budget of $72,000? I watched a television show last year when you and the Prime Minister walked into a big posh deal at the Royal York, and your audience was by and large people dressed in mink, the affluent society—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, I do not buy—

Mr. Sargent: Well. I saw the television show. You were the star of it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are exaggerating.

Mr. Sargent: You and old John Parmenter Robarts were the stars of the show. Very handsome you were when you walked in there; very sure of yourselves that the people of Ontario all loved you both, and the show went on. I looked around for someone in the Liberal Party who could be part of the show, and it is an insult to me that you have the unmitigated gall to take taxpayers' money—$72,000 of it—to make yourselves, you and the Prime Minister, stars of the show to sell the Conservative Party. Now, do not you tell me, sir, that this is not a selling job, because—

An hon. member: It is a PR job.

Mr. Sargent: I have never been invited to one of those deals.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): It is not a laughing matter. If the Prime Minister can be invited, why cannot he be invited?

Mr. Sargent: The whole piece was that they took the mikes down, and there was the minister selling the bill of goods. What a job he was doing for the—what is it called?—the women's advisory committee. Advising what? How to be elected as a Tory again or what?

Mr. Haggerty: That is about it.

Mr. Sargent: But anyway, it scoops it off the economy front.

Mr. B. Newman: It did the Royal York.

Mr. Sargent: It helped the Royal York and—

An hon. member: And the Skyline.

Mr. Sargent: Yes, and these other places. But the whole piece was wrong, this whole television coverage. They took the mikes from the audience, and one lady was probably bright enough to see the phoniness of the whole thing; she let the cat out of the bag. What a phony bit of operation it was. What a corny act it was. I, for one, as a taxpayer, object to my money being spent on this kind of operation. I would suggest that, for once in the history of the democratic rights that allow us to analyse these estimates, you have the decency to strike something out of the estimates.

Hon. Mr. Randall: How do you do away with a success story?

Mr. Sargent: What? In all the years I have been here, never once has one cent been pared from the estimates. Well what are we doing here? Are we just going through the motions, that these things will happen, or what goes on?

Mr. Apps: Let us ask what this money is for.

Mr. Sargent: Well, you know yourself—you are a pretty intelligent guy—what a corny approach it is. Anyone in the PR business would say this is the corniest thing he ever saw in his life. You, with all your background, believe this is good. The fact that you get on television once for all these gals—

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I suggest that you look at the front page of the Star tonight?

Mr. Sargent: I saw that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is how phony it is.

Mr. Sargent: And everybody was laughing at it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is how phony it is.

Mr. Sargent: That is how phony it is.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is selling a half a million dollars of Ontario fashions a year off Spadina.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Anyway, half a million dollars.

Mr. B. Newman: Do you mean they would not sell anyway?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, certainly they would sell. But they need promotion.

Mr. Sargent: That is how hard up you are for publicity.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Now we are into the furniture.

An hon. member: Where are you buying it from?

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Pitman.

Mr. Pitman: Well, I would like to ask a series of questions. First of all, what is the purpose of this committee? What does it do? What is the philosophy behind it?

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I just read these for you so that you get them down in black and white? The objectives of the committee are achieved through a series of conferences for women across the province. Contrary to some, the conferences are kept on a highly educational, informative level; all will deal in the subjects of particular concern to women. Out of the hundreds of questions arising at conferences, programmes for the future are planned. The conferences would serve no good purpose if programmes were planned so the women's needs for information on changing conditions could not be met.

The committee has co-operated with and has excellent co-operation from the women's bureau. The Department of Labour; food council and extension branch, The Department of Agriculture and Food; consumers branch, The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs; The Department of Health; and The Department of Education. The office has channelled many requests for information to other government departments for attention, and often these give rise to the discussion periods and conferences. This, we feel, is a certain indication that women want and need information about government and its programmes, and there is a feeling that questions directed to a women's committee will receive attention.

We would like to have more conferences in smaller areas, but neither staff nor budget are available. Regular meetings of women's advisory committees have been held in Toronto during the past year, and attendance has been good; however, we lost three members through illness, and so on.

I would like to suggest to the hon. members that, when we had our meeting of 1,500 women in the Royal York Hotel this year, we had a number of speakers, not just yours truly, and these people come from many parts of the United States—sometimes from across the other side of the water—to speak to our women. And when we have a question period in the afternoon, we get thousands of questions about drug addiction, alcoholism, education, taxes—what affects women.

This year we had some of the feminists there, and they started to rise up and tried to give us a little problem, but eventually they stayed all day and learned what the committee meetings were all about. And, I think, in the long run they recognized that $72,000 is a very small amount of money to get the co-operation of the women in this province. I would remind you that of all the men in this room, 80 per cent of your dollars are spent by your wives, and I think your wives need to know what they are going to spend the money on, what they are going to buy—

Mr. Haggerty: They do not have to be told; they already know.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh, yes they do.

Mr. Sargent: Why are Donald MacDonald and Bob Nixon not invited to these meetings?

Mr. Pitman: Why not have some of the opposition to give it some balance?

Mr. Chairman: I would just like to remind the members here, or anyone: If you would like to speak, I would be very glad to put your name on the list, but the interjections cannot be picked up, so I would like Mr. Pitman to go along with this as much as possible.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to obtain an answer from the minister, if I could. I would like to know how you decide on who is to be invited to these conferences?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, Mrs. Lymburner, how would you like to—now, here is a lady who runs the programme. I think she can give you it right from the horse's mouth.

Mr. Sargent: Oh well, she had intentions of coming.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, you are going to get it, anyway.

Mrs. L. Lymburner (Women's Advisory Committee): Through the members of the women's advisory committee, who are all across the province, we gather together the names of all the women's organizations in any area where we are going to hold a conference. We ask the co-operation of the women's organizations, in that they send us a list of names of the women who belong to their organizations so we can invite them to attend the conference.

Now, there are organizations that have standing resolutions that they will not release the names of their members to anyone and, of course, there is nothing we can do about that. If we get no reply, we can do nothing about them. Fortunately, there are some women who belong to more than one organization and, in the end, they get a chance to come anyway. But there certainly is no discrimination as to who will attend, and for the information of those people who might be interested, there were a great many Liberal women who sat in on the conference last year and again this year.

Mr. Sargent: That is right.

Mrs. Lymburner: They were most co-operative and sent us lists of names and many of them came, I know; but this is the way the list is made up. We use all of the lists that are sent to us, and we use the women's committee to help us gather those lists.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Would you tell them how the women's committee is formed, for the information of Mr. Pitman?

Mrs. Lymburner: Oh, is that what you want to know? The women's committee?

Mr. Pitman: Oh, that does not bother me particularly. I was going to ask whether you were in the habit of sending out invitations to women's associations in the various parts of the province.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I answer that? I had a letter today from Mr. Fred Young—I should have brought it with me—in which he said, "I am sorry the New Democratic Party does not give the names of its members to organizations like that. That is something that we keep to ourselves." Now, Mr. Young said that; what I am supposed to do with that I do not know.

Mr. Peacock: Why do you not address him and say, "If you give us the list of the women in your organization, we would be delighted to see that they get invitations"?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, you know there is an old rule about giving out lists of names, Mr. Chairman, and that is that you can always write to the secretary and ask the secretary to pass on the information.

An hon. member: Ask Mrs. Lymburner, she should know.

Mrs. Lymburner: Many requests were made of the secretary to give us the list of names and we never received any.

Mr. Pitman: One of the things that is bothering many members is the problem of providing a spectrum of women across the province; by that, I mean a spectrum of people in various classes. The big problem is that the poor do not belong to women's organizations—or very few of them do. But I think it is obvious—I think any sociologist will tell you—that the poor very rarely are joiners. They just do not get into organizations; they have not any reason to be. They probably would be embarrassed; they may not have the educational qualifications to feel at ease in a meeting; there are a great many reasons. They may not have the clothes they feel they need to wear to go to meetings in hotels.

That is the feeling of many people and this, I think, is perhaps expressed by the fact that some of the women's organizations with which you come in contact are essentially upper-middle-class women's groups and do not express the views of the total spectrum of women across the province. I wonder if you have made any response to that kind of a problem? Have you got a social welfare agency? I suggested to them that they give you names of women. Have you made an effort to reach out to them? We think that by giving equal access we are giving people equal opportunity; we are not given equal opportunity in that way. We only give equal opportunity, in many cases, by going out and contacting people and almost dragging them into an organization like this, if you are going to get the whole spectrum—

Mrs. Lyburner: This is what we have depended on our members to do. We know, full well, as you said, there are many people who do not belong to organizations, either because they do not want to or because they cannot afford to, or they cannot be a part of the organization and play their parts in that organization. And so we depend on our members to gather for us a separate list of names of women in the area who they think might attend if we sent them an invitation directly. If they refuse, there is nothing we can do.

We invite them; we try to get them to come, and very often phone calls are made by the committee members in that region who are working with us. But I can tell you that there were people at the conference at the Royal York in April who came from the Regent Park housing development, for instance. There were people from one or two other groups, tenants' committees—or what is it you call it?—in Toronto; there were people from that organization who came also.

Mr. Pitman: Did you contact the trade union movements first? I would suggest to you that in many cases, the feeling is that these are non-working women who are involved. Partly because, of course, your conferences are going on when many women are at work.

Mrs. Lyburner: Oh, no. We have evening meetings too.

Mr. Pitman: And you do contact non-professional women!

Mrs. Lyburner: And we try to find working women. For those conferences, we try—

An hon. member: Robert Nixon is the one I mean.

Mrs. Lyburner: —we try to reach the people who are working, women who are working during the day or who are mothers with small children and cannot come to a daytime meeting; somebody is home at night who can take care of the children and so on.

Mr. Pitman: I wonder if I could ask a question or two about the philosophy of the organization? I am interested in what the minister read just a few moments ago. You mentioned that women, of course, are a part of the buying public. I was wondering if this is not covered by the women's advisory committees both in The Department of Labour and The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs. What is the specific purpose of a women's advisory committee?

This department, for example, you mention deals a great deal with the government and its programme. I cannot help wondering why The Department of Trade and Development is concerned about what we call citizens' activity in terms of government, which includes a total spectrum of government function, I would think. I wonder why this committee is attached to this particular area of government, and particularly to this department?

Mrs. Lyburner: You think we should be attached to some other department?

Mr. Pitman: Yes, I do. I think there are other departments where your work would be more relevant. You asked a question, and I appreciate your help in answering it. For example, I think that most of the problems in any case are related to Financial and Commercial Affairs. I think that it is likely also related to The Department of Education, because in many cases, if you want to change a woman's view of herself, you have got to do it when she is a child. I suggest that your education system is largely set up to monitor women to the traditional view of women, but in our 20th century this feeling is very quickly disappearing. And that is the reason why you have this confrontation.

If you really want to get to the reason why women are deprived of their full rights as citizens and human beings, go and talk to the women who are teachers. They start right in grades 2 and 3 to convince girls that they are something different from boys. They take different subjects; they act differently; they are quieter; they are nicer and all of those things that make them, you might say, unable to fulfil themselves as human beings when they become fully grown women.

Mrs. Lymburner: Sir, there are many women today who feel that they have to go back to school for retraining, that they want to take advantage of any kind of lectures or any kind of information programme that they can get to, because they feel that they want to update the ideas that perhaps they gathered when they were at school or at secondary school or at the university level or wherever they were. Even the people who got PhD's 15 years ago tell you they are not worth anything today unless you have stayed with it in the meantime, so that the whole programme is a programme of updating information, keeping women informed.

You have suggested that perhaps this could be attached to some other department. We have used repeatedly the women out of the labour bureau of The Department of Labour to come to our conferences as speakers. We have used people from The Department of Education. We have used them from The Department of Agriculture and Food. We have used people from Financial and Commercial Affairs, because these are the things that women say they would like to know about. We can gather together, under one umbrella, all of these people and take them to a conference and let them talk about the things that women are asking about.

Mr. Pitman: I will not be long, Mr. Chairman. I just want to make one or two suggestions.

First, that you seek a little bit harder to get the full spectrum of social classes into your organization, because I do not think it is becoming to the province of Ontario that they feel that this organization is essentially related to the upper-middle-class point of view and people.

Second, I suggest that we might consider taking a more radical, more far-out attitude toward the role of women. Rather than explaining to them what their position is now, you might very well take part in the efforts that are being made by women to change that position.

Mrs. Lymburner: This is precisely what we did at the April conference. It was a conference at which the theme was "Scene 70". We were projecting for the next decade the part that women will play, not only in Ontario but in Canada and indeed around the world, if they want to be citizens of the world.

That was the whole theme of that April conference, which was a provincial conference and brought out some very fine people; such as Dr. Helen Able who is well known all over the world for her contribution to economics; she is on the staff at Waterloo; Dr. Margaret Nix, who came from New York; she is a Canadian, she is dean of a college in New York now; the editor of Chatelaine magazine—all of these are forward-thinking women who really—

Mr. Pitman: But they are all "establishment" too!

Mrs. Lymburner: We have a conference in practically every one of the 10 regions every year.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I just want to make one thing very clear. A CBC girl reporter said to me in Ottawa; "These people all look like millionaires in here; how many are on relief?" I said: "Would you expect us to stand up and ask how many people here are on welfare and have them show themselves? Is that the kind of conference you would like to see us run?"

So she did not give us a very good review; I think you can understand that, you would have said the same thing I said.

Now when people go to a conference like this at the Royal York, they put on their best Sunday bib and tucker, and I do not think you can tell whether these people are from poor families or welfare families. They all have one good outfit at least, and they come there as well dressed as anybody else. I think it is a misnomer to say that these people are all middle-class families. I think there are people there, from what I have seen—and I have seen some out from my own riding and I know their circumstances—these people are the cross-section of people you will find in any community; and despite—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know whether it helps his political image or not, I do not care. It is not a political movement.

Mr. Pitman: May I suggest to you that possibly the place of holding the meeting might be the very reason why you are not getting these groups? If anybody sent me an invitation to the Royal York Hotel, if anybody sent a welfare person an invitation to the Royal York Hotel, I am sure he would get a negative reaction. Welfare people do not feel at home at the Royal York, believe it or not. I think that you might very well, by finding a different location, make those people feel much more at home and get that kind of input which we desperately need.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me tell you about the people we have had at these meetings. You cannot get a big enough hall in Toronto unless you go to the Royal York Hotel. It is the biggest hall you can get 1,350 people in; in Simcoe, 400; Trenton, 300; in Niagara Falls, 600; in Hamilton, 400; in Sarnia, 450; in Ottawa, 1,000; in Sudbury, 500. If we send out invitations and some people say, "Well, I could not get in," they go home mad. If you do not get a hall big enough, I can assure you they really get annoyed, and if we get a hall so small that they feel at home, perhaps we are not going to have many—

Mr. Sargent: Give me one NDP or one Liberal member—

Hon. Mr. Randall: We do not ask what their politics are.

Mr. Sargent: I know, but the fact is that they were not invited; we were not invited, you were invited.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We invited your people.

Mr. Sargent: I was not there. He was not there. How did you get there? How did Robarts get there and Tom Wells and all the good-looking guys get there?

Mr. Chairman: Let us have a little order.

Mr. Sargent: What a corny outfit.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, you have got to protect me. May I suggest to the minister that possibly what he might consider is that, again, sociologists will tell you that people on welfare and from lower economic groups do not feel at home in large gatherings of that sort? Would he consider the possibility of smaller groupings, indeed groupings where there will be far more input by the people who are in the audience? The day of the huge meeting with somebody talking at it is going. You do not even have to read Marshall McLuhan to get that idea across.

If you want real input and interchange in a meeting you make it small. You divide people up into smaller groups. You do not need the Royal York Hotel. I just suggest to you that if you really want to do this, you are going to have to make some very real changes in the near future.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is a good suggestion. If I could get more money from my budget, we could do that.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Welland South.

Mr. Haggerty: I was interested in the comments of the member for Peterborough about the purpose of the teachers who teach young children of three to four, and the difference between the different sexes, the boys and the girls. Some place along the line I think the teachers have failed. It is hard to tell the boys from the girls today.

I must say to the minister I think he has one of the most capable and charming women in the province of Ontario to do the PR job for the Tory government. Often I have heard Mrs. Lymburner from Port Colborne—and I am from Port Colborne too—on the CHOW radio station out of Welland. I have often listened to her comments and discussions on the radio, and one could almost sum it up as Tory propaganda. The reason I mention it is this: some of the questions that are asked through the radio are on consumer affairs and different other problems that people are concerned with and it always the same old answer that you hear in the House. It is the federal government that is responsible. So, what is the purpose of the women's advisory committee?

Hon. Mr. Randall: You mean the programme is not responsible?

Mr. Haggerty: No, I am not saying that. This is different. She is casting it aside and saying that the Tories are the little innocent bystanders.

Mr. Chairman: Well, I do not think that this has got anything to do with this particular vote.

Mr. Haggerty: I am asking, what is the purpose of the women's advisory committee?

Is this the type of advice that the people are subjected to, throughout the province?

Mr. Sargent: Put it down to promotion.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. May I ask the minister if he really sincerely thinks that this advisory committee is doing a good job?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, I do.

Mr. B. Newman: Would he like it to do twice as good a job?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will take advice from anybody.

Mr. B. Newman: Why do you not have a youth advisory committee? Why do you not have a senior citizens' advisory committee? Why do you stick only to one type of an advisory committee? If this is so important, and doing such a good job and is not a public relations programme, why would you not consider other segments of society in there?

I think we should be just as concerned about the youth—and maybe even more concerned about our youth today. Look at the young married group, as the member for Owen Sound, or for Grey-Bruce mentioned.

So, Mr. Chairman, if the minister thinks that this a worthwhile group I would suggest to him that he expand it to include the several other groups that I did mention.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I made a note of it.

Mr. Chairman: This section agreed to.

Ontario House. Are you speaking on Ontario House, Mr. Deans?

Mr. Deans: Yes, I am, I want to say a few words about Ontario House. I raised in the House about three or four weeks ago the situation that has arisen in regard to the operation of Ontario House in London, England. At this particular time in Ontario we are facing perhaps the highest unemployment rate that we have had in 10 years. Ontario House is being used by manufacturers to advertise and to promote—

Mr. Chairman: Can we get into that under immigration?

Mr. Deans: Yes, you could, except I want to tell you that I do not think Ontario House is the place to do it, that is all. You might want to talk about it under immigration if you wish, and I will do that if you want. If you would rather talk about it under 2203—

Mr. Chairman: If it is to do with immigration I think you can stick to the immigration—

Mr. Deans: It is to do with immigration, but it is to do with the function and the philosophy of the Ontario government toward the people of Ontario who are unemployed and the use of a facility that is paid for by the people of Ontario, including the unemployed, to bring people into the country to take jobs which Ontario people could well be trained to do.

Mr. Chairman: Now wait just a minute. Discuss this under the next vote, 2203.

Mr. Deans: Well, yes. All right. I am not satisfied that is where it should be discussed though, Mr. Chairman.

We are talking about the use of Ontario House; let us then find out what exactly Ontario House does. Do not tell me it encourages immigration or we will be back on the same subject. Tell me what it is. Tell me the function of Ontario House. I have been there in London and in Glasgow, and I had a look in London, but I would like to know what in heaven's name they really do.

Hon. Mr. Randall: As you know, we have had Ontario House over there for—well, we celebrated our 100th birthday last year. Ontario House is the official office, the same as the province of Quebec has one over there, and the province of Alberta and many other provinces all have their official homes over there. Ontario House has been ours for the last 100 years.

It is through Ontario House that we have access to our second largest customer, Great Britain. The importance of Ontario House today, I do not think can be stressed too much, because within two years, if the information I get is correct, we will find the United Kingdom going into the EEC market and we may have a great deal more difficulty in doing business in the UK because preferential tariffs, or tariffs of all kinds, will be changed. Right now we are shipping over there without any tariffs. It would appear to me that we are going to be facing some very difficult problems over there if the UK goes into the EEC market, and very definitely, they are going to go.

Ontario House does a number of things. We have a department of agriculture in there. We have the liquor commissioner in there, who does the buying of imported liquors. Immigration is in there. As you mentioned, this is where people come to get information on the province of Ontario. If they come in, they can find where they want to come to. If they want to visit Canada, they come in and this is where the service is rendered to them. I will deal with immigration later, so I will not get off the track.

We have always had a bureau there to assist in our business. Our number two customer in the world is the United Kingdom. Thirty-five per cent goes to assistance in trade and industrial development; in other words, 35 per cent of the time of our staff over there is to develop trade and so on for the province of Ontario. Twenty-five per cent is for assistance in selective immigration. Forty per cent is for servicing other departments of government.

For instance, any time representatives of any other department of government go over there—whether it be Agriculture, or Labour, or Mines, or Lands and Forests—the people at Ontario House set up all their appointments, and make all their arrangements with the key officials of other governments and other departments. It performs a very useful function for the province of Ontario and is noted as perhaps one of the best provincial houses anywhere in the world. In fact, more people come there for information than go to Canada House. My federal friends give me an argument there but I think I am right in making that statement.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Wentworth.

Mr. Deans: I am curious to know about trade promotion. What kind of trade promotion does Ontario House undertake? First of all, how many people are in there? How many people are working there?

Hon. Mr. Randall: There is a total of 19—wait a minute.

Mr. Clarkson: We have a total of 39 people in Ontario House. That is taking in the trade and industry people, immigration and all the supporting staff.

Mr. Deans: Are all of the salaries paid out of the $99,800?

Mr. Clarkson: No, no. This is just the support staff for Ontario House. The trade and industry people will be shown in the trade and industry vote because they report back to the executive director of trade and industry.

The same with immigration; these people will be included under the immigration vote. That is the staff operation.

Mr. Deans: Under the Ontario House maintenance budget of $174,500—I am always intrigued by the word “maintenance” because I can never figure out just exactly what it means—how much of this $174,500 is used for banqueting and guesting the people who are supposedly being sold Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know if we have a breakdown of that; $10,000 is used for that purpose.

Mr. Deans: Ten thousand dollars? That is the total amount? Can you indicate to me what the breakdown is of the people who are at Ontario House? You were saying there were some—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Thirty-nine.

Mr. Deans: Thirty-nine? Can you tell me how many are allocated to each of the various departments?

Mr. Clarkson: Of the Ontario House staff, there are 19 who are called the headquarters staff; the immigration staff in the UK offices totals 18, and that includes the small office in Glasgow; then trade and industry has seven.

Mr. Deans: So really, in the actual promotion of sale of Ontario's goods, there are only seven people as opposed to some 37 people who are there to encourage the movement of people from the United Kingdom to Canada and particularly to Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, they are the people on that side of the water engaged in immigration, and we have some of our people here, of course.

Mr. Deans: So the emphasis, then, is very much on the sale of Ontario—not the goods of Ontario, but Ontario itself rather than the sale of Ontario's production?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, that is not right at all.

Mr. Deans: Right, then, these seven people—

Hon. Mr. Randall: When we send a sales mission over, 10 or 12 salesmen all selling different products, our trade representative in London, Web Thompson and his staff, makes the appointments for the 12 salesmen to see a number of people in London or thereabouts while they are there. This is their responsibility—set up appointments, see that these people talk to people who can buy. That is how Canadian goods are sold through Ontario House.

Mr. Deans: So what you are talking about when you talk about trade missions, is you are talking about salesmen from various corporations in the province of Ontario who go there? Ontario House makes the arrangements for them?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They can go on their own and get advice from Ontario House, or they can go on one of our trade missions that leaves from here. It can be an Ontario government trade mission, or they could go as individuals from their own corporation, drop in at Ontario House and say they need a lead on a chemical manufacturer or bicycle manufacturer, and the staff would look the companies up and have a lineup of appointments for the visitors.

Mr. Deans: You want me to talk about the other in the next vote?

Mr. Chairman: Are you all finished?

Mr. Deans: Yes, okay.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Kingston and the Islands.

Mr. Apps: Mr. Chairman, there are two questions I want to ask. Firstly, the number of employees you had over there, and secondly, are all these Canadians? How do you choose them?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have a rotating staff.

Mr. Clarkson: No, they are not all Canadians. Generally the stenographers are local staff, but most of the immigration people and the senior staff are rotated from here. They are on four-year postings. The same applies to the trade and industry people and the Agent General himself, but all the support staff are local people hired over there.

Mr. Apps: Do you not think it would be a good idea if these were Canadians as well?

Mr. Clarkson: I think it is partly a matter of cost. All the people we send over there have to have additional allowances given to them, rent, cost of living, and so forth. For a secretary or for a clerk, it becomes quite expensive to do it. Up until now, it is simply a matter of the cost of doing it.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Briefly, Mr. Chairman, J. C. Armstrong the Consul General—is that what he is called?—

An hon. member: He is not there now.

Mr. Sargent: The man who takes his place will be drawing $30,000 salary and $6,000 foreign allowance—$3,000 better than the Prime Minister makes. That is pretty good. What is he making now?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am not sure that that is the same figure we have or not.

Mr. Sargent: I am taking the 1968 figures here. That is a pretty handsome deal.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is a pretty responsible office. He represents the province of Ontario over there.

Mr. Sargent: I see. Is it in order, Mr. Chairman, to ask the minister in how many countries he has developed places similar to Ontario House?

Hon. Mr. Randall: How many offices do we have? In total 14, although they are not all set up like Ontario House, of course. We have offices in Los Angeles, New York, Chicago, Brussels, Stockholm, Frankfurt and Tokyo. Some of these are just one man, and a girl who looks after the typing and the phones, but I think—

Mr. W. A. Fowler (Trade and Industry Division): Fourteen altogether. Four offices and 10—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. Four major offices and the 10 others are what they call task force offices.

Mr. Sargent: Can I ask your department head a question?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, go ahead.

Mr. Sargent: If you were spending your own money, would you not find you could do a reasonable job with the Canadian agency instead of having your own separate Ontario deal? Why could you not operate out of city hall free and easy?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Just give your name for the record.

Mr. Fowler: My name is Fowler. I am the director of the international branch. We do liaison with the federal government—is this what you mean, sir? Our one-man task force does work very closely with the federal government in all of our offices.

Mr. Sargent: Why can you not find a task force office—

An hon. member: Why could they not have the same office?

Mr. Fowler: In some places, we have offices where the federal government has none, and where we have offices in the same cities, they have not got space for us.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I might say I have discussed it with Ottawa and they prefer—

Mr. Sargent: I am sorry, I did not mean that. I cannot—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I just want to point out that I discussed it with Mitchell Sharp when he was Minister of Trade and Development, and I also discussed it with Bob Winters. I said we were prepared, if they wanted, to put an Ontario man in federal offices in the area that we wanted to work in. They did not think it was a good idea at the time and we never got back to it. We think we work better on our own anyway, but we have a very close liaison with the federal government, and we never do anything in that area without talking to the federal authorities. In fact, when a trade mission is going there from Ontario, it is with the help of federal authorities that the appointments are all set up.

Mr. Sargent: What is it costing you, this 14-office operation?

Mr. Chairman: It is under trade and industry, the next vote.

The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): I am interested in what you do in the field of agriculture through that office.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The Department of Agriculture and Food have their own representatives; they have two representatives there who work under the direction of The Department of Agriculture and Food here. They sell many hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of food throughout the U.K. for The Department of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Lawlor: Do they import Canadian cheddar?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Pardon?

Mr. Lawlor: Do they import Canadian cheddar?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I guess they would; they do a pretty good job on cheese if they can get it.

Mr. Lawlor: There are a number of questions I would like to ask, Mr. Chairman, if I may.

Turning here to the public accounts of 1969, I notice that under the maintenance allowance, you have some receipts from the Treasury of the United Kingdom in the amount of $28,000 and some odd dollars. How does that come to pass?

Hon. Mr. Randall: When I find the item—

Mr. Lawlor: It is on page 22 (8).

Hon. Mr. Randall: Page 22 (8), under where?

Mr. Lawlor: It is under maintenance and miscellaneous accounts. You have spent a certain amount of money and then you get back a number of items from The Department of Education, I think I can guess some of them. You got back $7.76 from the office of the Prime Minister. You are doing rather well. Then down at the last items are receipts from England, treasury unit, the United Kingdom, totalling $28,000.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would think that the money we got from other departments is money we expended on their behalf and were reimbursed from them. Insofar as the treasury is concerned, I do not have the information you do. Do you, Mr. Croswell?

Mr. K. A. Croswell (Administrative Section): Well, sir, it is a rebate.

Mr. Lawlor: A rebate on what?

Mr. Croswell: It is merely a rebate on taxes that they have collected from us. It is because we are a foreign government in their estimation, in their eyes, that is a return.

Mr. Lawlor: You do not enjoy any diplomatic immunity in this regard?

Mr. Croswell: No, but it comes very close to diplomatic immunity as far as the agent general is concerned. He is considered a diplomat—just the agent general, not the rest of the employees.

Mr. Lawlor: Otherwise, you pay taxes and you get it almost totally reimbursed?

Mr. Croswell: Yes.

Mr. Lawlor: Interesting!

Mr. Chairman, about EEC and your remarks a few moments ago as to the possibility of the British entering the economic market, even conceivably the Irish. They will spoil it, that will upset them. I have never met anything like it.

An hon. member: There will be more gun-running across the border.

Mr. Lawlor: This is a horrendous possibility in your mind. I do not doubt that the Labour movement is quite likely to go into the market, although Wilson is talking the other way at the moment. Is it not funny the way these governments switch around? It was not so long ago that the Tories over there were saying it was the last thing in the world and now they are trying to flog them into it. In any event, if this is the possibility, what is your department doing in the face of the possibility of this horrendous loss of trade? Have you experts over there making studies? Are you forfending against the possibilities of having your second-best customer wiped down perhaps to the 10th division? Just what is your department doing in order to meet what might very well be an emergency so far as you are concerned in the very near future?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I can suggest we are doing a number of things. That will be covered more fully in the next vote under trade and industry. But let me answer your question to the best of my knowledge. There have been a number of major discussions as to when the U.K. will go in, and I have had a chance to talk to Mr. John Mason, who speaks for Mr. Wilson on the Board of Trade and who was here a few weeks ago, and also the gentleman who is head of the British export board, Sir Ralph Perrin. He was replaced and his successor was here the other day, and they are both of the opinion that the U.K. will go into the EEC by 1972.

You ask what we are doing. We are doing a number of things. We are looking for a licence agreement over there for our own manufacturers. We have been successful in some area, and in the United States. Our major thrust has been to take our sales missions abroad, not only into the U.K. but into the markets that the U.K. is going to become part of. We have a mission out of here about every three weeks. The reason we have had a successful performance in the export field is, we think, because of the activities of these missions.

I think we have had about 143 to date. We have taken to these markets over 1,100 salesmen, the majority of whom had never been out of Canada before. They have brought back, since 1963, about $250 million of sample orders and we do not know what they get when they go back on their own. I tell you this every year, but I suggest to you that we in Ontario recognize that if the U.K. does go into the market we are shut off. We had better make sure that we are doing business in some other area. That is the reason why we have these trade missions all over the world.

As you know, I come in for quite a bit of kidding throughout the year about making jobs, but I can assure that I do not make too many jobs unless I get an order. We can prove beyond a shadow of a doubt that we have been getting the business. We have been getting the orders, not only here but in the United States. This is primarily the activity of our department, to make sure Ontario manufacturers take their goods to markets besides the U.K.

But as to where studies are concerned, there have been a number of studies. The CMA has made a number of studies which we have had. I myself looked at a number of things over there when I was in the appliance field; that was back in 1964 or 1962. But I think we know where we are going to be hurt. It is primarily in the manufacturing goods field we are going to get hurt, if the U.K. goes into the EEC market, because most of our manufactured goods today go in there duty-free. When they go to the market, it is obvious that we are not going to go in duty-free. There is going to be some kind of a tariff, so it means our Canadian goods are going to cost more and we are going to have more competition from the other six members of the EEC.

I spoke to Mr. Mason when he was over here. I said "You can provide only 65 per cent of your own food stuff. What are you going to do when you go into the EEC and you have to take some of that high-cost food from France and a few of these other countries that have a very high subsidy on food production?" He said "We will just have to subsidize our farmers. That will be one of the problems we will have in trying to merge our economy with that of the other six. They recognize if they go in, there are going to be problems in the agricultural field."

So these are our activities at the present time. We have had a number of looks at the situation over there, but it has been on and off and nobody knows exactly when it is going to happen. But I think we are prepared as any nation that I know of to get business in other parts of the world, by recognizing the fact that they may go into the market and we will find that we are no longer on their list as a preferred customer.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, the minister sounds as though he has his nose to the ground and is sniffing. Still, I am not quite satisfied. The licence agreements that you establish, I take it is more or less à la American, the Trojan Horse tactic. I do not mean to be pejorative about it, but nevertheless you get in ahead of their going into the market, having established these licencing agreements. That means that you are under the shelter before their entry into the market and therefore will be acceptable to the European Economic Community as having already been established in the United Kingdom. Is that the purpose?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, we did two things. If we have a product that we feel should be manufactured by a British manufacturer in order that he can get preferential tariffs on the markets he can ship to, he pays a licence fee or a royalty for the opportunity to manufacture that Canadian product in that country and then it becomes a product he can export the same as any of his other products, as long as he develops them himself.

Then we have a joint venture agreement where we join hands with a Canadian manufacturer and put him together with a British manufacturer that owns, let us say, 50 per cent of the company; so, again, the Canadian company may have a 50 per cent interest in the British company, and the British company will enjoy a preferential tariff for the ECM, and there will be a return of capital by way of royalties or licence fees.

In other words, I think what we are trying to do, what we have been trying to do, in many parts of the world is develop the same kind of accounting that the British had before the Second World War, where there were royalties coming back from all over the world.

Mr. Lawlor: On the aspect of studies, I do not think I need to tell the minister—

Mr. Chairman: I might just point out to the member that, really, we are on the next vote. All right, Ontario House, and let us go on from there. Mr. Peacock, have you got anything to discuss on Ontario House?

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, does Ontario House in any way indicate the provincial government's attitude to British entry into the European Common Market?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I did not quite get the question.

Mr. Peacock: Does Ontario House, or Ontario agents there, indicate to the British government in any way what the attitude of the government of Ontario is toward British entry into the market, even though it does not have any formal diplomatic relationship with the government of the United Kingdom?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No I do not think it is.

Mr. Peacock: Is that government hearing from the Ontario agents as to the view of this government about the impact on Ontario's exports, should Britain enter the European Common Market?

Hon. Mr. Randall: All I can say is that in the discussions I have had with the government members who were over here from England, my agent general in London is having the same discussions with the foreign trade minister and others in the U.K. with reference to when they are going to go and what the ramifications are going to be on Ontario—on Canada, I should say. We got those reports back from them, and it confirms our belief that this is going to happen. It strengthens our intentions to get markets in other parts of the world.

I do not think that even the Canadian government has registered any disapproval with the British government about going in; I do not think we can dictate to the British. In fact, I think it is about time the British made up their minds what they are going to do to help themselves. They have won two world wars and lost two economic wars and Great Britain today, I think, is starting to climb back out of the difficulties it has faced.

If they find that they have got 250 million people in Europe who are going to buy off them a lot quicker and perhaps at better prices than they can sell here in Canada—where they have got a market, geographically larger than the United States with only 22 million people—I think if I was making the decision, I would have to say I would be a little bit selfish. I would make it to go into the ECM.

They recognize that they are going to have to make some concessions, for instance, in agriculture, if they go in. I think what held up most of those nations that joined the ECM was the fact that the farmers were in trouble. However, they seem to have solved it in the ECM, and I think the British have made up their minds they have to solve it.

No, we do not have that kind of status over there. I suppose Mr. Rowan-Legg can talk to British members of Parliament. He is invited over there periodically. He can keep his ear to the ground, but I think it would not be in Canada's interest or Ontario's interest to stand in the way of Great Britain going into the ECM.

Mr. Peacock: One other question, Mr. Chairman. Has the agent general or the department here been able to determine whether Ontario exports have suffered in any way as a result of the favourable trade balance that Great Britain has been achieving lately?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think it is too early to tell. I do not think we have any figures that would tell us what has happened recently. I notice the trade balance took a lacing, I guess it was last month; it went the other way.

Mr. Peacock: Yes, the opposite to last month.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, but I say they have had a very good year to date. If anything, I would think that Canada has held its own and perhaps done a little better than most nations. I might say this—I think that the nations that are going to get hurt the worst when this happens are Australia and New Zealand. They are primarily agricultural and they admitted that in our discussions. They said there would have to be some concessions made but, as you know, New Zealand depends pretty well, I guess 70 per cent of its exports go to Great Britain.

Mr. MacDonald: What about Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We do not know yet what the impact will be on Canadian agricultural exports there when they join the ECM, but they still have to import. They can only produce 65 per cent of their own food so they have to import 35 per cent. I think the thing we have to worry about in Ontario, whatever they are buying from us is, "Are we going to continue to get our share of that 35 per cent?" If we are not, then we had better look elsewhere for a market.

Mr. Peacock: But aside from the question of entry into EEC, under the British government's programme of turning over its trade balance from a constant deficit position to the surplus position, is there yet any indication that Ontario exports, agricultural or manufacturing, have suffered as a result of that successful shift in recent period from deficit to surplus?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know why we would suffer. I am inclined to believe we would benefit if they had a surplus of trade.

They would be buying more goods from us, I would think.

Mr. Peacock: They cut down on imports.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Sargent, Grey-Bruce.

Hon. Mr. Randall: There have not been any restrictions. To my knowledge there have been no restrictions, no quota, placed on Canadian goods.

Mr. Chairman: Is your question on Ontario House?

Mr. Sargent: Before you place this question on that first vote, on the total, there are some questions that I, as the critic for the party, would like answered. An item of $273,000 to Christopher Chapman.

Mr. Chairman: Are you on the Ontario House vote?

Mr. Sargent: I am on the $273,000 on the first vote.

Mr. Chairman: I am sorry, Mr. Sargent, we are on Ontario House. The other items have all been passed.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, we launched this vote and we launched immediately into discussion of Harbour City. I have not had a chance to ask the very important questions in this estimate, two items one for a quarter of a million dollars and the other for a half a million dollars, insofar as two items in this vote that I want to ask about, as the critic for my party.

Mr. Chairman: Well, I am sorry—

Mr. Sargent: They have not been discussed as yet.

Mr. Chairman: I am sorry, Mr. Sargent. You were here all the time during this—

Mr. Sargent: I was not here all the time and I have not had a chance to ask these questions.

Mr. Chairman: You had the opportunity.

Mr. Sargent: I did not, sir.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I say, the hon. member will get a chance in vote 2206 to ask that when it comes under Expo if you wish. We can take care of it there.

Mr. Sargent: I am talking about—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I know, it is the same thing. The thing you are asking about we can do under vote 2206.

Mr. Sargent: Well, is it Expo 67 or Expo 70?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, Expo 67 is all finished; it is 70. That is when you can ask that question.

Mr. Chairman: That is on vote 2206.

Mr. Sargent: I am not prepared at this point, as the critic for this party, to vote in favour of this vote on these two items until I know what these are for. There is almost $1 million in these two.

I may not be here when vote 2206 comes up because the way we are going we may be here for a month. I ask the chair to do this, there has been confusion since the start of the vote.

At least I have been here all the time, and I want to find out on behalf of the Liberals.

Mr. Chairman: We will give you the chance on vote 2206. We cannot go back; we have passed all these right up the present one, Ontario House.

Mr. Sargent: Just a moment, I think that before you pass vote 2201 in its entirety, I think it is wrong to come back for two items, to come back to vote 2201 to get approval for it.

You cannot pass this vote until I vote in favour of it, and, so far as I am concerned, I will not vote for this vote until I know what I am voting for.

Mr. Chairman: We agreed when we started that we would take this item by item. Now we are down to the sixth item and five have been passed. Because you did not get up and give your objections, or ask any questions, I cannot help that.

We are on Ontario House now, the rest of them are passed. We are all agreed on that except you. Are you agreed on Ontario House?

Agreed to.

Mr. Sargent: Do you have to put the vote on the main vote?

Mr. Chairman: Yes, 2201.

Mr. Sargent: There are two items I do not know the explanation for. I would like to ask what the amount of $273,062.50 is for, for Chapman.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We are in the wrong place, but I will answer the question. It is for making the movie for Expo 70 and the movie cost something like $700,000 odd. That would be a partial payment, when the picture was finished the balance would be paid. It comes under vote 2206.

Mr. Sargent: It is listed in the public accounts under the main office.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is Expo 67 you are looking at now.

Mr. Sargent: Now we have an item of $533,000 for Takenaka Komuten Co.

Mr. Crowell: Mr. Sargent, I think we have a bit of confusion here because we have changed our programme activity structure. Although in public accounts for 1968-1969 this was in vote 2201, it is now in vote 2206.

This, I think, is where the confusion is arising while we are dealing with the estimates.

Mr. B. Newman: What is it all about? Tell us now and we will not ask later.

Mr. Sargent: What is the amount of half a million dollars for?

Mr. Clarkson: Most of these items in this section are related to costs for Expo 70 and you mentioned Takenaka. They are the construction company for the pavilions in Expo 70.

The one item that I can see that relates to Expo 70, the final including expenses—Cook and Leitch-Perini—they were the construction people for the pavilion at Expo 67. So there is the windup of Expo 67 and the beginning of costs for Expo 70. Most of them relate to the beginning of cost of Expo 70—Chris Chapman, the new movie; Takenaka, and so forth.

Mr. Sargent: You have a vote of $45,000 in vote 2206.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: Oh no, you have $45,000 on 2206. That does not include the $500,000 I am talking about.

Hon. Mr. Randall: This is what he is talking about. That is two years ago.

What we are talking about now is the money we have spent in Expo 70, in the year 1970.

Vote 2201 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: I think we will adjourn now. It is now 10.30 and the estimates go on on Tuesday. Remember, Tuesday at 3.15.

We are not here tomorrow, no.

The committee adjourned at 10.30 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Trade and Development Standing Committee

TUESDAY, MAY 19, 1970

The committee met at 3:15 o'clock, p.m., in committee room one.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT (continued)

On vote 2202:

Mr. Chairman: We will now start. We are on vote 2202 and it is divided into four parts. I think probably we should take it in the different parts. Trade and industrial development is item one.

An hon. member: Three parts.

Mr. Chairman: Is it three parts? I am sorry. I thought there were four.

All right, industrial development.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Under industrial development, Mr. Chairman, is this the programme in which the department assists companies to locate businesses in suitable areas?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Yes.

Mr. Peacock: Could I ask the minister something about the manner in which that assistance is given? I recall his mention on Thursday last of one applicant for an EIO loan—and I assume this may have been another aspect of the loan application, perhaps it fits in here—who reviewed the suitability of 30 different municipalities before he finally selected one. That is a rather amazing number that were put before him for choice. I wonder how the department was able to assist him in selecting one of the 30?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will ask Mr. Radford; he is the gentleman who does it. Perhaps he could elaborate on that for you.

Mr. M. R. Radford (Trade and Industry Division): We have in our records in the office, folders and sheets on some 600 municipalities in the province. This covers all of the industrial development factors—labour, nearness to airports, customs and excise, cost of the land, amount of water, whether there is gas and how close they can get oil; and all of these industrial development factors.

It goes into details such as the companies that are in these communities and the labour affiliations of those companies and so on within the community. An industrial development prospect can look at any number of these forms that he wishes to look at and it can be determined whether he wants to go and look at them or whether he wants to look at maybe only four or five.

The one that the minister (Mr. Randall) spoke about was an exception, I will admit, but there are companies that will look at 35 or 40. Over the past eight years that I have been here, there have probably been 10 or 15 that have gone to that extent. Some of them make a decision or they take four or five decisions back to their boards of directors in whatever country they come from. Then they will send up a team of experts, from the United States shall we say, and they will level off on the four or five and then pick one.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, could I ask how many of the inquiries are linked to EIO loans? Is it possible for the minister or his officers to say what numbers of inquiries were made to this branch and how many received assistance, both those associated with the EIO loans and those apart from applications for the EIO loans? Do the two always go hand in hand, the EIO loan and the—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, since we started the programme in January, 1968, of course, when an industry comes in if it wants to go to a designated area it is taken to the designated area. If it says it does not worry about where it goes, it wants to come into the province of Ontario and not necessarily, say, locate in a designated area, then it can go into as many areas that are not designated as it can in designated areas. But I do not know what the percentage would be off hand.

Mr. Radford: I am just trying to get that figure.

Hon. Mr. Randall: All right!

I might say that last year there were 159 manufacturing establishments brought into Ontario, assisted by the department. There were 144 new manufacturing arrangements made; there were 11 joint ventures made and 413 plant expansions, which we would have something to do with, with regard to taking them out on export missions and getting them increased business so they had to expand their plants. These are some of the activities of the industrial development branch.

In dollar volume, in those four items there was in new manufacturing establishments, an investment of about $111 million; new manufacturing arrangements, $3,168,000; joint ventures, $1,287,000; and new plant expansions amounted to $263,803,000, for a total investment of those programmes in Ontario of $379,257,000. That is the industrial development programme. I understand 38 out of the 159 went to the EIO programme. They had indicated they wanted to go where they could get an EIO grant.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Deacon, York Centre. Excuse me, Mr. Deacon, would you mind standing up? It does not record very well unless you do.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): What preparation work is done ahead of time to be sure they know what they can sell, what are the terms, what delivery and the other assurances they can give those they intend to sell? I understand in discussions with people from overseas there have been many instances when our people go over there and talk up a product, but all the work has to be done afterwards to decide whether they can deliver the product. There is not enough preparation work. Are we correcting that problem?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think perhaps Mr. Graham, who does the marketing—

Mr. J. V. Graham (Trade and Industry Division): I understood we were on industrial development. When we come to a marketing question, I am quite prepared to answer it, but it is in the wrong vote.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right, marketing comes under the next section.

Mr. Chairman: Do you want to let it go until we get to it?

Mr. Peacock: Just one other question on industrial development, Mr. Chairman.

Can the minister tell us what kind of information is given inquirers seeking assistance for industrial development in respect to labour relations in various communities in which they are interested in locating? Is the information based on this department's own information gathering techniques or is it based on the Ontario Labour Relations Board records?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We use every bit of information that is available to us through the Manpower sources, the local council and any other information that would be available publicly, we use all those facilities. For instance, we must know before we take a company into an area whether labour is available and what kind of labour, and, as a rule, the age of labour. Sometimes, if it is a textile, they are looking for female labour. If it is heavy industry they probably want to get in where—for instance, if it were Sault Ste. Marie they are probably looking for male labour in an area like that. They are all gone into very carefully.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): How many projects are provided for in trade and industrial—

Hon. Mr. Randall: How many what?

Mr. Breithaupt: How many projects are involved in that $870,000?

Hon. Mr. Randall: How many projects in $870,000? I do not quite get that question.

Mr. Breithaupt: Item four, Mr. Minister.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Randall: There are about 40 programmes involved there. Just a second, I think I have a list of them here. Here they are here. Do you want me to read them off?

Mr. P. A. York (Trade and Industry Division): You can hear me all right?

Well, these involve a total of some 35 to 40 programmes, which include such things as providing industrial building lists, industrial technology development missions, licensing missions abroad, municipal and industrial development forums, protection development clinics, seminars for industrial commissioners, engineering services abroad, export forums, design forums such as Eedee for furniture and fashions, bringing in Ontario groups of buyers, setting up exhibition sales missions which go out, sales missions which come in, summer and fall fairs, research for new industry, business opportunity missions which take place every month in the United States and abroad, providing information centres in various industrial, international trade fairs, counselling services. So there is a conglomeration of programmes which goes to make the total of $870,000.

Mr. Breithaupt: On the programmes, I am interested in finding out how the individuals who attend from business are chosen. Are there applications made by them or are they canvassed as to the various needs of the recipient country or the other countries? How are their expenses attended to? I presume they pay their own expenses.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We pay only their air fare there and back, and they pay all other expenses.

Mr. Breithaupt: How would you choose someone to go with you?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They are chosen in various ways. We have a number of industrial export seminars across the country during the course of the year.

In fact I am looking at some of the projects here now. For instance: exhibitions; Ontario product buyers; buyers in; buyers out; furniture buyers; Eedee award buyers; Eedee fashion buyers; engineering services abroad; marketing consultants; speaking engagements; marketing bulletins sent out.

For instance, in 1969 we sent out 20 bulletins, and there were 1,488 Canadian items listed which manufacturers had submitted to us and they said they would like to find a bigger market for their products abroad. We got 1,780 inquiries with reference to those bulletins. That is how we get most of these people who want to go on missions. They are aware of what the government is doing on missions, and they make application to go on a sales mission.

And I might say, maybe answering Mr. Deacon's question earlier, we make damn sure that we do not send a guy down to the Sahara to sell snow shovels. If he is selling fans he is probably in, but we carefully analyze the product he has to sell and see if it can be sold on that market; and then Mr. Graham, who will probably talk to you in a few minutes, goes ahead and analyzes the market for that particular product in the area before the mission is ever made up.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I do not see why we have to—

Mr. Chairman: Stand up please!

Mr. Sargent: I do not see why we have to stand up; the minister does not have to stand.

Mr. Chairman: Well this was already arranged, Mr. Sargent.

Mr. Sargent: Well, we have a—

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Sargent, this was already arranged. These microphones will pick us up sitting down, but will not pick you up unless you stand up.

Mr. Sargent: Well are you picking me up now Mr. Chairman? Can you not hear me now?

Mr. Chairman: I can hear you all right, but whether it is picking you up on the tape or not, I do not know.

Mr. Sargent: Why should I stand up?

Mr. Chairman: Because I was asked to tell you to stand up, that is why.

Mr. Sargent: Who by?

Mr. Chairman: By the people who are recording.

Mr. Sargent: We had this argument once before in the committee and—

Mr. Chairman: Sure, but if they cannot hear you and you want to have it in Hansard, that is your fault. If you want to stand up and be heard, why not do the same as everybody else does?

Interjections by members.

Mr. Chairman: Well I only have to go by what they tell me. So you argue with them.

Interjections by members.

Mr. Chairman: Okay. Would you mind standing up, Mr. Sargent, please?

Mr. Sargent: Can you hear me over there? Well I will sit down then.

Why is your budget $3 million? Why is it not $10 million? How much was it last year?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, the budget last year was about $32 million less—

Mr. Sargent: I mean in this vote. It is $3 million this year; what was it last year?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is practically the same as it was last year. We were asked by the treasury to hold it in line, and we held it in line, so it is $2,986,500.

Mr. York: $2,986,500.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Last year it was $3,028,000; this year it is $3,204,000, and this is about a $176,000 increase, and that is mostly in wages and salaries.

Mr. Sargent: This covers the cost of your branches abroad, is that right?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Pardon?

Mr. Sargent: This covers the cost of your branches abroad?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Sargent: And some of your people said that in the Canadian legations or the embassies abroad, or the Canadian diplomatic posts, whatever you have in the federal field, there is no room for the Ontario trade offices. I have been told that is a very ridiculous statement.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well I might tell you that I approached Mitchell Sharp when he was Minister of Trade and Development, also Bob Winters, who followed Mitchell Sharp, and I suggested that we would be quite prepared, if they wanted us to, to share facilities with them in any area we wanted to put a man. We do not put a man in the same areas as they do, in most cases; but where they have a Canadian government trade office, we would be quite prepared to share their facilities. They thought about it but never gave us an answer in the affirmative, so we set up our own facilities; and really, in the long run we are not paying any more—we may be paying less—than we would if we went in with the federal government.

Mr. Sargent: As you have been aware, over the years I have thought this whole department is just a PR department for the government in spending—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well that is a one-man opinion.

Mr. Sargent: It is a one-man opinion, but I have the right to say it. You would probably say the same thing if you were in the opposition, but I have a right to say that and I have proof that I think it is right.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You have a right to say it. Go ahead. We are not stopping you. Go ahead and say it.

Mr. Sargent: But in all of the 50 states to the south of us, does each state have an office abroad, or do they work in conjunction with the federal office? I mean do they have to have this division of 50 offices abroad in the United States? Do we have 10 provinces in Canada that have legations abroad like you have?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Some of them do. For instance, I know that the states of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, California and many others have offices abroad. On top of that, the federal government has trade marts abroad—big offices with goods on display and—what do you call it?—a Kardex system to list the product's manufacturer in the United States. For instance, I know they have one around the corner from Ontario House with a staff, I think, of 25 or 35 people. So they have a very intensive coverage from the United States particularly, and there are a number of states that have their own people abroad and their own offices.

Mr. Sargent: So that states such as Illinois or Michigan—all those great states that have maybe five times the population we have—they would not have legations abroad?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know what they have; perhaps Mr. York could elaborate on that. I know some of them do; I do not know how many of them do.

Mr. Sargent: But we are unique in this field, are we not, in North America?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not think we are unique. We probably do a better job of covering the market where there is a chance for us to do business than many other areas of Canada and some areas of the United States. They have all been up here—a lot of them have been up here—and had a look at our programme and gone back and are thinking about it themselves.

Mr. Sargent: But with all the economic cutting back, you budget no cutback at all?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh yes, we are holding our budget as of last year. Practically the only increase here is in wages.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): And in unemployment!

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, we cannot help what the federal government is doing to the unemployment picture today.

As far as this province is concerned, we have been providing about 45 per cent of the national income for a number of years, as you recognize, and employing the vast majority of people in secondary industry.

I would also remind you—and if you listen to the radio you will know—the state of New York, the state of Illinois, most of the Caribbean nations, the British government, the French government; they are all advertising here in our Toronto newspapers and periodicals and through radio announcements, and there are offices trying to gain more trade for their countries; and at the same time encouraging Canadian manufacturers to go abroad. We have to meet that competition.

Mr. B. Newman: But why do you blame it on the federal government?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, we are not—

Mr. B. Newman: Who would you blame it on? The federal government here too?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, we are not blaming it on the federal government. You just said that we are not very successful; I say we have had 10 years of absorbing almost 100,000 people in the labour force, and you do not absorb it by doing nothing. You absorb it by going out and competing very aggressively against the people that compete against us.

And we not only have to compete against other provinces, but we have to compete against states in the United States, plus the foreigners that are in here.

I do not have the exact figure, I would venture to say that 60 per cent of all Japanese imports of manufactured goods are sold here in the province of Ontario. Witness what happened to the television tube plant the other day; they just cannot manufacture 15,000 lamp tubes a year and stay in business.

At the same time, I heard of a plant in California producing 800,000 television tubes a year folding down. It could not manufacture 800,000 tubes efficiently. In Canada, I think the market for our tubes is about 180,000 a year, and that is taken care of primarily by what we manufacture here and what is imported from Japan. So when you look at the jobs we have created here through our programmes in creating a climate for industrial growth, I think the programme is worthwhile or I would not be doing it. I do not run with a programme that is not successful.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Sargent, Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Over the years, in our small hunt for industrial development up our way, we always felt it was most important to protect the industry we had and to strengthen and consolidate the industry we do have. My point is that if in the next six weeks to two months, 4,000 small firms go out of business in Ontario, which we are told they will, 20,000 will lose their jobs. Would it not be better to use the $20 million you are giving to American industry to strengthen those? Give them a bank credit supply of $1,000 each, and then continue this hunt for foreign industry.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I do not think so. I think what you have got to do is to have an overall programme. You have to invest some moneys in companies that are going to come and are going to have staying power, like Canadian Pittsburgh glass there. I am sure that in Owen Sound, the companies that your council has got up there in the last four or five years have certainly made a great contribution to the town of Owen Sound.

Mr. Sargent: Those were all federal loans.

Hon. Mr. Randall: All right. Whether they are federal or provincial does not make any difference. As far as I am concerned, they made a greater contribution to Owen Sound than trying to bolster a little guy with $5,000 and hoping he can hang on and employ four, five, six or seven people.

Mr. Sargent: If that happens across Canada, you are dead and we are all dead.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We do not run the country, as the Premier (Mr. Robarts) said today—

Mr. Sargent: But you are not doing anything about it here though.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We cannot run afoul of the federal government's programme for curbing inflation.

We find ourselves caught in a bind. We must carry on with the programmes we have because, as we have proved, we have brought 159 industries into this province in 1969, despite the things that have been happening at the federal level because of monetary problems. We are not faulting the federal government. I am just simply saying they have one idea on how they are going to curb inflation; but let me just give you a point of view, too, that perhaps you would appreciate.

We are about to face a postal strike. These are service workers. We have just gone through CUPE. CUPE has got 18 and 19.5 per cent. If you look at the industries that are getting an increase in wages today, they are service industries. Insofar as producing a bicycle wheel or a bicycle chain are concerned, they do not produce one damn thing. The guys who are not getting any money, the guys we have to help, are the fellows who are going to be producers.

It is the producers you and I are worried about; whether they turned the key in the door today! The producers are going out on the street; but if they do not stop giving increases to those who are non-producers, I do not know how they are going to curb inflation.

I am confused. I do not know how this operates. I do not know how you can take the postal workers and the CUPE workers—and you name the rest of them—and give them increases and not give it to the productive workers; because it is the productive workers who send the taxes in and send the money up to Ottawa.

If we are not producing the goods that we can sell in our markets and we turn around and we are importing goods that we could be manufacturing ourselves, I say the economy is in for a rough time. The more that happens, the harder we should work at the programmes we have right here now.

Mr. Sargent: These countries you are doing business with now—at least you are on a search for industry—they have wage and price controls. What do your studies tell you about wage and price controls for this economy?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They do not have wage and price controls. They have a conglomeration of a number of things that we do not go for. For instance, we have in this country restricted trade practices, the combines legislation. I have always maintained that we are at a disadvantage in Canada because we have those against manufacturers competing here. But then the foreign countries, like Great Britain and France and Germany and Japan, use that to advantage when they want to get in and cut the hell out of a market.

We have the same problems when they ship goods in here from eastern Europe. The COMCON countries can turn around and decide what they are going to sell a product at in, say Canada or the United States, and they can come in and wipe out a market overnight.

There are many discussions going on in Ottawa and we are in some of those discussions with regard to the major industries. But our major problem today is trying to run an economy of 20 million people, geographically larger than the United States, against some of the foreign competition where they band together with government assistance and government agreements to cut themselves up a market. I think if you look at the terrific strides made by the Datsun automobile in this country in this last year—it almost staggers the imagination, how they can come in and take over a market almost overnight. This is done with careful recognition of the market to be taken and how they are going to approach it.

Mr. Sargent: You are committed to an expenditure of over $3 million in this one vote here—

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right.

Mr. Sargent: —of trade and industrial development. In view of the havoc that is going to happen here, people and bankruptcies all over the place, are you going to continue this search abroad for industry?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not agree that 4,000 firms are going to collapse; I do not know where you got those figures from. Your figure may be right, I may be wrong; but I think it is up to the government to keep up its aggressive sales policy to bring in as much new industry as we possibly can, because only by bringing in secondary manufacturing are we going to have service jobs.

As you know, about 34 per cent of our people are employed in secondary manufacturing. About 53 per cent are employed in service jobs. The rest are in farming, fishing, mining and agriculture and they are getting fewer every year. If we do not bring in new industry, if we do not bring new techniques into Canada, if we do not get more manufacturing industries started over here, we are going to have a lot of people looking for work who will not be able to find jobs.

Mr. Chairman: Is there any more discussion on industrial development?

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): I have one question, Mr. Chairman. I was wondering, when we are trying to encourage industry in Ontario, what your department does to encourage the government of Ontario to buy products that are either made in Ontario or Canada? What made me think of it was the equipment we are using with the microphone. They come from Austria. The chairs we are sitting on come from the United States, I think from Grand Rapids, Michigan. These are types of things that would not seem to require tremendous mass production. Why would the government not encourage that we purchase products that are made in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me say this. I think the government, all the purchasing agents, have been advised that wherever they can buy Canadian. If the price and the quality are equal, or close to equal, they buy Canadian. If the price and quality are not equal, then they buy foreign. I think the federal government have a policy whereby if they bring in foreign articles, they will not pay any more than 10 per cent higher than the Canadian price.

Mr. Trotter: Have you a policy here in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We follow pretty well the same policy as the federal government.

I must also remind him we face a dilemma here. Let us look at it. In Canada as a whole we can feed ourselves. We have all the raw materials, the mineral resources we need and we are second almost to none in manufacturing techniques. I am talking about Canada as a whole. We have three blessings going for us; and if we export two of those blessings, which are food and raw materials, we have to take back, in most cases, manufactured goods.

If you look at Great Britain, all she has to export is manufactured goods. That is all Japan has with 102 million people. No raw materials. They have to export manufactured goods.

This is the difficulty that we, in Canada, have been facing in the last year or two. We have been watching a great influx of manufactured goods—such as textiles, and the rubber industry and the chemical industry—things that are manufactured are coming in here in ever increasing volume. Maybe our tariff policy has to be overhauled in view of the huge increase in certain items that are coming in and upsetting our market here for our own employees.

We try not to be parochial. We try not to say, "It was not made in Ontario or in Canada. We will not buy it". I think we have to have an open mind for when we go abroad to sell our own goods. I went down to Australia about two years ago and we sold $450,000 worth of seats for the new opera house; they were made right here in Toronto. An Australian manufacturer would probably say: "Why do they not buy Australian seats?" It just happened that our seat was a better seat, I guess, at a better price and our man got the order.

We try not to be parochial. Sometimes I agree with you when I look at some of the equipment here. I say, perhaps we should buy it from Canada. On the other hand, I think people are conscious today, with our "Shop Canadian" programmes, that the job you save may be your own.

I think we are doing a pretty good job in making people conscious, or making women conscious, of the fact that they should look at the labels on the backs of the clothes they buy to see where they were manufactured and what the quality is and are they washable or cleanable. We have a programme going along to encourage people to shop Canadian, but on the other hand, we recognize that they are not going to shop exclusively Canadian.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the minister. He said that he believed the federal government had a policy where they would pay no more than 10 per cent over the Canadian price and he indicated that the Ontario government had a similar policy. Why would we agree to pay 10 per cent or any percentage over the Canadian price? Why would we, at any point, agree to pay that—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am sorry. It should have been in reverse. We pay if it is 10 per cent less. I am sorry, I think I did say that. In other words, if a Canadian manufacturer has an article for $1 and foreign goods are 90 cents, we take a look at the taxes involved in the Canadian purchase. We take a look at the number of people employed and on that basis, that is a pretty good yardstick as to whether or not the Canadians can get the business. Now if there is a 20 per cent or a 25 per cent difference, then the purchasing agents—and remember the purchasing agent is appointed by not only the government, but by the country, to get the best product at the best price, because he becomes a purchasing agent for the community—on the basis of that 20 or 25 per cent difference he would take a second look. Perhaps some of the stuff you are looking at right here may come in because it is better than the ten per cent below our price.

Mr. Deans: I wonder if I might ask you. First of all, in regard to this; do you actually have a policy in the government of Ontario that says that this 10 per cent margin is acceptable?

Hon. Mr. Randall: There is no written government policy. We have had a number of instances where manufacturers have come to us and screamed their lungs out because of, primarily, the difficulty we have had right within our domestic market. For a long while, you remember, Saskatchewan—I do not know whether or not you are aware of it—but Saskatchewan had a preferential tariff policy for the people of Saskatchewan if you manufactured in Saskatchewan. They have one in the province of Quebec.

We have had a good look at the programme and said we think a parochial approach or a tariff policy between provinces is dynamite. We have never had one here, and as far as the Quebec or the Saskatchewan manufacturer is concerned they can be the same as the Ontario manufacturer.

When it comes to offshore, we must have a look at it. For instance, I say if it is coming from Japan we recognize that maybe those goods coming in from Japan, or even Great Britain, may be subsidized by the British or the Japanese governments. If they are, we want to make sure that our manufacturers are protected.

Mr. Deans: Is there any policy within the government that stipulates that government agencies and commissions must seek the Canadian market first? In other words, they must go out and attempt to purchase the product that they are attempting to purchase from the Canadian manufacturer before going to the outside manufacturers?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think that is followed. I do not think there is any policy, but if I know a good purchasing agent—I know in my own business we sought a Canadian business first.

Mr. Deans: Could I ask you if you think that such a policy would be a good idea?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well I think the policy—

Mr. Deans: The policy of the government!

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think the policy now, without stating it in writing, is in effect. I think what you are asking—the policy—is in effect. But if you want it up in lights, the answer is no. I do not think we should put it up in lights because we have to do business with these people. I think the less we say about—

Mr. Deans: I agree.

Hon. Mr. Randall: —our purchasing policies, the better for it.

Mr. Deans: One other; one last question: What attempt is made to determine whether or not the products you are purchasing from the Canadian subsidiaries are, in fact, manufactured in Canada?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not suppose you could prove it 100 per cent but I think that we are agreed to buy an all-Canadian product. We want to make sure it is all-Canadian product; we can ask what the Canadian content is. I would say, in the main, we get mostly Canadian content in our products.

Mr. Deans: When you say you are sure they do, you think they do. At this time, I think the minister would agree, there is some unemployment from time to time. You know when we are talking about the kind of unemployment we are facing in the province of Ontario, and in Canada as a whole, I think it is absolutely essential that the government make every effort to make sure that the products that they purchase, if they are manufactured in Canada competitively, are purchased here.

You cannot let any stone go unturned. You cannot say, "I hope they do it," or "I think they do it," or "We think good trade practice dictates it." I think you have got to be positive about it. I would think that in this field—it may be a little out of this vote—but I think in this field that this—and this wraps up what I want to say—this government, and this cabinet as a whole should direct all government agencies to follow that practice.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me just say for one government agency—I suppose, indirectly, the Hydro. The Hydro have a policy. They thoroughly check the Canadian content of the orders they place.

As far as our purchasing agents are concerned around here, those who have been buying lead pencils and things like this, I would assume that in the main they would try to get Canadian content.

On the other hand, take a man who is manufacturing 50 per cent here and then importing 50 per cent that is not made here and is employing Canadians. I do not think you can differentiate between him and the guy who is making 60 per cent or 70 per cent here. That is the thing we have to watch here—that we do not get into slicing up a product by percentages and the guy who gets the most percentage, regardless of price or quality, gets the order. This is something we have to watch. I think we can appreciate that.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: Windsor-Walkerville!

Mr. Chairman: Windsor-Walkerville; I am sorry, sir.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is Hiram Walker—the liquor is free down there.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the minister if the department has conducted studies at all into man hour or labour content of industries that do come here—come into Canada and set up in Canada. Do you encourage manufacturers who manufacture items of high labour content, as opposed to manufacturers that may simply primarily produce material and then ship it elsewhere for finished manufacturing?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have done both. We are interested, first of all, in capital investment. Because even the capital investment—for instance, let me give you an example.

If a company came over here to start a pelletizing plant in northern Ontario, the lowest cost pelletizing plant they could put up would be about $60 million to $70 million. While it is going up, they employ 400 or 500 or 600 people to get the plant up and get it organized and put in all the controls. Maybe a lot of the equipment they buy would be Canadian equipment, if it is made here.

Once the plant starts to operate—I have seen those plants up there—I think you recognize they can operate on maybe 110 or 125 people total just pushing buttons. So the labour force drops from 500 and some-odd down to 110. That is a $60 million to $70 million investment and you would automatically tie that in with the number of bodies employed.

Let me go back to Ford down in St. Thomas. Ford put $60 million to $75 million in their plant and they are employing 2,900 people. But you could put the same kind of money in a pelletizing plant and employ 125 people.

I think the answer to your question is that we like to see an investment come in and employ a lot of people right off the bat. But on the other hand, if it is a large capital investment, that will contribute taxes to the province of Ontario and Canada, will give employment to some, will create service industries, utilizing Canadian raw materials and Canadian manufactured goods, I do not think we would draw the line as to how many bodies they have to hire before we would be interested in them.

Mr. B. Newman: I think, Mr. Chairman, to the minister, that he should be concerned as to the number of bodies that are going to be hired.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, we are.

Mr. B. Newman: And probably more concerned with that than the size of the investment coming into the country. Because the investment that comes in is here permanently, as you might say, whereas the bodies are going to produce by far more and be more of a contribution to the overall economy of the country and of the province than are the hundreds of millions of dollars that may come in.

The examples that you use—of the steel industry, the pelletizing plant and the Ford Motor Company plant—are good examples of that. Your efforts should be concentrated, in my opinion, to bringing in industries similar to the Ford that are going to employ a lot of man hours and not necessarily bring in a sizeable financial investment.

Does the department undertake studies as to the labour content or man hours content of materials that are imported into the province or exported as a result of manufacturing in the province?

Mr. Sargent: Good point!

Mr. York: No, we have not. I do not think there is any. I am sorry to say that we do not.

Mr. B. Newman: Do you not think that it would be good to know; and that we are exporting jobs by not having that type of information available?

Mr. York: I might say that generally we know, for instance, the labour content in our exports—when you speak of potash and lumber and uranium and wheat that we generally export. Take as an example Japan, which is exporting commodities which maintain a 17 per cent labour content; but we import some products which are as high as 72 per cent labour content. In general, we know the picture, but to do this specifically for each individual plant or each individual industry is a bit of a chore which at the moment we have neither the resources nor the manpower to do.

Hon. Mr. Randall: What we have done—may I just give you some information—what we have done is that for a long while we had to rely on DBS figures; and now even DBS is going to change them.

Let me give you 1968 and 1969 exports from Ontario. We have now got it broken down. For instance, No. 1 is live animals, $26,816,000; that is a 17.3 per cent increase last year, 1969, over 1968. Then we go to food, feed, beverages and tobacco—and the majority of those are Canadian—that is $360 million, up 10 per cent. Food materials, inedible—that is Canadian—$582,743,000. So we have the dollars.

Then we go to fabricated materials—$1,382,817,000. Then products such as bicycles, motor cars and what have you—$4,443,966,000.

So we have the breakdown in dollars, but we have not yet been able to measure it out. Maybe one of these days if we will get a computer programme going on this dollar volume, we could break it down to man hours, but right now it would be a pretty difficult job. I do not know what we—

Mr. B. Newman: This is why I think we have to look over our whole export program. Rather than being interested in dollar value at all times, we should be interested in labour content value. Are we exporting a million hours of labour and importing two million hours of labour on the finished raw material? If we want parity at all, then we should try to balance off as close as possible our exports, not at dollar value but in labour content value of our material in relation to the labour content value of materials coming in.

For example, we ship raw materials to Japan and we bring back the finished article. Our raw material might have one man hour content, and for that we bring in something that has provided five man hours of labour to the Japanese. I think we have to reconsider the whole export picture and get away from this dollar and cents value and get into labour content value.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The only thing is that if you can break it down into provinces you may have something. The difficulty is, for instance, Massey Ferguson, I do not suppose, sell 25 per cent of their implements in Ontario. The 75 per cent is sold in the wheat-growing country out west, yet that is where a lot of our dollar exports come from—the western provinces and a bushel of wheat. There are not many man hours in a bushel of wheat; there are a lot more, say, in a bicycle chain.

It is pretty hard for us to turn around and recognize that we have to look at the Canadian total—to take into account that Canada is shipping wheat. It means that we in eastern Canada are getting the benefit from that because we are producing implements that are shipped and sold in the west.

Again, as I say, we can talk about our figures here but we must recognize that if the rest of Canada is down on its shipments of raw materials or food stuff out of Canada, our manufacturers in eastern Canada suffer very greatly. This is one of the difficulties we face today.

For instance last year, I think in 1968 or 1967, we did about 45 per cent, I think, of the export total. So 45 per cent of the total Canadian exports were out of Ontario, and I think 43 per cent the year before.

It is a tough thing for Ontario, believe me. The tough thing for Ontario is to sell manufacturing goods in a world that is highly sophisticated. If you look around; as I said a few minutes ago if you look at France, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Japan, Sweden—most of these countries are highly organized on a manufacturing basis. I say most of those fellows need our manufactured goods like they need a hole in the head. We have to have something good and we have to have a market. We have to be able to go and sell those goods in a market that may be very competitive.

Still, we have been able to increase our volume of trade in manufactured goods. I agree with you; if we could measure man hours, I would like to measure man hours. But we cannot always do that when you look at dollars. If you measure man hours in the sale of wheat, there are not many man hours compared to what it would be in manufacturing.

Mr. B. Newman: I understand it is not that simple at all, but the cost accountant within the manufacturing industry knows the man hour content of every single item he manufactures. He has it broken down to that point. As far as our exporting and manufacturing items are concerned, I think we can figure out the man hour content of that. Likewise, we should be able to figure out the man hour content, or have provided to us the man hour content of materials that are imported into the country.

Another question I wanted to ask of the minister is does he have an inventory of the industries that are probably producing below capacity and could stand a substantial amount of business?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Radford, would you answer that? I think you have an inventory of those people.

Mr. Radford: We have an inventory of excess capacity that we bulletinize probably eight to ten times a year to people who may be able to take up some of that excess capacity. This is rather difficult at times because the fellow may need one type of machine or another but we list the type of machinery that is available. We have tried to keep up with this through the joint venture programme and through the manufacturing arrangements programme which is under this vote.

Mr. B. Newman: Yes. In your approach to industry in the United States, you make available to them the fact that here we have production capacity for this and this type of item and you are looking for them?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I can give you two good examples. For instance, in the aircraft industry we assisted Douglas to get started up at Malton. Now Douglas are, I think, using something like—how many subcontractors have they now, right across Canada?

Mr. York: There are 83 in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Randall: There are 83 in Ontario. I know they go down into Nova Scotia and the Maritime provinces manufacture aircraft parts for Douglas here. When I was in California the other day our man there was working with the federal official as well as the Quebec official. The three of them were working to get orders for a new piece of equipment being manufactured for the U.S. navy which is going to revolutionize some of the navy equipment. All three of them were involved in talking about subcontracts for Canadian manufacturers. Our biggest difficulty has been to get these Canadian manufacturers to take that kind of work.

Mr. Peacock: They have to be careful as far as the subcontract is concerned once it is successful.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Kent.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Just a minute, I have not finished yet.

Mr. Peacock: Is that one of the reasons?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I did not get that.

Mr. Peacock: Is the reason they are reluctant to take on a subcontract from a prime contractor like Douglas the fact that Douglas bought out the subcontract from De Havilland once they were assured that they would reach the break-even point on the DC-9 wings and empennages?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not think so. I do not think that. Douglas have been expanding very rapidly since they came here. I think you know what happened to De Havilland. They got so much business they got into financial difficulties, they could not finance it. Hawker Siddeley had that, if you recall, and Hawker Siddeley could not finance it so they were glad to get out of it. They stood to lose $70 or $80 million in the first year if they had stayed in it. They got out of it and Douglas took it over and since then Douglas have done their own financing. In most cases they are using subcontractors all across this country.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the minister if they have any figures as to the percentage of Ontario-manufactured items that are geared to the U.S. war effort in any way, shape or form; items that are used by the military?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We do not have an inventory on that, no.

Mr. B. Newman: My purpose in asking that is supposing the conflict over there ends, sort of overnight, what happens to Ontario industry as a result of the cancellation of all of these contracts?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think there are two areas we would get hit. One is in the raw material area—and I am talking about steel—and the other may be special companies set up to manufacture this highly specialized equipment. There are not too many of those that I know of. I think my friends here would agree with that. Very few are exclusive war contracts; most of them have hedged.

They recognize, whether it be tooling or anything else, that it could end tomorrow. It was the same when we were in the Second World War; we did the same thing. We had to hedge because we recognized that it was not going to be a continuing programme.

Mr. B. Newman: Yes, but even tooling up does not solve the problem at all. You have to have a market for the article you are going to manufacture. Today you have the market because a lot of it is geared to the U.S. war economy.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right.

Mr. B. Newman: Now, were that to terminate all of a sudden, what is going to supplant it?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The only thing that will supplant it is that the manufacturers, as I have said, would have to put the pressure on. I do not think it is that bad in some areas—but if it is either exclusive, or if 50 per cent of their plant is involved in war work, I think they would have to put some new products in.

They would be looking to us for new products—some of them are talking to us about new products—or they would have to step up the production of the ones they have and find bigger markets for them. I would think answering your question would be rather difficult because we do not know how many people are involved in this area. A lot of defence contracts are secret.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member from Kent.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister, in regard to service industries we find in general that service industries locate in towns and villages, and under your Act service industries do not qualify for EIO loans. We find sometimes service industries employ 30 people, or 15 people; and to have 30 or 15 people employed in a town makes a big difference when the population is only 800 or 1,000 people.

Did the minister ever give consideration to making it so that service industries could qualify for the EIO loans? I think it would help the rural areas in general, because the service industries generally locate out in the rural areas. I find so many times that industries would start if they had an incentive to assist them. What are the minister's views on qualifying service industries for EIO loans?

Mr. Chairman: That comes under 2206.

Mr. Spence: I am sorry.

Mr. Chairman: If you would like to wait until it comes up in 2206 and ask the question. We have the hon. member from Peterborough.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a comment here. It is rather a philosophical comment, but I cannot help but be rather amazed by what is going on in this whole programme. I cannot agree with the member for Windsor-Walkerville that we can import industry which is essentially labour intensive, simply because on the whole this will mean importing inefficient industry. The whole tendency in industry today is to get away, as much as possible, from labour to capital intensive industry.

As well as that, if you were going to put any strictures upon industry coming into a country and giving them the opportunity to settle in Ontario, by telling them that they must keep their industry essentially labour intensive, you would have to put the same strictures on the industry that is already there. What you are doing is you are putting into your whole industrial structure an input which essentially is to make it uncompetitive throughout the world. You could not possibly operate in this way.

Really, what you have here is not a system of creating jobs in the long run; it is a job-creating system in the short run, that is over a short period of time. Eventually what will happen, I would think, is that all these industries will try their best to get their labour content down and down. What you have is a system of not distributing jobs but distributing capital, really. It seems to me that what you have here is, in place of a guaranteed income, a guaranteed capital system. Here we have the rather ironic situation of the Minister of Trade and Development, who prides himself upon his free enterprise, being the greatest socialist in the Ontario government, because what he really is doing is putting socialism at the top. In other words, we will start at the top and work our way down. And not only that, but we are giving money, at least in part—51 per cent, I think, in terms of capital—to the Americans, in a sense, to take over Canada. This is an interesting aspect to it as well; because essentially they are not coming here to create jobs, they are coming here to put their capital into a place where they can make the greatest amount of money.

It seems to me that this is almost a lunatic kind of a situation in the long run.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are getting philosophical now.

Mr. Pitman: I know I am getting philosophical.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You should be at Trent University talking to those kids there, because you are not very practical.

Mr. Pitman: I am just one of those economic weirdos who reads Galbraith, Servan-Schreiber and Watkins and all those, so just be patient with me. It seems to me that what this department should be doing is spending a great deal of money, not in just passing capital around and distributing capital, sort of giving out a guaranteed capital system, but rather trying to find out what you can do about technology and how you can stop it from disrupting the total work pattern of a community; how you can redistribute at the bottom as well as the top; how you can find ways by which small towns can be not phased out but become meaningful communities, even though there is no industrial growth going on there.

It would seem to me that in the long run this department has a tremendous responsibility, in a sense, to realize what problems they are creating. You should be providing all kinds of research projects at Trent University as well as any other university, to see how you can pick up the pieces in this kind of situation.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me just say this. I do not buy the philosophy of yours that automation throws people out of work. This is really in essence what you are saying—that by using capital and technological advance you employ fewer people. I think if you go back in history you will find it employs a lot more people. In fact, I think since the automotive industry started the new pact in 1965—

Mr. Pitman: Look—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Wait a minute—there are 19,000 more people on the UAW payroll.

An hon. member: Well, Ford talks—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Wait a minute now! I am just saying that they are fully automated in the automobile plants. I mean, a guy cannot bend over and scratch himself, it does it for him as he goes down the line. Do not try to tell me on the fact that automation has thrown people out of work—

Mr. Peacock: We will let you try to sell on that one! Use the auto industry as an example and sell it to them.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Automation keeps adding people because you sell more products. You are more competitive; you can compete all the more. If you did not have automation, I can assure you we would be a banana republic today.

Mr. Pitman: I have said that. It is exactly my argument.

Hon. Mr. Randall: When we talk about spending our money just on capital investment for machinery equipment—on the programmes I outlined here a minute ago, this $379,257,000, in 1969 alone we estimate from that there would be 12,265 jobs.

Mr. Pitman: How much is applied to jobs?

Hon. Mr. Randall: In 1968 there were 13,829 and to date, since 1965—1,463 to 1969—115,539 that can be traced.

Mr. Pitman: Your first assumption, of course, is that those jobs would not be there, if those loans were not made. I simply do not accept that assumption to begin with.

Hon. Mr. Randall: What do you mean, the jobs would be there if we did not make the loans?

Mr. Pitman: Right!

Hon. Mr. Randall: How do you know—

Mr. Pitman: How do you know they would not come?

Hon. Mr. Randall: How do you know they would come? My guess is as good as yours.

Mr. Chairman: We are not on loans now. We are not on loans at all.

Mr. Pitman: I know, I think the minister brought that point up. The point I want to make to the minister is that if you do not think that technology in the long run is going to cut out labour, then you, sir, are running directly opposite to what I think practically every knowing person in the industrial world thinks. In the long run, what we have seen for the last 10 years, essentially, has been a kind of saw-off in the United States, whereby what has happened is industry has introduced technology only to the degree, or at the same rate that workers go out the other end. There has not been any great massive infusion of workers into the industrial scene in spite of the expansion of industry and productivity in the United States, where they simply introduce technology to the extent which the workers are going out at the end; because of aging and for the other reasons a number of workers are leaving the working system. I suggest to you that if you think technology is not going to cut out jobs, you are very sadly mistaken.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They may be starting to work later and they may be retiring earlier, I grant you that. But suppose a man works only when he gets to be age 30 and retires at age 55, what is he worth? Well, I think he can make quite a contribution in that time. All I say to you is you look at the problems of Ontario since 1962 or 1960. We have had nothing but expansion in this province and we have had pretty well full employment all the way through until this last situation—

Mr. Sargent: In spite of you.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, in spite of me. We should have more like me. All I say is that in the province of Ontario, with all this technological advance, we are as advanced, I think, as any manufacturing nation anywhere, in the things we can do best; and I do not see great hordes of people walking the streets.

Mr. Pitman: Well it really has not come to that yet.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, no; but listen: Anybody—you can look at the future and say everybody is going to be unemployed. I remember old Sewell Avery of Montgomery Ward. He said one day there is going to be a depression and he would not spend a dime on his employees to fix up his plant. He wound up with $250 million cash and a broken-down chain of stores—Montgomery Ward. Sears-Roebuck took the opposite view and today they are the greatest, most scientific merchandising organization in the world; and they do the best job of looking after their employees and they are employing more people every day of the week.

So I say to you whether it is in merchandising or manufacturing, these technological advances are going to come along and they do not create less jobs in spite of what you say. They create more jobs and the kind of people you are talking about in the universities—better educated people—will get better jobs and better pay.

Mr. Peacock: You may see the sales forces growing.

Mr. Pitman: The service industries take up the slack. That is where—

Hon. Mr. Randall: The service industry would not take up the slack unless you had the manufacturing industries. They create—

Mr. Peacock: Well, that is obvious.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Sure.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, this vote of $3 million involves the junkets that we read about—the Prime Minister and the minister in Europe with the film cameras and the glamour boys boating up and down, and putting on a big show for the Canadian—

Mr. Chairman: There is nothing in this vote on—

Mr. Sargent: I am talking about trade and development in Europe and all over the world, under this vote—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No.

Mr. Sargent: —spending this kind of money.

Mr. Chairman: You are on the wrong vote.

Mr. Sargent: I am not on the wrong vote. I am on trade and industrial development, vote 2202.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 2202, right.

Mr. Sargent: You are going to spend on travelling expenses $243,000 on one vote, and $86,000 on the next section, $112,000 on the next section, and $45,000 in the next session for travelling—for this minister and these people to travel abroad and the taxpayers here have been facing financial nightmares. The minister's crack to me the other day that I brought down a lot of deadbeats to get these loans and that is why they were turned down—I say there are thousands of people you have turned down who are deadbeats and it does not go down very well, Mr. Minister, across Ontario, you saying that people who were not granted loans were deadbeats.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Listen, do not start up a political argument. You know what was said.

Mr. Sargent: I know what was said.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You know what was said. You sent two or three people in to me and the guy was bankrupt before he came in, or damned near it, and you would not expect me to give the taxpayers' money out to the fellow, would you? It is your money.

Mr. Sargent: You are going to have to prove that to me before this vote is over.

This man should have got ahead of MacNaughton, and I can prove it in the paper here.

Regardless of that, Mr. Minister, as the member for Kent said, and one or two of us up here, we are watching the disappearance of the small manufacturer in this province. We are watching the disappearance of the small businessman by monopoly takeovers, plus all these take-overs, and it is questionable in this whole vote, Mr. Minister, whether the $75 million you are asking us to give you is self-liquidating.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let us get away from the $75 million. Let us not talk about the housing programme in trade and industrial development. We are talking about $3 million. Let us stick to facts; stick to facts now.

Mr. Sargent: All right. It is questionable then. The $3 million, with the five other votes here, are geared to big business, whether it is self-liquidating, whether we get back enough to pay for all this money. And in the course of this whole exercise, you are being big fellows distributing largesse under the guise of development.

Now, the point is that we have completely disregarded any form of help for the small operator or manufacturer, who has $50,000 or $100,000 worth of capital. Would you call him a small businessman—$100,000 worth of capital?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Pardon?

Mr. Sargent: Would you call a man who has $100,000 capital investment a small businessman?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, sure.

Mr. Sargent: It has been assumed by economists, Mr. Minister—and this is the key point of my argument—it has been shown by economists that a man who has $100,000 worth of investment capital, would generate in taxes, in revenue, $50,000 a year through his employees and through all his taxes, will generate $50,000 a year. Now, I submit to you, in my final pitch here in this section, I submit that the majority of the taxes raised in Ontario are raised by the small manufacturer and independent people and the small entrepreneur, the small retailer. They are the fellows who provide and generate the funds to make this government tick. And nowhere in our economy in Ontario is there anything to help these people. The service industries deserve recognition, but they are all going to go down the pipe unless you give them some. Why can you not look at them as being generators of revenue with a right to live. But they are not going to live under this system because there are takeovers all the way down the line.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Are you talking about small retailers?

Mr. Sargent: No, I am not talking about retailers. I never have talked retailers. I am talking about small, independent manufacturers. The manufacturers today are a lost breed; there are no more people who can take a product and make it produce into an end product. Those guys have disappeared forever because you are going along with the big boys from the States, Mr. Minister, giving them a carte blanche and you forgot the little guy who makes our economy tick. You have nothing for him.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do you want to sit back now and take a lesson? You talk about the small businessman. I did not want to go into a long discourse but we might as well get this cleared up because you are going to stick to it like a dog after a bone and you are completely incorrect. There are approximately 13,000 manufacturing companies in Ontario. For the division's purposes, a small company is defined as one with 15 or less employees. Now, do you call that a small businessman, from one to 15 or fewer employees? All right.

In some cases, however, as in the case of manufacturers capable of exporting, companies employing up to 50 employees each may be considered small. A company with 50 employees may be a small company.

Taking the smaller measurement, there are approximately 7,300 companies—or 55 per cent of the total—employing 15 persons or fewer in Ontario. Now we are talking about the same guy.

Considered another way, however, the number of employees working in these small companies amounts to only 33,500. That is the total number of employees you are talking about this afternoon, or four per cent of the 818,227 employed in all Ontario manufacturing industries.

Now, I will give you a copy of this.

Mr. Sargent: Where did you get the figures?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I just worked them out and I will give them to you. You can peruse them or throw them away. Since the department is concerned with the maintenance and creation of a high level of employment as well, it is important that programmes accommodate companies that employ the other 96 per cent of employment in Ontario.

Nevertheless, the trade and industry division does have a number of programmes designed specifically to assist the small manufacturer.

In the industrial development branch, a large part of the work undertaken in the manufacturing arrangement and technology sections is with small companies.

Licensing opportunities for new products and processes in the province are presented to all manufacturers in Ontario through the mailing out of "Manufacturing Opportunities" bulletins. We talked about that earlier. These listed 575 items in 1969. In these bulletins small companies have an equal chance with all others to take advantage of the offer.

In 1969 the manufacturing arrangements section participated in the successful completion of licensing agreements with 11 small manufacturers with 15 or fewer employees.

The "Manufacturing Opportunities" bulletins also publicize existing Ontario companies which have excess equipment and services that could be used by other manufacturers. We talked about that earlier.

In 1969, approximately 80 per cent, or 312 of all companies responding to these bulletin items, were small companies with 15 or fewer employees.

Eighty per cent of those responding to these bulletin items were small companies with 15 or fewer employees.

Also listed in the bulletins are both Canadian and U.S. manufacturers who need specific subcontracting work done.

In 1969, approximately 80 per cent, or 328 of all companies who offered to do this subcontracting work, were small companies with 15 or fewer employees. So we are looking at them.

The manufacturing arrangements section is also responsible for the department's manufacturing—

Mr. Sargent: How are you looking after them?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The manufacturing opportunities show. Just a minute.

In this show are displayed all items which are currently being imported by existing manufacturers in Ontario. The objective is to encourage other Ontario companies, which may produce the items shown, to tender bids and thus supply locally. These shows, again, are open to small manufacturers in Ontario, both small and large.

At the most recent MO show in 1969 an inventor's display area was added. Since inventions are usually the creations of one or two persons only, they can be classified as small businesses. New inventions in Ontario which were patented were put on display with the hope that existing Ontario manufacturers would offer to produce them. In the 1969 MO show, 81 inventors were assisted.

Again, the manufacturing opportunities bulletin lists, in a separate section, other new inventions which have been patented, so that the assistance provided by the MO show is carried on throughout the year. In 1969, 54 inventors with their new products were listed in the bulletins.

In 1969, seven industrial technology development missions were conducted by the technology section. These missions take businessmen to centres where advanced technology can be studied. The objective is to introduce some of these techniques into Ontario. Of the 80 companies conducted on technology missions in 1969, 12 or 15 per cent employed 15 or fewer people.

The technology section also conducts product development clinics. Experts are taken to selected areas throughout the province to meet with local manufacturers and discuss their various production and designing problems in an effort to improve manufacturing processes.

In 1969, ten clinics were held; one each at Belleville, Brockville, Niagara Falls, Chatham, Barrie, Kitchener, Oakville, Hamilton, Woodstock and Oshawa. Of the 306 participating companies at these clinics, 66 or 22 per cent were small companies with 15 or fewer employees.

As part of its day-to-day business the technology section provides consultative services to any company in Ontario. In 1969, of the 65 companies assisted, 27 or 42 per cent employed fewer than 15 people.

The marketing branch of the trade and industry division is always seeking the smaller Canadian company to participate in their trade mission programme abroad.

In 1969, of the 188 companies participating in the sales opportunity missions, 28 employed 15 or fewer persons while another 68 employed between 16 and 50 persons. Together these accounted for over half the companies taken on trade missions. So, again, we are taking the small manufacturers—

Mr. Sargent: How much money did you lend them?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will tell you in a minute.

Export forums, also conducted by the marketing branch, are constantly encouraging the smaller manufacturers throughout the province to participate. In 1969, of the 381 persons attending the forums at least 300, or 80 per cent, represented the smaller companies employing under 50 persons.

The marketing branch is also involved in a consultative service to Ontario manufacturers in an effort to stimulate interest in and assist companies in entering export markets. In 1969, of the 2,964 persons assisted, over half, or 1,482, represented firms employing fewer than 50 persons.

Finally, the marketing branch also circulates a marketing bulletin to Ontario manufacturers, listing products that are needed by businesses outside of Canada. In 1969, offers to supply these products were made by 1,780 enquirers. Of these, again, more than half represented employers with fewer than 50 persons.

A considerable amount of work undertaken by the research branch is also geared to the small businessman. In 1969, of the 192 requests for short-term market studies from individual businesses and associations 51, or 26 per cent, were from individuals and small companies employing 15 or fewer persons. Another 29 requests were received from companies employing between 16 and 50 persons.

In 1969, a market survey was completed for the sand casting industry in Ontario. The results of the survey were distributed to all of the foundries in the industry. About 40 per cent of these companies employed 50 persons or less, and about 15 per cent employed 15 or less.

During 1969, the research branch began an in-depth study on the nature and efficiency of small companies, those with employment of 50 or less. The study is still in process, but data has been prepared on the value added per dollar of wages, or productivity, of these companies by specific industrial breakdown over a period of years.

About 80 per cent of the work undertaken by the foreign market development section of the research branch is geared to the small and medium-sized companies in Ontario. The larger companies either conduct their own foreign market research or are already involved in exporting in a sizeable way. During 1969, 25 studies of foreign markets were distributed to 1,332 companies, mostly small and medium-sized.

Finally, a number of directories and statistical publications, including the "Statistics for Profit" publication, are prepared for distribution to all manufacturers in the province. Once again, the small companies are given as much preference as the larger ones.

I think that this demonstrates beyond a shadow of a doubt that we are not neglecting small business. I agree with you 100 per cent that we are in no position to finance a small retailer. I do not know how in the world we can. We do not have that kind of money.

Mr. Sargent: I am not asking you to finance anybody.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No I know you are not, Eddie, but you are talking about small businessmen, and I assure you that our programme is geared to the small businessmen, because somebody said the other day that 80 per cent of the businesses—and I think this proves it—employ less than 50 people. So when we talk about big American companies like Dow Chemical and everybody else, you must look at the programme. Who are we helping? The big companies do not need that kind of help; they do not need to go on sales missions with us. They can go on their own.

What we are doing is putting our time and our effort into the little guy—the little guy you have been talking about. If the guy is solvent, if he comes to us before he gets insolvent, we can help him. If he comes after he is in difficulty and he just uses the taxpayers' money to pay off his creditors and he has got no operating funds, then we are in trouble. I can give you a copy of this. I would like you to have it, so you can take it and study it. This is what the programme is doing for companies.

Mr. Sargent: How much money do you lend them?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, I do not know how much money was lent to those people, but let me tell you what happened: We spent $71,221 in 1969 on sales missions out—that is primarily for air fare—and for every dollar spent we got back an estimated $470 worth of sales. I would like to run a business and get those kind of returns, and I am sure you would.

Mr. Sargent: Those are your figures, Stan.

Hon. Mr. Randall: All right. They are my figures, and they are pretty accurate.

Mr. Sargent: I hope they are accurate.

Hon. Mr. Randall: These are from the companies. We estimated last year they got about $25 million of sales on these missions, and we estimated for every dollar spent we got $470 worth of sales.

Mr. Sargent: I will say goodbye to 80 per cent of the businessmen of the province of Ontario that I am talking about. They do not rate financial support, but the American firms do. That is all I have got to say.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not agree with you.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, I want to come back to a question I raised earlier and which you felt came later in the estimates. Without going into any great explanation of the situation, I would like to ask the minister what his department is doing, and what more it will do, to cope with what might be described as chronic unemployment and economic stagnation conditions that emerge in pockets across the province?

I think the classic example at this point is Cornwall. I would concede at the outset that this is not typical of the province of Ontario, thank God! But it has been the way it is for virtually 10 years, going from bad to worse.

In a recent visit to Cornwall, when I had an opportunity to talk to people from virtually all walks of life, they pointed to the closing down of Canada Cottons some 10 or 11 years ago—1959 I believe was the year—when some 2,000 people were thrown out of work, and the community has really never recovered from that blow. What makes matters worse is that the whole impact of the seaway—which I do not need to tell you was a project sponsored by the federal government and with the provincial government proudly sharing in it—has been to direct business to the American side of the river, so that there has again been a gradual, regular yearly decline in business that is having an impact on the community.

Without going into the detail—because it comes up more appropriately in another estimate later—I am told by the local people that any effort that has been done in terms of EIO loans, apart from one or two big ones, has been to assist companies that are marginal companies, in the sense that they are paying very little, if anything, above the minimum wage. So, once again, you are only sort of compounding the economic stagnation of the area. What have you done, or what do you plan to do, in conjunction with the federal government, because I would concede that the federal government shares in both creating this kind of situation and in solving it?

It seems to me that it is not only tragic, but it is scandalous that in a province like Ontario you should have an area that has stagnated to the point where today they have 18 per cent of their working force unemployed; at the present time, they have something like 95 per cent of the building trades unemployed. What are you doing, or what is the government as a whole doing? Because one of the preoccupations of the local people, who contend that their industrial commissioner gets—I have forgotten what his figure was—something like 100 opportunities a month for new industrial development—the number of opportunities that most communities would be glad to get in a year, but they do not materialize. And one of the reasons the local people are persuaded they do not materialize is transportation costs, and they are persuaded that there is a monopoly in terms of truck transportation in the area that gets tied in with PCV licences and things of that nature.

Now I asked the Minister the other day, and he said in effect there is nothing in it. Well he has not persuaded anybody in Cornwall, from the chamber of commerce down, that there is nothing in it. And the mayor has said something since to indicate that he is persuaded there is something in it. What is your department itself doing and what is it doing as a co-ordinating department with Transport and all other departments that might in one way or another in their policies have an impact on that community?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me say that all these programmes outlined here are available to the city of Cornwall, and I have been working very closely with the mayor since January, 1968, as Mayor Kaneb will tell you. We put, I think, about 12 or 13 industries in there, and I grant you, I think that they have created about 350 new jobs and maybe maintained some jobs that were going to close down with some of the bigger companies.

But, then, Cornwall is the victim of two things. I think it is also the victim—and you said it—of the seaway; it is also the victim of having a textile industry. This badly hurts some imports. And as you know, we have been discussing the import situation with Mr. Martel.

Mr. Sargent: And is Ottawa helping?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Not at the moment, but there is a meeting on the 22nd of this month with Mr. Marchand and ourselves next Friday. Mr. Marchand's people will be down there next Friday to discuss the possibility of both governments looking at the Cornwall area, the special area. We have been asking for that for a long time, but they are coming down.

Mr. Deacon: Were they not waiting for you to request that Blind River be treated as a special area?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It was not us. We requested it and Mr. Marchand said, "No," on March 25. I think I have the letter in my pocket.

Mr. Peacock: You do much better than that, do you not Mr. Yakabuski? You do much better than that.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Clarkson wants to answer.

Mr. S. W. Clarkson (Deputy Minister): I would like to answer the questions on the Cornwall situation. We have been working with the Department of Regional Development and Economic Expansion in Ottawa for the past few months. I believe Mr. Kent, the deputy minister, was down there and dealt with the matter of designation, so that has been pursued. In Ottawa, they have undertaken to go through the various departments to see what programmes they have which might be expedited in Cornwall. We have done the same thing here. We have surveyed all government departments and agencies. We have held a meeting and we have considered what programmes could be expedited as fast as possible. I have been in regular touch with the federal department and, as the minister said, we are going to Cornwall this Friday for a joint meeting of all concerned.

In terms of existing activities, I believe we have on both sides done what could be done. From the trade and industry point of view we have several firms which at the moment look as if they might locate in Cornwall. I believe there are a few firms which have also applied to the development corporation for loans which are in the midst of being processed at the moment.

I do not think this will solve the long-term problem which was mentioned, but at least we are doing our best to come to grips with the immediate problems as best we can.

Mr. MacDonald: May I say that I find it curious to hear, Mr. Minister, that you are getting the federal government in and you are going to do the best by way of each department stepping up its activities to try to create some sort of a palliative. But palliatives are not the answer.

Something fundamental has to be done, as down in Cape Breton. They are taking a look at the problems there, but in Ontario you have not got the difficulties of trying to cope with the economy that is isolated from the main market. You are right in the main market. Cornwall is within a few hours drive of Montreal, one of the main markets of Canada and it is within a few more hours' drive to the major market, namely Toronto.

It seems to me that you have, in terms of transportation, in terms of market, in terms of all the ingredients for coming up with the kind of economic planning that will, if necessary, rebuild the economic base in that area.

Quite frankly, it is a little disgusting that conditions like this had to go on for 10 years and only at this stage has the inertia been overcome to the point where the two levels of government take action. It would seem to me that it was obvious that Cornwall should have been a designated area from the federal level a long time ago.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It was in the original programme. It was designated along with Windsor, and Brantford. At that time they absorbed the employment down there. Since that time the textile industry has really—

Mr. MacDonald: 1955 did you say, or 1965?

Hon. Mr. Randall: 1964-65 is when the federal programme was on. This employment situation has developed since that time because of the drastic closing down of the textile industry. This has been the major difficulty and we have recognized it and said that we must get more diversified industry. I think if you found another textile manufacturer—they would give you the keys to the city. But if a guy closed down in Moncton now they would run you out on a pole.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): How come you have not been run out in that case?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I have not been down often enough.

The point is we have been trying to get diversification on this. We do not call them prospects, we call them suspects at the present time and they are being carefully analyzed by these cities. We will do anything we can to get them in there. We want to get diversification in there.

There are two difficulties, and you pointed out one. The first one is of course, that the general textile towns are affected; the second has been the seaway transport. That has been the major problem.

As for transportation, that matter has been discussed with the mayor and myself at the municipal conference. I said I would look into it. I looked into it, and the information that came to me indicated what I told you in the House today, that they do not have a monopoly on transport down there.

I think the Minister of Transport read out four or five companies that are operating over there. How or what they are operating I do not know, but I assume all that will be discussed at the meeting on the 22nd. It is one of the things we will bring up at that meeting.

Mr. MacDonald: I hope you do because we will be back to it in light of the reaction that took place in Cornwall. The only point I want to make, without belabouring this situation unduly, is that the deputy himself concluded by saying: "This does not necessarily serve the long-term problem." This is a long-term problem and it seems to me that there is a real challenge to us in the province of Ontario when we have got an area of chronic stagnation, to grapple with it, and come up with a solution. I am glad you have not got it all across the province, but—

Hon. Mr. Randall: As far as I am concerned, I think there is an error, and Mr. York will tell you we have bent over backward to get as many industries we can. There are very few areas in this province that get 12 industries, but unfortunately the industries going in there are not big industries. I would like to get another Ford Motor Company or somebody in there; that would solve their problems for all time to come.

But I agree with you; there is no trouble with transportation insofar as this location is concerned. You have got two railroads, the seaway and Highway 401. They never had it so good as far as transportation is concerned. It is a good area to locate and it is between two big markets—the city of Toronto and the city of Montreal, if you want to look at cities—insofar as its operations are concerned. But the people we are talking to now are the ones that employ a considerable number of people, if we can convince them to locate there. But I would think after May 22, we will see what the federal authorities are prepared to do with regard to a special designated area in there, along with our own programme, and perhaps this will speed up the making up of the minds of some of the people we are talking to.

Mr. Lewis: Are you talking to the federal people?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: The Leader of the Opposition has the floor.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Well, Mr. Chairman, on a slightly different subject. As I understand it, this vote deals with the promotion of trade and business, and I have always had some misgivings after its rather political start. The minister, I think, was not a part of the government or even of the Legislature back in 1962, and maybe he even flinched in the days when promotion was actually undertaken by the government of Ontario, when this branch was buying billboards picturing a hippopotamus that was supposed to have something to do with fostering trade, and the minister of the day got a little sensitive about the hippopotamus because it was not home-grown and changed it to a moose. It is an interesting comparison to realize how comparatively responsible this minister has been since the change in jurisdiction. At least he is—

Mr. Peacock: You were not here.

Mr. Nixon: Well anyway, I can remember those days very well. I believe the minister was part of the economic council, was he not, in those days? He was on his way up then. The marks were on him. I do not know whether he realized it or not.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: But certainly this branch began as a blatant political emanation. There is no doubt about it. And the objection that was put in those days—it was always difficult, and it is still difficult today, because why should we object to spending money if it is going to improve business. We sense this problem today in objecting to the expenditure of this $3 million, but basically it is the responsibility specifically of another level of government to advance trade, because the minister himself says that he is very anxious not to interfere with other provincial jurisdictions, and I believe it is to its credit—and I think the facts will show—that he does not interfere with provincial jurisdictions. He keeps out of the trade difficulties that Quebec has been experiencing and so on.

But if you were to take the logic that that has kept this branch in existence for about nine years, you would really have to recommend to a city like Brantford that they have somebody there, designated not as an industrial commissioner but as somebody who will go out and sell their combines and their baling twine or bindertwine and the other products. Then there is a town like Cornwall, I suppose, fortunately not too far advanced in deterioration of the business economy, but it has been facing very difficult times in recent months.

So, if I begin with an objection, which I suppose has got to be part of my conservative background—with a small “c”—then I will object to you reproducing and overlapping the facilities and expenditures of the federal department of trade. Their budget is close to $40 million for this purpose; they have trade representatives and competent people and, certainly in the presence of your advisers and others, you have competent people performing a somewhat similar job. I have talked to businessmen who have gone on these trade trips and certainly they have come back full of confidence for the way it was organized.

But I feel that George Hees probably could have done as good a job at the federal level if given, perhaps, a little longer opportunity, and that Mr. Jean-Luc Pepin has a substantial budget and qualified representatives of Canada in almost every country of the world and almost every capital and in every major trading city.

It must be very difficult for business people to say, “Oh, yes, you are Mr. Randall from Ontario. Is that separated from Canada?” In essence, you know, they are saying that you can do something for Ontario that cannot be done at the federal level. You have never—even though an authority on federal matters is here, and I am glad he is an authority on something, because it has not shown through on his other statements—you have never shown, through statistics that the $3 million that you are asking us for is going to be of specific value.

The EIO programme is a different thing. We have got some substantial objections to that, but I think you can show that a certain number of jobs have been created and certain industries have moved from point A to point B often within the province and often leaving problems behind, when they go to an area where they improve the situation.

But I have heard the minister read an account, similar to the one that he had prepared by his capable assistants and advisers on what he is doing for small business, relating to this foreign trade development—this old hippopotamus approach. The idea that so many businessmen were taken to so many countries, that certain orders were written that created so much employment.

But you have never really been able to convince an objective adviser, let alone a subjective one, like myself, that a—I am sure that Mr. Peacock will agree, he is certainly subjective at times on these occasions—he has never been able to convince even an objective adviser that similar work could not, and in fact would not, have been done by the federal authorities. This goes back well into the Diefenbaker years, if that is any sustenance or assistance to those people over there—those stoney-faced Tories who are not prepared to listen to reason on these things.

Let us then, take it a step further. Assuming that you are going to continue this programme for a period of time. Assuming you are going to continue—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: You do not have to listen, but you cannot deny my right to express my view. If you do not have any views—yourself other than to support the administration, that is your tough luck.

So, Mr. Chairman, if you will permit me, I think that if this $3 million is going to be made available again, the minister ought to be able to give us something specific in the way of policy, or maybe just his own ideas as to how he is going to meet what in many communities is becoming an emergent situation. Mr. MacDonald referred to Cornwall and to Brantford, and to others.

The minister, particularly through certain of his branches, must be well aware of certain industries, some of them well established, some of them that have been around for a long time, which for the first time, maybe, in 50 years are starting to face the grim outlook of a serious business recession, and some problems that are going to certainly give us a lot of concern as citizens, taxpayers, members of the Legislature and as politicians.

Why can you not use your authority, or at least your position of advice in the cabinet counsel, and the network of information that surely to goodness is available to you now, through the various people sitting at your right hand and others who have responsibilities across the province, to head off a situation similar, let us say, to the Dunlop situation.

At the time it was put forward, I think Mr. Lewis was one of them and there were others, it was generally well-known that if Ontario Hydro had placed an order with Dunlop for that expensive conveyer machinery and belting that would have been necessary for these huge installations that they are building—some of the largest thermal installations in the world—that Dunlop could have continued, even for a period of time, allowing the transfer or the easing of the difficulties associated with the transfer; and maybe have tided them over to a market that was more viable.

There are several other industries, I would submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that are facing similar problems. I hope to goodness that we are not faced with a number of substantial plant closings through the province like in Cornwall and in Brantford and in other places where the market simply runs out on the industry. These fellows are in a position of management, sometimes even in a poor position of management that we have grown accustomed to—that is, I mean conglomerate management where somebody here in Toronto, perhaps, or even further removed from the community that is going to be affected, will simply say “The graph has come below the red line, close her off. To hell with the Legislature, to hell with the people and the minister and everybody else.” The minister has, I would submit, the responsibility to represent the public interest far and beyond simply responding to the headlines. I feel sure that the minister’s advisers are aware of some of these problem areas now, where a co-ordination of the expenditures of our $4 billion—admittedly only a small percentage of that, is for the actual acquisition of goods—might be directed towards warding off some of the problems that the Minister and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Bales) and the Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) and the Premier and others face on an ad hoc basis when they open the newspaper in the morning and say “Oh, God, we have got another one of these things”.

I think that really is where this $3 million should be directed. This $3 million will not do much to keep these industries on the go. They have suffered in the past and, I feel, are facing emergency situations now but I think a co-ordination of government policy would help.

The case in point that I refer to, Dunlop, is typical. Maybe you are not prepared to develop a policy where the purchasing in the province to some extent, and maybe a definable percentage extent, would be preferential to our own industries in those areas where it is obvious to people in the know—and surely you are one of them in this regard—that this assistance would have to be short range assistance. This short range lift might very well carry some of these companies over the difficulties they are experiencing now.

Without trying to pin the tail of responsibility on the federal government—you can do that as long as you want—we have here a department, or let us say a branch, whose background, I think, is very chequered and leading to certain disquietude and distrust. This minister has dispelled quite a bit of that, although he is not beyond taking all the credit that is going for things political. I do not suppose that most of us would throw up a certain chance when that comes along. I think it is time you moved ahead.

I think probably the succession of trips with businessmen to Russia, Japan and elsewhere and coming back with the books full of orders—according to your account—that may be a part of it; frankly, I have got my doubts. I think the federal government can do that better. I think that they are already funding that sort of direction. I think that you have got to—this branch has got to—move into another area of, maybe, very short range co-ordination of policy that we must have if we are going to avoid some of the problems that we are all very familiar with in recent weeks and which seem to be looming in some of our communities now. I think there is a question in there.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, Mr. Chairman, I can—

Mr. Chairman: Certainly a long speech is it not?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I can appreciate the hon. member’s concern, but I think he has touched on a number of things that this government has no jurisdiction over. One is tariffs. Part of the problem in Cornwall is tariffs and we have been talking to Mr. Pepin about the tariffs.

I have not one but perhaps a half-dozen letters in my files in which I have discussed various industries in Canada that are affected by tariffs. I do not think we move fast enough when it comes to closing the door after the horse has been stolen, and I think Mr. Pepin recognized that when he made his announcement the other day about the textile industry. As far as industry in your town is concerned, I do not know what this government can do about selling wheat.

Mr. Nixon: Oh, well—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Now wait a minute. Before you came in here, we talked about what would happen if they did not sell wheat and certainly the implement manufacturers down here would suffer a great hardship. Now, I do not know whether we were led up the garden path by the Russians and the Chinese in the big wheat deals we got a few years ago. All of a sudden they got us out on a limb and we produced wheat like mad; now we find that they do not want it and we got it back and it backs up to the entire economy. These are some things I do not think any provincial government can solve, and the federal government is having one hell of a job deciding what it is going to do about it.

As for this department, we have had a trade and industry department in this government, I understand, for about 30 years; this is not new. We keep on being told we have to run the government like a business. If we run it like a business, then we are told we should get out of business.

Now I do not know how you can run a province and an economy as big as this one and not have a trade and industry department. I thought you were going to say I should go back and ask for $16 million and run a good department.

Mr. Nixon: No, no. Remember, your predecessor said, "When this money is gone, I will go and get more. When this $100 million is gone, I will go and get another $100 million." You have toned that down considerably. Actually I am talking about a new emphasis on this—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I know what you are talking about.

Mr. Nixon: I think you have stayed at the same point long enough.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Just let me finish my point on this. As far as I am concerned, we have discussed this at great length with all the trade ministers up in Ottawa, and I can name them all—there must have been five or six trade ministers since I came to this government—and every one of them welcomed the provinces going out and assisting in helping themselves. I have always said I look at the trade minister at Ottawa as the general sales manager and myself as a district sales manager. And every province should be prepared to help itself. I said earlier this afternoon that if you want to look at what the states in the United States are doing, they are advertising here; all the other provinces are advertising here. We have to compete against what they are offering in other states and other provinces; we have to make sure, in the province of Ontario, that we get our share of business.

Now, if you want to come to any of our meetings with businessmen and ask them what this government is doing for them, I think they hold this government in very high regard for the amount of energy we have expended in the trade and industry branch. And Mr. Bourassa, who looks much like you, said the other day, "All I want to do is spread the welcome of Ontario across Quebec." They have had trade offices all over the world the same as we have, and we are working very closely with them, because we think those two fellows there, the Quebec man and the Ontario man, can go out and put a lot of pressure on a foreign buyer. And we are doing the same thing.

I say this to you: The federal government does not have the same programme we have. They do not have a licence agreement; they do not have a joint arrangement agreement; they do not have these things. They have taken people out on what they used to call technical missions, where they took all chemical people or all building trade people; then they got to mixed missions, the same as we did. Now they are into the same kind of programme we are, with fashion awards and furniture awards. They are going in the same direction we are going because, as they have said, "This programme is successful and we want to be a part of a successful programme." And they have not once, to my knowledge, objected to Ontario or any of the provinces having their offices and assisting them in bringing more trade for Canada.

I said to my friend Mr. Sharp when he was trade minister, "If we had ten trade ministers out of every province taking ten or 12 people abroad every three weeks, I will show you how to do a lot more business for Canada than one trade mission going out of Ottawa because the fellow up in Ottawa is handicapped."

If he sets up a trade mission and says, "I will take one washing machine salesman from Ontario and a manufacturer from Ontario," the personnel guy in Quebec says, "Why was I not invited to go on the trade mission?" This is the problem we get into when they try to pick people on trade missions. So I would say to you in all earnestness that the $3 million we spend in our trade and industry department, which covers salaries, wages and everything else that if we had twice as much we could do a better job.

I do not think any province should give up its position in a competitive market like this and say, "Let us leave it to the federal government." The federal government would be the first one to tell you they would not want you to leave it to them. I think we have to help ourselves and that is exactly what we are doing.

If we have had the successful 10 years, in this province that we spoke of a few minutes ago there was very little unemployment and increased economic gains every year—it is because we have been helping ourselves. We have not depended on somebody else to do it. Certainly if we look at the change of governments they have had up there in Ottawa with Diefenbaker and Pearson and what-have-you, I think you would find that a hell of a lot of trade missions and a lot of trade activities would have come to a dead end. Canada would have been a lot worse off today than it is at the present time. In many parts of the world, they know Ontario better than they know Canada insofar as trade is concerned.

When trade missions from Europe come here, they go to Ottawa. The first thing we do is get a call from Ottawa and they say, "We have a delegation here from country X. We are sending them down. Can you look after them?"

They come in here and we look after them. We take them around to manufacturers. I think we are the only province that would get 100 or 150 manufacturers in a room like this and turn the Russians or Hungarians or Czechoslovakians or the British or the French loose in the same room and say, "Go ahead and sell them." "Go ahead and sell your goods to our manufacturers."

They do the same for us when we go over there. This has been a very good programme for us because they are obligated to do the same for us. It saves us going around ringing doorbells and looking for a suspect and then turning them into a prospect.

My feeling is the programme we have going here is the best thing going in Canada right today of any trade programme and I do not say that because I run the department.

An hon. member: Oh no!

Hon. Mr. Randall: Not all. No, I do not. I was brought here to do a job and I intend to do it the best way I know how. This is the way I know how to do it.

Mr. Nixon: Just before you finish, Mr. Chairman. If the minister would comment on the idea that we might co-ordinate on a short-term basis through this department and through this branch some of the specific needs of the industries in some of the towns we have been referring to. Just as sure as we are sitting here, there is going to be another plant closing in town X next week and 300 people will be laid off and everybody will be wringing his hands.

If somebody could do something about it ahead of time. If somebody in the province could do something, it has to be you. You have the funds. You have the experts and you are closely connected with the business community through this department. While we can argue till the cows come home about Ottawa's responsibility, you and your colleagues certainly cannot be dismissed from responsibility, particularly yourself.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I pointed out that we have made surveys of companies, but we never know a company is going to close the door. I said in the House the other day that if the companies that are going to close the door would come and see us first and ask if we could help them in any way, shape or form, we would be glad to undertake to see what we could do for them.

But let me just point out one thing—and I am sure my friends in the NDP will not agree with this, but you will, you are a businessman; you would not run your farm for one year if you were losing money. You would eventually say: "Well look, I have to sell the bloody thing—"

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If you were losing money, you would not run it for a year. Now, let me point out—

Mr. Lewis: You had better pick another example.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me point out one thing.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, come on! If you consider the tax write-off possibilities for an international corporation, then you would run it at a loss.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me just say this to you. I am not trying to be facetious, but I am saying to you that you show me a business that cannot make in the neighbourhood of 20 per cent before taxes and I will show you a business eventually that could be in deep trouble, because two things happen. All the guy has left after taxes is eight per cent.

I talked to my friends in the Ontario Federation of Labour the other day about borrowing mortgage money and they said, "Well, if we can get a guarantee of eight per cent from the Ontario government, we would be glad to put up some mortgage money. They themselves want to make sure they get an eight per cent guaranteed return.

You ask any investor in this room, ask any investor on Bay Street to put his money into a business that is losing money or not making three or four per cent. I will use Westinghouse as an example. Westinghouse last year did $223 million of sales. They made $2.7 million after taxes and you figure what that percentage is. On $105 million investment, that is 2.7 per cent on $105 million. If I said to you today, "Would you loan $300,000 to Westinghouse for 2.7 per cent return?" you would say that I have rocks in my head. I can put it in a mortgage at ten per cent.

The thing that is happening in this country and we had better—

Mr. Lewis: Why did you give them money?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I did not give them any money. All I am suggesting is if you do not watch what you are doing today in the manufacturing industry, there will be a lot more businesses closed down. I say this is where our friends in the union have to recognize that if there are problems in the factories, the unions have to sit down with them and say, "What is the return on investment?" I am quite sure that many of these people will sit down and say, "Look, if we cannot improve our return on investment, we are going to be in real deep trouble."

Mr. Lewis: The companies? Westinghouse will tell the union its return on investment? General Electric will? Pilkington will? Dunlop would open its books? You are dreaming,

Mr. Randall, you are dreaming. They will not allow it. They do not even notify you in advance, let alone speak to the union.

Hon. Mr. Randall: All you have to do is look at the balance sheet.

Mr. Lewis: Now, come on!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: If you had taken ahold of that Dunlop thing and instructed Ontario Hydro that they had to buy the big conveyors from Dunlop, then Dunlop would not have gone out of operation.

Hon. Mr. Randall: What was the difference in price? Was it 175?

Mr. Nixon: Let us say it is a matter of policy. Look at the social cost in closing that factory.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I know the social cost.

Mr. Nixon: And it is a tremendous social cost. As a matter of fact I do not think Ontario Hydro was that convinced that they were going to buy it in Japan at the time that Dunlop closed. I think you people should have stepped in there.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We did not know anything about it until it was closed.

Mr. Lewis: Right, that is the point.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Had they come to us before they closed, we could have done something for them.

Mr. Lewis: Well, why do you not make it mandatory that they open their books to you?

Hon. Mr. Randall: If they will voluntarily come forth and say we are in trouble, we can help them but—

Mr. Lewis: You will not do that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do you want me to walk into Brown's Camp and—

Mr. Lewis: Oh, do not throw out red herrings.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Come on, let us have a little order here. I have you on the list. You will have an opportunity. Are you finished? The hon. member for Renfrew South.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Mr. Chairman, I was quite interested in the remarks of both the Leader of the Opposition and the reply by the minister. As a matter of fact, the reply was so complete that it may be I do not have to ask the questions at this time. But I was interested in the member for Brant's remarks with regard to the federal effort and the provincial effort with regard to sales missions and so forth.

I certainly could not agree with him because we know that Mr. Pepin is the Minister of Trade and Industry in Ottawa, and his personal travelling budget for 1969 or 1968, I am not positive, was someplace under $10,000. Now there is the Federal Minister of Trade and Industry spending less than $10,000 to promote Canada and Canadian goods.

Mr. Sargent: How is your vote down there?

Mr. Lewis: Trudeau beats him does he not?

Mr. Yakabuski: Just a moment. I would say—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Yakabuski: —it is a very poor effort federally on the part of the Minister of Trade and Industry. We know damn well that if this is co-ordinated with Ottawa, Ontario would only get the crumbs. We have got to run our own show. We would get the crumbs just as we do when it comes to anything else on the Canadian scene.

Mr. Lewis: It depends on the minister who is walking out—

Mr. Yakabuski: The minister can walk out, but I am getting my point across.

I think you are all wet there. I think what the department is doing here, and what we are doing as a province is tremendous and it has been paying off. It has been paying off. It has been going on since 1948 when we brought the first trades people in from England and the growing, swelling effort has made the province what it is today. And to co-ordinate with Ottawa, I think this is completely out. They would not give us a shoulder. There is no question about it. They would shove the steps some place else. Therefore, we have to have our finger in the pie and in it very very deep.

Now, I thought the minister—

Mr. Sargent: Could he not shove it someplace else?

Mr. Yakabuski: Now I thought the minister covered the Brantford scene to a degree when he mentioned that the wheat surplus in the west certainly is having an effect on the town of Brantford, which unfortunately, in the past, sort of put all its eggs in one basket in that the farm machinery industry, especially in eastern Canada, was mostly concentrated there and in Cornwall.

I could not help but remark Cornwall. I come from eastern Ontario, I am very close to the press in eastern Ontario, the Ottawa papers. I cover the Cornwall scene regularly and have a continuing interest in it. And I can say this: I do not think there is a town, not only in Ontario, but in all of Canada, which has already received the attention from government, whether it be county, whether it be the province or the federal. There is no town in Canada which has received the attention because of the problem that exists—

Mr. MacDonald: You do not suggest that this does not need attention, though?

Mr. Yakabuski: No, you may be right to a degree.

We know that tariffs do play a part in it. We know that transportation may be a factor that has not been completely resolved as yet, but we know there is something else that nobody has really put their finger on and if they have put their finger on it, they have not been telling.

I think there is a local ailment in Cornwall. I think there is something locally there that has been a bug in this town progressing as it should. I do not know what it is. Whether it is attitudes or what it is, because I know—

Mr. Peacock: Oh, for heaven's sake!

Mr. Yakabuski: —that we can attract industry, away up into the Ottawa Valley, to Arnprior, and Renfrew which are more distant, do not have a four-lane highway to the centre of consumer needs.

Mr. Nixon: You do not even have a good two-lane road.

Mr. Yakabuski: We can attract industry up there, not perhaps all we want of it, but we are increasingly happy on what is happening there and here is a town that is finding an awful lot of difficulties. I will say that no town has got the attention. There is something else and I hope somebody can put his finger on the problem.

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey South): Sure, there was a transport minister at one time and my friend Paul had diverted the St. Lawrence Seaway in such a way that business can only flourish on the American side. There is no way that Cornwall can flourish, no matter what we say, as a result of that.

Mr. Yakabuski: That is right—

Mr. Winkler: Well now, they had a rather important man representing them in the federal government who was a Minister of Transport himself. He did not look after his people.

Mr. Chairman: Order please!

Mr. Winkler: Now I happen to be where I want to be. If you cannot, you can stay home.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Renfrew South was speaking while the minister was out and I do not know whether Mr. Clarkson would like to say a word with regard to this effect.

Mr. Clarkson: I will take it back.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The interrogation should not be any longer than the weakest kidney.

Mr. Yakabuski: Mr. Chairman, I feel that there is some other factor there that nobody can put his finger on.

An hon. member: You can go down there on Friday and take a blood test.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: I am just going to move a little further away from the minister so that we can have our contretemps accordingly.

Let me pick up on some of the comments you were making, Mr. Minister. Why do you not feel that it is possible, given your concern for the industrial situation in Ontario at the moment, to require some advance notice by way of major shutdowns, layoffs or dislocation?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I did not say we can require advance notice. I just said that if they would come to us and tell us that they were going to close down their plants, then we could do something about—we could do something towards helping them, perhaps find new product lines for them or take them and see if we could expand their present lines.

I think this is what is required in the long run if we are going to have any kind of manufacturing industry with stability in it, and on the other hand if what happened in the last two rounds of the Kennedy rounds overnight, and said he is going to make the last budget, where Mr. Benson removed manufacturers more competitive and so now our competitors have a 2.5 per cent advantage over us on such things as rubber and textiles and has completely removed—these are the kind of things that I do not think any provincial government can cope with. I do not know how you can cope with those things when he advances budgets that automatically Canada has dropped all the Kennedy rounds. Now the markets we are going into, they are still maintained. Those are going to be negotiated. I do not think we can afford to be good guys today—20,000,000 people in a market that we are trying to serve; 800,000,000 people between South America and Europe. I do not see how 20,000,000 people can afford to be the good guy every day in the week. And we keep dropping our tariffs, making it easy for these fellows to sell their goods here and we cannot do the same thing back home. If they continue to do that, I can assure you that a lot more companies will bite the dust.

Mr. Lewis: All right, so you have ascertained, for whatever reason—whether it is the lowering of the tariff barrier or imports for whatever multi-national corporate reasons—that a great many more companies may bite the dust and you have indicated a displeasure with the—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do not exclude the national companies, because I think they are making a contribution.

Mr. Lewis: You think they are making a contribution. Well, indeed they are making a contribution and they are making a contribution to unemployment which is unparalleled.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is your opinion.

Mr. Lewis: We will discuss it a little—well look at your Cornwall experience. Your multi-national corporation to which you contributed a quarter of a million dollars by way of EIO loan, threw off 650 men permanently unemployed in the last three months of 1969.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That was one product line that they could not maintain because of imports; right. The product line that we financed is a new line taking on more people.

Mr. Lewis: What line? Have they taken on more than the 650 people they discarded?

Mr. Randall: No, they did not.

Mr. Lewis: You did it by way of two loans. Have you looked at the plant they are going to build in South Carolina?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I have not.

Mr. Lewis: To produce the kind of thing which for some reason they were not prepared to produce in Cornwall.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well perhaps they could not produce it.

Mr. Lewis: Maybe they could not produce it, but is it not worth the government's knowing? In leaving aside Cornwall for a moment, is it not worth the government knowing in advance, when a major company intends to disinherit a large measure of the work force, why it intends to do it and when it intends to do it and for what reason? Do you not feel that you have that authority or that right as a government?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would like to think we had the right. I do not think we have any authority to go in and demand to know these things, unless that company is prepared to sit down and talk to us about it. They may have other reasons for doing that.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, but I am not disputing the reasons. I am saying that there may be legitimate reasons.

I am admittedly, one of those who is given to the conspiracy theory. I think Dunlop closed down in Toronto because it is an excellent writeoff against certain multinational budget statements and it may well be profitable for Dunlop to close down in Toronto.

I think CGE closed down its Dufferin tube plant in Toronto because they are importing the same tubes from the United States—not Japanese imports, but from the United States. They find the Ontario work force expendable, so they are prepared to get rid of it for the sake of maintaining the parent corporation in the United States. I will never know precisely, because they will not say and you will not ask! And I think—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Did you also know that a plant in the States closed down the other day making 800,000 tubes a year?

Mr. Lewis: Which plant is this?

Hon. Mr. Randall: A plant in the States.

Mr. Lewis: Nowhere near the kind of volume that the Canadian General Electric is—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, they were making 800,000 tubes, and they could not make them efficiently against imports, so they closed down.

Mr. Lewis: That may be right.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, General Electric is making 15,000 tubes a year.

Mr. Lewis: Well what you are saying to me is that General Electric phases out a plant here and a plant there but no one ever knows why it does so. I am saying to you that when it results in problems for from 200 to 500 people in the work force who are subsequently unemployed, then you as a government have a right to ask for advance notice.

I want to just push a little bit further, but gently.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me just say on the advance notice: Through another department, one of these days, perhaps the advance notice will be available. That solves my problem.

Mr. Lewis: All right then, you mean The Department of Labour.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Lewis: The Department of Labour is going to introduce legislation requiring advance notice?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know what it is going to introduce. I would say that before the next year is out there will be that kind of information available on the plants closing.

Mr. Lewis: You would say that. You would not make a competent prediction?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No. When that information is available then I will have advance information about the plant closing and we can immediately put our people in to see why it is closing.

Mr. Lewis: Precisely! You do not see that as an intrusion on the voluntary process, surely?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I do not think so. I think that if we walked in and said: "We want to help you," the manufacturers would be glad to get some help if there is any way we can help them or find another manufacturer to go in that plant.

Mr. Lewis: But in fact you will accept legislation which says you must give notice of intention to lay off or shut down?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think that is the intention both federally and provincially one of these days.

Mr. Lewis: One of these days? You will not give us any hint of when it is going to be?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know; it is not my department. I do not make government policy either.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, it is very much your department. Will you feel that it is useful to ask them for financial disclosure at the point at which the advance lay-off notice is given?

Hon. Mr. Randall: At the moment, no.

Mr. Lewis: You would not ask them for financial disclosure?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No. I think if they wanted that kind of help they would give it. If they wanted financial help from the government because they are in a situation where they are going to close down or carry on, if they are going to carry on and they need extra financial help to carry on because of certain conditions they do not have any control over, then I think we will get that information. But I do not think we, as a government, have a right to go in and demand that information.

Mr. Lewis: You do not think they should be able to justify why they are closing down? They should not have to tell you what it is that will result in 500—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Maybe under your government they would, but not under this government.

Mr. Lewis: So all that you are asking of them is an intention of notice to vacate or to close down?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Lewis: But you will ask them to give no justification for their actions? You will ask them to give no evidence of imports undermining their position?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, I think I will get the information that you are talking about, the matter of imports. That will certainly come out in the close-down, because if they are losing money and they are going to close down, you will not have to ask them if they are losing money. They will tell you they are losing money and it will be in their balance sheet.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, but can they give you—the balance sheet—did you see the balance sheet of Dunlop in detail?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I did not.

Mr. Lewis: You did not?

Hon. Mr. Randall: But you know Dunlop are extending their plant down here in Ajax and adding more people down there.

Mr. Lewis: But you never saw the balance sheet of Dunlop? As the Minister of Trade and Development, responsible for industrial development in Ontario, they never condescended to show you, the minister, the financial statement on which they based their shutdown?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right.

Mr. Lewis: Okay. Well then, I say to you—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I can get their balance sheet when it comes out at the end of the year.

Mr. Lewis: You can get their consolidated balance sheet which will show what the United Kingdom parent company reflects. It will not give you the kind of detail you need to make a Canadian decision.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know whether they show their Canadian corporations separately.

Mr. Lewis: You have never been uncomfortable in making decisions based on parents located in the United States or Canada, but it is useful to know the Canadian financial statistics.

You do not have access to that? It is even more ludicrous, therefore, for you to suggest that Dunlop, or any other major multi-national corporation, would make this a subject of collective bargaining with the unions. They will not touch it. They will not allow the union to be privy to one jot of information which involves any of these financial aspects let alone plant management, productivity, and all things that are implied by industrial democracy. In this province, what of that is available to a union faced with a powerful corporation? If they will not even give the minister the financial statement, they are not waiting to give the union anything.

I think that is profoundly reprehensible. It means that you are prepared to let multinational corporations play havoc with Ontario's economy and you are not prepared to lay down laws in reference to the ways in which they behave. You talked generally a couple of years ago in the House about good corporate citizenship. I think those are the terms that you used. Do you think Dunlop engaged in good corporate citizenship in the way in which it behaved? Or is CGE engaging in good corporate citizenship? Are you as minister satisfied with the behaviour of these corporations?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No. I am not satisfied when I see a company close down. I think there are certain things you can do under our kind of government that are not acceptable to your kind of government and this is not a socialist society as yet. Let us make it very clear, I am not a socialist, despite the fact that I was included as one this afternoon.

Mr. Lewis: Well you have certain twitches—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I said that I think there are certain things you can do in an industry and certain things you cannot do and I am not in a position at the present time to say yes to you, that I would be the one demanding all this information; for a company to throw its books open and let us find out what it is doing—

Mr. Lewis: But you cannot fulfill the objectives?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh, I do not know. I do not agree with you. I think when they come forward with a layoff—as to how many people they are going to lay off, when they are going to lay them off—then I think we will have an opportunity, when it is three, four or five months away, to go in and see what we can do.

Mr. Lewis: What is three, four or five months? They said May 1 and they announced it on March 6. That is—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am talking about new legislation, federally and provincially.

Mr. Lewis: That is purely a matter of re-training. These corporations that are presently in the process of closing down—involved in major layoffs—many of them receive grants by way of EIO loans.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh no. That is not necessarily so. I mean, listen, in six years anything can happen. Industries can double their size; they can close down. We cannot stop them. We have not got a crystal ball; you do not have a crystal ball.

Mr. Lewis: No, of course not, but I would just like to know the information in advance.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I know you would, so would I. If I could read tomorrow's newspaper in advance I would go out on the stock market.

Mr. Lewis: You have moments of enlightenment which we choose to call "socialist" but for the major part—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do not take it too seriously.

Mr. Lewis: Right, right! For the major part, there is no enlightenment. We are saying to you within the free enterprise system, within your capitalist system for which you express devotion and adoration, unless the system is to come crashing down around you even in recessionary terms, you are going to have to, as a good capitalist, demand that your multinational friends give you advance notice, open their books, justify what they are doing, and do it all in public terms or you are not going to have any economy to manage. Your unemployment problem will grow and your capacity to control it will diminish.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I could not agree with that.

Mr. Lewis: That is within your own system. You yourself have expressed a concern this afternoon, the last couple of hours, over what is happening in Ontario—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I just suggested this afternoon that people like yourself better recognise that there has to be a profitable business, or the business is not going to be there. You know that all your questions, from your side of the House, is to remove the buck—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Randall: —you want to remove all the profit out of free enterprise and you expect it to operate—

Mr. Lewis: Do not exaggerate, a modest profit.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The minute we got to that point, you would not put—what is a modest profit now?

Mr. Lewis: Well a decent profit—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Come on, tell me, what is a modest profit? What are you modest about? Give me a modest profit?

Mr. Lewis: I do not know. I would ask for the information and I would make my judgement.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, no. There must be a rate of return, no matter whether you put in 100,000 or 100,000,000. What is a good return on your investment?

Mr. Lewis: That would vary with the industry.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, no. It should not vary.

Mr. Lewis: It certainly will.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It should not vary. No, no.

Mr. Lewis: You mean there is an absolute profit margin that applies to every industry?

Hon. Mr. Randall: There should be the line at which your company arrives at the profit; a fair one. Otherwise it cannot produce new products, be a good employer, it cannot bargain with unions. If you see that company increases a loan with union bargaining and they have not got the bucks and they are lousy employers, they are in trouble all the time, always fighting with the management, because the return is not good. And you never hear the union say they are entitled to a good return. Union fellows say they are lousy managers. Maybe they are the best managers in the world but there is no profit in the item because—

Mr. Lewis: No, because you never ask.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well we never know a lot of things, but I am just suggesting to you that there are two sides to the story.

Mr. Lewis: Of course!

Hon. Mr. Randall: There has to be a return on the investment.

Mr. Lewis: We accept that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: All right!

Mr. Chairman: Just one speaker at once please!

Hon. Mr. Randall: You say—let us go back to Westinghouse. 2.7.—is that an acceptable profit return on an investment? You are an investor.

Mr. Lewis: Two point seven?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Would you loan $100 at that?

Mr. Lewis: You loaned half a million dollars!

Hon. Mr. Randall: Never mind me, I am asking you.

Mr. Lewis: You know, unfortunately, some of us still occupy the opposition and the time for change has not yet come. But you are the minister. You loaned them one-half million dollars on a EIO loan, which is forgivable, straight from the pockets of the people of the province of Ontario. Therefore they have invested in Westinghouse at a 2.7 return. Why are you suggesting that the return is insufficient?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Did you know that they were employing 125 people up in Orangeville—

Mr. Lewis: And I know they dis-employed 135 when they moved their plant.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh, no. They did not.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, yes. They did.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They added people.

Mr. Lewis: Two people.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh no.

Mr. Lewis: For one-half million dollars?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They added two people in Brantford when they moved up there and they did not lay off anybody until they had major strikes.

Mr. Lewis: The Westinghouse money is a travesty. They moved to Orangeville because they wanted to pay lower wages.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, they did not.

Mr. Lewis: They employed appreciably no greater number of people and you paid them one-half million dollars. Now you tell us that their return on their investment was so low that they are not really a marketable corporation.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I tell you that a return on an investment has to be more than 2.7 if the entire corporation wants to employ 4,000-5,000 people.

Mr. Lewis: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know what the return on their investments at the Orangeville plant. They do not take out a separate balance sheet. Maybe they should.

Mr. Lewis: Maybe you should ask?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, I am just suggesting that is a viable enterprise and the one down in Brantford was doing all right with its exports to the United States until they had a strike; a four-month strike was it? Four or five months. And they lost $3 million a month to the United States.

Mr. Lewis: But it is interesting you should say that you do not know whether it is a viable operation and you gave it half a million dollars.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, sure, I would give it to you if you went to Orangeville and you brought in your balance sheet and you are going to put your own money in. It does not make any difference—

Mr. Lewis: You mean if I turfed out a plant in Etobicoke—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No—

Mr. Lewis: —I moved to Orangeville—

Hon. Mr. Randall: —you do not turf out a plant at all, you—

Mr. Lewis: —that is what they did.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, they did not.

Mr. Lewis: That is what they did.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They did not.

Mr. Lewis: They closed down in Etobicoke to move to Orangeville with the same number of people taking half a million dollars with them.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are confusing the issue. Etobicoke was a different plant entirely.

Mr. Lewis: I do not think I am. It was part and parcel of the move.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It was black and white and you—

Mr. Lewis: Canada Wire and Cable, but we will come to that later.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You know very well that they are manufacturing in Etobicoke—

Mr. Chairman: I think we are getting a little off base.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Why do you not feel that you have the right to such information by law as a mandatory thing if you are going to grant major sums of money to corporations? If you are going to have any control over the economy at all, why do you not have the right to ask for financial disclosure and for economic plans on the part of these corporations?

Hon. Mr. Randall: At the moment, first of all, it is not government policy. This is government policy.

Mr. Yakabuski: Is it closed to the committee?

Mr. Sargent: No, no.

Hon. Mr. Randall: All right, I want to clear it. It is not government policy, and in the second place I think there will be sufficient information coming forward from the legislation I talked about a few minutes ago on layoffs. Now, if that is not sufficient we can take a second look at it, but I do not think that I have a right to walk into any plant and look at a man's books, any more than I can walk into your company right today—

Mr. Sargent: The income tax—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Wait a minute—walk into your company today and say I want to see your books, whether your plant is making money—

Mr. Lewis: I have no company—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh, well, listen—

Mr. Lewis: —and I am not involved in any—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do not kid; the truth—

Mr. Lewis: —and as a matter of fact, when it comes to—just by way of a sidelight—when it comes to corporations in this province that are responsible under The Child Welfare Act or The Children's Institutions Act or The Mental Health Treatment Centres Act, they are all directly accountable and your government is now exercising authority over them all. If you require that in the service sector, services to people; you can also require it in the industrial sector where it would have a pretty dramatic effect in controlling the dislocations in this economy.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Maybe the time will come when that will happen, but right now is not the time—

Mr. Lewis: Then you really do allow this to run amuck.

You are ready to allow them to run wild?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Maybe that is your opinion.

Mr. Lewis: You are a doormat for them. I do not think you should be; you have more self-respect than that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I disagree with you—

Mr. Lewis: Well, they phone you up on the day or the morning of the layoff and they say: "Stan, we are laying off 597 people". And you say: "What a pity; I would have liked to know in advance".

Hon. Mr. Randall: I read it in the press—

Mr. Lewis: You read it in the Globe and Mail. Well, you know what that makes you —makes of you as a Minister? It makes you a charlatan!

I do not mean it in personal terms, but it makes of you an expendable commodity. They pay no more attention to you than they would to their work force. They regard the government of Ontario as a laughable, joke.

They see no consequence in you at all. They see no stature in you; they see no prestige in you; they see no power in you. They play games with you. They violate you.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Listen, my friend, let me take you back a few years to Saskatchewan and do not brush Saskatchewan off.

Mr. Lewis: Now here—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Listen, your party—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Randall: —your party went out in Saskatchewan and nationalized every industry and they all went down the drain.

An hon. member: Cut the nonsense!

Hon. Mr. Randall: They all went down the drain.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The very things you are promoting here sent them down the drain.

Mr. Lewis: There were 13. All right, Mr. Chairman. By great good fortune, I worked—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Down the drain—

Mr. Lewis: —for the Saskatchewan planning board in the middle 1950s when all of these corporations were involved —Saskatchewan Government Telephones and Saskatchewan Power Corporation and the liquor control board and the potash development and many more manufacturing industries. The government reversed its economy and I am going to tie it in with what I want to say, Mr. Chairman, on this motion. The government reversed an economy that was a one-crop economy, weighted in favour of agriculture, 80 to 20, to an industrial-manufacturing economy weighted in favour of secondary manufacturing, 75: 25. They did it because they had the common sense to exercise some economic planning over secondary development—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Why did they go broke?

Mr. Lewis: —whether by crown corporation or anything else.

They did not go broke.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Sure they did.

Mr. Lewis: Ross Thatcher leaped in with pleasure to inherit all the things that had been created for him.

An hon. member: That is nonsense!

Hon. Mr. Randall: They closed up one company after another—

Mr. Lewis: They closed a box factory and they closed a shoe factory, and you people make an inflated case of it.

Mr. Chairman: Let us get on with the vote. We have talked enough about Saskatchewan. Let us talk about industrial development. Okay?

Mr. Lewis: Now that you have called the minister to order, I am saying we on our side of the House feel some remorse for the minister being treated as an object that is irrelevant.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do not worry about it.

Mr. Lewis: You are not a lackey of the corporations—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do not worry about me. I can look after myself.

Mr. Lewis: Well, you are a self-made man—

Mr. Chairman: That has nothing to do with the vote, either, as a matter of fact.

Mr. Lewis: I think it does, because we are paying $3 million to subsidize the minister's policies and we have some small dispute with them. You are right, I concede, Mr. Chairman. We will come back to it at the EIO.

Mr. Chairman: We have the member for Grey-Bruce. Is there anything more you would like to contribute to this part of the vote, member for Grey-Bruce, or do you want to go on to marketing, which is a little broader subject? We have been on marketing this afternoon but—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Do you want to discuss marketing now?

Mr. Sargent: No, I just want to discuss this vote, 2202.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 2202? We are still on vote 2202, but just the second section of it, that is what I am going by—marketing. We have been discussing industrial development all over the place but let us discuss marketing—

Mr. Sargent: Are you taking a vote on each one?

Mr. Chairman: No, I will wait until it is final.

Mr. Sargent: What do you want now?

Mr. Chairman: Marketing.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Chairman, we have covered nearly all these votes in our discussions. I think you have got to be specific now and say what you want to discuss in general expenditures, marketing, increasing productivity and then we are finished with that.

Mr. Sargent: They are all the same; every one of them.

Mr. Chairman: If you want to discuss them all together, we can do that, but we started off to discuss them at one level—industrial development—and we started off with marketing and then increasing productivity. If you want to discuss them all generally and then have the vote, it is fine with me.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Chairman, I ask for some guidance. I want to talk about this small business study that is being made with regard to whether it is or is not looking into the possibility of saving the small independent operator some time in looking after the government requirements.

For instance, this has been brought to my attention just recently because of clearing out some offices that went back over 60 years. The accumulation of bookkeeping requirements for the first 20 years I could carry under my arm. The next 20 years would take about two half-ton trucks to carry away. In the last 20 years, it would take three-ton trucks to take away the government requirements.

This has brought right home to me the sum of the cost that has been added to industry and promotion of industrial development in this nation of ours by social aid programmes that are requiring such very large payroll deduction columns.

For instance, unemployment insurance has one basis for deductions; workmen's compensation has another; Canada Pension has another system; income tax deductions have another system; union dues have another system; employed pension plans have another on a percentage basis sort of thing; health insurance has another column. On top of all that, we have sales tax and all these other government regulations. It seems too that a small business independent operator today spends two or three hours of his time in bookkeeping for government requirements, and DBS forms and all this sort of thing. If we really want to assist the small businessman in this province of ours, it seems to me that some government departments could see if it would be possible to put all these deductions on the same sort of basis—and have some sooner—and simplified forms than an operator could follow. The other thing that has a very good meaning in this is the fact that I believe we have many inspectors inspecting each one of these things and the requirement of going to post offices for unemployment insurance stamps and sending in books and all these sorts of things. There must be a much better way than the way we are doing it now in this country.

If you really wanted to assist the small independent operator, simplifying and co-ordinating these activities and putting them into some semblance of similar deduction forms would be a real assistance to a small operator, however and whatever he is doing; whether he is selling; whether he is manufacturing; or whether he is producing in any sort of way, I believe that this is one field that this department and its study on assistance to small independent operators could well take into consideration. I wonder if the minister might want to say anything about that?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I can just say this. It has been discussed on a number of occasions. Actually there were a number of meetings, I believe, when I had economics before it went to Treasury Board, with regard to the payroll deductions by small people. We announced here and we point out this afternoon that 80 per cent of the industries hire 50 people or fewer—and most of them 15—and you can understand the bookkeeping that has to be done. I think it is one of the situations where there is a great deal of time and energy spent looking after government reports, whether they be provincial or federal, by small businessmen. There is no compensation for him that I know of at the present time.

In fact, I know when we were in the appliance business, the retailers used to say the same thing; they are so damn busy collecting for the sales tax collector and everybody else that they have no time to look after their business. We have no plan afoot at the present time, but it is something we can take a look at. I do not know, maybe we can come up with an idea on the tourist industry. Perhaps we could come up with a programme.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: It seems to me that perhaps a bookkeeping system could be devised as well. It would handle these things in a much more efficient way. The other feature that I think might be of advantage is that the federal and provincial authorities who require such deductions find some similar and simple form. For instance, workmen's compensation takes a percentage of the payroll, and income tax takes a percentage tax of the worker's earnings, which is of the payroll.

I know one of the things that I detested greatly was the fact that I had to, in essence, lick the stamps to put them on the book, when there must have been a much better way that I could have done the same thing and contributed for the employee. There are many of these things, I think, that should have a much better basis that would not take so much time. For instance, if you could release one hour a day for the independent operator in this province to devote to increasing his productivity through increasing, perhaps, his financial stability and for production and so on. You would ultimately improve that employer and that operator greatly, and his employees would benefit.

I mean, I realize that you might in some way cut off an hour or two from an auditor or something of this nature if it got that simplified. I think, overall, it is the inspectors. We have inspectors almost daily and he has to see the books, and that takes time. If it is around the plant, he has to go with the inspector. If it is for bookkeeping, and if the small operator is the bookkeeper in the firm, he has to spend the time with the inspector.

All these things take the time of the small independent operator and I think they contribute greatly to the cost of production of this country, and our competitive position for small businessmen in this nation. I think that is quite vital and I think there is certainly something that your department could do here. Take a look at it.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: I am on this vote—you are on marketing now are you?

Mr. Chairman: Yes, we are right on marketing.

Mr. Sargent: Very briefly, I have a couple of observations, but before I start I think that the member for Victoria-Haliburton has got a positive programme that once and for all this department could operate or trade on in a positive way. Businessmen are trades people and this is a real positive idea. If you would give your department a target and, say, have that programme in a year, of course, you would be doing something for all the businessmen in Ontario. It needs to be done.

Anyway, I was going to ask you, Mr. Minister, in the terms of reference of this department you say that your job is to locate businesses across the world and to locate them in suitable areas. Have you ever located a business in Ontario from abroad or from the United States without checking out with the trade or the rest of the industry, whether that would be a disadvantage to them.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, I think it—

Mr. Sargent: How do you get around that?

Hon. Mr. Randall: If we go out after them we check them. Of the industries we brought in last year, I think 85 of them were local and the balance were not. Of the 159, half were Canadian companies and the other half were brought in.

Mr. Sargent: All right. Supposing I am a candlestick maker, and you are bringing in one from Germany that is going to knock the hell out of my business, what happens? Do you ask me first?

Mr. Radford: No. sir.

Mr. Sargent: Well, you should. I am a citizen of this country, I pay taxes and rates for protection. That is what tariffs are for. Are you going to spend my money to go and get a guy who is going to put me out of business? I do not like that.

Mr. Radford: In the case of the EIO programme, which we are not on now, it is a different matter. I am talking about—

Mr. Sargent: I am talking about locating industry.

Mr. Radford: —going out and finding an industry and bringing it back here—

Mr. Sargent: Yes sir.

Mr. Radford: We do not go out, for instance, to another glass company when we helped locate Pittsburgh in Owen Sound and say, "Do you think it is going to be beneficial for you to go to Owen Sound?" We did not do it that way.

Mr. Sargent: You did not locate Pittsburgh in Owen Sound. That was the federal government.

Mr. Radford: I will assure you, sir, I was in on the ground floor.

Mr. Sargent: I was the fellow that got Owen Sound de-designated, too, so do not worry about it. I know the story. Let us not be political.

Interjections by hon members.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, that is not relevant, because Pittsburgh is a new process across the world. There is no competition for it. I am talking about competition.

Mr. Radford: We do not go and notify other industry in the province when a company comes to us and says it is looking at the possibility of opening a plant.

Mr. Sargent: Most respectfully, Mr. Chairman, I think this is completely unfair. If you take my tax dollars and the small manufacturer's, to go abroad and get a man who is going to come in and work to my disadvantage, is unfair.

Mr. York: May I say something for a moment? When an industry makes it known that it is interested, we try to indicate to that industry the various conditions which prevail in the market place. We try to assist them to appraise their own market. Wherever possible we do try not to fragment the markets which exist. In many cases, I have done this personally. I have advised electrical companies from the U.K. not to come into Ontario because their position would not be a healthy one. We have substantiated that with DBS statistics and with our own studies. In many cases, they do not choose to take the advice, because—

Mr. Sargent: How do you relate this? My old buddy over here says you do not do it, so what happens? He does not know your plan. Why do you not get together?

Hon. Mr. Randall: He answered your question.

Mr. York: We attempt to put all the facts in front of the industry. They, perforce, must make their own decision. When a cigarette company came in many, many years ago, if I may use an example, we proved to them conclusively that we did not require another cigarette company in Ontario. But they said, "Fine, thank you for this, but we are not interested. We are coming in here, regardless of present competition." Competition at that time was paying 10 cents per thousand cigarettes on advertising, and these chaps stepped this up to 22.5. They came in, and in three years they became the number one maker here. So, what right, sir, can we have to tell these people, "You cannot come in because you will hurt competition." I think that decision remains firmly with the company. They themselves must, perforce, make any decision after the facts are made known to them.

Mr. Sargent: So the tariffs will come after they are here. You get the tax dollars first; that is your position. You do not protect the ones that are here.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I can give you another example. The other day, a big company that manufactures turbines came to me wanting to manufacture turbines in Canada. I said that we have capacity here now and two plants are not being used at the present time and if you come in, you will fragment the market—I do not think you will make a dime. You will not get any money out of your investment and you will upset it for the other two companies, and they said: "Well, thanks very much, that is the information we wanted."

Now, it would have been very easy for me to twist their wrists and paint a glowing picture and say the Hydro is going to give you all the turbine business if you come in here and I will help you get it, but we had to be honest to these people and say to them: "We think that the two people here now would do an adequate job along with import competition that we get periodically from around the world, but the two companies we have here now employing "x" number of people are adequate to take care of the turbine business and you are better off to put your investment somewhere else."

Mr. Lewis: One company, the American subsidiary, is in the process of closing down.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, in closing this section I would like to ask the minister—

Mr. Chairman: The member for Grey-Bruce has the floor.

Mr. Sargent: —does the federal government give forgiveness loans?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Does the federal government, what?

Mr. Sargent: Does the federal government give forgiveness loans to American—

Mr. Chairman: By the way, we are not on forgiveness loans.

Mr. Sargent: But I am getting—I am on this vote.

Mr. Chairman: Forgiveness loans does not come under this vote at all.

Mr. Sargent: I am not talking about—I am not getting to the point here.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, the federal government will give a loan to any company coming into Canada.

Mr. Sargent: Forgiveness loans?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Sargent: American corporations?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. They run—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Randall: —they run up to $12 million in grants. If they get an industry to go in the area where they want it to go, in a special area.

Mr. Sargent: In plant location of American firms into Ontario—

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is a straight grant.

Mr. Sargent: The federal government does give forgiveness loans to American corporations, along with you?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Sure, they give it to any company.

Mr. Sargent: So they are getting forgiveness loans federally and provincially!

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, no, no! The federal loans have gone into areas, outside of Ontario primarily, I think they made something like $30 or $40 million of the loans last year, Ontario got $1.4 million. Where the federal government gives a loan, if it does not equal what they would get from us, we will make up the difference; but we will not give them two loans. They do not get two loans.

Mr. Sargent: I would like to ask you this, Mr. Minister: In the location of an American plant into Ontario, do you not think that you should put on restrictions insofar as ownership being within the province; a percentage of that should be owned by the people of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, that is not government policy as yet. We would certainly like to see more Canadian ownership, more Canadian investment in these companies, and that is why we are working on license agreements and joint ventures. But certainly, we do not have a policy here where we insist they sell 51 per cent to the Canadians.

Mr. Sargent: Finally then, what percentage of Ontario manufacturing is owned by American capital?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh, I could not tell you offhand. If you want me to make a guess, I would say about 50 per cent. You have it there? 56 per cent.

Mr. Sargent: And finally, most other jurisdictions see fit, like Mexico and other countries across the world and emerging countries, to control ownership of the company investing in that economy. Your policy now is—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You would have to be a little more specific. What countries? I think Australia does and Japan, but I do not know of any others. The U.K. does not and the United States does not. France does not. I do not think Belgium and Holland do it.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. J. R. Smith (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Chairman, I am interested in knowing what co-ordination of efforts there might be between this particular branch and its federal counterpart? I recall, last year, visiting one of the major paper firms in Hamilton. They print waxpapers and the like, for the Canadian market and also for export. One of the officials did mention to me the fact that he felt that there was some duplication.

Mr. Chairman: I might just point out to you that this was discussed this afternoon for about an hour. The minister could probably make some comments on it if he cares to.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You mean the co-ordination between the federal government and ourselves? We have a very close co-ordination, not only here in Canada, but we have offices all over the world. We work with the federal authorities. We never go into an area without clearing it with the Ottawa authorities first. They, in turn, have us clear it with the offices where we are visiting. For instance, if we are going into the Far East and visiting countries, they are waiting at the plane. We get off the plane and they take charge and, along with our man who is leading the mission, we co-ordinate all our activities with the federal authorities. I do not think we would be as successful as we are if we did not co-ordinate those activities.

Vote 2202 agreed to.

On vote 2203:

Mr. Chairman: I guess there is a vote in the House. I might say that if we adjourn now, we do not come back until 8:30 o'clock. The House does not sit until 8:30 tonight so we will not sit until 8:30. The hon. member is first on the agenda.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Could we work until 11 o'clock?

Mr. Chairman: 10:30 is our time of adjournment.

The committee took recess.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT

On vote 2203:

Mr. Chairman: We will ask the hon. member for Wentworth.

We are on vote 2203.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Do I speak to an empty house again? Every time I get up to speak there is no one here.

An hon. member: Those of us who are here are not empty, though.

Mr. Deans: Well now, that is a different answer. After a parliamentary dinner I do not feel like speaking.

I want to speak to you about your immigration policy. I want to direct my remarks particularly to advertisements that appeared in the British press, with regard to hiring of people, qualified though they may have been, or ought to have been, for employment in the Hamilton area. I suspect, though I have not been able to find indications of it because of the distance, that the practice is followed in a number of areas and not only Hamilton is involved.

I do not think that the province of Ontario should be involved in providing either facilities or anything else for employers at this time to hire people from out of this country to fill jobs within Ontario. I am convinced that as we face the unemployment that we are at present faced with, that we would have been better off to have spent the money that we spent in these undertakings in encouraging employers to train the people that are at present employed, than we would be in encouraging them or providing any facilities for them to seek people from other countries to come here and obviously take jobs that could be filled, I suspect, by people who are here already.

Now it may well be that there are times when having this kind of a policy which encourages immigration to Canada, and particularly to Ontario, is a very useful and in fact necessary part of the growth of the province.

I think in the last year, but in the last few months in particular, unemployment has grown to the point where we have got to become very concerned about it. We cannot afford to bring one other individual into the province if there is someone here who either has the qualifications or can be trained to fill the position. It is toward this end that I want to talk with the minister.

I raised it in the House. I am very reluctant at this point to accept any kind of an argument, but I say to the minister that I am interested in hearing from him exactly why he feels it is good policy for the Conservative government of Ontario to encourage—and that is what is being done—people from abroad to come to Ontario to seek employment, whether specialized or otherwise, at a time when this province has reached a point in the unemployment figures unparalleled in the last 10 years.

In the city of Hamilton there are reported to be something close—not in the city, but in the city and surrounding area—reported to be something in the order of 20,000 people unemployed, many of them in the steel industry, and many unskilled. I am positive that employers seeking employees can find them either in the ranks of the unemployed, if they are prepared to spend just a little time training them, or can find them in the ranks of those students who are graduating from universities in the province of Ontario, if they are prepared to spend a little time and a little money training them.

I do not see how at this time it can be justified that this province would spend any money at all in selective—or otherwise—immigration into the province of Ontario.

Before I continue I would like to ask the minister if he would like to comment on how you arrive at the decisions to be part of this kind of programme?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): First of all let me say this: This government, as far back as 1946 when George Drew had the airlift over from Great Britain bringing all types of immigrants over here, skilled and otherwise, has always had an immigration programme. This is where we got most of the people who are here today—people like yourself who are making a contribution.

The situation you talk about at the moment has just occurred in the last two or three months, and we just do not turn the key in the door and stop people whose visas have been okayed, whose applications have been accepted, who have been negotiating for jobs with the Canadian embassy over the last year.

If this condition continues, and I am inclined to believe it is going to continue, perhaps toward the end of the year, unless Mr. Trudeau changes his mind, obviously there are people here; we should not only be looking at our own people, but we should be looking at those who perhaps we could change for occupations that are available.

Our whole programme has been based on selective immigration. I notice you chose the word very carefully, saying selective or otherwise.

Mr. Deans: Yes, yes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: But let me point out, and let me give you an example. I do not think you were here a year or so ago when we tried to bring in 250 miners from southern Italy to work in the mines up north when they needed 6,000 men. Ottawa said that we cannot bring them in because they have only got Grade 4 or 5 education. I said: "What have they got to have?" They said Grade 10. I said: "If a guy had Grade 10 why would he go down a mine shaft?"

Now our people will not go down a mine shaft. If you have a son or a daughter and you are a miner, the chances are you want those kids to have a better job in life than what you had. You do not want them down the mine shaft. You want them to be a doctor, a dentist, a nurse, or a professional person, or a school teacher. If these people are not replaced, and we do not bring in a certain amount of these, let us say, un-sponsored people, which the federal government look after, who will take on these jobs?

We have nothing to do with un-sponsored people; the federal government brings in the un-sponsored people. If they arrive here, some of those are the kind of people that we need for the jobs that, perhaps, your son or daughter does not want to participate in.

Our entire programme has been based on bringing into this province those who have a profession and some of those with capital. I had a figure a year or two ago in which the immigrants coming to Canada had started something like 13,000 industries in this country over the last number of years. I cannot tell you how many years, but we could dig that figure up one of these days and brush it up and see how many immigrants had started new businesses and given employment to Canadians.

I do not think you can get away from the fact that one selected immigrant with talent, whether he be an architect, an engineer, or a professional man, comes in here and takes the job of somebody else. What he does as a rule, when he comes in here, he creates jobs for those that are not talented.

Let me just joint out that we can take a hard and fast rule and say we will just let the federal government decide who is going to come in. I can assure you the federal government are not going to shut off their immigration programme because of the situation we face at the present time. They are going to bring in un-sponsored immigration, or sponsored immigration, which means that we would wind up with most of the people who will be taking the job that maybe people walking the streets would take.

Our programme is designed to, let us say, combat that—not combat it, but offset it—and I do not think we should at this time cut off our programme of bringing selected immigrants for two reasons. First of all, I think they create jobs for those that are walking the streets. Our history is rich with new people who have come here and started businesses and been very successful. That is the reason why we continue with our programme. When we get a call from a manufacturer to find talented people for him, certainly he would take them if they are available in Canada, or here in Ontario.

Mr. Deans: What I would like to discuss with you, is: Is there any co-ordination between your department and The Department of Labour in terms of the apprenticeship programmes that are available?

It seems to me, as I recall the ad—and I do not have it with me—as I recall the ad, it was for something like machine tool operators of some kind. It was not a skill that could not be taught to an average individual with a little time and a little money.

We were not talking about bringing in doctors, or bringing in architects, or bringing in engineers. Even more, I might say to you that the educational system in Ontario is now beginning to feel the effects of the immigration of architects and engineers into the province. We are now facing some real difficulties in finding employment for university graduates and suitable employment in the fields that they want to go into, because of people having immigrated from abroad.

I want to make it clear, just so we understand what we were talking about, that having come here from Britain, I am reasonably familiar with the kind of advertising that goes on in Britain regarding the opportunities for employment in Canada. And Canada to the British people, is primarily the province of Ontario. They invariably end up in Toronto and from there they fan out to other parts. There is a certain amount of unreal feeling about the manner in which the opportunities in Canada and Ontario are advertised in the British Commonwealth and in Britain in particular.

We are not talking about bringing in doctors; we could stand a lot more and still not have a glut. We are really not talking too much about some of the higher-income professions, but some of the average, the middle, professions—the working trades.

We are bringing people in regularly, and we are assisting, by virtue of providing this kind of selective immigration.

What concerns me is whether or not there is any co-ordination between the selective immigration policy of The Department of Trade and Development and the apprenticeship programmes of The Department of Labour and the retraining programmes that are undertaken by Canada Manpower.

I have gone to Canada Manpower, if I can use as an example, and I have seen the kinds of things that are offered to the unemployed, and, quite frankly, it is atrocious. The opportunities for employment in the fields where retraining is available is ridiculous.

It seems to me that we should, first of all, be speaking to the manufacturer and finding out from him what kinds of positions are available, or likely to be available, in his plant or his operation. We can say to him then: "Look, you do not have to go to Britain or someplace else. We will assist you with the money that we previously used to bring people out here and to encourage people to come here. We will assist you with that money to assist people who are presently here, to fill those positions."

It makes no difference to me who does the work, and it makes no difference whether he comes from abroad or not, if we have got a lot of work. But it makes a difference when I look around me and I see men who have a basic education, sufficient to qualify them to be retrained, or trained in a skill, not being given the opportunity because we are filling those jobs with people from abroad.

We have got a history, in the manufacturing operations of this province—they would rather spend a few dollars and bring someone in who is already trained than spend a few dollars and train someone. For some reason or other, we have never been able to develop in the province of Ontario the kind of apprenticeship programme that encourages people to become skilled. We are going away from that, rather than toward it.

We have gone now to the point where they will hire a person, train him for a week or two, and they will stick him on the machine and he will push the right button—and it works. And for some reason or other we never train people in the basic fundamentals of doing a proper job.

This is part of this whole immigration thing; it cannot be separated from The Department of Labour. In fact, I might say, I suspect that this selective immigration ought to be a part of The Department of Labour, rather than a part of The Department of Trade and Development. I think that they would surely be better able to assess the workforce, the kind of job opportunities that are available, the kind of retraining that, if it is not being done, should be done.

In that way, we would be better able to understand how we can provide employment for people who are presently unemployed.

I do not know what to say to the people of the area that I represent, when they can pick up a newspaper, or when they can listen on the radio and hear about people being encouraged to come to Canada, to come to Ontario and, particularly, to Hamilton to work, while they are walking around the streets trying to find a job. As you say, you cannot just turn it off. Well, maybe you cannot turn down—

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): What are you talking about, a job or work? They cannot find work or a job? There is a difference.

Mr. Deans: There may be a difference; I concede to you there may be a difference.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): How would you know?

Mr. Deans: But that is really—the interjection is irrelevant.

The point is that no one is talking about rejecting someone who has already qualified and has already gone through all the processes. I am talking now about providing facilities at government expense, which is an expense of the people—those who are unemployed in addition to those who are employed—to bring people in, to encourage them to come to Ontario when there is nothing here for the people who can presently fill the job. I would strongly urge the minister to go before his colleagues and move this section of his estimates out of Trade and Development into Labour—it is difficult; you are overlapping all the time—so that we can properly co-ordinate what is happening and so that we can understand it.

Mr. Sargent: It is a waste of $300,000.

Mr. Deans: It may not be a waste, but I think that the $300,000 could be better spent if it were spent in encouraging the training of Ontario people rather than bringing in people.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will ask Mr. Clark, the expert on immigration to answer your question about training, before I make my comments.

Mr. A. S. Clark (Immigration Branch): I believe the basic question was did our programme co-ordinate with The Department of Labour. The answer to that is yes, to this extent, that we supply the apprenticeship grant to The Department of Labour with a monthly report of every company that makes an inquiry of us and the skills that they are inquiring about. Not merely those that asked us to participate in the programme, but also those who call us and inquire about the possibilities of the programme.

Mr. Deans: Could you give us any indication how many there are? Roughly.

Mr. Clark: There are 50 or 60 a month, I would think.

Mr. Deans: Fifty or 60 a month.

Mr. Clark: Fifty or 60 inquiries in each month, yes.

Mr. Deans: Could you give me an idea of what kinds of skills they are looking for?

Mr. Clark: Primarily professional or highly skilled technical people—engineers, draftsmen, and I would amplify that by saying draftsmen with particular experience. For example, in the year 1969, here is the way they ran by numbers and I will give you the whole thing: it starts off with teachers, then came engineers—

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): This is ranked by numbers?

Mr. Clark: Ranked by numbers.

Mr. Peacock: Could you give us the numbers?

Mr. Clark: All right. Teachers, 434; engineers, 250; registered nurses, 110; machine tool operators and setters, 107. Do you want me to go on any further? Farm workers, 88—it goes on down from there.

Mr. Deans: Well, could we talk about it for a moment, because my experience—

Mr. Clark: These are actual people recruited.

Mr. Deans: Okay, fine, good. Those were people who were actually brought in.

My experience prior to my immediate job was in the engineering field and it strikes me that the two things that we do not need at this time, taking a look at the universities and the way in which they are turning out qualified people, are engineers and draftsmen.

Now I will tell you why I say this. We have more engineers driving automobiles in the province of Ontario selling whatever they may want to sell, than we have engineering. One of the prime requisites these days for a salesman in any kind of metal areas is that he has to be a professional engineer. You pick up the paper—every second salesman is an engineer. And one of the reasons, one of the obvious reasons, is because the engineers are perhaps not making as much money as they ought to, but the other is that we have far too many engineers. We have a great number of engineers being turned out of universities. The other in the teaching field—well, we need more teachers; there is no question about that. This is yet another year in which they tell me—the teachers' colleges tell me—that they are turning out more students than the boards of education can absorb, and it seems rather ridiculous that we should be going out of the province to hire people.

Mr. Clark: May I interject?

Mr. Deans: Please do.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Education Minister Davis brought that out last year. We are now catching up with a surplus of students who are coming out of the teachers' colleges because of the crash programmes we have had. And undoubtedly you are going to get more teachers here; you will not have to bring them in from abroad. But up to now they had to come from abroad if you wanted to fill your schools.

Mr. Deans: This is the problem, of course. Please, I do not want to interrupt you. If you want to just speak—

Mr. Clark: My interjection was going to be that while I gave the figure 434 teachers in 1969, my estimated figure for 1970 will be 24.

Mr. Deans: Yes, well, that is good. Let us take a look at machine tool operators. To turn out a machine tool operator is not the most difficult job in the world. It takes a certain skill, it requires a certain skill, but it is also the kind of skill that can be taught to a person of reasonable scholastic standing with a little time. You know, this is the one thing that manufacturing concerns are not prepared to do. They would, as I said to you in the House I think, much prefer to spend $200 or $300, or $300 or $400 trotting abroad—sending someone over to interview and bring a fully qualified person here—than they would to spend the equivalent amount of money and taking someone and training them. And I think what we have to do, if I might be fair, we have to insist in this province, if we are going to maintain employment at a reasonable level. But first the priority must be that we have got to make sure that there is no one here who can be trained. You know something, if you say that, you will never immigrate—you will never have anyone immigrate. There is never a time when you cannot find someone who can be trained to do the job, if you seek them out. I would think that you would agree with me.

Mr. Clark: I would say this, sir, in many cases, in these recruitment projects in Britain, the company is also recruiting locally and also has listings with Canada Manpower. In the particular case that we mention in Hamilton, this was very definitely so. They were advertising throughout Ontario; they had a standing listing—

Mr. Deans: Could you tell me what it was? I do not recall exactly what they were after?

Mr. Clark: These people—

Mr. Deans: A machine tool operator—

Mr. Clark: —machine—

Mr. Deans: I thought it was.

Mr. Clark: They had a standing order with Canada Manpower for advertising locally and they were also advertising in Britain—

Mr. Deans: Well, what—

Mr. Clark: I might add, sir, that the cost of their local advertising—they were taking fair-sized ads, display ads and “greater opportunities” double column, would run about $100 per insertion. In Britain, as you know very well, in a national newspaper, this would be $360 to $450 to start with, let alone return economy fare for an interviewer $450, another $150—

Mr. Deans: Oh, I agree, I am not quarrelling. You see, the problem is I have no quarrel with you—

Mr. Clark: It cost them a lot of money in the initial stages to find this individual or those individuals.

Mr. Deans: But the unfortunate part is that somehow or another, they never got around to the real crux of the problem and the real problem has—

Mr. Sargent: Carried!

Mr. Deans: Thank you. The real problem—I appreciate your being there; it is nice to have you.

The major problem has nothing at all to do with whether it cost them more money in this respect. The major problem is that they do not have any programme to train people here to fill the job. This is why this department should not have this particular function. This job should be an on-going job of training apprentices so that these positions will be filled when they become available. Until we do that, we are always going to have people walking the streets. You cannot advertise for a machine-tool setter and expect to have a guy sitting idle waiting for you and ready to come and do the job. There are umpteen thousand young people—

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): Everybody knows that!

Mr. Deans: —who would be— If you know it, can you tell me why, as a government supporter, you have not been urging them to change their policy? I mean, it is not like sticking a tap into a maple syrup tree.

Mr. Gilbertson: Never mind; everybody knows what you are talking about. You are wasting the time of the House.

Mr. Deans: Why do we not do it? All I want the minister to do is to say that he will recommend that this be moved—

An hon. member: You are certainly not wasting your time, Bert!

Mr. Deans:—and then these things can be done. Those things can be done, because I happen to believe that if things go on as they are, we are going to have a lot more unemployment. We cannot just permit this kind of development to continue.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would like to give you my comments for a second before we get off it.

In the last 10 years we have not really had any unemployment in this province. We have had full employment so that if you want people to do something today you have to either bring them in or find somebody and take them away from another company. In my experience, too, when I was in the appliance business, we could not keep apprentices. Now I have been in Europe—I have been in the Phillips plant in Eindhoven—they have got a plant there with, I think, 500 apprentices. You go to most of the big plants in Great Britain, you will find apprentice-training programmes. The unions put up with that but the unions over here are not interested, particularly in great numbers of apprentices. The first thing that appears is, "Well, the guy is working for less money"—wait a minute now—

Mr. Peacock: That is not true of industry.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Wait a minute. It has been my experience—I am telling it as a manufacturer—it has been my experience that, for instance Douglas aircraft here, if they have to build wings and deliver them to the United States to meet a schedule, they do not have time to look around and find some guy who is warm and break him into the plant and teach him how to do—

Mr. Deans: That is the problem.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I know, but I am just saying now that I am not trying to be facetious. I am just saying that we have had a problem here of a shortage of bodies to pick up; now all of a sudden, we have bodies. I agree with this. People are walking the streets today whom we should be able to train.

I might say that one of the things that this province has done, through our science and technology schools, we are probably going to turn out more people for industry in the next few years—as we did teachers—than we have ever done before in our lives. I think that if we cannot get them out of the apprenticeship courses, we can certainly get them out of the technical schools. A lot of these people are coming out of technical schools and falling right into good jobs, not as apprentices, not at lower wages than the guy on the assembly line, but at the same wages.

I do suggest to you that the programme is not a matter of—

An hon. member: The technical schools, are they coming on?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The science and technical schools—what do you call them?—science and technology? I just want to point out that some of these people we are talking about, today suddenly there are a number of people walking the streets looking for jobs. You know and I know that you just cannot take those people and train them overnight to be a machine-tool operator or setter—all those things. I recognize what you are driving at and we are sympathetic to the programme. We had a job to do of bringing in selected immigrants to create jobs for those who were walking the streets and who we said were unemployables.

Some of these selected immigrants say that when they come in they create jobs for at least two people, if not a half-a-dozen; we have seen it happen. The whole programme has been designed, in my estimation, to take care of a shortage of bodies at a time when bodies were not available for training and there were not a great number of people being trained in apprenticeships. Now, you look at the trades and industry; they are not too fussy about apprenticeship training in the trades.

An hon. member: Trades are very happy about it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You look in the plumbing field and the carpenter field—

Mr. Peacock: Those are not the industries we are talking about.

Hon. Mr. Randall: All right, the industrial field, too. I do not know where you have major apprenticeship programmes in industry today. Maybe in the automobile industry, but not in very many others.

Mr. Peacock: The aircraft industry.

Mr. Chairman: Are you finished, Mr. Deans?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Not too many.

Mr. Deans: Yes, for the time being.

Mr. Sargent: Where is the cutback—

Mr. Chairman: The member for Peterborough has the floor.

Mr. Peacock: I want to comment—Windsor West.

Mr. Chairman: I am sorry; Windsor West.

Mr. Peacock: It happens that in my territory—and I would like to answer the minister—he is wrong when he says the unions have opposed apprenticeship training programmes in industry.

All of the unions in the major metal working trades in industry have registered apprenticeship programmes. If the companies are willing to accept the standards that are set out in the agreement that they negotiate between these unions, principally auto and steel, the employers can have their apprentices. It is the companies that have apparently been unwilling to employ apprentices under the standards that are negotiated. The ratio between journeymen and apprentices is very important for the purpose of training. That is an area in which there should not be a shortage of skilled people on account of any alleged reluctance on the part of the unions to fall in line with apprenticeship training programmes. They have fulltime skilled trades departments in those two unions to my knowledge, promoting apprenticeship on the job in the metal working plants of the province.

Douglas is one of them. Douglas is one of the companies to which the UAW wrote in the name of the late president of the union, Walter Reuther, urging those companies to upgrade the skills of their blue collar work force by enrolment in such apprenticeship programmes.

The second area where there seems to be a lag is in the federal government's manpower mobility programme. These are the two critical areas where we are talking about the necessity of turning abroad for immigration of persons such as you have mentioned—engineers and machine tool operators and setters—when the short supply could be tackled through (a) the apprenticeship programmes; and (b) the federal government's manpower mobility programmes. I wonder if Mr. Clark could tell us what has happened to that programme, that the Canada manpower centres cannot bring to some of these employees from elsewhere in the province, the skilled personnel that they need. Last year with the heavy unemployment in the metal working trades there surely were at least 107 machine tool operators and set-up men from somewhere in all those plants on short work weeks or completely closed down for long-term lay-offs.

Mr. Clark: I will have to answer your question indirectly, sir, in this way. Our programme is totally integrated with that of The Department of Manpower and Immigration. When we initiate an overseas recruitment programme for a company in Ontario, we supply regional headquarters of manpower and immigration with a copy of our instructions to overseas office.

This is the first stage of the programme. These are the advertising instructions on behalf of the employer. When the employer has received his applications and screened them, and advised us of those he wishes to interview, we complete this list for our British offices. Again we supply copies to manpower and immigration.

Finally, when the employer has been over, selected his people, we close out the file with another standard form, a copy of which goes to manpower and immigration. In that way, we are totally integrated.

Mr. Peacock: What does manpower and immigration do with the advice that you give them of the employer's request?

Mr. Clark: That I do not know.

Mr. Peacock: Surely, Mr. Chairman, this is the very point at which we have to rest for a moment. If the federal Department of Manpower and Immigration will not insist that the employer show proof of his complete inability to recruit the personnel he requires within the province or elsewhere in Canada, then surely this department of the Ontario government should not be aiding that employer.

If the employer cannot satisfy our federal immigration or Manpower authorities and is completely unable to bring in the skilled personnel that he needs and has to show proof of his advertising, his interviews and whatever other necessary documentation is required that he has tried and failed to recruit, then the Ontario government should not be enabling an employer to skirt around that kind of provision.

I do not think that this selective immigration service should operate independently of The Canada Department of Manpower and Immigration's policies at a time of shortage of jobs, at the same time as we have surplus of persons in the skilled categories who are now leaving our nursing schools or universities or teachers' colleges unable to find employment.

I would think that the minister might well consider that kind of requirement of an employer, that he has to take to the selective immigration service documentation of his survey of the availability of those skills, his inability to recruit what he needs and then, and only then, is he afforded the services of the department.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Peterborough.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): There is little to add to what the member for Windsor West has stated here. The minister says when you do not have very many people unemployed, then you have to go overseas and try to find them. I think the problem is that we start bringing these people in from overseas; we put them very often in the middle of the employment scale, in the fairly highly skilled areas, and then when unemployment comes along it is the Canadian people at the bottom who get shoved out. And they are the ones who are standing in the unemployment insurance line; they are the ones who are collecting unemployment insurance or collecting relief, and it seems to me this is a completely illogical way of going about it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Are you talking about sponsored or unsponsored immigration?

Mr. Pitman: I am talking about the selective immigration policy you have here. I am talking about exactly what we have been speaking of, the efforts of industrialists in Ontario to circumvent what in a sense was a retraining programme provided by Canada Manpower, and the training schemes throughout Ontario and going over and pulling people back out of Great Britain. To say the least, I think it is immoral from the point of view of Great Britain. Here is a country trying to struggle its way to some form of economic viability, and here we are undermining it. But that is not the minister's problem.

The point I am trying to make is that in 1960, when we passed The Vocational Training Act, I can remember very dramatically the studies that were made by The Department of Labour in Ottawa, in which they discovered the young people who were coming out of the schools in Europe, Germany, the Netherlands, Great Britain, were much better trained on a number of these trades. So the great hue and cry became, "We must have vocational schools" and—I am not sure—I think well over $1 billion has been spent on vocational schools and, on the secondary level, on extensions to vocational schools, to say nothing now of the colleges of applied arts and technology building programme which is just coming over the horizon now. That we should still be going over and raiding another country to secure these trained people is just ludicrous. I am sorry I was not here at the beginning when my friend was speaking of the number of teachers, as I understand there were some 434 teachers hired over in Great Britain last year, when there were 700 teachers who did not get jobs from the teachers' colleges in Ontario.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): They are fully qualified, too.

Mr. Pitman: Fully qualified!

Now I ask the minister to think for a moment of the amount of money that those people represent, these 700 teachers. Presumably each one of them could have made $5,000 to $6,000 at some kind of productive activity. They all had a Grade 13 diploma; presumably it cost the government something between $1,500 and $2,000 to train them. Now, the amount of money that is going down the drain in educational enterprise in Ontario and in Canada is monumental, to say the least. Once again, that is not in the minister's estimates, but I think this particular selective immigration should be brought into full question in view of the efforts that have been made over the last 10 years, supposedly to end Canada's need and reliance upon skilled people from outside.

I think it should be—well, here again we are hung up in this dominion-provincial schemozzle, which the whole Manpower scheme represents, because it is a bloody mess. I think from every point of view it is just a bloody mess. You have the federal government sending people to adult retraining; sometimes they send them and sometimes they do not. The province is stuck with trying to provide the training, trying to turn it off and on like a faucet of water, and the whole thing is just a headache from beginning to end. And the sooner we clean up that mess, the better it will be for the minister, because I suggest to the minister that a selective immigration programme is simply out of date as a means of complying with the needs of—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know whether you were here at the start.

Mr. Pitman: No, I was not; I am sorry.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Clark pointed out that we brought in 424 teachers in 1969.

Mr. Pitman: Twenty-four?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Four hundred and twenty-four. In 1970 they brought in 24.

Mr. Pitman: Yes, I am aware of that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: So I come back to the Minister of Education, who said they put the crash programme on the teachers who become available this year or late 1969 for use in our schools. So we do cut back the programme.

Mr. Pitman: Yes, I saw that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: And I just said to my friend next to me there, it is difficult for us to turn the key off because of this inflation fight that is on in Ottawa. Somebody says there are a lot of people walking the streets. Those people were not walking the streets a few months ago; they were not available to be trained. You cannot turn the tap on and off overnight. You can recognize it may take a year, it may take 15 months to turn that tap off. Some of these people have been processed; they arranged to come here, and you cannot turn it off overnight, but I would say—

Mr. Deans: You sure can; you have to.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, you cannot do that kind of thing. I just suggest to you that we change our programme as we see the needs on the street, of people looking for jobs and the skills that are available. We are not looking for people around the world if we have them right here, believe me.

Mr. Pitman: What we should be doing, if we have any reliance on continuing education, is we would be training these people while they still have jobs so they would have higher skills and they would not be the first to be knocked out on the street when a recession comes.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): This is one activity in the department that probably was useful years ago, but I cannot see the use it is being put to today. In addition to the surplus of manpower, and in addition to the fact that it is not necessarily getting manpower for our industrial economy when they go into the registered nurses' and into the school teachers' fields, the minister knows that the various teachers' associations through the length and breadth of the province of Ontario objected strenuously last year to the importation of the teachers, both from down under in Australia and New Zealand and from the United Kingdom, because they foresaw at that time that there was going to be a surplus of teachers, that there were teachers who could not get gainful employment in their selective field in the province.

What did strike me as being kind of strange in here was the fact that there were apparently 110 nurses brought in. Just last week I had occasion to call the RNAO, the nurses' association in town, and ask them concerning nurses, and they said there has been a surplus of nurses now for over a year. So here you are bringing nurses into the country when the nurses graduating from our own schools today are having a difficult time getting placed.

I am sure, likewise, that the minister is aware of the policy that the U.S. government used. Living as I do in a border town, a lot of our residents attempt to get employment in the United States. They cannot get employment over there up until the time the employer to whom they have applied has advertised or satisfied Manpower in the U.S. that they could not get this type of a skill in their own jurisdiction. And I think a policy such as the U.S. has set would be very much to our advantage; if the Americans will do this, then why do we not come along and do exactly the same thing, especially for their people coming into our own country? I would not stop only there; I would sort of take the suggestion that both the member for Windsor West and the member for Peterborough made mention of; that, while we have this surplus of manpower in the province, these people not be allowed to come in up until the time the industry has satisfied Manpower that they have made every effort possible to obtain that type of a skill within the bounds of the province of Ontario, first, and then the dominion of Canada, second.

And I certainly think this programme this year is probably $303,000 that we could do without and put to a little better use. Were there not to be the surplus of labour in the province of Ontario, I think this could be, and possibly was in the past, a useful and a good programme, because I can recall individuals operating in the mould-making field having to go overseas to Germany and the Low Countries to get skilled craftsmen for the mould-making industry, especially in my own community, and offering at that time fantastic salaries for individuals to leave their employment in Europe and to settle in the Windsor area at the time.

I certainly would like to see the minister reconsider the programme. If he is going to use it as selective immigration, use it as selective immigration for specific skills, but not in the professions at all. I think in the nursing profession, that should be left to some other branch of government; in fact, I would say maybe the whole thing on immigration should be some adjunct of The Department of Labour, rather than this Department of Trade and Development. You are working at cross-purposes with one another, and as long as you are going to have two cooks trying to prepare the broth, you are liable to have a spoiled meal.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, as far as our party is concerned, this House is made up of 117 average men from across the province of Ontario and we do not represent any power group. We represent people. If the people had their way, a time and place in Ontario 1970, they would have voted out the last $3 million vote we just passed a moment ago. Insofar as this exercise in futility is concerned, we talk about immigration with a surfeit of unemployed people. We are voting $300,000 here. I find in the estimates—it is completely ridiculous trying to study the estimates—I find on page 2 section 8 an amount of immigration grant salaries of $181,000 of which $16,000 is specified. Of these salaries, $164,000 is not broken down. How in the hell am I to know as a taxpayer what $164,000 stands for?

Nowhere in the study of these estimates in this book can I find any relation to what goes on in the estimates for 1970-1971. It is completely ridiculous to ask the minister and all his staff, the brass and manpower earnings there, to sit around and listen to all this jazz. My opinions on this do not mean—

Mr. Peacock: We will excuse you!

Mr. Sargent: —a damned thing. A hodge podge of nonsense comes from this section down here, other than to hear themselves talk. Get to the point whether or not we can do it. We never changed one cent of the vote in all the time I have been in this House. Not one cent is changed of any vote.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): Would you like to ask some questions here?

Mr. Sargent: No, on this vote I will not ask them questions. He is going to do it anyway, so I would suggest that—

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Find out the information you are talking about.

Mr. Sargent: There is no information in the book on what I want to ask here. I know there are foreign services allowances for a lot of people and they get paid just on top of their salary, but I cannot find the salary types.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Ask such questions if you can find out that information.

Mr. Sargent: Oh, he would not even listen to $164,000 in salaries.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Ask how many men they have.

Mr. Sargent: I am going to make a motion, Mr. Chairman, as far as this part is concerned, that we reduce this vote to one dollar. You ask us to vote $300,000 to import people to work. Then the department head has told us that we now have only five per cent of the teachers you have requests for this year. So reduce the vote to five per cent, if that is a yardstick. Yours is one of the dominant votes. You are going to vote this $75 million like that and you are just laughing at us up your sleeve.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let us lay off the $75 million. You are getting yourself all crossed up.

Mr. Sargent: We will take half of it, take one-third, what are you going to do?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Like a dog chasing his tail, you do not know what you are talking about. That is the first—

Mr. Sargent: Do not give me stuff, I just—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will give you that stuff. I am getting sick of that nonsense of yours.

Mr. Sargent: Let me tell you something.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am sick of that nonsense of yours. Make sense. You are not making sense.

Mr. Sargent: I put it this way: the minister treats us in the House like a bunch of school kids.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I do not.

Mr. Sargent: You think you are a big wheel because—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I do not.

Mr. Sargent: You should learn to know that there are people in this province that are paying the freight. They are ordinary people. They do not think the way you do.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, we do not think the way you do.

Mr. Sargent: And do not think you can talk down to a—

Hon. Mr. Randall: We do not think the way you do, either. We are not all crooks up here just because you think we are.

Mr. Sargent: You are taking a pretty good stab at it, spending the money the way you are. Do not—

Hon. Mr. Randall: What would you do if you were in government? Throw it down the drain? Would you spend any money?

Mr. Sargent: I would give Ontario back to the Ontario people.

Hon. Mr. Randall: For a guy who made his living merchandising, you certainly have not got much of an outlook on this department I must say.

Mr. Chairman: Let us get down to the vote. We are at vote 2203, selective immigration. Let us get on to the vote. We have the member for Windsor West.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, can Mr. Clark give us the balance of the 1970 estimate of immigration for the other categories? He gave us teachers. Can you give us registered nurses? Machine operators? Farm labour?

Mr. Clark: No, sir, it is much too early.

Mr. Peacock: All right!

Mr. Clark: I can say this. We have been actively discouraging the immigration of registered nurses into Ontario for over six months.

Mr. Peacock: Just one other question. Does Mr. Clark have with him the boards of education which requested the recruitment of teachers?

Mr. Clark: No sir. I have that in the office and I would be glad to send it to you.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I just say this? If we do not need this amount of $318,300 we will not spend it. I do not hesitate to turn money back to the Treasurer at the end of the year, if we do not need it.

An hon. member: There are some other votes. Do you turn much more back in there?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It could be, but as far as I am concerned, I say to the Treasury department, if I do not need it, I will turn it back.

There are some advertising agents. They get a sum of money and say they have to spend it, or next year they cut me back again. We used to have that difficulty when we first came into government. Today this does not happen.

Mr. Sargent: How much did you turn back last year?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know what we turned back.

An hon. member: And nobody else knows!

Hon. Mr. Randall: You will find out if you stick around long enough.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 2203 carried?

Mr. Sargent: I made a motion, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Oh yes. Do you want me to present the motion?

Mr. Sargent: Reduce the vote to $1.

Mr. Chairman: Moved by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce that we reduce the amount to $1.

Second of the motion? I guess we do not need a seconder.

All in favour of the motion? Just the members on the committee can vote, by the way.

Five.

Those opposed.

I declare the motion lost.

Does the vote carry?

Carried.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Chairman: I can count, you know, very easily. I declare the motion lost and I declare the vote carried.

Vote 2203 agreed to.

On vote 2204:

Mr. Sargent: Do you want to take a vote on the next one while you are at it?

Mr. Chairman: Now we are on vote 2204, research and development. The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, this probably is one of the more important votes throughout the estimates of this department, the fact that they should be able to predict trends and know the effects of new policies, especially in the labour fields.

I want to ask the minister if he has undertaken any studies concerning the effects of our economy of the scheme that the labour unions will be asking for shortly, and that is 30 and out.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know what you mean by 30 and out.

Mr. B. Newman: It means when you reach 30 years of service—thirty years of service?

Hon. Mr. Randall: There is no economic research in this vote. It is industrial research.

Mr. B. Newman: It is not in here at all?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No.

Mr. B. Newman: What will you research here?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would think we could take that question to the economic council and see if we could find the answer for you.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask in this vote of $1.5 million, how much is the revenue of that branch of the department?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is a matching grant. For every dollar that the Ontario Research Foundation earns from an industry, the government matches it dollar for dollar. The $1,485,000 this year is what they anticipate they will earn in 1970-1971. You see, it was a $1,690,000 grant last year for what they earned, and that will be matched by the Ontario government. That is the way the research foundation is supported by the Ontario government, plus the fact there is $200,000 over a five-year period given to all firms toward machinery and equipment they may require. Last year they received $400,000 because they wanted to buy the equipment before the end of the year.

Mr. Haggerty: What type of equipment?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is special research equipment, for the Ontario Research Foundation. We set aside $200,000 a year for five years, but last year we gave them $400,000 because they had an equipment purchase they wanted to make. You will notice that the $200,000 is not in this year.

Mr. Sargent: As I recall, The Sheridan Park Corporation Act is part of this vote?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, The Sheridan Park Corporation Act was a land deal. It has nothing to do with Ontario Research Foundation. There is no money in there.

Mr. Sargent: I recall asking the minister about the money for research last year and you gave me a figure of $175,000.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The president of the Ontario Research Foundation is here. Let me see if he can answer that question for you.

Mr. W. R. Stadelman (Ontario Research Foundation): Very briefly our income was made up last year of about $3.75 million of which $2.5 million was contracted research carried out for either government or industry.

Mr. Sargent: How much was industry's share?

Mr. Stadelman: Last year, it would be about $1.6 million.

Mr. Sargent: So we are talking of $2.75 million for this operation?

Mr. Stadelman: The other $2.5 million is contract work for government; part of that is the federal government, part of it is the Nova Scotia government, which they pay for. Then the remainder is about $1 million, which is made up of a grant from this department.

Mr. Sargent: Do you foresee, sir, the time when this will be self-supporting?

Mr. Stadelman: This type of operation is not self-supporting any place in the world.

Mr. Sargent: I understand it is in the States; that industry, generally, does its own research and the government is not a contributory part of it.

Mr. Stadelman: In the United States, of the work done in industrial laboratories—that is laboratories owned by the companies themselves directly—55 per cent of the moneys for those labs is provided by the federal government.

Mr. Sargent: Not state government?

Mr. Stadelman: No, federal.

Mr. Sargent: I am sorry to interrupt you. You are very knowledgeable. I want to find out a lot. The federal government then, is—we are doing a role here that the federal government should be doing.

Mr. Stadelman: No, this institution for which I work was created by government and was agreed to by industry with each putting up, in 1928, equal funds to endow the institution—

Mr. Sargent: The Ontario government?

Mr. Stadelman: Yes.

Mr. Sargent: Not federal?

Mr. Stadelman: Not federal. The matching grant is still carried out dollar for dollar with Canadian industries.

Mr. Sargent: So you cannot foresee the time this will be self-supporting?

Mr. Stadelman: No, I cannot, unfortunately.

Mr. Sargent: So then the taxpayers of Ontario are going to continue again to pay the freight for industry.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, they are not paying the freight for industry. Let me just point out that research is an ongoing programme in any industrialized society and as industry does its share, the government must also assist.

Mr. Sargent: The government is the people.

Hon. Mr. Randall: All right, sure, it is the people. The National Research Council in Ottawa is doing certain things up there on a federal level. We are doing certain things here in the Ontario government. Quebec is setting up its own research.

Mr. Sargent: And the United States does not do this?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, that is not quite true.

Mr. Sargent: You just said that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The Ontario Research Foundation is set up to look after the industrial research in Ontario. It is supported by this government and it is supported by industry, as the gentleman pointed out here a few minutes ago. The more work it can do for outside sources, the more money it is going to earn from this government. This is the way the government supports research. If this Ontario Research Foundation went out and earned $4 million, the way the programme is set up now, they would get a grant of $4 million, so we would have one of the finest research facilities anywhere in the world.

They have been working on a base here; for every dollar they earn they get a dollar of Ontario government money and that is the way the research foundation operates.

We need research in this province, probably more so now than we ever needed it before. If we are ever going to develop our own Canadian manufacturers and our own Canadian products, this is where they will come from. They will certainly not come out of somebody's garage.

Mr. Chairman: Just a minute, Mr. Haggerty, just a minute. Let them ask the questions in order. Do you want to be on the list?

Go ahead, the member for Grey-Bruce. Are you finished with your questions?

Mr. Sargent: I am not clear in that we are creating methods for big business to make huge profits. The research is being paid for by the taxpayer and I do not see why, in the area of business, that there is not a tax write-off for industry to pay for its own research.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, no!

Mr. Sargent: Just a moment, I do not see—this is my opinion and as a businessman I do my own research. No one does my research for me. In my own small way I have to do the research. Every businessman has to do his own research, so why should we do it for big business and give them a full gift of this amount? It should be self-supporting and in no way should the taxpayer be paying for the research for big business; no way. It is the big power group again here in Queen's Park, saying: "We will look after industry, big industry."

Mr. Chairman: Do you want to answer that question?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, all I was going to say to the hon. member is that he keeps talking about big companies. Actually the Ontario Research Foundation is not set up for big companies. It is set up for small companies which do not have a research department of their own and they are the people who are primarily using the Ontario Research Foundation.

Now, it is quite possible that a big company, a paper company, would use it. For instance, I think it was the Great Lakes Paper Company that came in a few years ago and vanillin, which is now sold as vanilla extract, was developed at the Ontario Research Foundation. That was fully paid for by the Great Lakes company; when that product was finished, they paid the cost of it. But if this department earned $50,000 from Great Lakes for developing that product—we worked on it, using their knowledge and their formulas—that means they earned another $50,000 from this government. That is the way it operates. We are not subsidizing big business, but what we are doing is putting more money into the research foundation so it can do more work for the smaller businesses.

Mr. Sargent: Supposing this research foundation comes up with a new technique, a new process. Who owns the copyright on it?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We do. We would license somebody to manufacture it, or on a royalty basis.

Mr. Sargent: How much was the revenue last year from copyrights?

Hon. Mr. Randall: How much was the revenue? There was none last year.

Mr. Sargent: There was a figure given to me in the House last year of $175,000 somewhere in this department—revenue from the copyrights on new techniques, new processes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not think so. I do not remember it.

Mr. Sargent: Okay, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Windsor West.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, I believe in the Saturday or the Friday Globe and Mail there was a front page report of a new waste water treatment process developed by the Ontario Research Foundation, and I wonder if we could have some information about that? I would like to know if this is part of the foundation's work financed out of its own earnings or whether it is on contract to an agency of the government or an independent business concern? Secondly, whether that process is likely to be developed into a wide application in those industries that are presently under the orders of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Kerr) to abate their pollution into our waterways? Perhaps your Mr. Stadelman would take this?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Sure, he would be glad to answer that point.

Mr. Stadelman: I will just say very briefly that last year we did about $500,000 worth of work on pollution and its control. Of that $500,000, $205,000 was carried out for industry and paid for by industry; $162,000 was carried out for government, federal and provincial, and paid for by them; and we used about $124,000 of the grant from Mr. Randall's department to carry out research in this area of pollution.

As to the specific purpose, as mentioned in The Globe and Mail Saturday, this work goes back probably six or seven years, at which time we were asked by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to develop a process for a completely self-contained sewage treatment unit for houses in the far north where it is permanently frozen. We did this for them, and it was completely paid for by them. Subsequent to this, we carried out certain work having to do with the sterilization of sewage for The Ontario Department of Health.

Out of all this came a concept that we presented to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation about a year and a half ago: that an apartment complex of several high-rise buildings could be serviced entirely, for its wastes, by one unit. In other words, the water would be continuously recycled. The water would be used over and over again. The garbage would be burnt and the heat used, and the only thing that would come out would be metals and glass, and so on, which would be packaged and sent out once a month.

This is a concept that is looking ahead a good number of years. The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation entered into a contract with us to work on this concept about 14 months ago. It was for $1.5 million and we are part-way through it. One of the concepts that we suggested was the treatment of sewage by what we call a reverse osmosis process, which certainly is by no means completely proved. It is in the experimental stages yet.

Mr. Peacock: Was the story premature then, in any sense?

Mr. Stadelman: No. It is always difficult for a newspaperman to fully appreciate what he is looking at in the sense that those who are working on the project are. If it was fully established we would not be doing it, if you follow me. We are trying to work out all the bugs in this thing so that it will be a successful process.

Mr. Peacock: May I ask, Mr. Chairman, does it have any industrial application that the foundation can see at the moment?

Mr. Stadelman: The concept that we are carrying out for Central Mortgage and Housing, of course, has to do entirely with housing. In some aspects of this—the reverse osmosis method of effluent purification—we are also carrying out work for the Canadian Electro Platers, a group of industrial companies trying to clean up their electroplating waste through this process, too. They are also paying for that.

Mr. Peacock: Have those in the foundation engaged in this project approached the Minister of Trade and Development, or the Minister of Energy and Resources Management, or has the foundation been approached by them, to expand the project to broad industrial applications beyond the present CMHC terms of the contract?

Mr. Stadelman: Mr. Randall helped us with CMHC, I think, through his own Ontario Housing Corporation in support of this idea, although the finances are coming entirely from CMHC. We have been in touch with Mr. Kerr's department for several years and have done an awful lot of work for them and his predecessor, and The Department of Health on air pollution.

Mr. Peacock: Is the foundation presently equipped to launch a study on the feasibility of the recycling process in industry, say, in the pulp and paper industry or the petrochemical industry? Could it be equipped with funds from this government?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Maybe I can answer this one. First of all, I think you would have to establish the pilot plant to see if the plan will work. I know two or three programmes that are under way, not only here, but in other plants at the present time. I have seen two of them that looked like Rube Goldberg inventions, but automatic washers used to look like Rube Goldberg inventions, too, until they refined them. Our association with the research foundation is that once they get the engineering done, they can prove through their pilot models that what they are building out there will work, like being prepared to act as a guinea pig and put it in one of our Ontario housing high-rise units, mainly, with a double system in case it does not work so that our tenants are not upset. On the other hand, the work is being prepared to carry out some of the pilot work that is necessary to put it into actual operation.

Once that is done, I think Mr. Stadelman will agree with me, then you could look at other applications with regard to the type of equipment that would be required for pulp mills and many other major industries. First of all, I think you are not to the point yet where the process is acceptable in its present form and it will not be for another year anyway. Right?

Mr. Stadelman: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is why we said at the present time that it is one of many processes that is being worked on today. Out of it is going to come, I think, a number of pieces of pollution abatement equipment. Some will be big and some will be small; some may be as big as this room in order to work. I talked to a man the other day who was having a problem with pollution and he said, "How much money is available from your government?" and I said, "A maximum of $200,000, if you are a small company." So he said, "We are not a small company and we are going to have to spend $10 million to swing from one product to another. If the product is polluting, we have to swing to something else." There are not too many people who have $10 million.

Now, if you give him a piece of equipment by which he can do a recycling job, I think he would buy it tomorrow. The approach we have here is that we are doing something in our own backyard with reference to pollution and that is why we think that the government should support the Ontario Research Foundation to fight pollution.

Mr. Sargent: Is the Ontario Research Foundation doing anything about helping the Ontario government solve the problems—

Mr. Chairman: Just a moment, the member for Windsor West; do you want to go on?

Mr. Peacock: On the same point, sir.

Mr. Chairman: Go ahead.

Mr. Peacock: On the same point, perhaps the newspaper article was unduly optimistic about the breakthrough that it was talking about. But given the urgency of cleaning up our waterways in Ontario, both in industry and in the treatment of municipal waste, it strikes me that perhaps the department, or the government, has not been as excited by the development as it ought to have been.

True, the development may take time to prove but is there no way that The Department of Trade and Development can equip the foundation financially to broaden the research in the application of the recycling process to some of the industries with the most severe pollution problems in the province? You know, it irritates me no end that, to the growing public concern over pollution, the replies that are coming from industries—such as the pulp and paper industry through its association and through its literature, the newsletters that we, as members of the Legislature, received from the Kimberly-Clark company—cry hysteria and denigrate the public concern that is growing.

They say to us in these pieces of literature and in this propaganda, "What do you want? Do you want us to return the water in the same pristine pure form that we took it out of our lakes and rivers?" Well, why not? Why dump it back? Why complain about the expense in treating it and then dump it back into that same waterway? Why not recycle it? They are taking millions of gallons of water for their industrial processes out of our streams and lakes.

Mr. Haggerty: And not paying a cent for it.

Mr. Peacock: They are claiming huge expenditures to treat it. They say they cannot return it in the same pure, pristine form. Fine, if they cannot, why do they not hang on to it and use it over again? That is what I ask the company presidents who cry so loudly about the public pressure on them to clean up.

If the Ontario Research Foundation is moving toward a solution to this problem, in which recycling will become possible, surely we should be moving toward that solution with all the haste that we can possibly muster.

If it is a question of money—and often it is a question of money in speeding up research because if the fundamentals of the process are already known, money may very well speed up its development in an industrial application—I am asking the minister if there is no way in which he and the foundation—through contracting out, perhaps, in a reverse manner to what has usually been the traditional way of operation—cannot hasten the research toward the day when the recycling process will have industrial application.

It is surprising that with all of the investment in the foundation itself, and its assistance to industry, and the investment in Sheridan Park, often on behalf of major corporations that are among the largest users of water in their industrial processes for cooling or other means, that something like this recycling process has not occurred to them. That they have not set aside funds from their own internal working capital to research the recycling project. Could I ask Mr. Stapleton, perhaps, after the minister's reply, to—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Stadelman.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Stadelman, I am sorry—to tell us whether in his opinion industry has not had the research capacity to develop such a programme, whether its scientists and researchers could not also, independently of the foundation, have undertaken such work and developed it in respect to their own waste treatment processes.

I have seen some waste treatment facilities such as those associated with the automobile industry in Windsor, where there is a bowl of goldfish sitting at the end of the process. The company claims that the water has been restored to that purity. There are glasses of that same water sitting on the table at the end of the process if you wish to drink it. If it is good enough for the goldfish, perhaps it ought to be good enough for us.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I assure you that I have had a number of chats with Mr. Stadelman and the people out at the research foundation have pointed out that money is the answer to a final solution to get this project completed and make it feasible, engineering-wise. We would make the money available, either through a special grant or we would get it through the Ontario Housing Corporation which also has an interest, the same as Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, in seeing that this project is completed. I think Mr. Stadelman will tell you that in the research and the engineering that money is not necessarily the major problem.

It is a matter of time to test the equipment and get it working the way we think it should be working before you can say it is a product that could be manufactured. I can assure you, sir, that if it is ready for manufacturing we will, in one or two days set somebody up or we will farm it out. We will get it into production as quickly as we can, as soon as we have proved our pilot models, there is no problem on the money end of it. There would be sufficient money to operate.

Mr. Peacock: Would it be practicable at this stage for the Minister of Energy and Resources Management to say to those industries with a waste water treatment problem,

"Go to the Ontario Research Foundation, take a look at their process and see if you can apply it to your waste treatment facilities?" Would it be practicable for the minister to give that direction at this stage?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know whether we want to yet. I think this is the safest answer that we can give you, but I would say that I think we would want to finish our research before we make it public.

Mr. Stadelman: Reverse osmosis was a technique developed some time ago in the United States to make available pure water, or drinkable water, from sea water where there is a shortage of water, particularly in California where they are testing. We looked upon reverse osmosis as an industrial process when we first heard of it, or we thought we would look upon it as an industrial process rather than as a decontamination process because it seemed to have a whole series of possible uses. We entered this field about two years ago when it was still in its infancy.

The membranes that are used for this purpose cannot be made industrially in quantity as yet. We hope that we will contribute to the solving of this problem. I suspect, without knowing, that the paper cups would have to have semi-permeable membranes available in quantity before there could be a useful technique for it.

Mr. Peacock: Has Mr. Stadelman or the foundation, changed its opinion about the wide range of applications that he just spoke of, as result of the research?

Mr. Stadelman: No we have not. We are looking at other uses. It has occurred to us that with the concentration of fruit juices or the concentration in milk, to remove the water therefrom usually is done by boiling or other processes which invariably ruin the flavour. We were rather hopeful that we could remove the water by this process and retain the flavour. If you can can these fruit concentrates to retain the flavour, you have made a great step forward. You well know that the orange juice that you drink in the morning is made from fresh oranges. It is very different from even the very best frozen orange juice.

Mr. Peacock: Will the process remove the DDT from the flesh of these fruits?

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Welland South.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Chairman, this subject has been pretty well taken care of. The member for Grey-Bruce mentioned about patents or royalties. My question to the minister is, does the province share in these royalties? Have you developed some scheme and new process in industry—

Hon. Mr. Randall: If we have a product that we develop with our money and our own initiative, yes, we would license that out and share in the royalty or on a licence-fee basis. If we are working on a product for an industry, and they are paying the cost of that product, of course, the process belongs to them.

Mr. Haggerty: The province or the company? Your department would be doing the research on it?

Hon. Mr. Randall: If the Ontario Research Foundation is doing, say the work for a private company under contract, then any successful results obtained from the research are the property of the company which paid for the research contract, and the Ontario Research Foundation would not get anything out of that except payment for the work that is done. If this process we are talking about here and that we are undertaking now, in which we have a participation, would develop successfully, then we would have a participation in whatever licence agreement was made by the other party, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or anybody else that was involved in it.

Mr. Haggerty: The other question deals with the half-million dollars which apparently the research foundation has been working on. This is for pollution control and the member for Windsor West mentioned about the sewage treatment recycling. I notice there is a company in California—Monogram, I believe it is or something like that—using this process on jet aircraft. If you are familiar with the Misener enterprises in Port Colborne, this is where they deal with marine shipping and so on. They have a programme or a plan for recycling tanks on larger upper lakers, unit sewage systems for the Great Lakes system. I wonder perhaps if your department had been in contact with the Misener Marine enterprises in Port Colborne.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I cannot say that I know anything about it, but somebody else—

Mr. Haggerty: I understand they have a patent on this. It is working on small craft on the lake system, that is pleasure craft.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is Misener, did you say?

Mr. Haggerty: John Misener Marine Equipment Ltd., Port Colborne, Ont.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I do not know anything about it, but we will have a look at it.

Mr. Haggerty: The other question is about pollution, and deals with municipal pollution from sewage treatment facilities. I notice in the International Joint Commission report, the town of Grimsby has a treatment facility of the lagoon type. You read this report and it tells you it has the lowest bacteria count of any municipality in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The town of Lindsay?

Mr. Haggerty: Grimsby.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Grimsby.

Mr. Haggerty: That is right. If you want to read that report, it tells you there, I think, that the phosphate content is the lowest too.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, the departmental head of the Ontario Research Foundation said that he was doing something for the Nova Scotia government. Is that on the Deuterium Canada plant programme?

Mr. Stadelman: No, the work we did was for the Nova Scotia Water Commission and they have a problem. There are very, very small towns on the rockbound coasts, and the sewage from the town is discharged into the seawater untreated. They were very frightened of infections and the hazards to health. The towns are very poor and could not afford to put in regulation sewage disposal plants. They asked us if we could devise a system that would be very cheap that would kill the bacteria. Now this is not getting rid of the sewage but it is removing the health problem.

We devised a system that is very neat. This consists of a pump and a means of adding chloride which is very effective—so much so that the province of Prince Edward Island offered to pay part of Nova Scotia's cost if they could use the process as well. However, that is nothing to do with us, I just mentioned that.

Mr. Sargent: Why would they ask you? Why would they not ask the federal government?

Mr. Stadelman: In certain aspects of this work on the treatment of sewage, I think we are as knowledgeable as many groups in the world. I think some of the aspects of recycling that the astronauts used when they went to the moon and back are in the very fields in which we are working and the very fields in which we just discussed a minute ago about Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Mr. Sargent: Are you working at Douglas Point?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Are you working at Douglas Point?

Mr. Stadelman: Douglas Point?

Mr. Sargent: Douglas Point. Hydro.

Mr. Stadelman: No, we are not doing anything directly for the Hydro. Atomic Energy is doing the design of the power installation at Douglas Point, but we ourselves are not doing anything. We are doing it under contract for AECL.

Mr. Sargent: But you are indirectly doing work for Douglas Point?

Mr. Stadelman: That is right.

Mr. Sargent: Under contract with Ottawa?

Mr. Stadelman: AECL.

Mr. Sargent: AECL, under contract; how much is your contract with them?

Mr. Stadelman: Oh, these are small engineering jobs as they come up; I really could not say.

Mr. Sargent: Have you been asked to work on the safe destruction of pesticides, such as DDT, that have a high temperature of incineration?

Mr. Stadelman: No, not that I know of.

Mr. Sargent: What is your background.

Mr. Stadelman: Mine?

Mr. Sargent: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: I do not think that has anything to do with the estimates.

Mr. Sargent: I think it has.

Mr. Chairman: No, it certainly has nothing to do with the estimates.

Mr. Sargent: I want to find out something here. How much money do you make? How much money are you being paid?

Mr. Chairman: Nothing to do with research and development.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to ask questions about the taxpayers' money. Do not be like Speaker Cass and sidetrack me. I have a right to know this.

Mr. B. Newman: Do not be rude.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: The minister has asked—

Mr. Chairman: If the minister wants to answer this question, it is fine, but—

Mr. Sargent: The minister has asked us to direct our questions to the department head. Can he answer?

Mr. Chairman: I do not think he should have to answer.

Mr. Sargent: All right, how much money are you paying this man?

Hon. Mr. Randall: He is not a department head. He is running a company—in other words, a private company that is subsidized by this government to the tune of present earnings. They are not civil servants there; they are with a private organization. That is why Mr. Stadelman feels, and I feel the same way, that he has answered most of the questions. I think anything personal like that does not have to be answered.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Renfrew South.

Mr. Sargent: Just a moment. I think that it is important that he is receiving moneys from the taxpayers of the province of Ontario and I want to know what his qualifications are for the job. I do not suggest that I want to embarrass the man. I mean, people know what we are making; but whether or not we earn it is another thing. I want to know if he is qualified to hold the job; what is his background; what success has he had to get these grants? Maybe he should work in a drugstore pushing pills. I do not know.

Mr. Chairman: I say your questions are out of order.

Mr. Sargent: I submit they are not, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: I submit they are.

An hon. member: Why are they out of order, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: They are out of order. You cannot ask a personal question—

Mr. Sargent: Just a minute, I would like to find out what is going on in here. What right do you have to tell me, a member representing 60,000 people, that I cannot ask a question on how much money a man gets for spending $1.5 million of my money? What right do you have to say that?

Mr. Chairman: I say you are out of order and say—

Mr. Sargent: I say I am not out of order.

Mr. Chairman: Direct your questions to the minister. If you want to direct the questions to him, fine.

Mr. Sargent: I have asked the minister and someone should know.

Mr. Chairman: If he wants to answer, fine.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): It may be that the questions seem inadvisable and inappropriate. They can be answered very simply; they were hardly complex questions. The man who addressed the committee did so with some authority. He has appeared before the committee; he has presented a government viewpoint. The minister can surely be asked one or two simple questions without it being declared out of order. The minister may choose not to answer the questions but I do not think you can declare a member of the committee out of order for asking questions of someone who has appeared.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I have asked Mr. Stadelman to go ahead and answer the questions if he wants to. I think it is in bad taste but we will go ahead.

Mr. Sargent: Do not be so touchy.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are touchy. Your friend walks in and gives you three or four pieces of paper and you start a riot.

Mr. Lewis: Simply say that you do not want to answer.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, go ahead.

Mr. Sargent: Three or four pieces of paper? I have got a question here about the Nova Scotia government, I am asking on the vote here now.

Hon. Mr. Randall: All right, he will give you the information and then you will be happy. We will all sleep tonight. Go ahead, Mr. Stadelman.

Mr. Stadelman: I am a graduate in chemical engineering from the University of Toronto in 1941. I spent my life until 1949 working in industry, part of that during the war in the explosives industry, and subsequent to that in the synthetic rubber industry. Following that, I attended the University of Pennsylvania and the Washington School of Economics for two years where I graduated with a master's degree, and I was on the staff for some time.

Following that I worked for an American corporation called Pennsylvania Salt Manufacturing Company, one of the oldest chemical companies in the world. I returned to Canada in 1950 and became secretary-treasurer of the Ontario Research Foundation at that time and I have worked there for 20 years to the present.

Mr. Sargent: We are paying this gentleman, this company, $1.5 million as far as this vote is concerned and we have not got the right to ask how much money he is getting, as an employee of the government.

Hon. Mr. Randall: He is not an employee in the government.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Renfrew South.

Mr. Sargent: Well, if you had so much control, you could ask him to be here and appear as an authentic witness.

An hon. member: Your credentials are not those of a member of the Legislature, but they are not bad. They are pretty good.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Renfrew South has the floor.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Mr. Chairman, I am not being absurd, but I feel that since we have moved some of the supply out into this type of committee, that we are very fortunate in having a man like Mr. Stadelman available to the committee. I think that this has certainly been a good step in the way of the supply committee in the Legislature.

I want to ask Mr. Stadelman about someone's mentioning something about desalination. Are you working on desalination, as it is in your department?

Mr. Stadelman: No, but one of the desalinating techniques developed in the United States was the technique called reverse osmosis. And we, since about three years ago, have been looking over new areas of technology to exploit the use of this process. We decided that this had potential as an industrial process and we have been working on assisting mines for some time.

Latterly we have been concentrating on the purification of effluent, either from domestic sewage or from industrial effluent, such as the active wastes of electroplaters, to see if we could end up with the very clear water. The problem has, of course, shifted over now into the production in quantity of satisfactory membranes that will stand up in unusual factors. And this is the phase of the problem that we are at now.

Mr. Yakabuski: I asked that because I thought I had seen something recently whereby they developed a very economical desalination method in some of the Scandinavian countries which is being very widely used. Is this true?

Mr. Stadelman: I am no expert in desalination myself, but I can certainly look into it for you. I would be pleased to do so. I myself have not spent much time with or been concerned about desalination in itself since it really is not a problem for Ontario. We have such vast quantities of clear water.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 2204? Carried?

Mr. Peacock: One last question: Can Mr. Stadelman tell us, on the research that he has been discussing this evening, particularly on waste water treatment, do the results of that research go directly to OWRC?

Mr. Stadelman: No, in the work we are doing for Central Mortgage and Housing, we report to them because they are the contractor's party presumably available to the general public there. The work we do in Nova Scotia is reported again to them and presumably is available.

The people at our place, of course, know the people at OWRC. I do not think there is anything that we have that they would not know of really.

Mr. Peacock: They know of this recycling process and they are watching its development?

Mr. Stadelman: Oh yes, I am sure.

Vote 2204 agreed to.

On vote 2205:

Mr. Chairman: Ontario Economic Council. The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): The minister, perhaps somewhat typical of the political imbroglio in which he finds himself, has an entity called the Ontario Economic Council which is completely effete and inept. You know, it reminds me of what we will be talking about tomorrow, the role of the provincial auditor.

Over the generations, since men first came down from the trees to set the government in power in Ontario they have managed to surround themselves with a cozy, to say the least, a very cozy number of subservient powers. Whereas every other province in this country, including the federal government, has some kind of an independent agency to survey, give a critique of, ask some points and questions about, give you some guidance in, to play more than merely an advisory role, to participate in the contemporary series of economic planning; in every other province you have it. This is nice. You have nobody who will hold you up for pillory; you surround yourself with this blanket; you swaddle yourself. Why have we not got an economic council in this province that will exercise some of these disciplines, some of the role, as does the Economic Council of Canada—Lord bless it in its pusillanimity? Nevertheless, that is the core: it would be the federal government. How can you really achieve any degree of objectivity of that kind of criticism, that kind of circumspection that is so necessary for a government that has been too long in power, unless you house teachers and agencies?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That, of course, is one man's opinion.

Mr. Lawlor: I beg your pardon?

Hon. Mr. Randall: "Too long in power," in one man's opinion.

Mr. Lawlor: I am afraid all these things are one man's opinion.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Yakabuski: Do not bet on that.

Mr. Lawlor: Having spoken of the somewhat incestuous relationships that you enjoy with your various agencies in the province and your failure to have an arm's-length relationship, therefore it will be part of your total downfall not having this kind of objectivity built into the system, and the minister himself being a kind of panjandrum of pro-motionalism, an errand of sweetness and light, laying his hands on everybody's foreheads, telling us in a somewhat Babbitt fashion just how kind people we all are and how deeply we are liked, and all that sort of thing. Oh, he sets up these councils; he has got 21 people on the council. It is supposed to be a cross-section of industry, labour and management, but it has no functional role to play. It is a public relations gimmick, and practically everything he does in the department is. It is a promotional stunt and has little validity, and it is high time that the council is taken under some degree of fire. I think you should wipe it out; it has performed no useful function whatsoever except in a single instance. This year it happened to produce under the regimen of the secretary, Mr. Ian Butters, a worthwhile document.

It almost stilled our voices when we discussed among ourselves, up on the third floor, what we thought of the economic council. We said, really, in the light of the forestry statement, which is the first valuable piece of document to emanate from that council, is this the light of the dawn of better things? This was, I think you will agree, Mr. Minister, a document of considerable worth, at least it was here; at least it tried to assess in a really valid way what had happened to the forestry of the province of Ontario, slight as it may be. It was not really profound but, considering the Brody report and half a dozen other documents, it went much further both in terms of policy issues and in real impact. What have you, therefore, got going for you at the present time in the economic council?

I would think that perhaps, innocuous as the council may be, it should be studying the impacts of automation as that is within its internal structure. It ought to have a series of subcommittees on its own initiative. Its own initiative would give to the minister and working through—as in the case of the Quebec Economic Council—what it calls working groups made of senior civil servants largely, in conjunction with university people who, getting together, give it the initiatory policies which they bring before the minister. To what extent is that done here in this province?

Apart from that, in the case of, again, the Quebec council which was set up before yours, it is a council with some teeth in it. It is a council dedicated to the concept of economic planning as such. In that council they have linked to the council by statute associate members who are either cabinet ministers or deputy cabinet ministers. They are part of the council as associate members representing key government offices, such as trade and industry, agriculture, natural resources and youth. We have nothing, as far as I know, comparable to that, with respect to the economic council. It floats on its own.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Would you say the Quebec council is a successful one, when Mr. Bourassa is going to fire about 90 per cent of them? We see what happened down there financially and economically and a number of other—

Mr. Lawlor: In this kind of liaison and this kind of relationship between ministers of the Crown, five ministers of the Crown and the economic council, I say that you enjoy the seats of the mighty. They only report to you. To what extent is there liaison set up between them and other ministries of the present government?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They rule the entire spectrum of ministers.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes? To what extent is there consultation? In the Quebec case, at least, this is a feature that seems to me to have validity. The ministers sit in the council.

Hon. Mr. Randall: But it has not worked.

Mr. Lawlor: It has not worked?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No.

Mr. Lawlor: Well at least it is not the kind of make-believe and dance that you have here with—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Maybe ours is the practical approach that works.

Mr. Lawlor: And what results have you got from the Ontario Economic Council?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh lots of results.

Mr. Lawlor: Come off it! This kind of document here, "Research Index for Ontario," sets up a long list. Any group of three people getting together, and paid out of the statistical department say of the Treasury, would be able to compile these indexes and this sort of thing. I say there has only been one document ever come out of that council which had any punch or any purpose, and that was that forestry study.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Have you read them all?

Mr. Lawlor: Oh, not them all. No, I have a pile of them before me. I collect them like a hope chest. Hope burns eternal in the human breast.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I collect the scalps of the opposition.

Mr. Lawlor: You too! We only live in hope and auto-suggestion. But you know, I do not despair about the council. I say there is still hope there, or if I took a second position, I would say that had it been particularly hopeless I would ask you to get rid of it. Really, what function does it perform as far as you are concerned? It is a fellowship, a get-together of these individuals. I understand at the most it meets five times a year. It is a very lackadaisical, easy-going outfit where a few individuals down below do the spade work. I think that you should, at this time in the history of the council, either give it some purpose, put some life into it, or get rid of it, one or the other.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Perhaps the minister would enlighten me on how the housebuilding project in Moosonee is coming?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will let you talk to Mr. Cranston. He will speak on that. He has been up there.

Mr. W. H. Cranston (Ontario Economic Council): If I may refer to my notes extensively on this just so I am quite certain that I am on base, I have just come from a meeting this afternoon on this particular project.

Mr. J. Renwick: Really, Mr. Minister, all I wanted to know is how many of the 10 houses have been completed?

Mr. Cranston: Five of the 10 houses have been completed. Two are being moved into this week. The balance of the five are being discussed, at the present time, with a view to seeing how they are being allocated and put together. We think that they are likely going to be done by the NISGU corporation. The materials are all on hand on the site.

The problem has arisen primarily because the Ontario Housing Corporation has come in with 15 houses plus 20 houses on low-rental. The Indians who worked on the initial project have completed their work to get their own housing. As a rather interesting offshoot, on this particular project, up to 18 members of the Indian community went off relief this past winter, cutting lumber in conjunction with this particular project.

We cannot say that it has been wholly successful. It was an experiment. We said this initially. We are quite confident, however, that we will have the 10 houses in the not too distant future. As I say, two of them are being moved into this week; five are completed and the materials are all on hand on site. We have been held up a little bit by changes in jurisdiction in the Ontario government as between departments, but in consultation this afternoon with Mr. Warren, the new deputy minister of citizenship, under whom Indian development now comes, final arrangements are being worked out for the allocation of the remaining housing.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, it is just not good enough. The Ontario Economic Council is going to get out of that house-building project; the sooner they get out the better. You are talking about 10 houses. As I understand it, if my memory serves me correctly, the floor space is 30 by 20 feet in the wooden houses to be constructed, and I criticized this in the House at the time. Last September or early in October, when I was there, there were three or four of them started at that time; here we are in the end of May and the economic council has the nerve to come in front of us and tell us that somehow or other this is a well worthwhile pilot project.

It was a shattering theory, and I think that until this government is prepared to do something about—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. J. Renwick: All I am saying simply is the construction of 10 houses—30 by 20 is 600 square feet—under the auspices of the Ontario Economic Council has been a total and abysmal failure.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We do not agree.

Mr. J. Renwick: I assume from what the Minister of Citizenship and the Provincial Secretary (Mr. Welch) had to say the other day that somehow or other it is going to be turned over to his department and carried on to some kind of completion. Is there any indication of the economic council having concerned itself about the housing plight of the other Indian families in the area across the river in Moosonee?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The Ontario Housing Corporation is looking after that. There were 15 built last year. There are 20 more to go. That is what has been requested. And, keep in mind this project was a sweat project by the Indians themselves; perhaps you should hear what happened to the Indians themselves and perhaps you would change your mind about their contribution.

Mr. J. Renwick: Did you ever lend them a truck?

Mr. Cranston: Yes, they did get the truck. They got the truck at the time we said they would get it.

Mr. J. Renwick: They did not have the truck when I was there. Four houses were under construction then.

Mr. Cranston: Pardon me, sir, they did have a truck at that time. They did not have a fulltime truck at that time. They now have a fulltime truck.

We are not suggesting that this has been a 100 per cent good project. We have had problems with it, and we knew we were going to have them when we went in there. This was to find out, really, whether the Indians were concerned with building their own houses. They told us they were. They asked for it. We did not make this up.

This is not an economic council idea, and I might say that this whole thing was reviewed recently with the head of the federation of labour in this province, with the head of the steelworkers and other people in the labour union movement, and they gave us the unanimous approval to proceed on this basis and to give it a further try. If you would like to question Mr. Dave Archer or Larry Sefton or others on this point, they are quite open to questioning.

Mr. Peacock: Why should we question them?

Mr. Cranston: Because they are members of the council.

Mr. Lewis: It is a shambles.

Mr. Cranston: They do not consider it is a shambles; that is what I am trying to say.

Mr. Peacock: Why should we ask those individuals in particular?

Mr. Chairman: Is the hon. member for Riverdale finished?

Mr. J. Renwick: I just wanted to make one further comment. If you were living in that part of Moosonee, and somebody came along and said, "Would you like to build yourself a house?" you would have no alternative. The housing accommodation is rotten in that area. You know that as well as I do, and I would suggest that this particular project, which has been limping along for some time now—it must be just about a year since it was originally announced and there are but five of those houses completed at this time—if that is any indication of the kind of economic activity that the economic council wishes to promote, then I think they had better get out into some field where they are competent to deal.

Mr. Cranston: Well, I would like to point out to the member that the people who worked in these houses did so after 5 o'clock at night and on weekends while holding full-time jobs during the day; therefore, they are not fulltime contractors who were able to do this. This is what they asked to do. We were trying to give the Indians the opportunity of doing what they wanted to do.

The people who put up these funds for this again included a large cross-section of industry, labour and churches in this province. We want to give them this opportunity of trying this. We were sceptical, to some degree; we are still sceptical to some degree. There is no argument about that. This is not the easiest thing in the world to do, and we have made, in some respect, a failure of it. It was an experiment—an attempt and it was an attempt done in good will.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. J. R. Smith (Hamilton Mountain): One of the things the opposition has probably overlooked here, and I think it is one of the key developments in the north, is allowing the local people to solve their own problems in their own way.

Undoubtedly one of the major successes in the Arctic with Eskimos and other native groups has been the fact that the Eskimo co-operatives in that region have been allowed to do the contracting for major projects involving several hundreds of thousands of dollars on such things as provincial schools and other public housing units. I am very encouraged by the fact that the government of Ontario is encouraging Indian tradesmen to use their skills on such projects. Hopefully, I would like to see co-ops on reserve lands encouraged to tender on projects and build housing, when they become strong enough.

One of the things that really bothers everybody in the north about the acceleration of schooling for children is the job opportunities that are going to be available for these children. When they graduate from the vocational, technical and other secondary and post-secondary institutions here in the south, what are the job opportunities in their own communities for them when they return? One of the most devastating things morally for many of these people is to see, when employment opportunities do arise, that tradesmen here from the south are parachuted in when there is local labour available to do the job adequately.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Mr. Chairman, I believe this is a worthwhile project.

In the Rama reservation near Orillia 25 years ago the returned veterans in the Indian reservation undertook a project just the same as this. And the result there was that they have a very nice community of small houses, and they have a pride in them which is not in other communities where the houses were provided for them. When they provide their own, they seem to have a pride in it. I think that the Rama reservation is a credit to the Indian people of this province and a credit to this province itself.

I know the Moosonee thing would have some inherited problems because, first of all, you have to train the tradesmen, such as carpenters and all the sawmill workers and things of this nature, before you start to get production on any worthwhile basis. And I know that, while it may not get off the ground in a hurry, as a lot of people would expect, the end result will be that you will have a trained Indian workforce to build houses continuously thereafter.

I think this project alone will be worthwhile in this way—that you will also have people you can send to other projects and explain what happens and people trained to start such projects in other Indian communities. The overall result will be that you have to have a trade school or training school someplace, and this may be just as good a place as any.

I want to talk to you a bit about the forestry study that was turned out. I think the forestry industry in Ontario has been in trouble, not only just this year but it has been in trouble for about three years; at least, it became apparent about three years ago.

It became apparent for several reasons. One of them is, I suppose, that the forestry industry is one of the most automated of any industry in recent years. I think part of their problem is that they are all in debt-buying machinery in order to keep up to date with the progress that is being made in that particular industry. I think that your sawmills are becoming very expensive items and whereas you could buy a very good one for about $25,000 30 years ago, today we are talking in the neighbourhood of $200,000 or $300,000 at the very minimum for a very small sawmill, and maybe $750,000 to $1 million for a fairly large one. The forest industry itself is getting into very costly operations because of this automation and the cost of equipment.

The other part of the problem is the trained work force. We have had a stabilized or reducing work force in the industry in Ontario and the ability of an aging work force to keep up to date with the training necessary to operate these machines is a very great problem. We have in the province of Ontario some very interested people in The Department of Education who are pursuing this at the moment. We have a very great shortage of saw filers; a very great shortage of planer mechanics and specialized people of this nature. These are not cheap jobs, they are jobs in the $10,000-and-up range. Yet practically all of our recruitment is being made from the province of Quebec because of their school system north of Quebec City. The United States sawmill industry is recruiting from the same source, so there is a very high demand for these trained specialists. It seems to me that we in Ontario have to get into this very thing or else we are going to perpetuate the present problem of the forestry industry. I would urge the economic council to see what it could do with regard to The Department of Education on these special lines because I think this is part of the answer.

The other part of the answer, I believe, is in reducing products, to their components. We are today hauling rough material to the cities of Ontario for manufacturing of furniture and other products. It seems to me that if these were reduced to components and handled very much like the car manufacturing industry, we could cut out some of the space costs of our industry in the cities that are very high and very costly.

One of the problems that was raised and made a point of in the economic council's study of forestry was the cost of hydro in rural Ontario for such industry. It seems to me if you want to promote development in the forest industry you have to work with the Hydro in lowering these rates and making them comparable, if you are going to be able to assist the forest industry.

I was very pleased with the report put out by the economic council. I do not think it had all the answers; I do not think it had an in-depth study of some of the areas that I would like to see carried out, but I do think that it scratched the surface. It has made a lot of people think, and if it has done nothing more than make the Ontario government think in the right way, I think it has achieved a very worthwhile purpose.

Mr. Chairman: It is now 10:30, so we will adjourn until tomorrow at 3:15 p.m. We are still on the same vote—2205.

The committee adjourned at 10:30 o'clock, p.m.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT (continued)

The committee met at 3:15 o'clock, p.m., in committee room one.

On vote 2205:

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Chairman, last night when we rose, I wanted in my comments to really clarify one point that I made that might have left an impression that was somewhat wrong. I may have left the impression that Ontario was responsible for the home building project at Rama Indian reservation. It actually was the Indian affairs department of the federal government. This project was done by having the veterans of the Second World War apply themselves, along with the guidance of one or two carpenters hired by that department, who were teachers of the trade to those veterans on the job. I just wanted to make that point clear.

Mr. Chairman: Any comment on that?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): No, I am finished.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, under this per diem allowance, the chairman, W. H. Cranston, gets a per diem allowance of $18,200. Is that a misprint or what is the reason for that?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, it is no misprint. It was established by order-in-council at $100 per day for every working day. Mr. Cranston spends almost five days a week here, sometimes six, when he goes out of town on economic council business. So, take $100 per day and multiply it by 365 days or the equivalent, and you can see where the $18,000 comes in.

Mr. Sargent: Why do you not put him on a salary?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We think this is a better way of handling it.

Mr. Sargent: Why is it? It is a more lucrative way for him.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not think it would make any difference. Mr. Cranston, as you know, is retired from his former business and felt that if he wanted to take a day off, he would take a day off. So he gets paid for when he is working. I think it is better for the government on this basis. If he wants to go fishing once in a while, why, that is his privilege.

Mr. Sargent: So it is his choice?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think we might consider it for the next chairman we get, Mr. Sargent. If we change chairmen one of these days, perhaps we should look at it on the basis of a permanent appointment and permanent salary.

Mr. Sargent: You could not have got a better man, I do not think.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We agree with you there.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Newman, Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Yes, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to ask the minister if the Ontario Economic Council does study or has studied the effect of wage parity on our economy?

Mr. W. H. Cranston (Ontario Economic Council): No, Mr. Newman, we have not specifically engaged in that particular study. This has been a matter of splitting up our studies between the Treasury and other agencies of the government. We try not to duplicate anything that is being done elsewhere, and that was not one of the study areas which we have probed.

Mr. B. Newman: Was it studied by the other departments of government then, to your knowledge?

Mr. Cranston: Not to my knowledge, I am sorry. It may well have been, but not to my knowledge.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I might say when I had Economics, we looked at the wage parity situation, but did not make any detailed studies. Whatever information we had we passed on to the Treasurer and now he has Economics in his department. Whether they are carrying on any studies or not, I would not be sure. I do not think so.

Mr. B. Newman: I was just wondering what effect would it have on the smaller industries throughout the province now that the auto industry has gone in for wage parity. Has it had a beneficial effect, or a harmful effect?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not think it has had a harmful effect. I think, in the long run, it tends to increase wages for the workers. Everybody strives for the best and if you get wage parity in the steel industry and the automotive industry, I think many of the parts industries supplying the automotive field are moving toward that higher wage.

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask of the minister, if this department is studying the latest suggestion from the labour unions of 30 and—in other words, after 30 years of employment, a retirement benefit of approximately $500 a month?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think The Department of Labour is looking at that. We are not looking at it.

Mr. B. Newman: You are not looking at it at all?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, not at the present time. That has just come about.

Mr. B. Newman: The economic council does no studies whatsoever as to the effects of the various subjects that I have mentioned on the overall economy of the province?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The economic council works for any minister in the government. If any minister has a specific problem that he would like to be undertaken, he can get in touch with me or the chairman and have that problem undertaken by the economic council.

Mr. B. Newman: I see.

Hon. Mr. Randall: He works for all the ministers.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: Just a moment; Mr. Hodgson, Victoria-Haliburton has the floor.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Mr. Chairman, I wondered if the department and the economic council itself had done any studies with regard to the changeover to the metric system?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The department itself has been working with the federal authorities on standards which involve the metric system. Mr. Clarkson has been a member of that committee. In fact, I am a member of the committee; Mr. Clarkson has been sitting in for me to date. It is still in the discussion stage. We are fully informed as to what the federal authorities are endeavouring to achieve in the standards study.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Are we hopeful that we will be able to proceed at the pace required?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think it is a little premature to make any decisions yet. I firmly believe, from what I understand from the meetings that have been held so far, they are making progress. But how quickly they are going to come to a decision, I do not think has been defined yet.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Kitchener.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Minister, can you give me the breakdown of the maintenance costs and how the figure of $113,500 was arrived at for the Ontario Economic Council?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. Communications, $15,000; furniture and equipment, $12,000; printing and stationery, $48,000; per diem allowance, $20,000; and research and so on, $86,000; for a total of $113,500. The big one is research for some of the studies; for instance, the fourth-year study we discussed yesterday and a number of others that have been made for various ministries.

Mr. Breithaupt: Are these studies for which you contract, or are they studies provided by the membership of the council on the permanent staff?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They could be both. I will ask Mr. Cranston if he would like to discuss this.

Mr. Cranston: The hon. member has asked a question here relating to contract versus in-house research. Some of the people we have on staff are on contract, although they are operating inside our own offices. We have a staff of only five people on a permanent basis, plus our stenographic and filing personnel, which is another five. Therefore it is a little difficult to break this down between the two, because certain of those charges are against people engaged for special purpose studies.

For example, we are just completing one now on the problems of integrating into the community of Ontario, the 1,750,000 immigrants who have come in since the Second World War. Part of that work has been done by people on contract, part has been by specialists who have been brought in for that particular subject from social welfare agencies and so on. Some of them are university personnel.

Mr. Breithaupt: Would you be good enough to explain to me the difference between the per diem requirement of $20,000 and the research of $86,000? I am wondering what are the classifications of expenditures in those two areas?

Mr. Cranston: I believe the per diem account here largely relates to the chairman.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right.

Mr. Cranston: And if I might make a comment to Mr. Sargent in that connection. The problem here is that I perform a couple of jobs for government, two or three of which are unpaid, but I choose to have it that way. There has not been very much fishing and the balance of it is chargeable on a per diem basis.

Mr. Breithaupt: So basically, it is your own drawing that comes out of the per diem.

Mr. Cranston: That is right. I have not been at the $20,00 level. As a matter of fact the economic council budget for this year, despite all the salary increases we have gone through on staff, is considerably lower than it was five or six years ago. We have been able to undertake certain shared cost projects with the federal government. We have also been able to find the generation of funds in other ways to help us carry on some of our work.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If I may just correct a figure I gave. The first three figures were $1,500, $1,200, and $4,800—not thousands.

Mr. Breithaupt: I thought you were going to wind up with an awful lot of furniture and equipment eventually.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 2205. Mr. Smith, Nipissing.

Mr. R. S. Smith (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask Mr. Cranston a question in regard to the forestry study of the economic council. I think Mr. Hodgson covered a bit of this last night when I was in here for a few minutes. There is quite a discrepancy between your report and the figures of The Department of Lands and Forests in regard to the usable cut in the province that is at the present time being used. I think your report says two-thirds is unused, and The Department of Lands and Forests says less than 50 per cent. I wonder how you arrived at this figure?

Secondly, I wondered how deep a study you had done into the question of hydro-power rates, electric power rates, in regard to the pulp and paper industry and what effect it is having on the creation of new pulp and paper investment in northern Ontario?

Mr. Cranston: I think the problem may largely arise in respect of the differential between our figures and those of The Department of Lands and Forests, in that they are speaking only of conifers. We are speaking of all species. In every instance the figures were checked against their figures and they have not in any respect stated that we were off-base in the figures we put forward in terms of the cut which is not now being made.

In respect to hydro electric rates and consumption of power, these are DBS figures—federally, in the main. The extent to which hydro electric rates—which are uniform, basically, across the province, as you know—are impeding future development of resource industries in the north is anybody's guess; except that we do know that in certain other areas and other jurisdictions—I am not talking necessarily of Canada here, but of outside Canada where we have a competitive situation in places at times—there are inducements offered which put potential manufacturers coming into Ontario wood products at somewhat of a disadvantage.

We have asked here and we have had discussions with the hydro electric power commission that before any further upward revisions are made—in the light of the fact that the woods industry is such a large consumer of power right across this country and certainly in this province—there be very serious study of the possible implications to individual users of any increase in rates.

I do not need to refer you to examples other than some of the situations at the Lakehead and in northwestern Ontario, where they have shifted from partially private operated plants into the hydro electric system with a consequent considerable divergence in cost, to illustrate the point you were trying to make.

Mr. R. S. Smith: You also indicated in your report that the council felt the cost of power should be used as an economic tool to direct industry into certain areas of the province as a part of the whole area of regional development. Could you be more specific on that?

Mr. Cranston: I think that the hon. member may have misread that a little bit, although understandably so.

We said that this should be considered as a possibility. The policy of the government at the present time, and of the hydro electric power commission, is not such. On the other hand, if one is to look at the land lying in the northern part of our province, I think many people might agree that some inducements beyond those which are now in effect may be required, particularly when you are talking about such a large and so far economically unusable surplus of wood, which is found north of the northern line of the railway in the province of Ontario.

At the same time, we did point out that perhaps the greatest immediate potential to development is in the northeastern and northwestern parts of the province where the situation does not apply.

Mr. R. S. Smith: Where the hydro cost does not apply?

Mr. Cranston: Where this is not the prime factor; the factor there is to a considerable degree one of handling the effluent from the mills satisfactorily that you do not cause a degree of pollution which is undesirable to the people living in the area and to the entire province.

Mr. R. S. Smith: May I direct a question to the minister, Mr. Chairman, in regard to this? Since the economic report on forestry came down in the first week of February, has there been discussion within the government in regard to the recommendation—I will call it—of the council to use the power rate structure as a method of inducement for industry in that specific type of production, or to better the competitive position of the present industry on the world market?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Not to my knowledge. There has been no discussion.

Mr. R. S. Smith: Do you intend to do this?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I could not answer on government policy.

Mr. R. S. Smith: No, but do you intend to discuss it with government?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know. I would think that they have all had a chance to read the report. It is a matter, I suppose, of northern members and cabinet ministers getting together and seeing if it could be used as an inducement. But there has been no discussion to date.

Mr. R. S. Smith: What is the purpose of having these reports if there is not going to be any discussion on them within government?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They are independent reports; each minister gets a copy, and if he feels it should be brought forward and made government policy, he brings it forward. The Hydro, as you know, is facing some very difficult situations at the moment in meeting its power needs and finding sufficient capital to extend its power facilities all over the province, and there have been many discussions with regard to power rates but not directly related to this report.

Because you get a report does not mean you rush out and it becomes legislation immediately. I am always thrilled with the reports we get from all sources and by guys who write books, but we do not have to implement the books or the reports. These reports are helpful in many ways, but there are some things in the reports which you cannot adopt, and this province as yet has not agreed to use power rates as a means of subsidizing certain types of industry, so there has not been any discussion here.

Mr. R. S. Smith: As far as you personally are concerned, as far as the Minister of Trade and Development is concerned, there will be no consideration given to the recommendation of the economic council?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would not say "never". I would say at the present time I would not give any encouragement to it, because I know the difficulties that the Hydro are going through at the present time.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Well, as the minister responsible, do you like this recommendation or do you not like it?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do not put words in my mouth. I like—

Mr. Singer: No, I was asking you to put words in your own mouth.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I like all recommendations, Mr. Singer, but if the recommendations cannot be utilized without creating some heavy expenses in another department of government or another agency, then they cannot be used. And I do not think at the present time, with the power rate structure the way it is, that they can afford to subsidize these industries. On the other hand, we have now appointed a minister of mines and northern affairs. Perhaps he will come back with some recommendations that may be accepted.

Mr. Singer: I think it is important that this minister, who is the minister responsible for this agency, tell us whether or not he thinks this is a recommendation that is worth pushing or whether it is not.

Hon. Mr. Randall: At the present time, I would say it would not be acceptable, and I would not be in a position to push it.

Mr. Singer: All right. Now you have put the words in your own mouth. That is fine.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would simply say it cannot be discussed.

Mr. Singer: That is fine. Just do not sit on both sides of the fence at the same time.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, I know you have all the answers—

Mr. Singer: No, no. You are the responsible minister; you should tell us what your opinion is.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I know, but you make all the decisions over there, and you do not have to solve the problem.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): It is not because he does not want to.

Hon. Mr. Randall: He has got the ambition.

Vote 2205 agreed to.

On vote 2206:

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: I would like to ask the minister the total cost of our involvement in Expo.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The total cost of Expo—for the total completion and its expenses for 1970-1971—will amount to $2,878,355.17, and we estimated $2.6 million to $2.7 million. We will get back salvage in the amount of about $845,500, including a lot of equipment that can be used in Ontario Place. So we are talking roughly $2 million for what we consider to be the Expo 70 project.

Mr. Sargent: In the estimates, Mr. Chairman, all I can see budgeted is $1.3 million in 1968. Where is the balance of the money?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, there was $1,108,355 in 1968-1969, $1,365,000 in 1969-1970 and $405,000 this year, bringing it to the estimated $2,878,000.

Mr. Sargent: To pay off the balance of the bill?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Pardon?

Mr. Sargent: To pay off everything.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, that is to operate from now until September 15 and to tear down the building, bring the staff home and close out Expo 70. It will be toward the end of the year before that will be completed. So the $405,000 voted this year is for current expenses and to close the building when the fair is over on September 15.

Mr. Breithaupt: The building will be demolished, will it?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. We have $60,000 in the estimates to demolish the building. But it is a good structure, and if the Japanese come along and make us some kind of an offer, as they did down in Montreal—of course, in Montreal the building was given to Mr. Drapeau for $1, because it was a different type of building; this one, we still say, is a temporary building—however, if the Japanese find they want to use it, I do not suppose we are going to argue too much. If we save $60,000 and they want to keep the building, I do not think we are going to argue too much.

But, as a rule, the Japanese have torn down most of their temporary buildings and used the space for housing, and there is housing all around that area, as I am sure some of the members have seen who have been there. I do not think they are in favour of having a "son of Expo" when this is all over, so I would be inclined to believe that we will be asked to tear the building down and we provided for it.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, in the 1968-1969 estimates I cannot see any more than $125,000. Was that a treasury order, the money you speak of?

Hon. Mr. Randall: $225,000 was the Treasury Board order.

Mr. Sargent: Well, all you had budgeted in 1968 was $125,000. I want to see where the authority came from to spend that amount of money.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, the authority came from an order-in-council to go ahead with Expo 70 on the basis of around $2.6 million or $2.7 million, and the funds were advanced to get the project under way in 1968-1969, 1969-1970. That is where the authority came from.

Mr. Sargent: It was not passed in the estimates then?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, a portion would be included in last year's estimates, I would assume. There was money in last year's estimates for Expo 70. In 1969-1970 it was $1.14 million.

Mr. Breithaupt: Included as well, there were expenditures in 1968-1969—

Hon. Mr. Randall: $225,000.

Mr. Sargent: I see here the figure is $273,000 for Christopher Chapman Limited. Is that full payment for the film? Page 22-7 of the 1968-1969—

Hon. Mr. Randall: And what was the figure you were looking at?

Mr. Sargent: Under miscellaneous; Christopher Chapman Limited, $273,000 and a further amount of $533,000 to Takanaka Comutin Company.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think we have pointed out that $273,000 was the final payment to Chapman for the Expo 67 film. First payment for Expo 70 and Takanaka was the payment for the construction of the building. That was the construction company.

Mr. Sargent: Was Parkin part of that?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, Parkin is down on there for $40,032.19. He was the leading architect, in the building and Takanaka was the builder. Parkin designed the building and Takanaka built it.

Mr. Sargent: What is the total cost of the film?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The film is $698,062.50.

Mr. Sargent: $700,000.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Sargent: And your plans are to use that again back in North America here.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, the same thing we did for Expo 67. The Expo 67 film is now playing in Japan at the public theatres. It has played to roughly 125 million people since then.

Mr. Sargent: May I ask, Mr. Chairman, in the estimates of 1968-1969, where I got the same figures—there is an amount of $400,000 for Foster Advertising. Are they in the act here someplace?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, that has nothing to do with Expo 70. They are an advertising agency for domestic and international advertising.

Mr. Sargent: So, how do you spend $400,000 with Foster? What kind of promotion—

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is a different vote entirely. We approved something here today, I think. We went over $800-and-some-odd thousand this year, for advertising, and you say, "How do you spend it?" An advertising agency spends the money and we reimburse them and they get, I think, 15 per cent—

Mr. Sargent: I know, I know, but what kind of promotion is that for?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is for our domestic and international ads, radio and TV and all the artwork required to design our ads and have them ready for production.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I have a series of questions I want to ask about the exhibit in Osaka. The first point that comes to mind is the $60,000 figure for tearing the building down. When was the contract signed for that work?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think it was signed in 1968.

Mr. J. W. Ramsay (Special Projects Branch): When we concluded our contract with our Japanese contractor, we put in a clause asking for a bid on the demolition and they gave us a fixed bid if we decided to exercise it, of $60,000 on the demolition of the building. We were required by Expo regulations to level the site and return it to its original condition.

Mr. Singer: I understand that, but when was the actual commitment for the payment of the $60,000 made?

Mr. Ramsay: We have not yet made the commitment.

Mr. Singer: I see. Is it not true that in most contracts that were let for buildings in Expo, the contracting countries provided with the builder that the building be destroyed at the end of the fair and that it was a complete package?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is what we have done.

Mr. Singer: No, you have not done that.

Mr. Ramsay: We have it in as an option. We were the first pavilion to sign a contract with a Japanese contractor. Going on Expo 67 experience where a lot of pavilions had, in essence, agreed with the contractor on a fee and paid him the fee for the demolition of the building and then found, when they gave the building to the city of Montreal, that the contractor kept that extra money, we opted for an option.

Mr. Singer: I see. Well, is it not true that most of the other pavilions were able to take advantage of binding themselves in advance and escape the cost of $60,000 which Ontario has to now pay?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not think they escaped. It was included in the price of their building, as Mr. Ramsay just pointed out. The buildings have to come down according to the rules of the World's Fair, and if they paid in advance and the building does not come down, they do not get a refund of money, which happened at Expo 67. In our case, we made it an option, as Mr. Ramsay pointed out—if the building does not come down, we can save $60,000.

Mr. Singer: I see. Is there any other building that you know of where there was not a provision for the destruction of the building by the contractor who put it up?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, I do not know of any, unless Mr. Ramsay does.

Mr. Ramsay: Again, I think it is the requirement of the Expo regulations that it is in everybody's contract, but again we let—

Mr. Singer: Yes, the contract with Expo, but not the contract with the builder.

Mr. Ramsay: Well, under the contract, the Bureau of International Expositions lays down the regulations, many of which are incorporated in everybody's contract, and one regulation or requirement of every world's fair is that when you agree to go in—this is a standing regulation—you also agree to take down your pavilion. Montreal was the first fair that went as far as it did.

Mr. Singer: I recognize that. What I am suggesting—perhaps I have not been explicit enough—is that because you did not make provision in your original contract with the builder for the destruction of the building at the conclusion of the fair, as you are obligated to do by another contract, you have, in fact, cost the province another $60,000 because you have to go back and sign a new contract—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, no, not at all. You do not think a contractor would be stupid enough to go ahead and build a building and undertake for free, for the same price to build it, to tear it down. No contractor would be that stupid.

Mr. Singer: No, but it would seem to me that you would be in a far better bargaining position if you signed it as a bundle, than if you had to go back and do it all over again.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, we signed it as a bundle, only we kept our option open to save $60,000. The other guy signs the bundle and his money is down the drain. We will save $60,000 if we do not tear it down.

Mr. Singer: If you do not have to tear it down; but you are obligated to tear it down.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, all right, we are obligated, but if they decide, in their wisdom, they want to keep the building, we save $60,000. The other people do not.

Mr. Singer: Were there any documents signed obligating yourself to spend this $60,000 in the last six months?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is an option.

Mr. Singer: Have you exercised the option?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would say that we would not exercise the option until the fair is over and then we will decide whether we exercise the option or not. If we have to exercise the option, according to the rules of the world's fair, then we will have to exercise the option. But if the option is that we can leave the building up and walk away and not pay anything to tear it down, we save $60,000.

Mr. Singer: Have you, in fact, in the last six months firmly committed yourself to the destruction of this building for which you are going to pay $60,000?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Not unless the commissioner has done it; we have not done it from here.

Mr. Singer: Would the commissioner do it on his own without advising anyone?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I think the commissioner would get in touch with us.

Mr. Singer: Fine. Could you ascertain that before these estimates are through?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, we would be glad to.

Mr. Singer: Specifically, instead of dodging around.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We do not dodge around. We would be glad to get the information for you. We are not trying to avoid anything, we are trying to give you the information you want, but do not act like a high-class lawyer; just ask questions and we will give you the answers. Just get down to brass tacks. We are all friends down here; do not try to pin us on the nose. We do not have any lawyers on our side of the House.

Mr. Singer: I wanted to make some comments about my impressions of the film. They are subjective, I grant you, and in light of some of the answers the minister has made, he obviously does not agree with me. But let me tell you what I thought of the film. I thought it was a bad film.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Okay.

Mr. Singer: It runs 26 minutes, which apparently is the longest film there. It starts off with fairly long extracts showing highlanders in kilts playing bagpipes; it has a long—

Hon. Mr. Randall: What have you got against the Scotch?

Mr. Singer: It has a long sequence of—

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): It is the bagpipes.

Mr. Singer: —polar pictures with polar bears. It shows Niagara Falls in winter. It shows another long sequence which was recognized—well, I would imagine—by those who come particularly from the Toronto area, shows the Italian picnic on the Toronto Island. It has another long series of pictures of, apparently, county fairs where some old gentlemen are blowing brass tubas.

The impression I was left with having seen that film was that it was hardly representative of Toronto or Ontario to any kind of an audience, other than one that might have come from this province. It would seem to me that the film was certainly far less a success than the last one. When I was there I did not see those masses of applauding people which you told us about; I would not say that there never were any, but the place was very sparsely attended.

The people, the Japanese people particularly, who came did not stay looking at the film very long. It seemed to me that it would be very hard to portray any proper view of this province by the type of sequences that I have just described. I was very disappointed in it. Without disclosing any names, I talked to several people there who had seen it many times. They said that they were very disappointed in it, and efforts were being made to doctor it up.

Now, granted, no one in advance could tell about the success of any particular project; and granted that Chapman did an outstanding job for 1967; and granted he was being paid a lot of money. It would seem to me that discretion now being the better part of valour, it would be wise to withdraw this film and to substitute the film that is now showing in Japan—the 1967 film. I think it would have a much greater effect and portray Ontario in a much better fashion.

I do not think it is just highlanders parading in kilts or elderly gentlemen blowing brass tubas or an ethnic picnic on the Toronto Island. I think there is much more to it. I do not think Ontario is an Arctic waste, yet we saw all those series of pictures concerning the ice and the snow and the polar bears and the frozen Niagara. Ontario is a very pretty province—scenes of what is going on here in the springtime would have been most interesting; and far better for Ontario's image.

To my mind—and as I say it is subjective, and perhaps the minister does not agree with me—I was disappointed in the film. I would hope that some of Ontario's impression in Japan can be salvaged by replacing that film with the 1967 film.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I can assure you we have no intentions of replacing it. As far as the length is concerned, we did the same thing at Expo 67—the film was 22 minutes long; we reduced it to 17 to speed it up and take out the parts that we felt were dragging. We did the same thing with the one at Expo 70 and, for all the critics we have, we have just as many who are very enthusiastic about it. Here is one right here, Dorothy Michaels, who says:

The film which was shown in the Ontario pavilion at Expo 70 in Japan was proudly premiered by The Department of Trade and Development last night at Glendale Theatre. The pride was justified, for while the film differs from "A Place to Stand", the province's widely successful offering at Expo 67, it has a charm of its own and Chris Chapman, who was also responsible for "A Place to Stand", has included images of startling beauty which are sure to provoke discussion. He again uses the innovative techniques he pioneered in the earlier films, a large screen on which anywhere from one to 15 different pictures are projected. Having these pictures move around the screen is Chapman's special mark, not just the use of the split screen; he does things in his picture, that are still new three years after Expo.

The title is, "The Ontario Export Film To Be Proud Of".

Since you came home, and some of the changes you suggested have been made, we got a wire this week from the commissioner. He said:

NOTES TO THE MINISTER—CHAPMAN FILM HAS BEEN SELECTED BY EXPO 70 ASSOCIATION AS THE BEST FILM IN ITS CLASS HERE. FOR THE OFFICIAL FILM—

Mr. Sargent: It is the only one in its class.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Quoting:

FOR THE OFFICIAL FILM OF EXPO 70, WHICH IS NOW BEING MADE, ONLY CHAPMAN'S FILM AND ONE OTHER WILL BE HIGHLIGHTED. OFFICIAL EXPO FILM WILL ALSO FEATURE CATHY FAUQUIER. FROM TOTAL OF OVER 80 PAVILIONS, ONLY 10 HOSTESSES HAVE BEEN SELECTED TO REPRESENT EXPO AND CATHY IS ONE OF THE 10.

There is quite a story here but down on the bottom it said:

HOSTS AND HOSTESSES AND OPP CONTINUE TO BE OUR BEST INVESTMENT. I do not think you disagree with that.

Mr. Singer: No, I subscribe to that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Quoting:

LANGUAGE TRAINING HAS MADE A REAL IMPACT ON VISITORS. ROBERT HUDSON, PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER WHO HAS BEEN ON EXCHANGE FOUR YEARS HERE, TOLD ME THIS WEEK HOW PROUD HE WAS TO HEAR OUR YOUNG PEOPLE TAKING PART IN ACTIVE DISCUSSIONS WITH THE JAPANESE VISITORS. FRIENDLINESS AND ENERGY OF OUR GROUP HAS MADE THEM LEADERS AMONG FOREIGN PAVILIONS; OUR MARCH 31 PARTY FOR HOSTS AND HOSTESSES—FOR THE PAST SIX WEEKS WE HAVE BEEN MAKING THE PAVILION MORE LIVELY BY INTRODUCING A GO-GO SESSION ON WEEKENDS. ITS PURPOSE IS TO GET JAPANESE TO PARTICIPATE. WE HAVE HAD GOOD TV AND PRESS COVERAGE.

Mr. Sargent: Why are you always running on about something? Why do you not say what you mean?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I quote: "Epitome of Expo's spirit." And quote: "The first participating Expo trend." And: "Now that MCV area is coming to life, we may have go-go sessions and invite participation by families on snow cruisers, canoes, etc."

I had a call from a friend who got back yesterday. They said that the snow cruiser—they have taken the controls off—the youngsters are piling into it getting their pictures taken. They want a birchbark canoe and a cedar canoe if we will send one over; the cedar canoe is so that the kids can get in and out of it.

The funny thing about the Japanese people is that the very things we think are corny, they think are first-rate. I am not trying to be facetious, I am simply saying we looked at it with our knowledge and thought what we are providing out there would be a showstopper. But there are certain things. The British Columbia pavilion has found this out; it and the Quebec pavilion, and the Canadian pavilion have all had to make a number of changes because the Japanese people just do not think like we do.

We thought we knew all the answers, but as far as the picture is concerned, it is being very well accepted, and I must say it is a picture for the Japanese people. It is not for you and me because you and I saw Expo 67 and perhaps we would not consider the Expo 70 film as good a film. It did not have the music; it did not have a lot of things that Expo 67 had, but on the other hand, it is designed for the Japanese people. Apparently they like it because there had been almost a million through the pavilion when I got this wire the other day.

I think we mentioned in here that so far we have had something like 950,000 people.

The total number of visitors to the pavilion up to the evening of May 14 is approximately 950,000. This is a very conservative estimate because estimates up to mid-April were based on theatre crowd only. Later estimates are based on numbers entering the pavilion.

If you read, I think it was the Globe and Mail this morning, there was a very scathing article about the way the Japanese people themselves were accepting their Expo. They were not as enthusiastic as the people in Quebec for some reason or other.

I do not know why they are not, but all I say is that we spent the minimum amount of money to make an impact for Ontario. I think, as you recognize, Ontario absorbs about at least 50 per cent of all Japanese imports but most of their—I was going to say most of their investment—we hope a lot of their investment will come here.

That is the reason we took a position at Expo and spent the minimum amount of money. I think the British Columbia pavilion was something close to $4 million, the federal pavilion was $20 million, so we kept ours down to a point where we think we have made ourselves a contribution to Expo. I agree with you; perhaps you and I do not think the picture is number one but the Japanese like it.

Mr. Singer: Well, as I say, that is subjective. I did not want to get into the other aspect, but since the minister has raised it, I cannot be too high in my praise of the staff that is there. They are good people, they are working hard, they are charming, attentive and create a good impression. The best thing about the Ontario building is the hostesses and the OPP and generally the staff that is there. They are topnotch.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We took six weeks to train them in Japanese.

Mr. Singer: I give you full marks for that. It is money well spent. I give you full marks for that. That is the most impressive part. Now you are expanding into sort of public participation, the go-go sessions and so on. That certainly will arouse some interest there and that is a good thing. But you talk about the snowmobiles and birchbark canoes, other participatory things. Those are brand new and were never originally conceived, but the fact is you will have to tear out half your building and replace it with these other things, because the first thing did not work.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, we did not tear out half the building, as you will recall—

Mr. Singer: You redesigned—

Hon. Mr. Randall: The MCV was a long room with 9,000 images flashing on in 13 minutes and the people would not stand back long enough to look at it and the other pavilions found the same thing.

This has now been broken up into three sections, bigger pictures have been provided and more pictures of some of our manufacturing activities which we find they have an interest in.

This surprises us because we did not think they would have. We are doing the same thing as others are doing; we are modifying the building where we have to in order to make it more interesting for the visitors.

Mr. Singer: The fact is half the building has to be redesigned. You sent the people up a long narrow dark corridor with sort of rises in the floor. People were tripping over it.

They were walking into a mirror at the end. They were looking the wrong way. They were looking into the projection machine rather than at the pictures. They really could not see anything out of the projection machine, they had to look the other way, but there was nobody there to explain to them in Japanese what they were supposed to be seeing. To go back to the film—this is my particular concern—I do not think that that film really portrayed Ontario, the vibrant place that this is, the kind of attractive scenery that we have in the summertime or the springtime.

We are really not a polar country. We are not really a country that has only a great number of people gathering on a picnic over at the Toronto Island. Nobody bothered to explain that this was a particular kind of picnic that takes place once a year. This is really not—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do you not think the Japanese people want to see what Canadians are really like?

Mr. Singer: My suggestion is that the assembly of these scenes did not show them what Ontario people are really like.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I disagree with you.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: The names of display services are showing the effects of Hollywood.

An hon. member: Could we continue on the same point?

Mr. Sargent: This is on the same point. Dionne Park and Stewart Morrison and Lee Gendrama Productions—are they all part of the Expo costs, the film costs?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. All the people used in the building of displays and completing the film. For instance, the Hollywood part there—I imagine that is the editing of the film in colour, is it not, Mr. Ramsay?

Mr. Ramsay: That was the rental of a machine brought up from Hollywood to do multi-image. This was in payment to this firm. We did all the work up here.

Mr. Sargent: In effect, this film, then, works out to about $35,000 a minute. May I ask this in closing: Will this man Chapman continue to have an inside track on all your work in this department because of his success in getting in a blank cheque on this one?

Mr. Ramsay: For the Ontario Place displays, we have 300 film makers working. Chapman is not working on any of the Ontario Place films. He is doing films for the Hudson's Bay Company at the present time, so we intend to use a very broad spectrum of the film industry. We felt that in view of the success of Expo 67 we deserved a crack team at Expo 70. Since we got two Academy award nominations and an Oscar on the Expo 67 film we felt Chapman certainly deserved a crack at the Expo 70 film.

Hon. Mr. Randall: He may win an award—he may win some awards on this one yet. Again I say, maybe you and I do not appreciate it but—

Mr. Sargent: Who wrote the theme for it?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The music was written by William McCaulay—

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Humber (Mr. Ben). Do you have a question? The member for Renfrew South.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Mr. Chairman, I have been following the discussion here on the subject of the film, and I cannot help but think that after the tremendous success achieved and enjoyed by the film at Expo 67, perhaps we have created an image or standard that is so high it is hard to equal. I am reminded of—I think—the biblical film that Cecil B. DeMille produced many years ago. All the producers since then have tried in "The Robe" and

"Ben Hur" and many others to produce something equal, but everyone still looks back at that original biblical film as the one, and perhaps that is happening here with the case of our film this year for Expo 70.

I cannot help but be reminded also that away back in August or September, 1967—I don't know if it was the member for Downsview, or perhaps his leader—either or one of them or somebody from over there took the government of the province of Ontario to task for the film "Ontario" which was shown at Expo and so widely afterward. I recall, if you learn anything from past experience, that perhaps it is pretty dangerous ground for them to be digging up again, because I think they were severely rebuked at that time; the public would not buy any of that at all.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. The member for Renfrew South has attributed something to either me or my leader that is not quite true at all. The criticism levelled at that time—and it was levelled by me—was not directed to the film but was directed to its use as a political vehicle during the course of the election campaign that was being conducted at that time. We made a very valid objection then, and we continue it, that when a film or some work is produced by the government of Ontario, at the expense of the people of Ontario, it should not be used as part of election propaganda. That was the extent of the criticism in 1967. It was valid then and it is valid now.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Maybe it is coincidental that it was our 100th birthday and Expo 67 was on at the same time.

Mr. Singer: No, there was no criticism of the film. The criticism was directed to its improper use by the Tory party as a political vehicle.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The newspapers wrote the member right off on that one.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Brantford.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Mr. Chairman, I just want to get in on this discussion of Expo, and I generally endorse everything that has been said by the member for Downsview. As he said, the Ontario people—the hostesses, the hosts and the OPP—are the only thing going for the government. I made it a point, while I was there, to go to other pavilions of similar size; in fact,

I have been into most of the areas that were provided by countries or provinces of comparable size—the pavilions of the state of Washington, B.C., New Zealand and so on. I came back very depressed about the state of the Ontario pavilion.

Seriously, I think if you spent $2 million, or you will spend $2.7 million, that it is really a waste of money—of Ontario money or anybody's money, for that matter—because it does not get any message across to the Japanese. It may provide them a place to sit in the theatre for a while to rest between other pavilions.

You may say that there are one million people who have gone through the pavilion, but if you stood in the pavilion and watched them, they entered one door and they zipped out the other door. They went through the pavilion; they did not stop to see or go into the theatre or wait for the film. They just zipped through.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You know they were doing that in all pavilions, do you not?

Mr. Makarchuk: Well, in all buildings, but in this case they had nothing to stop for; that is the point. In other buildings, at least there was something to stop for.

Getting back to the film, the idea of Expo is that you have hopes it will tell something about the area, about the country, about the province, about Ontario. This particular film does not, in any way, indicate exactly what we are all about; it just does not. It does not show any of our industry. I notice you mentioned earlier that you have put in some pictures, but it does not show anything about our industry.

It shows very little about what the people of Ontario do; it shows very little of the countryside and how Ontario really appears. It does not even show where Ontario is. I am sure about 95 per cent of the people going through that pavilion are not sure where Ontario is or where it is located. They may think it is in Canada, but that is about all.

I think in that sense, you have a dismal flop there and not really anything that you have reason to be proud of right now.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, you are entitled to your opinion, of course. We do not buy it, because we have had a little more experience than perhaps you have with people who know something about the film business. And, as I said earlier, for every criticism you can offer, I can show you compliments from newspapers all over Canada, and what

I read out here this afternoon, that the Ontario film, with one other, was picked as the official film to be honoured at Expo. So there must be some good about the film, despite your comments—

Mr. Makarchuk: We are not—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I accept them in the spirit they are offered. You did not like the film—

Mr. Makarchuk: It is an excellent film, provided you are showing it to the local recreation directors' meeting, or if you are showing it to the Rotary Club; it is an excellent film in that respect. But to show it in Japan, to tell the people of Japan what Ontario is all about, it does not do the job.

Hon. Mr. Randall: As I pointed out in the House, we would look very foolish showing the Collingwood shipyards against the Japanese producing a ship and a half a day. We would look very foolish showing our television plants here with 15 people on a line, where the Japanese have half a mile of people sitting on a line. There are certain things that the Japanese people do much better than we do.

Mr. Makarchuk: Yes, we have admitted—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not think we would gain a lot by trying to take sophisticated manufacturing to the Japanese, particularly when we said the theme of Expo is "peace and harmony" and dealing with people—

Mr. Singer: It is certainly very peaceful in the Arctic wastes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: All right, they have not seen the Arctic wastes, but I think it was a very good shot. We have had more comments about Niagara Falls and the polar bears than we have with anything else.

Mr. Makarchuk: Well, the minister used the same factory scenes and so on to answer our questions earlier in the House, but there are other things. We do not necessarily have to compare our shipyards to the Japanese shipyards, but we certainly can compare our open spaces, we can compare our forests, we can compare our waters to those of the Japanese. We can compare our residences; we can compare Scarborough to, say, the suburbs of Tokyo. These are some of the things that are different from Japan. We do not have to draw the similarities, but there are differences. But, in this respect, this is where you fall down on the job.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Humber.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Chairman, when Mr. Christopher Chapman was commissioned to do this film, I questioned the wisdom of so doing, because I thought the government was pressing its luck. It is like a sweepstake winner running out the next day to buy another ticket. And, perhaps this is it: that we did press our luck.

I think that this whole argument is redundant, and the only way we are going to find out whether the criticisms that have been levelled against this film are proper is for this committee to appoint me as a committee to go over to Japan and see this film; perhaps take my wife for a woman's point of view and report back to you.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do you want me to pass the hat right now?

Mr. Ben: Right now. But, I might say that having seen Chapman's first film with all those scenes flashing by, the idea a person would get would be that the people in Ontario are schizophrenic; perhaps this film clip may be representative of this government, I do not know. I still cannot see all those scenes flashing. To me it is more of a toy than some kind of a message, but McLuhan says that it is the medium that is the message—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am afraid that if we sent you and Eddie, we might find that you did the same thing as Mr. Singer; you would wind up in the sauna baths and would not see the picture.

Mr. Ben: Eddie could go to the sauna baths and I will look after the film.

Vote 2206 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: I think we will take the next two votes, 2207 and 2208, together, and the first—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: What about Ontario Place?

Mr. Chairman: Ontario Place was discussed; it was discussed. We will discuss 2207 and 2208 together, because they are pretty well related. The first member we have is for Simcoe East.

On votes 2207 and 2208:

Mr. G. E. Smith (Simcoe East): Mr. Chairman, through you to the minister, since the introduction of the Design for Development, some of the municipalities in my area have been a little concerned lest the incentives that have been offered by the Trade and Development department are withdrawn. I am sure the minister will recall that he made the statement in the Legislature—I think it would be in the month of December—that nine per cent of the working population of the city of Orillia was unemployed, and the industrial commission there had been working frantically to replace two of the industries that have closed their doors. The question I would like to ask is, in view of the fact that certain areas in the plan have been designated for recreational development, is it the plan of your department to remove any EIO or industrial incentives that have been established, thus putting these municipalities, say, at an unfair advantage as far as normal industrial growth is concerned?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think I can only repeat what was said at the Queen Elizabeth building. The greater Toronto plan was introduced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and my colleagues. It was pointed out at that time that this was a plan for the future, that it would take time to make it work, but any major decisions with regard to the changes—I think they point out any major changes with regard to the airport—let us say, if we are going to have a major airport one of these days—we would like to know where it should go and what lands it will affect. As you know, a great deal of land has been sterilized and is waiting for some of these decisions to be made, with regard to water resources, pumping stations, sewers and water, and the clarification I think given by the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) on that has made it possible now to free some of these lands which people recognize are not going to be built on.

The same thing applies to our EIO programme which runs through to the end of 1971. At the moment I do not think the government has any intention of changing those plans until we get around to what they call a growth centre plan. As far as I am concerned, I do not object to a growth centre plan, but I do not think you can write these other towns off until you have something to replace it.

The growth centre plan is fine but right now it is the intention of the government, as far as I know, and there has been no policy yet, to change the incentive programme under EIO immediately and I would assume that we will continue with this plan until further notice. And I think that would be at the end of 1971.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Grey South.

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey South): Along the same line of thinking, Mr. Minister, there will be no change, then, in the incentives in regard to the area that is being established as opposed to the ones that now exist—in other words, the designations that you now make?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They remain as they are.

Mr. Winkler: As is?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Winkler: Okay, thank you.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. Pitman: I have been talking about growth centres for quite some time to the hon. minister. I am very pleased to realize now that we are finally going to deal with growth centres from here in.

I would just like to make a passing reference to the whole question of the Toronto-centred plan, how it relates to the EIO. First, I think it is ludicrous that we should first have a Toronto-centred plan without an Ontario plan. If you read the Toronto-centred plan, you are immediately made aware of the fact that it is not a detailed, highly sophisticated plan, but really a sketching out of what direction the province is going.

I find it rather strange, to say the least, that we should be really treating the rest of the province as a solution to Toronto's problems. One wonders why we could not have had an Ontario-sketched plan to begin with, and then have come to a conclusion as to what role Toronto should play within that plan. What I am suggesting is not that the Toronto-centred plan is not a logical one—I think there is a great deal of logic to it—but obviously the sprawl has to stop; we have to control the growth of Toronto unless we want it to become another Los Angeles or Chicago. Obviously we want to do that; we want to provide some kind of a green belt around Toronto.

But I say that surely the people in the areas outside Toronto should have some part to play in the kind of society they are going to live in? They should have some part to play in the input, you might say, which created that plan, and that is my final comment. I will make that comment to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. It is perhaps more relevant, but it provides the takeoff I want to make on this particular vote.

The EIO programme over the last number of years, of course the minister realizes, has in my estimation been an unjust, a very simplistic, unsophisticated kind of incentive programme. I might just relate it to the statement the minister himself made, I think last spring, on the new programme for the Equalization of Industrial Opportunity in Ontario.

On page three of that programme, the objectives of the programme are set out. The first statement is that it is to provide equalization of opportunities for all municipalities in Ontario to attract industry. Well, of course, it is obviously not a programme to provide equalization of opportunities for all municipalities, so it is totally unjust.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are splitting hairs here, because some in this province are better off than others and they have equalization of opportunity. Our plan was set up to take care of the have-not municipalities, you recognize that.

Mr. Pitman: The have-not municipalities must be about 75 per cent of the whole of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, no.

Mr. Pitman: You have a great mass of land in eastern Ontario and all northern Ontario, is that not true?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, but most of those places are doing a pretty good job of looking after themselves. Peterborough does a pretty good job of looking after itself. You would not call that a have-not town.

Mr. Pitman: I think the minister received a letter this morning, at least it reached my desk this morning, from one group of people who perhaps feel theirs is not a "have" town, and this is the unemployed organization of workers in that area who suggested the approximate figure of unemployment is 13 per cent. I do not want to go into the problems of Peterborough again and again with the minister.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You do not have to go into them. All I say is, these things are now heightened by the federal government's inflationary programme and I do not think you can blame that on the EIO.

Mr. Pitman: No, but I have suggested for the last two years that—well, I will read to you, if you want to get down to Peterborough; I was not intending to do this—the chairman of the Peterborough industrial development organization, who is certainly, I am sure, not an opponent of the minister politically, states that,

The chief source of frustration in Peterborough's attempt to develop a meaningful programme of development in the new industry and expansion of industry has been the equalization programme. It is completely surrounded by provincial developments, growth areas, Lindsay, Port Hope, Cobourg, Trenton, Belleville and so on.

As I say, I am not going to go into this. The mayor has made that very plain to the minister. The statement has been made also in Stratford, that the Ontario Development Corporation is harming industrial growth across Ontario by granting it forgivable loans. I am not going to go into that whole area, but I think that statement is certainly an unfortunate one in that particular area.

I think that now we have the Toronto-centred plan it is imperative that the minister now begin to rationalize this programme, this veneer programme of simply putting, as the minister puts it, "a pay cheque down Main Street." It is just so simplistic, so unsophisticated, it is just laughable. It seems to me it is about time we started getting serious about this. I suggest to the minister, the only way you can justify this kind of a programme is to make an Ontario-wide programme, and to make it really equalization of opportunities for all municipalities.

The first thing you have to do is to change the municipal tax structure, because it is totally unjust to take tax money from one community which feels it has a high level of unemployment. When this question about the criteria came up—I remember the minister got into that last year—he mired himself completely in trying to compare Peterborough with Lindsay, which was like trying to compare apples and peanuts.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I never got mired.

Mr. Pitman: There was an awful mess. Boy! You were certainly mired so far as everyone else—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You might have been mired, but not me.

Mr. Pitman: When you try to compare two cities in terms of population—one which has just taken over an area of land and one which has not—I think that is about as pathetic as one can possibly emerge from that kind of a debate. But nevertheless, here again I do want to get into that point.

The point is that your programme is to alleviate the tax burden on our municipalities. You are not alleviating the tax burden on municipalities as long as you have a system of taxation which is essentially based on local industry as well as local housing. So until you adjust municipal taxes to allow you to spread the taxes on industrial development throughout the entire province—to those areas which do not get industrial growth—you have no justification for a programme such as this. It is totally unjust to take the taxes from one community and apply them to the development of other communities to the detriment of that community, in many cases making it unable for them to provide services, to provide decent roads, to provide in some cases a whole spectrum of municipal services.

So that is one of the major things that minister has to consider, the relationship of his programme to what now seems to be an emerging provincial plan, although I say it it certainly a backward way of doing it, starting in Toronto and working your way up. Secondly, it has to be related to a total change of the municipal taxation structure, some kind of a foundation plan which will allow all of the municipalities in Ontario to get some kind of justice when it comes to industrial development.

His third comment in that particular statement was to provide opportunities for gainful employment for our young people in the smaller centres of population.

Let us get this very clear and very straight. I do not want any barracking about my being against small towns again. I have a number of small towns in my own area and there is nothing better than living in a small town as far as I am concerned, but to suggest that you can rehabilitate small towns in a technological society by spreading industry right across the province with all of the pollution problems and all of the other housing problems that you create, is just simply unacceptable and inappropriate. It is about time that we recognized that.

That is one of the major reasons why the EIO programme is regarded as being laughable by so many people who are in industry and commerce in this province. You cannot provide opportunities for gainful employment for young people in smaller centres; what you can do is develop growth points. I am glad to hear that the minister has now finally accepted that as the only rationalization of development.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You recognize that will only come when we have regional governments.

Mr. Pitman: Well, I think the minister is putting a very interesting point there. I would agree there is a stepping stone in there. You do not have to develop regional government in order to provide some sort of sensible municipal tax system; I think they can go hand in hand. With the school board, what we did was to develop the structure and now we are trying, you might say in a horrendous fashion, to at least make the taxation make some sense, much to the embarrassment of everyone concerned.

We can do it the other way, too. We can start to rationalize the municipal taxes and then try to develop the structures to go along with it. The point I am making here is that to suggest that you are going to provide opportunities for gainful employment—that is the minister's old gambit; we are going to put a pay cheque down Main Street—it is just absolutely impossible.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is working.

Mr. Pitman: It is not working, Mr. Minister. Well, in any case, it may be working on a very short-term basis. That is, you may very well be putting an uneconomic instrument in many cases in each centre. He may be providing short-term employment. He may very well be doing it, in many cases, by encouraging industry to go into an area that pays lower pay rates, but as soon as that industry becomes unionized—we may get into this whole area, the role of the EIO as it relates to wage rates and unionization, all of these things that we regard as simple justice in this part of the Legislature. Nevertheless, I have some very real questions about what the role of EIO is in relation to that in that whole programme.

I want to come back to the point. Has this government, for example, ever considered—I am reading here from a background study made by the Atlantic Development Board, called "Urban Centres in Atlantic Provinces" and there is just one paragraph here which I think should be read into the record because I think it means something to us in Ontario. We have got to get this into our minds in relation to small communities. This is the kind of thing we were talking about in Education, too. I can remember when officials of The Department of Education said, "If we can just put in large high schools all across Ontario we can get these young people to come into the smaller towns".

It is impossible, you cannot do it this way. These smaller towns do have a viable role, but it is in providing money for service industries, providing money for recreation. This piddling $1 million which we ran through in Tourism is just irrelevant.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I ask you one question? If we do not supply industry in these small towns and the young people come in to work for us, what do you want them to do—come to Toronto?

Mr. Pitman: As I pointed out, first we can make them into bedroom communities, livable bedroom communities—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Only if you have—

Mr. Pitman: —by developing a rational transportation system.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Only if you have regional government.

Mr. Pitman: Second, we can put them into the service industries. This is the area that is going to develop from now on. I do not want to get back onto that other argument we had yesterday whereby the minister was saying that technology does not destroy jobs. It obviously destroys jobs in the industrial sectors. It is the service industries which will provide you with your jobs from now on. That is the area where you can provide some kind of help in the smaller centres across Ontario, but it certainly will not be in industry.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You did not follow that right through to a conclusion. If you did not have any secondary industry for all you know, you would not have any service industry.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Minister, that is obvious. I will buy that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Then do not write off service—

Mr. Pitman: I did not write off service industry.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do not write off manufacturing industries because service is climbing.

Mr. Pitman: I am not doing that at all. The minister is the one who is writing off service industry.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am not doing that at all. I am being very practical, recognizing that the service industries are going to have more and more people living off the guy who is producing. The guy who is producing has to be—

Mr. Pitman: The machine that is producing is more accurate.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The guy who is producing has to have more knowledge and he has to keep up with technical advances or he is not going to have a job.

Mr. Pitman: Yes, and the machine that is producing is a more accurate description of that situation.

Hon. Mr. Randall: All right.

Mr. Pitman: I want to read this:

Growth centres are currently fashionable. They are, of course, nothing new. What is new is the realization that this is the natural thrust of development that it is good economic sense to back a winner rather than prop up a loser. The reality of this is harsh. It is easy in the context of analysis to decide that this centre has growth potential, but if it does not, this is the kind of decision that is very difficult to make and politically very unpopular.

I realize that.

It is no more than an observation of the phenomenon that has been occurring since cities were founded, but the fortunes of people are tied up in the fortunes of the place where they are located.

I was wondering about some of these EIO companies that we put into areas of unexplored potential.

The success of a business, the value of a house, the very quality of life itself is, in large part, determined by the success of the town where people are identified and where they have sunk their roots. If the town is going to stagnate and die, the investment in a home, the success of a business, the quality or availability of education are all jeopardized.

At present there is no compensation available for the losses that may be faced. In fact at the very time mobility would be most desirable, mobility is least possible since there is no way of realizing investment of a lifetime, no purchaser for a house, no sale for a business. No wonder it is the young who are most mobile; they have not yet acquired the hostages to fortune that are represented by roots and investments in the community. The sudden and dramatic death of a town such as Wabana, Springhill, or Elliot Lake, will spur a crash programme of limited effectiveness to relieve the misery, but for each dramatic exit there are hundreds of quiet expirations that are unmarked or unnoticed except by those who suffer through them.

This is what I wish to point out to the minister:

There is a need to develop a policy to cope with the decay and death of towns, not just to handle the sudden and dramatic closure of some resource-based centre, but to ease the transition of the hundreds more that will inevitably expire. Until there is one clear barrier to mobility, people will remain in place, with more rationalization and adjustment in human misery.

It would be better in the long run to complete the readjustment swiftly with adequate safeguard for human welfare than to attempt to prop up doomed centres with a school, a wharf, or a post office. These monuments to "ad hocery" are inadequate to create viable centres; they divert funds from urgently needed growing communities.

I just point that out to the minister, in areas—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Is your party suggesting that we undertake the Canada programme in this province and eliminate all these towns?

Mr. Pitman: That is not the point, Mr. Minister, and the minister realizes it. He is playing games.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am not playing games. They have done this in Newfoundland and I can understand why. Are you suggesting they do the same thing in the province of Ontario?

Mr. Pitman: No, I am not suggesting that we phase out our towns. I am suggesting that the equalization programme is a joke when you put it across huge areas. For example, the north where there was the desire for equalization, where in fact the whole programme was announced, has received the least; the areas where growth of property has gone on naturally received the most. In essence even from the point of view of its own rationalization, the EIO programme has not been a success.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Where have they gone naturally?

Mr. Pitman: It has gone naturally to parts of western Ontario; it has gone naturally along the lakeshore where your best transportation, and your closest markets are and where you might say the economic factors are most obvious.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Would you say it has gone naturally in eastern Ontario?

Mr. Pitman: Yes, along the lakeshore, certainly. I would say that was one of the more natural areas. I think it is quite obvious.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Nothing happened down there until the EIO programme was started, nothing. I can take you into Cobourg and they have five industries there today and the town is alive and thriving and kicking. There are other things that are going to happen down there in Cobourg. I sold washing machines in Cobourg back in the thirties and it never changed from that time—the thirties—until the time we started the EIO programme. Those towns have been brought alive with the EIO programme.

Mr. Pitman: Well, we can—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I respect your views but do not expect me to accept everything on face value.

Mr. Pitman: I would not expect that for a moment. I am pointing out to you that this programme is simply not rational, that it has massive injustices involved on the basis of the present municipal tax structure, and the present hopes for many of these communities. I am not specifically speaking about small areas. I am suggesting that you rationalize them, give them the proper opportunities in some sort of a municipal tax basis, as well as this, in a service area.

I am sure we are going to have quite a long discussion of the Americanization aspect.

One cannot help but suggest that when you bring in, say, a company like Kraft, which after all had its own capital sources, it did not need your money. It does not need the money of the taxpayers of Ontario; it is really in the form of a bribe.

Hon. Mr. Randall: And they do not need Prince Edward county.

Mr. Pitman: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They do not need the county they went into either.

Mr. Pitman: They do not need the county they went into?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, they do not need that county.

Mr. Pitman: They certainly—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, they could have gone right out here in Toronto or along the lakeshore or anywhere around here.

Mr. Pitman: So what you are suggesting is we have to bribe these American corporations to move where we want them?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have to bribe not only the American, but the Canadians and the British, the Japanese, the French, the Dutch, the Finns, anybody we bring in here. If you want to call it a bribe, we have to give them an incentive to go where we want them to go. This is the same in every province in Canada; it is the same in every state in the United States.

Mr. Pitman: I think there is a very real—

Mr. Peacock: Do you know why you want them to go there?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, we know why we want them to go there. There were people looking for jobs.

Mr. Pitman: But you see, in the long run, in many cases—for example with Kraft—there is very little indication that a number of other cheese factories closed down, that total employment was not increased. There seems to be something strange about giving Canadian taxpayers' money to Kraft Foods, which creates the greatest degree of opposition to the importation of Canadian cheese to the American market. That seems to me to be a rather strange way to use the Canadian taxpayers' money.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Since you are so worried about imports—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are away over my head. I do not understand you.

Mr. Pitman: That is incredible.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If you go out and look at the cheese business, we are short of cheese. When you go to Great Britain; they will tell you they cannot get enough Black Diamond cheese. As far as I know, the cheese market is wide open for anybody, whether it is here or the United States.

Mr. Pitman: We are going to have a great deal of discussion on this—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am sure we are.

Mr. Pitman: I think it comes right back to our giving—

Mr. Chairman: Are you all finished?

Mr. Pitman: No, I am not. I have one more comment to make before I ask one or two questions.

Specifically, first—I think it is outrageous we should be giving the loans to American firms to encourage them to capitalize in Canada; in other words, to continue and increase and exacerbate a development which most people in Canada are not only concerned but very worried about.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I ask you one question? Do you not think that Kraft make any contribution to the Canadian economy?

Mr. Pitman: Oh, certainly they make a contribution to the Canadian economy.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, tell us what contribution they make to the Canadian economy.

Mr. Pitman: Well, I know you have pointed out yourself that they, in the short run, are moving jobs.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They are doing more than that.

Mr. Pitman: I am not sure that they are providing—

Hon. Mr. Randall: How about the short run? They are here as long as most Canadian companies. They have been here for years.

Mr. Pitman: I think if you totalled it all up they are probably undermining the Canadian economy more than they are supporting it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: What is the difference who owns the company if they are operating in Ontario?

Mr. Pitman: What is the real difference? Good heavens. After what we talked about yesterday, the hon. minister asks, "What is the difference?"

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, tell me what is the difference.

Mr. Pitman: In terms of an international corporation which decides on the basis of a world-wide balance book whether a company in Canada or Ontario closes down or not, where there is no commitment to the community; which does not give a damn about the workers; which does not care a hoot about that particular urban centre.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is not true, you know that.

Mr. Pitman: Well, that is not all. We have seen that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is your party and you are going to sing it from the rooftops because you have got a—

Mr. Lewis: You have sung it before as well.

Hon. Mr. Randall: —you have got a political gimmick—

Mr. Lewis: You have sung it before and you have—

Hon. Mr. Randall: —and you are going to sing it from the rooftops. We do not buy it.

Mr. Pitman: Well, we specifically nailed it down to companies such as Dunlop and you had to agree with it right there. Certainly, as I say, I pale at the thought of the continuation of the Americanization of things, but it should be tied to complete disclosure.

And what about research? Did you have any ties in relation to whether that company does any research in Ontario or not, or is all the research being done somewhere else and we are simply carrying out, really, what they decide we should do in some other part of the world?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, Dunlop have a big research plant out here at Sheridan Park. There is a good example. They have a research plant out there. They were one of the first ones out there.

Mr. Pitman: Dunlop did?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, Dunlop. Sure.

Mr. Pitman: It is not an important example.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh no, I think of the 11 or 12 companies out there, half of them are American companies. We have been through the list, there are 25 possibilities in Canada for research—

Mr. Pitman: But you do not tie it to demand.

Hon. Mr. Randall: —25 possibilities and we have half of them in Sheridan Park. The rest of them—

Mr. Pitman: That is a separate programme altogether. That is not the EIO programme.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do not duck the issue now. You just talked about these people doing no research here. I just pointed out—

Mr. Pitman: I did not, I said—

Hon. Mr. Randall: The very company you were talking about has got a big research facility.

Mr. Pitman: I just said is there any tie-in on the EIO loan as to whether research is done here in Canada rather than in the United States?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, the EIO loan is to encourage them to do everything here, manufacturing and research.

Mr. Pitman: But you do not tie it in.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Would you go down and say, "Will you do all your research here now for—"

Mr. Pitman: Part of it, certainly, is not inadequate. It is the only way we are going to get some control over the things that they do. As I say, disclosure and research are certain key areas that should be tied in with EIO.

I think it would be interesting to know whether any companies we have supported have been unable to carry out their responsibilities. In other words, have you called back, have you unforgiven these forgivable loans in some cases?

Hon. Mr. Randall: None that I know of. If they have met their commitments—

Mr. Pitman: Have they all met their commitments?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Those that have got their money have met their commitments.

Mr. Pitman: Every single company that has been brought into Ontario has?

Hon. Mr. Randall: As far as I know. Ask my friend, Mr. Etchen. Mr. Etchen would you like to—

Mr. A. Etchen (Ontario Development Corporation): Yes, any of those that have not met the commitments or could not make the standard have not received the sum.

Mr. Pitman: How do you know whether they have?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am telling you they have.

Mr. Etchen: As they put up their building, we put our money in last. The companies put their money in first. They have to put up the building and they have to install the machinery and equipment. Our engineers go down to see the building is up, see the equipment is in, the other things are in, and when those are in we put our money in.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): What about the job content?

Mr. Etchen: Well, the job comes in. I would be very pleased to tell you about this. I think—

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Etchen, the hon. member for Peterborough is asking the questions. I think the other hon. member must wait until his turn comes.

Mr. Pitman: I will get back. I will stop now.

Mr. Chairman: You will stop now? Okay. The hon. member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, this vote is for the location and development of industry in Ontario and the EIO we are talking so much about. In the report of 1968-1969 it shows advances of $2,676,000 on non-interest-bearing advances were made under the EIO programme and for Centralia Industrial Park. Centralia Industrial Park received top billing in these estimates last year.

Incidentally, Mr. Chairman, I think there are maybe 20 of us here who want to talk on this vote, so I think if the chair would like to make a motion that each member contain himself to five minutes I think it would be fairer, if you want to do that.

Mr. Chairman: I have quite a number of the members who would like to make comments on this vote.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Chairman: Sure, we have lots of time. We have all kinds of time.

Mr. Sargent: In my submission yesterday and on Tuesday, I felt that the distribution of these loans was highly questionable, in view of the fact that nothing I have brought forward in the past eight years has received any attention in our area. The key case was the case of Travelmate Motor Homes Limited. This was to do with the building of Travelmate motor homes, and as I said during the committee, two-thirds of all the new homes built in the United States last year were mobile homes, and the minister felt that this was a great market to develop. In fact, the minister was going to work on getting loans available for this type of housing.

This company here, Travelmate Motor Homes in Owen Sound, applied. He bought an old plant and wanted to convert it—he was a very successful operator in different fields—to enlarge his motor-home building. He was building motor homes, about two or three a week, I think, in his old location. He wanted to get into big-scale production, and he had $200,000 in signed orders and that is a pretty good start in this field, so I encouraged him to approach the government.

He had a lot of dealings with Mr. Etchen and the department and they led him up the old garden path. He received a letter on April 21, 1970, refusing him any loan. Now, even though he is a success in other lines, he is thinking of going out of business because he cannot process these orders.

The thing we are talking about is diversification and development and I think maybe decentralization is just as paramount in the minister's mind as anything in this conglomerate mess we have here in Toronto. I think it is very important we decentralize and diversify and develop. He wrote this letter to Mr. Woods; is he here? He says:

Thank you for your letter of refusal to consider my application for assistance to establish my manufacturing business. It sounds rather odd that the renovation, etc., of my plant does not qualify for any assistance when I read the ODC paid out $50,000 to renovate two aircraft hangars at Centralia, to induce that firm—

That is the hon. Provincial Treasurer's (Mr. MacNaughton) riding.

—to move, not to expand to that area. It would appear that the ODC money is available to those firms who are financially sound, able to finance any expansion that they require, who do not necessarily want to expand but will when handed enough money, but that this is not available to a firm endeavouring to start an industry that is entirely new for Ontario and which has an unlimited future, an industry that catapulted one United States manufacturer from $10,000 to $90 million in just six years.

This man has potential. He has proved himself. He is A1 in every respect. The minister said he would prove to me that this man had no right to a loan, and there is no parallel. If the Provincial Treasurer was able to get a $50,000 loan through, this man could not, so Mr. Minister, my first question is: Why is this man discriminated against?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Did you say he was doing $90 million worth of business?

Mr. Sargent: No, no. He says these monies are "not available to a firm endeavouring to start an industry that is entirely new for Ontario and which has an unlimited future, an industry that catapulted one United States manufacturer from $10,000 to $90 million in just six years." He has applied for this firm in Canada and this firm he is talking about has exploded down there.

The point that I want to get to is why, in heaven's name, can the Provincial Treasurer get paragraphs in the auditor's report and in the estimates for the Centralia Industrial Park while this man doing a parallel deal cannot get a loan? That is one point. I know that the minister is going to explain to me why he should not have help. Why should he not have help?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Can I just suggest that we listen to the hon. member for Peterborough and yourself—maybe go around—and we will come back and answer all your questions.

Mr. Sargent: No, I have a lot of things I want to get to that are just as important. You may as well answer them.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Why do we not let Mr. Etchen answer Mr. Sargent's question for the moment on this particular—

Mr. Sargent: You told me you would prove to me—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, all right. I would like Mr. Etchen to tell you what did happen on this occasion.

Mr. Etchen: This is a report I have from Mr. Clark, who is a director of our consultative services:

Mr. Ridell has a small but successful electric, plumbing and heating contracting business in Owen Sound. Some time ago he built himself a motorized mobile home. Friends asked him to build similar units for them and he decided to launch a second business in this field.

We began talking to him in May, 1969, when he asked for assistance to buy land and build a new plant at a total cost of $50,000. We proceeded to investigate and had prepared by November, 1969, a submission report recommending a forgivable loan for $16,500.

At this time Ridell advised he had changed his mind and instead of putting up a new building, had decided to purchase an existing building. Now this, of course, did not qualify for the EIO loan and we closed our file.

Mr. Sargent: How did Centralia qualify?

Mr. Etchen: May I answer this question first and then I will answer your other question.

It is quite true that I received this letter from Mr. Ridell; the one you have just quoted addressed to Mr. Woods, was not in at that time. Mr. Clark phoned Mr. Ridell April 21, 1970, inviting him to resubmit his application, to come in, get in touch with us again and we would review it again, and we are still waiting for Mr. Ridell to get in touch with us.

Mr. Sargent: Say that again.

Mr. Etchen: We are still waiting. Mr. Clark, the director of our consultative services, on the day that this letter was received—the one that you have quoted and we received it here, according to our stamp on April 24, 1970—phoned Mr. Ridell and invited Mr. Ridell to resubmit his application to come in and see us.

Mr. Sargent: Stop one second. On April 14 you said “no” very conclusively. On April 21 he replies to you. Now what happened next?

Mr. Etchen: Mr. Clark, Mr. Woods’ superior, reviewed the case and phoned Mr. Ridell, talked to him personally and asked him to come in, asked him to send him the information and we would review it again. We are still waiting.

Mr. Sargent: This is the old ballgame. This is what happens to scores and scores of people I have brought down and the minister calls them deadbeats. I can see that he got fed up with the same old stuff. He asked me what I thought and when he got the refusal I said, “Leave them alone, forget about it.”

Mr. Etchen: Well, I want to say to Mr. Sargent—

Mr. Sargent: Well, it is all experience and it is a pretty good yardstick, is it not? I have not had one in eight years go through, and they said “no” conclusively on April 14 and now this starts all over again.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, now do not forget the man was going to build a new building which would qualify him for an EIO grant. Then he decided he was not going to build a new building, he was going to rent a building.

Mr. Sargent: Right.

Hon. Mr. Randall: So when he decided to rent a building, then he said his whole approach to manufacturing trailers had been changed and this is when Mr. Clark and Mr. Etchen’s department asked him to come in. Now the man has got to the point where he has been asked to come in—

Mr. Etchen: We are waiting for Mr. Ridell to come in.

Mr. Sargent: I do not see how he could. Who reactivated this programme? You said no and what happened then? He wrote this letter and said—

Mr. Etchen: He wrote this letter in for Mr. Woods—

Mr. Sargent: To the minister. A copy to the minister.

Mr. Etchen: Wait a minute. He wrote this letter in to Mr. Woods who is a consultant who turned the case down. When this Mr. Ridell wrote again, Mr. Woods’ superior, Mr. Clark, reviewed the case again, in the light of Mr. Woods’ letter, and invited him to come in to resubmit his case and we are still waiting for Mr. Ridell to come back in. When he does, we shall review his case.

Mr. Sargent: Well, this is beautiful. I certainly will see that he is on your doorstep Monday morning.

Mr. Etchen: Well, please do.

Mr. Sargent: And for God's sake, quit giving my people the runaround; they are people and they pay taxes. That is important.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Sargent, just one minute. We are here to give service to anybody. If you bring a man in and there is any way we can help him through ODC or EIO we will. There are two loans in your town right now that you know of. I went up there myself and you know I was up there when you were down here with estimates or something last year and we qualified your town for jobs for 100 people up there.

One is Richardson Bond and Wright; here they are right here.

Mr. Sargent: I know that. I brought that up before.

Hon. Mr. Randall: There is Canadian Signals Company, 20 jobs rising to 95. Richardson Bond and Wright, 70 to 75 and I will answer that one too. I have a good story for you on that one. I was waiting for you to ask that one in the House and you fooled me, you did not ask it. There have been two loans up there to assist, since you spoke to me and we opened up Owen Sound, recognizing that there were—1,700 people I think at the time—on the Manpower list looking for jobs; we opened Owen Sound up. And any companies that come to us and which would go into Owen Sound, we have given them a hearing. We have helped these two companies.

Mr. Sargent: Well, we will leave that. I would surmise that the Provincial Treasurer would not have the same problem I am having. Let us just leave it there.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, anybody would have the same trouble you are having, I assure you.

Mr. Sargent: Some day you are going to be in the opposition and you are going to go through what we are going through. It is very frustrating.

Hon. Mr. Randall: God forbid!

Mr. Chairman: Have you got anything further, the member for Grey-Bruce?

Mr. Sargent: Well, the loan of $1 million to the tourist industry is this, as the member for Peterborough mentioned, a real shaker. You are going to be getting lots of copies of magazines and editorial comments and letters from all over the province on this thing.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do you write that magazine?

Mr. Sargent: No, I publish it. It is the voice of tourism in this province.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I know it will not be pro us.

Mr. Sargent: $1 million is spent among 8,000 operators and there are going to be 20 loans of $50,000 each. This industry supplies over $60 million in tax revenue to this government and you spend about $2 or $3 million getting people to come in here to go to these places, and most of them are having a rough time financially, and they need help badly, and you take a measly $1 million—what you would pay for a film—you take that for the whole industry and you get that $1 million. So you know my thoughts on that one.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Can I just suggest one thing to you? When a programme is started like the $1 million for tourism, that really is seed money because the man who comes in who wants to borrow $20,000 may say, "I am going to put an addition on to my lodge and I am going to buy something for my lodge" but it may be five or six months before he requires the money.

So the $1 million could very well take care of a great many needs in the first year and when the budget comes up next year, it will be through the Treasury Board through the Minister of Tourism and Information (Mr. Auld) and there will be more money available same as you do with the EIO programme—

Mr. Sargent: Maybe $2 million.

Hon. Mr. Randall: So, I would not look at the $1 million as all going to be spent in one year because enough cases come for it, perhaps it will—but I can assure you our experience with a lot of the EIO loans—I think the first year I explained on the EIO loans we spent something like $2.5 million and put through I think, about $10 million, $11 million or $12 million with a commitment approval?

So the money we have to handle for tourism is not necessarily the limit given to the tourist industry. It is—let us call it seed money; it is a starter for the tourist industry and as you well know, we have been after the Minister of Tourism to come up with a programme in order to help the tourist industry, because we were not in a position through Ontario Development Corporation to do so in view of the restriction in the Act. Now, as far as we are concerned, we drew up the first balance sheet for the tourist industry, which most of them are using today to find out if they are losing money or making money, and I think if you look at the $1 million, look at it as a start to help the tourist industry.

Mr. Sargent: I mean the fact is, Mr. Minister, that you have hundreds of requests for loans for ODC and previously—and I do not want to go into that—only four were granted, in the past two years. That is ridiculous, that you have no regard for the industry, or you—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, we are processing another five right now.

Mr. Sargent: Motel loans? That is good.

The only thing I would like to say is that in New York State they have, instead of this bribery of American corporations, Mr. Minister—you say you gave them $17 million and really you say it encouraged them, in New York State, they do not go that route. I do not think, in the final summation of the foregoing, that incentive really amounts to anything. I think if you go the route they are going down there, that is using taxpayers' money to bribe Americans—for instance, in New York State, they have the newest tax benefit for business with the corporate franchise tax deduction of one per cent for investments in new, expanded or modernized research facilities. For example, the $100,000 tax credit on a $10 million investment—now that—

Hon. Mr. Randall: For research you say?

Mr. Sargent: Pardon me?

Hon. Mr. Randall: For research?

Mr. Sargent: For expanding new, expanded or modernized production or research facilities—in a new investment for industrial—and I think that is the route you should be going. Give them incentive insofar as deduction—one per cent deduction on their taxes instead of using the guy who carries a lunch pail; he is paying the piper for these American corporations. This is completely wrong and you know it is wrong. And finally, I would like to ask you this: Why can you not take a like amount of money—$17 million—to use as incentive for big business, that is put $17 million here in Ontario Development Corporation or the Canadian Development Corporation—what John Deacon has been talking about.

The Ontario Development Corporation was for the small entrepreneur, the small, independent manufacturer. Why can you not make it part of the Act to try and go into business with him?

You set that fund up like that. You say, "We will take their assets and pool them and give the small operator in Ontario a break."

That would satisfy my needs, which are looking at the whole spectrum here, because you are only going one way and the whole vote is all geared to big business. That is my objection to the route because you are a big businessman-thinker and you do not think the way a lot of us do and the 117 members of this Legislature are small, average guys and we do not go the route you go.

We like to think the small service industries have a right, as Jack Spence said yesterday, and a 30- or 40-employee industry in a small town is a big deal. We break our ass to get a 30 or 40—pardon me—we would do anything to get a major industry in Owen Sound that employs 30 or 40 people. Anyone would love to have a 30-employee industry in his town.

Mr. Winkler: It is a start.

Mr. Sargent: Well, that is great; you are on the right side of the fence.

Mr. Winkler: No, I am to the left of you.

Mr. Sargent: Well, I have said my piece but I think that in fairness you must admit there is a good bit of logic in giving the other part of the economy a break.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, the only thing I would say to that is that the programme is not geared to big industry, as you well know. Anybody who is in business in the manufacturing business or in the service business can come and see us and I do not care how many people they have.

I can show you accounts where they employ three or four people and have received loans, and as I said yesterday, 80 per cent of industry employs 50 people or less, and if we were only going to deal with what you call small industry, or big industry, I do not think we have given any loans at all—I think the other day we had given 234 to date.

Mr. Sargent: Can I ask one question?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Wait a minute—let me finish. I just want to point out that the $17 million you keep referring to, you are overlooking the $16 million that also went to Canadian industry.

You have got to be fair about this because go to your own town or go to any town where they have the new incentive programme working—they do not ask what the nationality of the company is.

I know some of our people in the opposition do because it suits your political purposes to keep on talking about the government giving money to American corporations, but you overlooked a point that 50 per cent of this money is going to Canadian corporations who come in and qualify, and that there are just as many Canadian companies as there are American.

Now if you say we should have a programme where we completely disregard a company if it is foreign, then I do not think we will have any EIO programme—I think we should forget it entirely. We talk about discrimination—this is right discrimination in my estimation.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for—are you finished?

Mr. Sargent: Twenty per cent of the economy is made up of people who got the $17 million or the $33 million. And the other 80 per cent are the small independent guys for whom I think there should be a fund too.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): Thank you, Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Can I just answer one question here about the 90 loans to foreign companies? Now we are just talking foreign companies, the 90 loans to foreign companies, size of loan under $100,000—30; $100,000 to $149,000—14; $150,000 to $199,000—six; $200,000 to $249,000—seven; $250,000 to $499,000—10; and $500,000 maximum—10.

Now it is obvious to me and I think it should be obvious to you that the majority of those loans to foreign companies went to people I am talking about in the category of 50 employees or more.

It did not go to big corporations; it just does not work that way because the big corporations are sometimes harder to move around from one area to another than the smaller fellow. The smaller fellow says, "Well, if there is an incentive for me and it is available, I can start a viable operation and live there. Then I will take advantage of the incentive programme, either federal, provincial, municipal or any incentive that is available."

And so I just want to point out to you that this money has not gone just to foreign companies; it has gone—the 90 loans you were talking about there to foreigners—to smaller companies the same as our Canadian ones.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Knight: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to echo the remarks of the hon. member for Grey-Bruce—the last remarks—excepting of course three words about small business.

I think the majority of people in my riding—Port Arthur—who approach me for assistance from the Ontario Development Corporation are connected with really small enterprise, and when you consider the real lack of success of the EIO programme up there inasmuch as you know it went toward attracting new industry into the area, I recognize how very beautiful it has been for existing industries—secondary industries—to expand.

I recognize that but when one does not see the same amount of success in attracting new industry into our area, one realizes that perhaps we have to concentrate more on industry where we do have great potential—that being the tourist industry—and in the small operators who realize that this is the real area to get into.

And I would like to suggest that this be a big part of the proposed northern development corporation. I would also like to ask the minister a couple of questions about the proposed northern development corporation.

First of all, a question I have asked at least twice in the past, could the minister put a dollar sign on it? How big a fund will the northern development corporation have to work with? Where will the funds come from?

Hon. Mr. Randall: If I said the fund is unlimited at the present time I would probably be crucified tomorrow, but I often hear from my friends in Liberal ridings that Bob Macaulay wants to get a $100 million in his cold, clammy little hand to give to small business or incentive programmes for industries. And I said to Bob Macaulay of the economic council, "I do not think you need to tie up $100 million of taxpayers' money; all you have to do is have permission from the government of this province to go ahead and make loans on an unlimited basis as long as you can carry out the programme." And that is the kind of a programme we have right now under EIO; in other words, when I go to the Treasurer, he gives me the funds that I require to keep the ODC programme operating, and the same thing will apply to your fund in northern Ontario. So, as fast as we can bring industry into northern Ontario, we will find uses for the money in this incentive programme; the money will be there.

Mr. Knight: Would you say then that the need or the opportunity will determine the amount for this?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Our limit, as you know, is $500,000, but that limit, I think, is up—

Mr. Knight: For industry?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, for industry. But they can build four plants in four different places, so they can get $2 million. But the federal grant, I think, runs as high as $12 million, depending on what they are going to do and provided it meets the federal programme—

Mr. Peacock: Are these corporations Canadian?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Pardon? Oh no, they are Canadian and American.

An. hon. member: Well, like you, I say they would give more, on balance, to you.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, they take an intelligent viewpoint; they do not draw a line.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister and the Ontario Development Corporation have given some consideration to the request from Mr. Alexander Phillips, who is manager of the North-western Ontario Development Council, that the board of the northern development corporation be split in two; in other words, into a northeastern board and a northwestern board, because of the mileage difference. For all practical purposes it would be most difficult for, say, a representative of the board from Kenora to travel to Timmins or Kirkland Lake on a weekly basis. I would imagine the board will meet just as often as is necessary to process applications and discuss and make recommendations and so forth. Have you arrived at any decision on that request?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I have not arrived at any decision. The letter from Mr. Phillips came in just before the estimates started; I sent copies to the other ministers involved, and I said that just as soon as the estimates are through, I would be glad to sit down with you and discuss the recommendations from Mr. Phillips without delay. We get recommendations which we appreciate from other areas of northern Ontario, and I think, with all those recommendations, we can find a workable solution that will make it easy for them.

Mr. Knight: Well, let me then lend my support to that recommendation at this time; I think it is a very sensible one. And may I express a concern that I have at this point? Having been up there as a newsman, I was very close to the people for about 10 years; I am well aware how long people like Lackey Phillips, and the present mayor of the corporation of Thunder Bay, and others have been pushing for just this thing: a northern development corporation, with some money and some control up there to put its own efforts and resources to work to attract industry.

I might say that you have put up a very big balloon there; that the people's reaction to this has been excellent; their hopes are at the highest. For this reason, if there is a letdown, if it is not what it is made out to be, the letdown is going to be very great, and I for one would not like to see it happen. This is why I keep pushing for some dollar sign on it. I want to be sure of it, so I would just caution the minister that I hope you have not been premature in your announcement. I hope that the follow-through will come, because it is extremely important not only to the economy of northwestern Ontario, but to the morale of the people—and the area needs a buildup in morale.

The member for Peterborough was discussing the Toronto-centred regional plan and the industrial opportunity within this megalopolis, as opposed to the immediate outlying areas, and the minister said something about incentives through EIO to industries that settle not here in Toronto or in Metro, but rather outside, if possible. Is it not foreseeable that we will reach the point where we will just simply tell them that they cannot come into Toronto? I have to tie industrial development into the pollution problem. The fact that we are now monitoring the level of air pollution in this city must make us realize that if we keep bringing more and more industry into this area, the level of that pollution is going to have to get higher and higher, just as long as we keep admitting that we do not really have the scientific equipment or advances right now to control air pollution as we would like to. And I just wonder when we are going to reach a point where we will put a quota on the amount of industry and the amount of development.

The other day in this committee I brought up the point of the capacity of the sewage treatment plants for this city, and the fact that they are just not up to par. I am waiting for the Minister of Public Works to bring in an answer to a question in the House about where the effluent from this building and the Queen's Park complex goes, to find out whether we, working in this building, are contributing to the pollution of Lake Ontario. He is not too quick in bringing in an answer. I think perhaps we might be on the verge of opening a very big can of worms, and this all ties into industry, because I do not care who you talk to in the north or down here about bringing industry into northern Ontario, they are going to tell you the same thing: Any industry that can get into this place down here with a market and where the transportation routes are, as long as they have got this as an alternative, they are not going to come north.

I am just hoping that, perhaps with pollution getting to the level it is, we are going to get a break, because you are going to have to establish quotas here and industry is going to have no alternative but to come up into our part of the country. It paints a vivid picture for me every time I go up on the train—that is 900 miles up north, and I do it that way quite often—all of that empty and open space. You come out of this great megalopolis, with all of its smokestacks and its development and people crowded in here together, coming and going; you see so much of this farm land down here occupied with housing development or industrial development, and you get up into my part of the country and it is nothing but wide, open spaces. I do not want it covered with industry.

But it is very obvious that someone down through the years has not done a very good job of land usage, and we do not seem to have a land usage plan. So I think this is right in your bailiwick, because you are sort of the guardian over industrial development, and I just wonder if you could make some comments on what I have said just now.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, I think what you are saying is that in Toronto the cost of real estate is forcing a number of, say, plants to close down. They find the taxes are high and the property they have is valuable; that it can be used for other purposes, either for commercial buildings or residential accommodation, and they are moving to the periphery and, in some instances they are going out of town.

Of course, the EIO programme does not apply if they move from one municipality to another. But as far as the pollution factor is concerned, certainly I will take a look; there are a lot of things that have got to be done here. I do not want to be facetious, but the other day we were talking about the soap companies that are contributing about 1.3 pounds of phosphates a year to the pollution problem, but the human waste is 1.6 pounds—every time you flush a toilet around here you are making your contribution too. You ask about the 170 members: I simply want to point out that pollution is not just coming out of the soap companies; it is coming out of many areas. And when we drive our cars we contribute to the pollution, so we must recognize that we have all been responsible for contributing to this pollution, and it is only in the last year or so that we have all become conscious of the fact that pollution is a major problem and that we should do something about it.

We also get comments from people in northern Ontario that it is great fresh air so long as you do not come up and pollute it with industry. Now, you have got more of a problem in northern Ontario with the pulp mills than anywhere else, because that is where the pulp mills are. On the other hand, you recognize they are going to have to spend many millions of dollars to correct some of the problems, and the pulp mills in this province are not the latest; they are not the most modern. Many of the pulp mills have gone down to southern Georgia; they have gone into other provinces over the years. And the manufacturers here are going to improve their plants; certainly they are putting in equipment to solve the problems of polluting the waters in northern Ontario, and I assume from here on in they will continue.

For the new plant we announced at Fort Frances the other day, I think the cost of pollution equipment was something like $6 million. The plant cost $45 million; the cost of pollution equipment was $6 million. A few years ago, that would never have been considered; the plant would have gone up for, say, $6 million less, and then you and I, or our kids, would have to worry about the pollution, when they would become conscious of it as we are today.

Mr. Knight: Well, this can apply anywhere in industries in Ontario, not just in the north country.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, that is right. Wherever there is pollution it is going to have to be corrected, and new plants going in are solving that problem. I would say the same thing here: If new plants are going into Toronto, certainly they are going to use the same sewage systems; it is up to the city of Toronto to decide whether their sewers are big enough. But, insofar as the plant itself is concerned, they are just not building plants that are not taking care of pollution. I have been in three or four of them recently where they have shown me their pollution abatement equipment, both for air and water. But certainly the employees working there are still using the same sewer systems and what have you, so that is not going to be cleared up overnight.

Mr. Knight: No, but as long as these plants are beyond their capacity, why go on jamming more and more in? This is what you are doing. If you have got a plant that is built for 450,000 people, for that kind of a capacity, and it is already exceeded by a couple of hundred thousand, why do you go on allowing development to go into that area when you know that the outlet is going to be into the same sewage treatment plant? Because you just go on overcrowding and overcrowding, and I am saying that there are a lot of other areas in this province that could use the employment and the economic benefit from these same industries and the same kind of development, and somebody has got to take the leadership in controlling that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That has been our objective. When people come to us and ask for locations, we certainly do not show them around Toronto, believe me.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the minister if there were any EIO loans given to any concern in the Kingsville area?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. I think there have been two or three there. Yes, there is Precision Spring Canada Limited—

Mr. B. Newman: And the amount?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It was $150,000, 50 jobs. There is ITL Industries, five jobs going to 25, $40,200. And Freedland Industries Limited, 100 jobs immediately and the grant was $250,000.

Mr. B. Newman: Does the minister's department concern itself with the reports of the various economic councils and the recommendations that they make?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, we—

Mr. B. Newman: Regional development councils?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, we see the reports. I do not see as many now as I did when I had the regional development people in my own department, but all the factors with regard to the area are checked before we get an industry to go into that area. If an industry is there and expands, that is one thing we have no control over, but if it is a new industry going we advise them whether it is—

Mr. B. Newman: They fairly well follow these guidelines?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask the minister if he has looked over the report of the St. Clair regional development council of November 19, 1968, that does not recommend that Kingsville be tabbed as a focal point of new industry? It seems preferable to encourage further manufacturing development in the Leamington area and to encourage Kingsville to draw upon, or something of that sort, a dormitory and commercial centre for commuting workers and as a recreational centre. Here you have a report that is submitted by some branch of your department that does not recommend just exactly what you people went ahead and did.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Now, wait a minute.

Mr. B. Newman: You have given the loans. I do not begrudge the loans going into the area, but you have a study implemented at the urging of your department, I would say, or some branch of government, that recommends you follow a set pattern, yet you do not follow the advice at all—in fact, go contrary to the recommendations. How do you justify your stand?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We justify it this way. That is a recommendation. That is not government policy, as yet.

Mr. B. Newman: I see. It does not mean anything?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Wait a minute. Sure, it means something. In the long run it means something because you just put your finger on it when you said they recommended that Leamington should become a growth centre and the other area should become a dormitory. When you get regional government in that area so that the tax base is spread over Kingsville, it can become a dormitory. Then, I think, you can afford to say we will not put any industry in Kingsville. But until Leamington is prepared to share—if this becomes a growth centre—its tax base with Kingsville, then I think Kingsville has every right, regardless of the recommendations from other government departments, to get industry.

When the government decide that they are going to have a growth centre around the Kingsville area, that is the time when Ontario Development Corporation will decide we have to co-operate with the other departments and put the EIO programme into the growth centre or whatever programme we are going to have at those times, but you cannot walk away from Kingsville or any other town on the basis of a recommendation that is not government policy from a group in any department of government.

Mr. B. Newman: Nobody begrudged the granting of the loan to companies developing and expanding in the Kingsville area, but it does seem extremely strange to me that one branch of your government will come along and say, "Do not do this", and the other branch of the government will come along and say, "The hell with you, I am doing it anyway." That is just exactly what you did in this case.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You have the same thing in your own party. You do not have complete agreement in your own party on many things. You know that.

Mr. B. Newman: I am not discussing my party. I am discussing the government of Ontario and it is talking out of both sides of its mouth at the same time.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, we are not.

Mr. B. Newman: You certainly are. It is your report that says, "Do not do this," and yet you do it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Okay. Every government department can get a study and make its contribution to the overall government policy in the long run. Until it is adopted as policy—I think the member for Peterborough pointed out here the other day that he was very encouraged with some of the things he saw presented at the Queen Elizabeth building the other day and hoped that these recommendations will be accepted—but until those recommendations are accepted, I go back and say to you that as far as I am concerned, I watched the presentation the other day, I know what is going on, but until the government decides it is going to have a growth centre programme and this is where it is going to encourage industry to go, I do not think that we are prepared, as a government, to cut these small towns off and tell them they are going to become cemeteries with lights. This is what you are asking. You are saying forget every town that is not in the growth programme. You noticed the Toronto-centred plan the other day never went the other side of Bowmanville. Now what do you with all the towns the other side of Bowmanville, including Peterborough? You just say it will not grow, nothing is going to grow in eastern Ontario.

Mr. Peacock: What you are saying to Leamington and Amherstburg and all the other communities that report has studied and said should be designated as growth centres—is "Forget it, because I am putting the loans into Kingsville." We took this up with you last year. We made the same criticisms and you had the same answers.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Companies wanted to move in there despite what the recommendation was. The Minister of Municipal Affairs has said that regional government is five to 10 years away for that part of the province. What are the communities to do in the meantime? Do they go on with this helter-skelter development?

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me just say it is not a government report, it is a council report you have there. It is not a government report, it is a council report as far as I know.

Mr. B. Newman: It is financed by the regional development council, which is financed by your department.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is not a government report. It is a council report.

Mr. Lewis: You are just using some—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox has the floor.

Mr. N. Whitney (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Chairman, I was quite interested in the remarks that were made by the hon. member for Peterborough when he mentioned unemployment. It occurred to me that possibly that city in his riding could qualify under the federal programme as a depressed area. I can well remember my own area, when the municipalities of Prince Edward-Lennox applied for consideration at Ottawa, they were told that they did not have the degree of unemployment that would entitle them to any assistance. There was a good reason they did not have that degree of unemployment; it was simply because for years, the people had been educating their children and they had been going elsewhere to get jobs. That is the reason the population has been stagnant and that is the reason it has not grown and there has been no development.

We see, on the contrary, the growth around the large centres, such as Metropolitan Toronto. I think that it is well that the government is taking action. We can see from the examples in regard to pollution and all of these matters that it is necessary that action be taken and that further mistakes be not made.

In that regard, we are fortunate that we have had the example to the south of us. They have a greater problem than we have and they are much in the position of the person who might say that had their foresight been as good as their hindsight, they might have been a damned sight better off. I would say that the government is doing a great thing through the entire programme and it cannot consider these Ontario Development Corporation loans separately.

We have to consider it from this point of view. In the past, each local municipality has been a competitor in regard to the obtaining of industry, whether industry could justifiably locate there or not. A great many municipalities, of course, could not qualify or could not induce industry to locate in their particular municipality, and along that same line certain things have taken place in recent years.

I refer particularly to the setting up of county school boards. For that reason, because of the county school board setup in regard to education costs, for the first time the people who have the benefit of greater industrial assessment have to share that revenue for the cost of education with other municipalities where, perhaps, a good deal of the housing serving that industry had located. This is a step in the right direction.

By the same token, the province is taking over the complete administration of justice costs and the costs of assessment, as of this year. Those things are relieving the local municipalities of taxes and the load is being carried by the counties and the province. It is bringing that day nearer when regional government, of a kind, will take place just because of these very considerations.

I might say that I know some municipalities are considering mutual fire protection, and there are municipal people who are considering having township roads taken over by the county system. Gradually, as some of these things come about, regional government, to a great extent, will be a point of fact. It will not be as a result of a special Act of the Legislature or anything of the kind. Local municipal people are thinking along these lines. Consequently, I think that this is all to the good. Instead of, say, a group of municipalities, such as a county, saying "Here we are competitors individually seeking industry," they say, rather, "We will pull together; let us get industry where we can get it; let us have housing where it should be located; let us all receive the benefits and contribute to the costs on the same basis."

This could include northern areas where recreation comes in. I do not know how many hon. members saw the picture, "Maricopa County, Indiana." I know the hon. Chairman saw it when we were on the select committee on municipal affairs. It shows that rather than the individual municipalities that you have mentioned, the Kingsville area and Aylmer and so on, being competitors, there should be an effort made to bring them together. I know that that is being done elsewhere, and particularly in Prince Edward County and the County of Lennox and Addington. There have been three industries that are receiving, or are eligible for, Ontario Development Corporation loans I would say that this has made a great deal of difference in the overall feeling of the people. I know that they are optimistic about the future. I do feel that this department is on the right track. I think all of these other things, and the fact that county and school boards are moving toward an equalization of costs, and the fact that in some of these other fields the cost is being taken over by the province contribute to this encouraging situation. We do know that industry will not locate where it is undesirable for it to locate despite any loans being given. But I think that individual counties, or other groupings, should pull together, pool their resources and sell their advantages to industry and co-operate regarding service. I think it is much more desirable that this be done at this time rather than wait till things become so intolerable that drastic action has to be taken.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Renfrew South.

Mr. Yakabuski: Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that the member for Peterborough is not here. I would have liked to have had a dialogue with him. I was greatly disturbed to hear him mention that the unemployment figure for Peterborough at the present time is some 13 per cent. We know the unemployment figure for Hamilton is somewhere around 12 per cent, Cornwall is 18 per cent, and so on all down the line. But, I was wondering what those figures would be for a year ago. Would they be four per cent? Would they be five per cent?

Sometimes I am concerned that we might be criticizing this incentive programme and blaming it for not being successful, when if we made the comparison of unemployment figures a year ago with today's, we might find that almost in toto the blame could be placed on Trudeau's anti-inflation programme. This is the thing that bothers me. I would hope that no one would feel this incentive programme is not being successful.

Someone mentioned that he was against taking tax money from one community and trying to lift up another by the boot straps. I have nothing against that, because we see it every day in the federal system in the equalization payments to the provinces. They are taking a hell of a lot of money, and most of it from Ontario, and giving it to have-not provinces right across the board. So this is not really anything new. It is an accepted policy on a national level and surely, on a provincial level, it should be too. At least, I have not heard any members arise in the House and take the equalization payments programme by the federal government apart.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): The programme policy is good!

Mr. Yakabuski: Yes, I think so. And this is the same thing, actually, on a smaller scale here in the EIO programmes. Someone mentioned that these loans so far had been going to firms only on a short-term basis. I cannot speak for the entire province, but I can speak for the areas that I am familiar with and where I have seen these programmes used. I know that Union Carbide, a very viable corporation in Arncliffe, had an expansion under the programme. I know that Amphenol in Renfrew, one of the prime manufacturers of coaxial cable, which certainly has a very brilliant future, took advantage of this programme in Renfrew. I know that Huyck Canada Limited, one of the prime manufacturers of paper-makers' felts, took advantage of the programme, whereby they will be putting themselves in a most competitive position and what could have been a layoff of 200 to 300 people in a year or so, because of their outmoded methods, will be halted. As I say, I am only speaking of the areas I am familiar with, but certainly they have not been short-term, stop-gap measures in my areas; they have been wonderful, they have been terrific. Certainly, we know that the service industry is the one that is going to employ the most people but, as the minister pointed out, without a manufacturing industry to begin with, we are not going to be enlarging the service industries either.

And, then, we are always concerned about the metropolitan areas, and especially Toronto. As soon as we mention the big megalopolis, we look at Toronto. We know, too, that there are many people here from all parts of Ontario, all parts of Canada, who have come here by choice. It was their choice to come to this sprawling place with all its disadvantages. They are here a while, and they would like to get back to that small community. They would not have left that small community in the first place if there had been these provisions. They would never have left. They have come here and some of them are hooked; they are stuck with it. They cannot go back to the little places that are dear to them in the province or in Canada, because there are not the job opportunities there. This programme will help produce those opportunities.

I know of a great number of people who left the Ottawa valley or located in Kitchener, Toronto or any number of these places. They were born and brought up in rural Ontario; they would just love to get back to rural Ontario but, as I say, they are hooked. But when this programme is expanded and moves along with growth centres and, not forgetting the smaller communities of 1,500 or 2,000 people, these people will have an opportunity, I hope, in the not-too-distant future, to make their second choice and go back. I know there are little, isolated incidents with regard to the programme that many of us perhaps do not agree with. But, overall, from my experience it is just a wonderful programme.

I welcomed the news just last week that the tourist industry would be assisted. I know the amount mentioned, $1 million, does not seem very much in the 1970s, when C. D. Howe said, "What is a million?" 13 years ago; certainly, it is not a big amount. But I think it is a beginning, it is a start that we have all looked for for a long time, and I can see this thing growing where I would not be surprised to see maybe $20 million or $30 million available five or six or seven years hence. So, all in all, it is a good programme. I have to disagree with my good friend from Grey-Bruce in sort of—

Mr. Sargent: You are no friend of mine any more.

Mr. Yakabuski: He was sort of nitpicking about the U.S. industries, because I know there is no one in this House who is a greater free-enterpriser than our good friend, Eddie. Then this Watkins manifesto sort of grated, you know; that really got me, because you were not being Eddie, I did not think.

I had a question of Mr. Etchen. Now this is fairly recent, and I know it is not a general question; it may be of little or no interest to many of the members here, but it is that Renfrew county and part of North Hastings have been included in the federal regional expansion programme, and that particular area, or part of it at least, has been given special status. And I am wondering now what is going to happen in this area insofar as the EIO programme is concerned? Will there be overlapping? Will there be duplication? Will one be complementing the other?

Perhaps Mr. Etchen can give us an example of what would really take place, should an application go to the federal people under their programme and a supplementary application, or whatever you want to call it, come to his branch?

Mr. Etchen: We have worked out an agreement with the federal government to avoid duplication and overlapping, and our agreement, roughly, is as follows. In either northern Ontario or the area designated under the federal programme in eastern Ontario, a company which is prima facie eligible for a federal grant will apply to the federal government for a grant. If it is turned down under the federal plan, for whatever reason, it can apply then to the EIO programme and it will be dealt with on its merit.

There are some cases, particularly in the case of plant expansions, where a company would get more under the EIO programme than it would under the federal programme. I think this is just getting into too much detail; generally the federal programme would provide about 20 per cent of the capital and other eligible costs. In the EIO programme the comparable figure would be 33⅓ per cent. In some cases where it is an expansion, a company might gain more, if it is to have a choice, under the EIO programme than under the federal programme.

As I mentioned earlier, under the agreement we have with the federal government, if you are eligible, you would have to apply to them. We will then supplement the difference between what they would have got under the EIO programme and the amount they actually receive under the federal programme. Perhaps I should try and make it simple.

If the federal government says, "Okay, under our programme you qualify for $20,000" and if they went under the EIO programme they could have qualified for $33,000 we would make up the difference. I want to make it clear that this would happen because of the way the two formulas are and only in a minority of cases. This would happen only in the case of a small plant expansion. Here are the major cases in which a plant will apply to the federal government and will not be eligible. For example, pulp and paper; in some segments of the pulp and paper industry, because of the federal regulations, the company is ineligible. They have to apply to the federal people under our agreement and if the federal people say "no," and it is a legitimate reason, they can come to us. We would look at it on its merit.

Mr. Yakabuski: In other words then, Mr. Etchen, you people, through EIO, could be in a sort of standing-by position and ready to help if need be or if possible. Is that correct?

Mr. Etchen: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think the main position is that we are not in competition with the federal government to give away taxpayers' money in an incentive programme. But in a case where we both have jurisdiction and they apply to the federal government and the federal government's incentive loan is not as great as they would get under EIO, we make up the difference. Do you follow me?

Mr. Yakabuski: What prompts me to ask is that I had a discussion with Mayor Kaneb of Cornwall a couple of weeks ago. He mentioned that as things stand at the moment, he feels that to them in Cornwall, the provincial programme could be of much more value than the federal one. I guess that would mean if they did not get special area status then?

Hon. Mr. Randall: There is a meeting there on May 22, as I said yesterday, at which the two programmes will be jelled in the interests of Cornwall.

I also suggest keeping in mind that the federal government have two programmes. They have the interest structure programme, the administrative—what do you call it—the administrative area organization programme in which they can get a grant for certain things. Then they have the incentive programme similar to ours but they restrict certain industries that we do not restrict.

In all cases, particularly in northern Ontario where we run into this, we have had a saw-off with Tom Kent in Mr. Marchand's department and there has been no combination to date which has worked very well. In other words, I think the people of Ontario who are in an area that has a federal incentive as well as our own, have got the best of both worlds. They cannot lose on the deal. It is nice of us putting up $33,000. It is the federal government under its incentive programme which is prepared to offer $20,000. That is what Mr. Etchen was saying, the man can get grants from both areas but no more than the grant would be if he got it from either one or the other.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Grey South.

Mr. Winkler: I am terribly sorry, Mr. Chairman, I am prepared to yield until tomorrow.

Mr. Chairman: Tomorrow?

Mr. Winkler: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Windsor West.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask a few questions arising out of Mr. Etchen's first answer this afternoon to the member for Peterborough about the conditions in which the money is actually paid over. I believe Mr. Etchen said that this was a completion of the plant, installation of machinery. Is that correct?

Mr. Etchen: Yes. All the money is turned over to that plant for that.

Mr. Peacock: After the company has first paid in its share of the investment? Does the corporation take into account whether or not the number of jobs to be created, as described in the application, have actually been filled when the cheque is paid over?

Mr. Etchen: No company starts out with its full complement. You will notice that when a plant is starting out they have a run-in; one of the better places will have a run-in. They must have a skeleton crew. Normally, I think most industries, depending on the industry, may take up to six months or a year to build up to the start that they said they would see.

I think on the whole the companies have exceeded what they said they would do and I would like to give you some examples as to just what happens. The companies normally give us some factors on what the labour force is likely to be, maybe within one year or within five years.

I can give you some very good examples. Acritex Yarns Limited: they estimated that after five years they would have 77 jobs. After the first year they had 105. Amphinol, that Mr. Yakabuski was talking about, estimated they would have 22 jobs after five years and after one year they already have 26. Androck Company Limited estimated they would have 126 jobs after five years; they now employ, after one year, 136. American Optical said they would have 283 after five years; after one year they had 326. Bell Thread Co. Ltd. said they would have 101 jobs after five years; they have 133 after one. Big O Drain Tile Ltd. said they would have 13 jobs after five years; they have 17 after one year. Black and Decker said they would have 440 jobs after five years; they have 450 jobs in one year. And so it goes on. I have a whole list of them.

Mr. Peacock: Do you have Honeywell at Bowmanville?

Mr. Etchen: No, I have not got that one.

Mr. Peacock: All right. What is the situation at Caravelle Carpets in Cornwall, where the initial expectation was 20 to 40 jobs, or 20 rising to 40?

Hon. Mr. Randall: What is the name of that company?

Mr. Peacock: Caravelle Carpets Limited, the Courtaulds subsidiary. This was a division of Courtaulds which, I believe, you gave an $81,000 loan in 1968.

Mr. Etchen: That is right.

Mr. Peacock: Apparently no new staff have been taken on at that plant since 1968 because of the uncertainties in the industry and because of the layoff of the 600 at the other division in Cornwall last year. The Caravelle division would have had to absorb what employees it could from that layoff on the basis of seniority. What do you do in an instance like that? Do you carry the loan, or do you—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Caravelle suggested 20 jobs. You say they do not have 20 jobs today?

Mr. Peacock: No, I am saying because of the layoffs in the other divisions, what becomes of the loan in terms of the number of jobs that were supposed to be added?

Mr. Etchen: I have the figures here of Caravelle Carpets as a Courtaulds division. They had 159 in April, 161 in May, 169 in June, 170 in July, 170 in August, 161 in September, 164 in October, 173 in November and 176 in December.

Mr. Peacock: This is—

Mr. Etchen: This is Caravelle.

Mr. Peacock: From what time in 1969 last year?

Mr. Etchen: From January to December.

Mr. Peacock: So there has been no impact on Cornwall in terms of loss of jobs from the Courtaulds layoff? Would some of these have been absorbed from the Courtaulds layoff?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They could have been. Now the reason why Courtaulds is going into these two businesses is to make jobs available for people that are becoming redundant.

Mr. Peacock: So there was not any net addition to employment because of the large layoff.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The figures I have here indicate that when they got the loan, they expected to add 12 more jobs in the synthetic fibres. What they had to start with, I do not have. They expected to have 20 in the carpet plant. Now as Mr. Etchen has read off, they are carrying on with their complement there.

They told us about their situation—that there are going to be changes in their major operation where the 600 people we talked about the other day certainly would still be looking for work—but there were 125 jobs, I think it is 125 jobs total that we were looking at there and we advanced the money for employing operations and they are employing people. There are that many more jobs in Cornwall today than would not have been there.

Sometimes we maintain jobs; if they do as they are supposed to do with the loan, they maintain jobs. In Cornwall there is almost a holding operation by the look of things, the way things have developed.

Mr. Peacock: That is what this particular situation may have turned out to be.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It could be, yes.

Mr. Peacock: May I turn to another firm; Howards and Sons? This plant applied for a loan and received $144,000.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Where are they?

Mr. Peacock: In Cornwall also.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Howards?

Mr. Peacock: Howards and Sons Canada Limited.

Mr. Etchen: They said they would have 15 more jobs.

Mr. Peacock: Has the expansion actually been undertaken?

Mr. Etchen: No. They have received no money and the expansion itself has been delayed.

Mr. Peacock: I am sorry. I thought Mr. Etchen said earlier that all approvals had been effected.

Mr. Etchen: No. What I said was that when they had met the terms and conditions they would receive funds. But there are companies that have had loans approved—and this is the point I was trying to make—they have had loans approved, and, unless they had done what they said they were going to do, we do not disburse any funds.

Now Howards have postponed their programme, at least temporarily, and they have received no funds.

Mr. Peacock: All right. May I ask about Belding Cortagelli Limited, in Charlottenburg township? A $296,000 loan was approved on October 30, 1968. Has that firm gone ahead with its expansion?

Mr. Etchen: They are not going ahead with the programme at the present time.

Mr. Peacock: May I ask about Forged Steel Valve Corporation, again a subsidiary, also in Cornwall, a $500,000 loan under EIO and a $500,000 8.5 per cent term loan, approved May 10, 1969? Has that firm undertaken its expansion?

Mr. Etchen: They have not undertaken the expansion, but the last time I talked to them they were going to proceed with their plan.

Mr. Peacock: I see, as far as you know they are going ahead?

Mr. Etchen: As far as I know. But you never know with anything until they have put the spade in the ground. But as we know they are.

Mr. Peacock: Then in Cornwall alone, we seem to have something over $1 million worth of loans, combined—conventional and EIO—under which there is no activity as yet—that is, putting plants into service and placing jobs on the line. Is that correct?

Mr. Etchen: If there was any way we could do this, we most certainly would. We have dealt with them in good faith. We have given them a promise of support, there is nothing further we can do.

We cannot take hold of the executives of the company and physically make them do it. But we have gone ahead with them, we have dealt with them. There are some companies that have not gone ahead. In fact, there are a lot of companies, I would say, that, because of the economic conditions at the present time—

Mr. Peacock: Because of the white paper?

Mr. Etchen: —are slowing down their plans, are slowing down their construction. I think is not only our experience, but the experience of all the other development corporations in Canada and all the other lending institutions.

Mr. Peacock: How long does the approval continue? Until you say to the corporation, "Look, we have got to have some action, otherwise we are withdrawing the loan"?

Mr. Etchen: The board of directors has ruled that we have to give them six months' grace. If they have not taken any concrete action then, they have to report back to the board.

Mr. Peacock: Have such reviews been undertaken in the cases of Howards, and Belding, and Forged Steel? They are all well over the six months.

Mr. Etchen: I have been reviewing these at the direction of the board over the past little while and, because of the slowdown in economic conditions, we realize this—

Mr. Peacock: You are keeping them alive.

Mr. Etchen: Yes, we are going to keep them alive, because this involves unusual situations at the present time.

Mr. Peacock: Do these go into your statistics on the total number of loans approved for last year?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That are committed.

Mr. Peacock: But you do not actually have the jobs?

Can you tell us the overall net effect of the EIO programme in 1969, as distinct from the total statistics, showing approvals and the value of the loans under those approvals and the number of jobs under those approvals?

Here we have three instances in one community, Cornwall, where I know that there are particular circumstances. But it is also the case in other communities, or throughout the programme, that you have loan approvals in one year and the similar time lag in getting the actual work of developing the plant, and the equipment in place on the job, and the lines moving. What is the time lag?

Mr. Etchen: There is always a time lag. No company puts up a plant without first lining up its financing.

Mr. Peacock: That is right.

Mr. Etchen: We would not consider a company that did business that way. The time lag is usually with the equipment and not with the building. The building is not too difficult to put up. So there is a time lag.

Mr. Peacock: There may not be time today, Mr. Chairman, but I would like to ask Mr. Etchen—and perhaps he could give us the information when we come back to this—as to the number of approvals where work has not been undertaken or completed.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think one thing you must keep in mind—we will get this information for you—is that the responsibility of the government under the EIO programme, when a man walks in with his balance sheet and he qualifies, is for us to process that application as quickly as we can, so that he can get under way. If, in the interim, his fortune is changed or economic conditions are such that he cannot go ahead, the loan remains outstanding for six months. We review it; if we think he is still going ahead, we do not recall it, we leave it sit.

But for most of these companies that we point out here, it would take almost a year sometimes before they get the loan, because they have got to build a plant and get the machinery and so—

Mr. Peacock: That is what you did with Jespers and Kaye?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, the commitment is there, you see.

Mr. Chairman: It is 6 o'clock. We will adjourn until 3:15 tomorrow.

The committee adjourned at 6 o'clock, p.m.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT

The committee met at 3.15 o'clock, p.m. in committee room one; Mr. E. A. Winkler in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: We will call the committee to order. I have a speakers' list before me. No. 1 is Mr. Ruston, No. 2 is Mr. Trotter, No. 3 is Mr. Smith, who is not with us at the moment, and No. 4 is Mr. Deacon.

On votes 2207 and 2208:

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): At 6 o'clock yesterday we were engaged in a discussion of the number of loans which had been given approval in 1968 and 1969, but which had not, in fact, been paid over, for whatever number of reasons. I believe that I listed three in the Cornwall area. Mr. Etchen and the minister agreed that we could have a list of all of those which have been given approval, but on which, similarly, construction or operations have not commenced.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Etchen has that now.

Mr. A. Etchen (Ontario Development Corporation): At the end of March, 1970, 234 loans approved by ODC were still active. These are the figures we have been giving out. This total excludes the following eight companies who received loan approvals in the amount of $1,242,000 and later informed us that they were not proceeding with their projects. In other words, the actual loans that were approved were eight higher than this, but we took those out of the statistics.

Mr. Peacock: Could you give us the eight and the amounts?

Mr. Etchen: Yes, I am going to give you them.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Can I ask a question? Were they not proceeding immediately, but proceeding eventually?

Mr. Etchen: No, no. These are ones that are not proceeding, period. They are withdrawing for various reasons and we have excluded them from the statistics; but they did receive approval.

The jobs involved with those eight companies were 207, but these 207 jobs have never been included in the figures that were given out.

Since that time, one other company—that is since March 1970—has informed us that it is not proceeding and that is Perkins Papers.

The eight companies I referred to are: Nu-Wood Products Ltd., Brayshaw Steel Ltd., Sims Cabs, A. P. Furniture Industries, Belding-Corticelli Limited, Federal Drilling Corp. Ltd., Spraychem Products Ltd. and Elco Connectors (Canada) Ltd. And then, as I stated earlier, the ninth company was Perkins Papers.

As of March 31, 74 loans had been fully disbursed in the amount of $9,769,000. That is rounding it out to the nearest thousand. The companies estimated that these 74 loans would create 2,538 additional jobs in one year. That excludes, for example, if it was an expansion and they were already employing 30 people and they were going to go to 40. We are not counting the 30. These are additional jobs, although in most cases these companies have not been in operation for one year. Remember, we took these statistics at the end of March and if the loan had been fully disbursed at the end of February you could still count the loan as fully disbursed but the company would only just be getting started. When they were fully in operation, these companies estimated that they were going to create 2,538 jobs after being fully operational. A good proportion of them are not fully operational and already they have 2,555 jobs.

Mr. Peacock: I am sorry I am not clear. Which group of companies is this?

Mr. Etchen: This is the 74 where the loans have been fully disbursed.

Mr. Peacock: Seventy-four where the loans were fully disbursed. In what period of time?

Mr. Etchen: To the end of March, 1970.

Mr. Peacock: From the inception of the programme?

Mr. Etchen: From the inception of the programme!

Mr. Peacock: You mean, of the 234 approvals, only 74 have been fully disbursed.

Mr. Etchen: Yes. And of those, these 74 claim that there is going to be an increase of 2,538 jobs after one year. As I said, some of them—because of the fact that they were only disbursed in February, some in March, some in January—are not yet even fully operative, and yet they have already produced 2,555 jobs which is more jobs than they said they would provide if all of them had been fully operative for a year.

As I recorded yesterday, a number of these that have been fully disbursed for the best part of the year have made exceptionally good progress. I think I read some of them out yesterday.

At March 31 there were 51 EIO loans partially disbursed and these amounted to a little over $5 million. Since these are only partial disbursements, and in some cases the project is not yet complete, we are not in a position to assemble exact statistical data. I am sure you understand this.

The balance of the approved loans amounting to approximately $20 million will be disbursed as and when the companies require it.

We have been notified by the following companies that because of economic conditions there may be some slowdown in their plans. I think Mr. Peacock asked us yesterday how many companies have notified us that they are going to slow down. Here is a list of the companies. These companies, to the best of our knowledge, are going to proceed in the future, some within six months, but they have officially notified us that they are on a slowdown.

Company	EIO Loan	Jobs
Iroquois Chemicals	$ 82,500	6
Inter-Royalite Metal Furniture	129,833	40
Howard and Sons	144,583	15
Olympia & York	453,655	105
Forged Steel Valve	500,000 (EIO)	50

Company	EIO Loan	Jobs
Northern Steel Products	32,266	10
Whelan Industries	180,436	20
Rothwell Perrin	100,000	52
Ault Milk	329,270	12
General Signal of Canada	81,666	20
International Wire & Cable	100,000	107
Space Optics	302,588	24

That is a total of 12.

Mr. Peacock: What portion of the $20 million balance do they account for?

Mr. Etchen: They account for roughly $2,437,000 and 409 jobs.

By the way, the number of jobs for that—These are the companies which have notified us, as of today's date, that their projects are being delayed.

Mr. Peacock: Thank you very much, Mr. Etchen.

The figures which Mr. Etchen just read off indicate that there is approximately $20 million in loan approvals which has not yet been drawn on by the applicants for the loans, and very possibly a good portion of this is the result of the slowdown in economic activity.

Mr. Etchen: No, not necessarily. I think you should realize that some loans in this $20 million figure were only approved two or three weeks ago.

Mr. Peacock: Right!

Mr. Etchen: Some of them were also approved just a few months ago. Even when you do get an approval, you do not immediately start to build. In other words, this is a normal lead time. We were discussing this the other day. No company which knows what it is doing goes ahead and orders a building and orders equipment until it has its financing lined up.

It normally takes them—again these are just indications—possibly up to six months to contract and put up a building. This is not usually the big delay. The big delay comes if you have any sort of specialized equipment. Then the lead time on equipment can be a year or 18 months unless you are very fortunate, as they are in some cases. Then I would agree that is why.

Mr. Peacock: How about financing other than EIO financing? Does this cause any delay? Do you not require them to have that financing in order before they come to you?

Mr. Etchen: Yes, but I think you have got to realize that they are not going to commit themselves for a very substantial capital outlay until they have their financing lined up. They get the financing lined up and they will put their order in for the machinery on which there is a lead time of 12 or 15 months. They are not going to order these unless they know what they are doing. We were assured they were, and also if the contractor was going to put the building up and give a commitment and look for the money afterwards.

Hon. Mr. Randall: In many instances, may I also add, this may be the lead money—the seed money—that the banks would need before they would advance them, say a bank overdraft or bank loan. A man may be going in to a business with a commitment from the bank as well as a fixed commitment on his equity participation and a loan from EIO. In many cases this is the key money. If we are prepared to finance him then this is a key for him to go to the bank and say this amount of money is available. Then the bank will proceed.

Sometimes we are the first in, and once we have made a commitment through Order in Council to give him an EIO loan, then he can complete the rest of his financing and commit himself for capital expenditures.

Mr. Peacock: At that point, Mr. Chairman, is a review made again of the adequacy of the outside financing.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If he does not get the outside financing the project does not go ahead.

Mr. Peacock: Of course. But assuming he comes to you and says he has got the outside financing. Do you examine the adequacy of that outside financing?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. That is checked before the cheques are paid over.

Mr. Etchen: I will just add that in April and May alone we dispersed another $2 million.

Mr. Peacock: I have one other question in this regard, Mr. Chairman. Some of the companies that Mr. Etchen listed have already indicated to the ODC that they are withdrawing.

Mr. Etchen: That is right.

Mr. Peacock: I see on the list, I think, just one of the ones I mentioned yesterday:

Howard and Sons; the others are Belding-Corticelli and Forged Steel.

Mr. Etchen: No.

Mr. Peacock: Is it on the list too?

Mr. Etchen: No, I listed—

Mr. Peacock: Did you list all the ones I mentioned yesterday?

Mr. Etchen: I listed eight companies which had definitely withdrawn and were not included in our statistics at all.

Mr. Peacock: Right.

Mr. Etchen: I will read them again for you.

Mr. Peacock: All right, I have the list. The ones I am—

Mr. Etchen: I see among my list, Belding-Corticelli, and I gave you Nu-Wood Products, Brayshaw Steel, Sims Cabs, A. P. Furniture, Belding-Corticelli, Federal Drilling, Spraychem and Elco Connectors. These are the eight who have withdrawn; they are not on our statistics.

Mr. Peacock: That is two of the three I mentioned.

Mr. Etchen: I gave you a list of 12 that have notified us officially that they are postponing. I see Howard and Sons among that list. I gave them $144,583 in the form of an EIO loan. They created 15 jobs.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, could Mr. Etchen tell us whether a firm in Kingston known as Kingston Spinners is one of those who has announced postponement or has withdrawn?

Mr. Etchen: No, not to the best of my knowledge. We are negotiating with them right at this present time. There were some changes which were considered in the financing and we are still considering a new financing proposal which make some changes in the original financing proposal which—

Mr. Peacock: Their loan was approved in August, 1969, I believe.

Mr. Etchen: Yes.

Mr. Peacock: A combination of EIO $500,000—

Mr. Etchen: That is right.

Mr. Peacock: —and conventional $475,000. None of that has been drawn yet?

Mr. Etchen: None of that has been dispersed. In fact, we are still negotiating. We still have some rather substantial discussions we are having with them.

Mr. Peacock: Is that also a subsidiary of Courtaulds?

Mr. Etchen: No, not to the best of my knowledge.

Mr. Peacock: It is not linked to Courtaulds?

Mr. Etchen: Not as far as I know.

Mr. Peacock: It is an American subsidiary is it? Mr. Chairman, that is it for now.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like some information with regard to an application by a small firm in an area that I represent in the township of Tilbury West. It was designated but their application was turned down.

I know the reasoning that the department made in turning it down was that they did not feel that there was an adequate market for the product they were manufacturing. But at about the same time, a Chatham firm, the Daymond Company, which is now owned by the Canada and Dominion Sugar Company, made an announcement that it was going to increase its production of plastic pipe for farm tile drainage. The company was going to increase its production by 35 million feet a year. It also announced that a further expansion, which will increase production capacity still more, is scheduled for next fall.

The small plant that I was thinking of is in the village of Comber. I think they intended to manufacture about two million feet a year. Their application was rejected because of an over supply. But on the other hand we found it a little disturbing when the people from the Chatham firm find their way down to Comber, about two days after the Comber company's application was rejected. The Chatham people were apparently inquiring whether the unsuccessful applicant was available to work with them.

It really disturbs me I understand, as I think the minister replied to one of my questions one day, that they do check with other industries as to the type of markets available.

But in this particular case, it makes you wonder whether what the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) has said is not in a way true, although I would hate to think that it all is. I would have hoped that this is not so.

But really, when I look at my own area, I have great reservations that maybe it is true. I would just like to know if it is true, why one firm can expand its production by $35 million and that firm is a large multi-national corporation within 18 miles of where a small industry was going to establish. I am just wondering, really, how you can say they could not sell their production. I wonder if you have any remarks on that?

Mr. Etchen: Yes. First of all, the Daymond Company did not get an EIO loan to expand for this tile. They are located in Chatham which is—

Mr. Ruston: I am aware of that.

Mr. Etchen: Not there, so they did not. I want to tell the member—perhaps he was not given the background on that—but we were very anxious to help his Comber tile company. As a matter of fact we went out of our way to get Tilbury West designated, we rushed it through and we cut all the corners so we could help it.

Now also in order to help the companies we did a special study over and above our normal studies on the market potential for tiles. Now we were informed that not only was the Daymond company going to expand, but there were several other companies which were going to expand into a field in which there had been some room for expansion and their plans were already well under way. They were well equipped companies and our officials discussed this with CUMBA.

The information that I have from the officials of ODC is that the matter was fully discussed with them, the whole story was put on the table, they were told that Daymond was expanding. There were some other people—Domtar was another one that was expanding—who had their plans already under way. They were already well into this and we did not want a small company, which had to start behind these big three, to get into this field unless they had their eyes wide open.

As far as I understand, the company officials were most pleased that they were given this information. They thanked our officials for letting them know, and they said that, as far as they were concerned, they agreed with this decision. As a matter of fact they thanked us for telling them what the market position was. Now that is my understanding.

I personally talked to one of the senior members who you introduced me to—I think we met in the minister's office—and I offered to help him in any way that I could. We checked again in order to be absolutely certain that we were right on the Malvern thing, we checked again with the Trade and Industry people in Ottawa, and they gave us the same advice to pass on to the companies.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Ruston, does that complete you?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would just like to add, Mr. Ruston, that again somebody asked: "Do you do any research before you put these companies in business?" I think this is an indication of some of the research that goes on. We can make a wrong guess; maybe they can sell a lot more drainage tile than we anticipate, but on the basis of the facts and figures known to us, before the loan is made we pass that information on to the entrepreneur. I think then it is in his interest because if he goes down the drain with our money, he sure goes down the drain with his money. I think we are as interested in protecting his investment as we are our own.

Mr. Ruston: I am sure, as Mr. Etchen said, the people thanked him and I am sure there are very kind people there and they thanked you for all the co-operation they did receive. I thank you, too. But on the other hand it does bother you a little when a large company so close by with such manufacturing potential which even intends to increase its production within the next year. And there is also this type of product going into the building industry. The potential of it is not just in agriculture I do not believe. This is what disturbs me, I think, more than anything.

I am just wondering what connection there was between the Canada and Dominion Sugar Company and an official of this department. I am just wondering if they were all looking out for the benefit of everybody in Ontario.

The other thing I wanted to mention was if a company decides to go into a designated area in eastern Ontario manufacturing or processing some type of material for merchandise, would there be any difference? Would that same company be eligible, or a company making an identical article, be eligible for a grant in western Ontario?

Mr. Etchen: No, because we do not just give companies money simply because if they are in eastern Ontario or wherever they are. They have to make business sense and they have to show us that they have done some market research and they have got to demonstrate to us that they have got good management and all the other things.

As far as our best information tells us—and we are always checking and bringing it up to date—there is a short-term under-supply for this particular product. A very short term. As soon as these other facilities come in there is every indication of an over-supply. So as far as we were concerned it does not make any difference at all whether they are in northern Ontario, eastern Ontario or southern Ontario. If a position like this exists where the company itself would lose its money, or lose what we are after—the jobs—it would make absolutely no difference.

Mr. Ruston: One thing more. What if the company was eligible and everything was right. What I am getting at is would it be eligible for a loan in western Ontario, in a designated area, as well as in eastern Ontario if it was marketing the same products?

Hon. Mr. Randall: If it had two plants, yes.

Mr. Ruston: In other words, you make a different criteria for eastern Ontario over where you might draw the line as to what type of industry you would allow a loan to as to western Ontario.

Mr. Etchen: No, the basic market conditions have to be right. The only real difference is that in eastern Ontario the EIO loans are higher than in southern Ontario, but for all the other yardsticks that we use, if there is not a market in Canada, or wherever it is, for the product, it really does not matter as far as we are concerned whether they are located in southern Ontario or eastern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think the answer is in the maximum. If he located in western Ontario, the most he could earn is $100,000 no matter how much he put in, and the most he could earn in eastern Ontario is $500,000. If he had two plants he could qualify for $600,000.

Mr. Ruston: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Ruston, have you completed your questions? Mr. Trotter.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, I wanted to make a few remarks in regard to the policy that I think this government should follow in regard to American control.

The minister may say, "We are a province; this is really a federal matter, and therefore it does not concern us." My feeling is, of course, that it should concern everybody in Canada, particularly the people in the province of Ontario, because we are the ones who are being taken over.

Even from a political point of view, whether we feel that the federal government has been weak in the last number of years in trying to put forth its best efforts in protecting the Canadian economy, I think that the present minister of this department and the government of Ontario are in an excellent position to exert influence, not only on business itself, but also on the government of Canada. This province could do this simply because of its power within the economy and politically I think if you look at the politics of Canada today, the province of Ontario really holds the balance of power.

There is no question in my mind that the governments in power, regardless of what their party politics have been over the years, have been extremely weak in the position that they have taken on foreign capital. When I say foreign capital I mean primarily American capital. For example, I think every country that Canada does business with, we make a profit with the exception of two. I think we lose with Venezuela because of the oil we import, but it is a tremendous amount of money we lose with the Americans. In fact, I have one short quote here from the U.S. Department of Commerce "Survey of Current Business", taken for the year 1963. Just as an example—mind you, this is from an American journal:

In 1963, Canada suffered a net deficit of more than $1 billion—

That is $1 billion, Mr. Chairman—

—as a result of trade and other transactions between the United States corporations and Canadian firms in which the U.S. parent held at least 25 per cent of the voting stock.

Earlier in these estimates the minister said, when we were complaining about making loans to American companies: "What do you expect me to do, discriminate against Americans?" Quite frankly, Mr. Chairman, my answer would be to the minister: "Yes". I would expect him to discriminate, but in a more positive sense I would expect him to be pro-Canadian, and particularly pro the province of Ontario, because that is his jurisdiction.

Mr. Yakabuski, the member for Renfrew South, wondered why an ardent free-enterpriser such as Mr. Sargent there would have something nice to say about the Watkins report. Well the concern, I think, of many small businessmen and ardent free-enterprisers, is that there is going to be very little for Canadians to enterprise in this country unless we see to it that we guard what resources we have.

There are too many individual cases that I have known where a decision has been made in a board room of New York city and a man who has worked for a company for years, and has been the executive vice-president or president, finds that he is out of a job. He might get a year's pay or he might get a bonus or something to tide him over. Some do not get that. If the head office in New York is fairly kind, he will get a year's pay.

We literally find that we have been disinherited and this is really striking at the executives themselves in a fairly major way. I do feel that the minister, in his enthusiasm to draw in what he calls new industry into this country, is really a soft touch for the American investor. After all, there are very few places—in fact I do not think there is any other jurisdiction in the world—where such a soft attitude has been taken toward the Americans. I do not think there is any country that has permitted the equity of its assets, be it manufacturing or anything else, to become foreign controlled. I think it is a tragedy that this particular department has not used the resources that are available in this province to protect our industry for our own people in the province of Ontario in taking the broader view for the people in Canada as a whole.

I think our entire view of regarding some of these private companies as private is stupid, because the Americans come over here with capital and set up a private company. It is true the income tax people may be able to look at the books; but this minister might feel, in regard to his policy, that we have never done it in the past—private companies are private companies, we should not interfere. I think that in this day and age that is just stupid again, even in regard to our own Canadian firms. The T. Eaton Company, for example, you can really call, in actual fact, a private company. This situation leaves government and this minister's department, and this particular vote, completely at the whim of what a big business firm wants to do. That holds whether it is a Canadian firm or an American firm. But my main concern at this point is that the Americans simply have too much control and we, as people, are not doing what we should and what we must do.

I think that the people, particularly the younger generation, are becoming highly aware of this because they realize that they are going to be hired by an American firm or a Canadian company that is really controlled by the Americans. It is all-right to talk about free enterprise, but we must remember the changes that have taken place. In the beginning of this century 75 per cent of those people in the working force were self-employed. Today, over 75 per cent of the working force, whether they are presidents of a company or not, are employees. The real danger is that we are really employed by a foreign power.

I know the minister has cast aside, I think, some of the rhetoric that Mr. Macaulay made. Mr. Macaulay, when he set up this department in this particular corporation, said "If I need $100 million I will get it; and if I need another $100 million I will get that".

Well, you really are in big business. I say to the minister, through you, Mr. Chairman, that if this Ontario Development Corporation is going to mean anything at all, it is going to have to be big business. These small loans may help the smaller companies—and I emphasize they should be Ontario companies or at least Canadian companies—but the main thing is there should be money available to invest, if possible to protect companies that are going to be sold to American firms.

I know that the Economic Council of Canada wrote a report—I think it is about three years old. I do not intend to go into all the figures showing how many Ontario firms had fallen under the control of foreign capital, but again I emphasize that the foreign capital is American capital and government today should be in a position to see to it that money is available and that the control of these firms does not go outside this province.

You might say this is interference with private enterprise. You know the American government and the America is supposed to be the very heart of free enterprise but they do not hesitate in moving in on a firm if they find it is going to harm their economy, or conflict with their anti-combines legislation.

We almost lost control a few years ago of one of the largest brewing companies in the country—Labatt's—and we were going to stand by and let it go. Labatt's is Canadian today only because the Americans stopped the American brewery company from buying the firm.

I do not blame the Americans, and they certainly look at their interests first. I am quite sure, Mr. Chairman, that the Americans would discriminate against anybody as long as it was in their interest. That is their business and I think it is high time that we in this province made it our business to protect our own industry and our own people.

I am not so pessimistic that I believe the cause is lost. I think we have enough resources and water power and other assets that we can, to a large extent in the long term, buy back much of the equity that we have lost. But I am concerned in the immediate future that some companies are still being bought up and will continue to be bought up.

There are some firms, it is said, that need huge amounts of capital in order to operate. This is quite true but those firms in this country that are so large like the Steel Company of Canada—. It is unlikely that the Americans will buy it unless the steel combines in the United States got together in order to control the Steel Company of Canada simply because it is so large. Not even the Americans will find it easy to buy that firm.

But there are many firms that we are going to lose and I do feel that this is going to become a tremendous social problem in this country because we have always been fortunate in Canada to avoid extremes. If we so lose our heritage, a generation will grow up that will be bitter, that I feel will be extremely anti-American. I do not want to see that happen.

There is no question that the Americans are our best friends at this time. In fact, we are one of the few countries in the world today that seems to get along with the Americans. I do not think that that will continue when the kids coming out of high school gain power because they will know that they have been disinherited and it will be largely the fault of those of us who are in politics today and of those who have gone before us.

Mr. Chairman, this province has the resources if it wants to go to work. I know that the federal government has toyed around and talked about a Canada development corporation. It may not be too high on the priorities of the federal government, and I understand it is not moving up, but I would hope to see that through this vote—and moneys could be voted through this vote, Mr. Chairman—that Ontario would to some extent go it alone or secondly, offer to combine with the federal government in setting up a development corporation that would make it possible to buy the firms that are up for sale and which cannot carry on for different reasons. This may be because they do not have the capital, because a family is dying out, or simply because the Americans want to buy the firm. I do not think that we have the expertise and that we can find the assets in order to make this a worthwhile endeavour.

I think it is of prime urgency in this country, in this province, that we do something to protect our resources. I regret to say that at this point I feel the minister is still a soft touch for the Americans coming into this province. I would hope that he takes a second look at it and either on his own or, even more hopefully, in co-operation with the federal government, sets up a development corporation that will protect our Canadian heritage.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Deacon.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Well, Mr. Chairman, there are some real problems that I witnessed in the operation of the Ontario Development Corporation. I think they can be understood and they can be pardoned. I do not think it is through lack of effort on the part of the officials. I think there is a conscientious effort, no doubt in most cases, to try to determine whether any proposal put before them is good or not good. But it seems to me the real key to sound investment in any project is a real knowledge, a thorough knowledge, of the industry and it is impossible for any single agency to really have all that knowledge centred here. As a result we have amateurs, in effect, making decisions in a field that pros should be making decisions. It is impossible for any of us to really become pros in all these fields.

First of all, I want to find out whether you use consultants in fields who are already involved in a specific industry to decide, for example, the market for drain tiles that you were just talking about in that connection, that one industry, with Mr. Ruston?

Mr. Etchen: Yes we do. I would like just to comment a little on this.

You say that no one institution can have all the expertise. I could not agree more. The real fact, in real life, is that the banks, the other financial institutions, also make loans to these companies, these very self-same companies. This is their business. You do not have to have experts in every conceivable field immediately at your fingertips. It is not practical or reasonable.

On the other hand, it is a point very well made that you do not make loan commitments unless you have information. Now we do not want to hire a lot of consultants for every type of industry, but what we do is we research out every industry. Under our present organization we have a research director who is sitting there, Mr. Nevitt, and in addition we have access to some of the best research organizations in this country.

We also have very close relations with the Ontario Research Foundation. As a matter of fact the relations are so close that we have one of the ORF people permanently in our office as a liaison officer, Mr. Malone. So we have immediately open to us all the research facilities of the Ontario Research Foundation.

We also make use of our own trade and industrial people's research centre. We have very wide connections.

We make use of the federal government and we go to the trade associations; in fact, we use every avenue that is open to us, and of course we use the expertise of the people who come in and apply. In addition to all this, all our senior people and all our consultants are former senior executives in companies. Our own staff is well-selected. We do not have people who are amateurs. We have people who have held executive positions—president, treasurer, vice-president. You have some of them sitting along there, in industry.

So we have this kind of experience within our own organization. We are very conscious about research. We do not take things off the tops of our heads; we are very conscious of this and while we are human—we are going to make errors and so forth the same as anybody else—we do everything that is reasonably possible to research the markets, the companies, and to know what we are talking about.

Mr. Deacon: The corporation is in a particularly special position. It is the only one. There are no resources of a similar nature that people can go to; it is not quite the same as with banks which are in competition with each other.

Incidentally with banks, for example in the oil business, they have tremendous specialties built up in that field and in other fields that they make available from head office—people with great experience in actual operations and successful experience in operations.

And of course I do know that perhaps a lot of people you have, have had a lot of successful experience in their own business background, and some I know have not. It is the knowledge of successful people that is very important; there is almost a feel of the type of investment you are about to make, whether it is good or not.

One of the points that the minister made yesterday rather shook me. He said that we do not want to make loans to bankrupt companies, companies that are losing money. You would never invest money in a farm if it were losing money. Well this is not true. I found that quite often that some of the most successful investments we have ever made have been companies that have been in difficulty and then have been able to bring together the ingredients that have turned that loss situation into a successful one.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You could not go to Bay Street and get your company to underwrite an issue for them. Your company would be the first one to say, "When you get your earnings up come on back and see us, and we can at least give you an issue." You know that.

Mr. Deacon: Well, I am sorry. We have done this in some situations and there—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would like to see one, because I have never seen one on Bay Street yet. That is why we have the Ontario Development Corporation because they tell us when they go to Bay Street they always say, "When you are making money we will loan you money then."

Mr. Deacon: No. It depends. I will mention two of the large associations. One was Sayvette. If anything lost money before it started to make money Sayvette did. Certainly the same is true of some of the Canadian hydrocarbon operations. It certainly—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I remember how successful they were in Western Canada. I think you remember that.

Mr. Deacon: It became that way, but it had not been.

But these situations do require a lot of expertise on a continuing basis too.

Another point I wanted to find out is how much of a continuing interest do you take? Once a loan is made do you have a director on the boards. Is there some way you get internal reports of what is going on? What is your involvement once you have made the loan?

Mr. Etchen: I think our involvement after we have made the loan is not only in our money but how they are doing generally. I say this without any fear of contradiction. It has also been the subject of studies by similar organizations overseas. We do not leave a company once we have put the money into it. We follow it up. We have a special branch in the corporation and we require from them monthly statements, production statements and various other things.

If the companies are performing all right, then we leave well enough alone. Those companies that are not meeting the requirement, those companies that are not performing according to the way they should do, we immediately have a clean-out; we bring in an engineer or a financial man.

This has been highly successful. In fact, if you like to discuss it with any of the chartered banks, that is one of the reasons they are very happy to make bank financing available to companies which we are in. They know that once ODC is in there, we do not just leave the company. If it gets into trouble, if it is not performing the way it should do when we get monthly reports, then I want to know from my consultants what the problems are.

We have been highly successful in this. There have been quite a substantial number of companies who are operating today who, if we had not followed them up, would have been bankrupt.

As I say, the banks and other institutions are most happy about this and all the other major development corporations in Canada. A number of them from the United States and Europe have come over to look at our operations, and particularly our follow-up.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): How many have gone bankrupt?

Mr. Etchen: We have lost one. Again I see there is confirmation by the officials here. I think we lost one in the past two or three years—am I right there?

Mr. Chairman: Are you finished, Mr. Deacon?

Mr. Deacon: No, I have some more.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Deacon.

Mr. Deacon: One point is about a company that was losing money and actually went into receivership. Some people wanted to put it back in shape and made a proposal to you. This was, I think, Northern Plywood, in Nipigon. It went into receivership and a group of those who were employed by Northern Plywood came to you with a proposal for an EIO loan to help them get back into operation, because there were about 150 jobs at stake at Nipigon in that company.

Not only were they unable to persuade you to go up to look at the operation, but in addition, word came through from other sources they approached that you told the other sources to take hands off. In other words, you did a great deal of harm to their ability to even get money from other sources.

They did manage to get money from other sources and they have since turned into a successful operation, but it was despite your involvement, not because of it, that they did this.

Of course, they resented the fact that at the same time there was a major EIO loan granted to a large U.S.-controlled corporation not very far away. This, of course, could have a bank credit available to it and everything else, as well as your money, to go ahead with their venture.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Perhaps you would like the facts now.

Mr. Etchen: I would like to answer this one, because of the fact that I have had sufficient discussions to field this. Now let me tell you what did happen there.

First of all, we never discuss with other companies any reasons why they should not go into this. Most of the financial institutions are mature enough that they do not need ODC's bidding. They put in their own money and they are going to make their own decisions.

Now the story on that company was very simple. The Industrial Development Bank has its money in there. The Industrial Development Bank has all the security, including floating capital, if I remember correctly. It has the assets, it has the full say; therefore there is no room for anybody else to go in there.

Far from not helping the company, we sent our banking expert, Mr. Gray, to the bank in order to help them negotiate a bank line of credit. I think I have a letter on file from the company.

We went with them to the bank, as we have done in the past. In fact, I think, we helped the group—I just want to check with Mr. Grant—we helped the new group that came in, so I do not know where this information came to you that we refused to help them.

We also told them that if there was any way—and I told them personally so I do know this—if there was any way that IDB would release its security, any part of its security, and we could go in in any sort of a reasonable business way, we would do it.

As far as I know, the IDB, for their own good reason—and I am not criticizing IDB—for very good reason, decided they were going to hold on to the security; they were going to keep the floating charge and the assets. I do not know what they were but certainly the IDB was in on this. If we would have gone in, we would have put the taxpayers' money in and left it sitting out on the air.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They had a federal loan, which the federal government would not move off, and if I remember the figure, there was over $1 million in there; then they recognized that their money was down the drain and we suggested to them, before the company gave up, they must recognize their loss and move over if the company were to be financed. They said, "No, we are not going to move an inch. We have a floating charge on all the assets. We have the building, we have the inventory and we are just going to sit." We said, "If you do, the company will go down the drain." They said, "That is just too bad. We are not going to move."

Now, if the Ontario Development Corporation had gone in and put up the money, it would seem to me that we were covering a federal government loan in which they had all the assets, and I think we would have been severely criticized if we had done that.

Mr. Deacon: Well, I think you would have been too, and the IDB for their refusal to move over.

I was not aware of this, but I am aware of the view of the officials of the company concerning the role played by the Ontario Development Corporation. Now if it is true that there has been some report come to them from another source that is incorrect about your role, regarding refusal from another source of funds because of the report you gave them, I should certainly want to follow that one up.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I might say this: When the employees decided to take it over, we took them in hand, took them to Ottawa, took them down to the bank and got them organized so that they could make a decision whether they should take it on or not. Our thought at the time was that they were getting into competition, but the business had shown some pretty fantastic losses, and we were looking at the interest of the employees themselves as to whether their life savings were going to go down the drain.

So I think we had a difficult situation to deal with there. I do not know how successful they are at the moment—perhaps my people do—but I would be inclined to say that have got an uphill battle, and more power to them. We suggested to them if they did get organized and if they could make arrangements, to come back and see us and we would give them all the help we could—at least we offered them the consulting services of the corporation to help them when they get organized, in marketing or anything else.

Mr. Deacon: Well, it has not been any piece of pie. They are making the grade, but they did not feel entirely indebted in any way whatsoever to the Ontario Development Corporation. It may be a false report about your role, and perhaps it is something that should be clarified.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have to agree with you there; that is for sure.

Mr. Deacon: I will certainly endeavour to locate the source of the problem.

There was another point that bothered me; I mentioned it last year. I cannot understand why the Ontario Development Corporation does not insist on some form of share participation in this position. It seems to me incredible, when you are giving people such an attractive source of funds, that you should not also do what any normal investor would do—and you are investing on behalf of the taxpayers of the province—and insist upon some piece of the action if you have some hope of profits if it is a successful venture. Rather than just worry whether we are going to get our interest and principal and how much we are going to give them, it is a matter of incentive. You said last year you had not asked for this. Have you been asking for a piece of the action and have you been participating since that time?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me say that we are on your side in that. We of the Ontario Development Corporation have recommended to the Treasury Board that we should consider taking part of the equity on the basis that, when the company gets itself in such financial shape that it can buy back the equity, the equity will be sold back to the Canadian management at whatever the market price was that day, so that the shareholder could participate in the gains that the company had made since its inception. That matter is under consideration now, this year, by the Treasury Board. I am hoping that one of these days they will accept our recommendation that perhaps we should consider part of the equity operation.

I might say this is one of the points the Canadian development corporation, if it ever comes into being, would like to see done. They would like to take an equity position in these corporations. I think the first idea was that they would like to buy out the corporation and save it going into the hands of foreigners. On the other hand, I think they recognize today that they are far better off to leave the company in the hands of the present owners and take an equity position and give it some management consulting service, which is what we have been doing. We have not had an equity position participation, but I think it is a good idea and we are looking at it now.

Mr. Deacon: I am glad you are looking at it and I would hope that you would recognize the philosophy. Just because government has an interest in a share it does not mean that it is going to a government-run thing, or needs to be a government-run thing. Many countries in the world, especially European countries, and Britain, have substantial share interests without interfering in any way with the operation. They leave the operation in the hands of management which itself has major industrial interests in these corporations.

It seems terribly important to me that we stop confining ourselves to getting a return on our money and that when we are giving these people assistance, we should get some piece of the potential profit.

In this matter of foreign control of these companies, you said quite a bit about it does not matter at all. I think it does matter and I am surprised that you are still holding this view. I am also pleased to find out that many people in business, even in foreign-controlled business, are as concerned as some of us on this side of the House have been about this situation.

Maybe everyone should be a good corporate citizen but the fact is, they are inclined to be better corporate citizens if they have a Canadian interest in the companies. If the Canadian interest is predominant, they are looking at it more from our Canadian national point of view. I think it is important that any company you invest in, that you grant an EIO loan to, agree to disclose its finances publicly and publish these finances so we know just what we are doing. The public are then made aware in reports published in the open just what is happening in these companies which are getting this assistance.

Perhaps everything is fine, but people will feel and be assured that everything is fine if one of the conditions of getting these loans is that they start to tell us what goes on in their companies in this country. I know there is a problem. The real success of business is not just capital; it is know-how. Part of the know-how, the major part of the know-how, is usually centred in another land. We develop our own particular species of know-how, or sort of, in our Canadian subsidiary, but this is a problem where I think you, as a major source of capital to industry, have a role to play. I think all of us as legislators have a role to play. We have got to find an answer to how we can build these pools of capital and management know-how in this country so that people do not just resort to the generous offers and, because there does not seem to be an alternative, in order to get cash, to these foreign sellouts.

One method I have suggested and I really feel you should take a good look at, is instead of operating in the way we are through what is a branch of government, that we invest our money in, you might say, holding companies, several holding companies formed around this province. I mentioned this in the estimates of The Department of Mines because I feel that it is important that people in all parts of this province, and in any special area of industry or operation, feel that they are going to people in the industry who are knowledgeable in an area; who know the situation, who are familiar with it. I think it makes for a much more successful continuing operation if we do it that way. They also know that if they get turned down by one source of capital, they can go to another.

At this time in the province there are several sources of private capital for new ventures. I think I can mention that Harris and Partners have quite a branch and their business specializes in this new venture capital. Perhaps you could be of great assistance to people who come to you for advice by coalescing and adding together all those that are now specializing in this field. I think there are some foreign ones, but there are also some Canadian ones. I think we should try to encourage these Canadian ones.

I am also aware, and very conscious of the fact, that this York University study indicated over the next eight years $10 billion of Canadian capital would leave this country for investment outside because we do not have sufficiently attractive opportunities for them to invest here. That is risk capital. That is what we really need in this country and we need to develop our own industries.

When I talk to the people who are the likely sources of this capital I say to them, "Why do you not go into these Canadian ventures?" If it is a trust company or an insurance company, they give two or three excuses, one of which is there are not sufficient number of marketable opportunities in this country. We have quite a few companies but there are so many people trying to buy stock that the prices are too high in relation to what they can buy elsewhere. The first problem they mention is this question of marketability of securities.

The second thing they mention is the lack of know-how in Canadian management. We have got to try to solve not only the question of marketability, we have got to somehow get together pools of know-how in these various special areas.

Go to small investors and ask, "Why do you always put your money in a bank deposit or in a bond, but you do not invest in risk things?", which is what we want in this country if we are going to get ownership of our industry. They say they do not trust the ordinary stock market. They feel that there is something about Bay Street, its past stories and things that have happened there. They feel that they would be in trouble. I asked them if they would have more confidence in the situation if the government had an interest and was taking a risk alongside them. They say yes, they would.

Rather than thinking of a single Canada development corporation I am suggesting that we, as a province, start a role of sponsoring and bringing together pools of capital in various parts of the province by approaching a group of six to 12 people in northwestern Ontario; people who are successful in the tourist industry, in the mining industry, in the forest products industry. We go to each of these individuals and say to them, "Will you put in $25,000 or $50,000 each in a holding company here?" Whatever is a really meaningful investment, a risk for them. We will put up several million dollars or what amounts to, maybe, 35 or 40 per cent of the total equity of the company which we will make a public offering on.

Then with that formed in northwestern Ontario, maybe another one centred on the Sault and another one centred on the Timmins area, and another one centred in Sudbury, there would be four alternative sources of capital to anybody in northern Ontario who has some project he wants to get developed. Allocate to those companies your EIO funds for that area, whatever you have marked for that area. They can have so much, each of them, under their control, that they can put out in a year.

You would have the advantage of local involvement and participation and know-how. You would have substantial pools of capital. You would have pools of capital that investors in other parts of the province, no doubt, would take an interest in as well. But they would not be centred in Toronto, which is so resented by people around this province and I can understand why. They always have to come down here to talk to us at Queen's Park or talk to the people on Bay Street, but it is a different world. We do not understand their world and they do not understand ours, but if we could form these pools of capital in these spots, I feel—Pardon?

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): We understand but the south does not.

Mr. Deacon: Regardless of this I do feel that it is important that they have the opportunity of going to people close to them, convenient to them, to talk over their proposals or ideas for a new motel or any other new project, instead of having to come all the way down here. It would be possible to get much faster decisions that way. Most of these private operations now make a decision in a matter of three or four days because they have the know-how available to them quickly to make up their minds on a project.

It takes a lot more time to have to come all the way down here, and set up your proposal here. It is not nearly as convenient for them and I suggest that this form of several development corporations be something that this province undertake. Do not wait for that Canada development corporation that they have been talking about for years in Ottawa and not getting anywhere with it.

They may get with it some day for certain purposes, but we have a real opportunity under this particular type of operation that we now have with the Ontario Development Corporation to increase the scope of private capital and government capital in co-operation and in a way that I think will be profitable, and not only to the areas of the province that we are trying to encourage. It will be profitable to the taxpayers of this province because they will have participation.

I ask the minister to seriously consider completely changing the structure of this programme in this way. I feel that you have done remarkably well. I am sure you will always have people who beef about the way that it is being allocated but I think we could improve it. I think we could make it less subject to the domination of a single governing force.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to comment, then I will get right on. I think what the hon. member has to say is certainly worth our while to investigate as we go into the future.

One of the things that, perhaps, has retarded our thinking along those lines, at the moment, is the operation of the Canadian general investment fund in Quebec. As you remember, they put out an equity position at $10 per share and within a matter of a few years their stock went to $5 a share. The people who bought into that, really, government operation were discouraged and they could not buy any more companies. They had the dogs. They could not buy any more companies because they were out of money.

When they went back to the market to get another issue put out, their stock was down to $5 and it was pretty difficult to sell more stock to people at $10. The Quebec government had to bolster that and now their fortunes have improved in the last year because they bought a 60 per cent interest in Marine Industries down there which is their big money maker. I would think that many of the companies they have down there, which I am familiar with, are not money makers. They are sort of a holding operation now to make sure it stays Canadian even though it is inefficient and not making any money.

Our situation is that if we in this province get into putting out a government bond to pick up some of these companies, and you are holding the bond as the average guy on the street and the market drops you would automatically, if your company put it out, say: "Well, that's tough luck, my market is down anyway, I gotta go with it, it may come back up later on." But if a government has a participation there, he immediately figures he is guaranteed, if he put $10 in he is guaranteed $10, regardless of the fortunes of the company.

This is probably one of the pitfalls we could get into with that kind of an operation, although I do not say it is not possible, I simply say it is one of the things we are examining and we would say to ourselves, "What kind of guarantees would a semi-government operation have to give that an ordinary underwriting house wouldn't?"

I think when people put their money into a government equity they do not expect it to drop out because President Nixon makes a statement, or somebody is sick, or somebody drops dead. But the market goes up and down like a yo-yo as you recognize, and if the market did go up and down under those conditions someone is holding a government security backed by the Province of Ontario, and he wanted to cash in on them he automatically, even though the stock has gone to five dollars, wants the ten dollars he put in.

This has been a difficult thing, even for the Province of Quebec, to make people understand when they have bought into Canadian General Investments, C.G.I. However I do not say that the idea is not possible, I think it is something we should look at. I think we have made our legislation broad enough that we can do many things that the hon. member has suggested we should take a look at.

Mr. Deacon: My point is that we should not confine ourselves to one or two companies. This is—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, no!

Mr. Deacon: This is where the problem comes, because everybody thinks that therefore is a government company.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, I think—

Mr. Deacon: You are talking about ten or twelve?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, I think this is what they have done in Quebec. They have a number of companies in there, but the conglomeration of companies have all suffered.

Mr. Deacon: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It may be just a general economic condition in Quebec. Now that the election is over maybe things will change, that $5 stock will come to $10, and they will be able to raise more money. But once you start on an undertaking like that you must have sufficient money to keep on going, to buy good companies as well as marginal. As you recognize, if you get too many marginal companies and then you run out of money and you cannot go back for more funds, then you are stuck with the marginal companies with no earnings, and as a consequence the shareholder becomes very dissatisfied.

Mr. Deacon: Yes, but I think you would be making a mistake if you follow the route you are suggesting here, where you say "that company", because you did formerly say the Northwestern Development Company, and there is a group up there running it. They do not run it well. I do not know why you should feel that you should have to keep on encouraging that company when it has not been run well.

There may be a new group that comes forward and wants to get support. I do not think the government should feel it has to bolster something that has already proven it has bad management, a bad group. It is not a successful group. I think there should be that competition. I think we should find new ways where we can get this combination of a government participation and give the public more confidence that things are on the up and up.

It could save such things as having to go to the Ontario Securities Commission for approval of an issue, if there was a 25 per cent participation in a venture taken by one of these companies for example. Different things could be done to cut out the red tape, get people on their toes, and yet give the public the flexibility of going to several sources of capital.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Lewis.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Chairman, as the minister knows we have no problems about equity sharing in certain of these areas. We certainly have no problems in the area of disclosure. We do have some questions about individual grants and about some of the principles that are related to them, and elsewhere. Perhaps out of the material that Mr. Etchen has given earlier in the afternoon I could ask one or two questions.

If I understand it correctly, you have disbursed roughly $14.7 million out of a total of almost $35 million. Is that correct?

Mr. Etchen: Yes, just a little over $15 million.

Mr. Lewis: So you have actually used rather less than half of the money which has been budgeted?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let us say it has been committed but not called for yet.

Mr. Lewis: Right. Well it has, in fact, been committed, but your experience is that some firms withdraw, some firms postpone, some firms delay, contingent on economic improvements which are not immediately in the offing. You hope to expend the $20 million, but you are not certain you will.

Mr. Etchen: No, I think the figures that I gave were a minority of the money according to those capitals. I think I said there were about $2 million special. In the statistics which we gave, the paint companies have been withdrawn. They are not included in that at all?

Mr. Lewis: Right.

Mr. Etchen: So they are not in there at all?

Mr. Lewis: Right.

Mr. Etchen: The dozen companies, I think, may amount to $2 million. The reason the others are not disbursed is because a lot of them have not had time yet.

Mr. Lewis: Right.

Mr. Etchen: Now I want to make this clear. They have not had time. To a company that got a loan in February, we are committed; if they keep their part of the bargain they are going to get it. Obviously there has not been time yet for them to put the building up, order the machinery, put the money in. This does not mean to say that because we are in this lead-time period, this money is not going to be used. In fact, the indications are that it definitely will be. This happened, for example, in the first year. We disbursed only $2 or $3 million. As the companies get into production, get buildings up, machinery ordered, we found that the disbursements this year are up—

Mr. Lewis: Accelerated?

Mr. Etchen: Yes, and they will be higher next year.

Mr. Lewis: It is just that my modest, industrial, working-class proletarian socialist mind is always boggled by figures as high as $35 million. I am reassured to know that you have only expended some $15 million of it. In the number of grants that you have expended, Mr. Etchen, have you made a breakdown of resident and non-resident expenditures within the 74 countries?

Mr. Etchen: No, we have not.

Mr. Lewis: You do not have that?

Mr. Etchen: No.

Mr. Lewis: You would not like to do that at some point to fulfil our twitchings of curiosity?

Mr. Etchen: Yes, I would be very happy to do it for you. In fact, I will ask the charming young lady on my right to make a note of it.

Mr. Lewis: Good. I would appreciate that. Because since these estimates will doubtless be on for another week or 10 days we will probably have time to—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Or Christmas. If we get out for Christmas we shall not complain.

Mr. Lewis: Another question, Mr. Chairman, through you to the minister. Has any analysis been made of the wage rate structures which exist in some of the new plants? Has any analysis been made of the difference in wages rates which exist where a move has taken place? Westinghouse is a good example; Canada Wire and Cable is another example; where a move from a more central urban area has been made to a more peripheral area.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is not quite true of Canada Wire and Cable. It is a new product line.

Mr. Lewis: I am sure they are all new product lines, and some of them are new divisions. But how do the wage rates in one plant compare with the wage rates in the metropolitan plant?

Mr. Etchen: Just let me answer that by saying that we have on our board Mr. Matthias of the sheet metal workers. As far as the board is concerned, we supply to our board at Mr. Matthias' special request all the proposed wage rates before these loans are passed. He is a representative of labour. He sits there, and I understand that he is very well respected in the labour movement. Mr. Matthias is the man who says yes or no to this wage rate section.

When the company supplies us with the rates it is going to pay, Mr. Matthias gives us his expert opinion as to whether or not these are reasonable. If he says they are not reasonable—and I think there has been the odd case where he said they have not been reasonable—we have sent the thing out and back again. As far as the wage rates go, it is a primary safeguard before the thing even gets past the board. When we are making a report to our board for approval, we have to be sure that the wage rates meet standards. What is more we have a check, and it is a mandatory check, with the Canada Manpower local office to make sure that before we submit them to the board, wage rates are reasonable for the area.

Mr. Lewis: Right.

Mr. Etchen: So we do take a good look at this, as we do with all parts of the company's operations. These are checks that we make. We check with the local Manpower office before they even go into our brief. Mr. Matthias is then the man on the board who is responsible for saying yes or no to these wage rates. If he says no, this is final.

Mr. Lewis: Right. I am sure Matthias does a superb job. I am not daunted by his presence on the board. I do not think you were here, Mr. Etchen—you probably would not know that, despite the presence on the Ontario Economic Council of Bill Ladyman and David Archer and Larry Sefton, my colleague from Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) summoned all his courage and took on the Ontario Economic Council, and some other members of this caucus were not stopped from viewing something critical simply by the presence of certain representatives.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Next time he is going to do it in English we can all understand.

Mr. Lewis: In this case while Matthias may apparently be able to tell you whether the wage rates are comparable in the area, what I asked was, how do they compare with the area from which the plant is moved?

Mr. Etchen: Let me make this abundantly clear—we do not give loans to a company to move them from one area to another. In other words, if a company is located in Windsor or somewhere like that, we do not give it a loan to move it somewhere else. We just do not give them loans.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me see if I can clear up what I think is in the hon members' mind. We are talking about the Westinghouse small appliance plant that moved from Brantford to Orangeville and they do not have a union in Orangeville yet, which is worrying the hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: No, no!

Hon. Mr. Randall: Have you any idea that they are paying the same wage rate without a union on small appliances in Orangeville as against Brantford?

Mr. Lewis: Was it Brantford or Etobicoke?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Brantford. Etobicoke had nothing to do with it—that was a company making something that went into factories. It was not an appliance, it was a commercial product they were making there and they offered to take the employees to Hamilton, but the union in Hamilton said the employees could not come here, they would have to go on the bottom of the list.

Mr. Etchen: Well what we do, as I said before, first of all we check with the Canada Manpower. Our officials take these wage rates to the Canada Manpower—who surely know what the wage rates are down there—and say, "How do these compare with what is being paid in the area?" Canada Manpower then gives an opinion as to whether they are reasonable and this is what we pass on to the board. These are all experts and should know.

Mr. Lewis: Well, again I am not disagreeing with you that the wage rates in the area may be comparable. What I am enquiring about is that there is some coincidence in the fact that you loan comes through at precisely the point—and I am really speaking to the minister now—when a plant makes the move. There is more coincidence than meets the eye in the fact that Westinghouse got its $250,000 at precisely the point at which the move was made. Canada Wire and Cable received $187,500 at precisely the point at which the move was made.

The work force necessarily feels that there is some relationship between the loan and the move. The work force necessarily feels that because more money was paid in Metropolitan Toronto than is paid in the outskirts to which the plant is moved, there is some relationship in terms of the profits which may accrue.

I think it is a bad practice to be giving the EIO loans which appear to be linked to moves away from urban areas, as in the case of Canada Wire and Cable from Leaside to Simcoe, where the wage rates apparently dropped and where, although it was a different product line, in the minds of the workers in Leaside and those of us given to such conspiratorial suspicion, the fact the money came through at exactly the moment when the plant was moved, bore some relationship to the move.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not think that is quite true. That was a new product line started up, some of that product line in Canada Wire and Cable was being made in the States and they brought it over here for the first time and put it in Dunnville.

When Westinghouse went to Orangeville, let me assure you, they assured us they were going to improve their work force in the town of Brantford and they did, until a strike took place for three or four months. Now what the work force is at the present time, I do not know.

I think you must also remember—and I think this is where the unions had better smarten up—that you are not going to get the same wage rate in Timbuktu as you get here in Toronto. If you want to employ people in the smaller centres instead of having them come to Toronto and get themselves a house here—if they can find one—and pay the living costs here, and expect to get the same standard here as they are getting in Timbuktu, there must be some understanding on the part of the unions.

I do not hesitate to tell them when I am talking to them—whether it is the Ontario Federation of Labour at the meetings or anywhere else—I think they must recognize that if a man is going to build a plant off the track, out of the Metropolitan area or the urban area, and you have to pay for freight in and out, he is going to employ people in that area and he has to be competitive with his suppliers. That is one of the reasons he goes there. Now if we are going to discourage industry from coming into Toronto, which everybody is in agreement with in order to stop pollution, it follows that if a man is going to be 100 miles from Toronto there must be some gain, not necessarily in wages, but there must be some gain or there is no use in him going there. I do not think the difference in wage rates that you are talking about is so great that the people in the area are not benefitting. Now if they are not benefitting I cannot understand why the people in the Westinghouse plant did not immediately grasp the union as a saviour and join the union.

Mr. Lewis: Well you know the reasons—

Hon. Mr. Randall: There was nothing to stop them.

Mr. Lewis: The reasons for difficulty in organizing the plant in Orangeville may have more to do with the absurdities of the certification procedure under The Labour Relations Act in Ontario than the lack of enthusiasm on the part of the work force. That is something we can argue at another time.

Hon. Mr. Randall: As a matter of fact, we feel just as bad about it as you do.

Mr. Lewis: Right. The manufacturer is not weeping. Westinghouse seldom weeps even though its margin of profit is as low as you indicated the other day. Still making 2.7 per cent—

Hon. Mr. Randall: On $220 million—

Mr. Lewis: They are not yet destitute.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Would you like to put your money into the business? Would you like to buy—

Mr. Lewis: As I pointed out to you the other day, you have already put $250,000 of the money of the people of Ontario into it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Social capital, the thing your party is always talking about; social capital!

Mr. Lewis: Right. Do not make those arguments, or I will coin a phrase about “rocks in one’s head.”

Hon. Mr. Randall: Go ahead! Social capital! Let us have another $100,000 of social capital.

Mr. Lewis: Let us talk about the labour aspects of it. You have given to Honeywell Controls $218,992 a year or two ago—

Hon. Mr. Randall: And now they are on strike and you are going to blame us for that.

Mr. Lewis: Can I ask how much of that money has actually been expended? Can I ask that of Mr. Etchen? Has it all gone? Has part of it gone?

Mr. Etchen: As far as I know, it has all been despatched.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They built their plant and they got their money.

Mr. Lewis: What does “as far as I know” mean? Is that a certainty? All the money has been expended?

Has it occurred to your department to tell Honeywell Controls, gently, that you would like to dispense public money to plants which bargain in good faith and are appropriate employers, and whose labour relations are not quite as unpleasant as Honeywell Controls’ presently are?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Has it occurred to you that we made the loan over two years ago—

Mr. Lewis: It occurs to me that you committed the money over two years ago. You did not make it two years ago.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Just a minute. We made the commitment two years ago—

Mr. Lewis: Right.

Hon. Mr. Randall: —to build a plant for data equipment intended to be manufactured either in the UK or the United States. Honeywell Controls came to us and said: "Look, if we build this in a designated area, what is the EIO grant?" The reason they did not build in Scarborough and went to Bowmanville was that it never had an industry before that—or only had one industry, I believe, which was the rubber company. They got the grant; they built the plant and since then they have put on an addition.

They are making this piece of data equipment for the entire world. So the people of Ontario, whether they be in Scarborough or in Bowmanville, are benefitting from that two hundred-odd thousands of dollars.

Mr. Lewis: So, there is benefit withal.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Sure—

Mr. Lewis: The money was committed in 1968. When was the payment made?

Mr. Etchen: It was in May, 1969.

Mr. Lewis: The payment was made in May. The $218,000 was made—

Mr. Etchen: No, that is when it was committed.

Mr. Lewis: Was committed? When was the payment made?

Mr. Etchen: April 11, just recently.

Mr. Lewis: April 11, 1970?

Mr. Etchen: I am sorry, 1969. The balance at the end of 1969; $200,000 in April and the balance—

Mr. Lewis: That is not very much of a balance, I will certainly grant that.

Mr. Etchen: I would also like to point out the Bowmanville plant is not on strike.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, I appreciate that.

Mr. Etchen: This plant has a UAW union, but belongs to the Oshawa local and not the local which—

Mr. Lewis: Of course, I appreciate that.

Mr. Etchen: Approximately 200 people are employed at Bowmanville at this time. The job forecast for the EIO loan was 80 and rising to 175; there are now 200 people employed there. The Bowmanville plant, as the minister pointed out, is making special computer equipment referred to as key tape, which is not made in the Scarborough plant, and 90 per cent of this equipment is made for export. I am advised that no production has been transferred from Scarborough to Bowmanville. It stands on its own. It has its own union. It is employing far more people and, as I said, 90 per cent of it is for export.

Mr. Lewis: Right. As a matter of fact, we have some reports that there is some work going on in Bowmanville that could have been done in Scarborough under the present circumstances. I do not suspect that we are going to be able to ascertain that and certainly the company is not going to admit to that. I am not denying the existence of the plant and its creation of jobs; the heroic work Honeywell is doing. I feel certain they would have located in Bowmanville without the inducement of $218,000. You have a letter to the contrary?

Mr. Etchen: No, just let me put the facts on that. They were going to put this plant in England and my understanding is that they had already dug a hole in England.

Mr. Lewis: Is that so?

Mr. Etchen: That is how far they got in committing themselves to putting this plant in England. When the company, as all companies do, took a look at what the return on the investment would be, the fact that they would get a $250,000 EIO loan swayed them, and instead of this product which had been exported to the rest of the world being made in Britain, it is now being made right here in Ontario.

We have got 200 jobs here, we have got exports here, as the Stephenson-Kellogg report shows. Honeywell is one of these companies. The citizens of Ontario are going to get their money back over and over again in taxes and that sort of thing.

Mr. Lewis: Do you have the material on file from Honeywell saying why they have located in Bowmanville—I ask this question in good faith—is it located in Bowmanville because of the EIO loan?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me tell you how they located there. At the time they located there, Mr. Wills, who is now, I think, the chairman of the board of Honeywell, or president, I forget which, came in with a number of people from the Canadian Manufacturers Association to complain to me that they thought that the designated area incentive programme was discriminatory. And I agree it is to the guy who does not get it, but you would never sell that to the towns that need industry, including Cornwall.

I pointed out to them why we were doing it, and after I got through pointing out why we were doing it, he said: "You know, you have given me an idea. I think I can go up to Minneapolis and sell my company on putting a company in Ontario and keep it in Canada instead of going to the United States or the U.K. The plans are already drafted. In fact, they may have started to dig a hole overseas." He went to Minneapolis, phoned me from Minneapolis and said, "I got the deal for the EIO loan if I put the plant down in Bowmanville." That is how the plant went to Bowmanville.

Mr. Lewis: With the EIO loan?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right.

Mr. Lewis: He just phoned? You chatted over the phone?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I chatted over the phone.

Mr. Lewis: He did not drop you a letter, saying, "Dear Stan: Thanks for giving me—"?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No. He was able to do what I told you the other day. He was able to look at the capital investment and see what the return on the investment would be. The return on the investment under the EIO programme was better for them than going to the U.K. or the United States and we got the business.

Mr. Lewis: Have they opened their books to you?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not think that they need to open their books.

Mr. Lewis: Have you asked them to open their books to you since you loaned them $250,000 in public funds?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am satisfied that they are doing a good job without opening their books.

Mr. Lewis: Well I am not satisfied that that would be right.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, that is all right. You can be unhappy and lay awake at nights.

Mr. Lewis: Oh no, no. As a matter of fact I have been sleeping increasingly well.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Have you?

Mr. Lewis: The Stephenson-Kellogg report last year was not very impressive.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Not to you, but everybody else was very impressed.

Mr. Peacock: I do not think it was very impressive when they were able to rush copies up to the press gallery without giving us one before we had a chance to reply.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I have had the same thing happen in your department. The press get it before you give me the news.

Mr. Lewis: There even remains a number of copies of press articles written on the basis of the Stephenson-Kellogg report. You will recall them—Mr. Del Bell of the London Free Press wrote an article. Harold Greer, the columnist, wrote an article. These members of the—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Was he not the one who called around the Liberal campaign office?

Mr. Lewis: They were not overly impressed with the Stephenson-Kellogg report.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Was not Mr. Greer the man that ran the campaign for Mr. Wintermeyer?

Mr. Lewis: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Wintermeyer, that is right.

Mr. Lewis: And after that setback he has developed vastly more insightful with the passing years.

Hon. Mr. Randall: He has gone back to the newspaper, where he should have stayed.

Mr. Lewis: Fine. The truth is that there is very little evidence to show that the EIO loan, as such, persuades these extraordinary multi-national corporations to relocate. I do not know what Honeywell sales were last year, but I am sure that as a multi-national company they were in excess of $1 billion. I am sure it has retained earnings in excess of $200 million or $300 million. I am sure its profit after taxes was in the vicinity of $70 to $80 million. I am recalling these figures from the back of my mind, but I think I am probably right. And I am very much taken aback that $218,000 alone would have made the difference. Even if it did, I am concerned that you have not said to the same Wills who walked into your office with such friendly camaraderie and said: "Stan, I think incentive programmes are discriminatory," and 48 hours later availed himself of an incentive programme.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Because he did not understand—

Mr. Lewis: You cannot quote him on the—

Hon. Mr. Randall: He did not understand the benefits—

Mr. Lewis: I see, I see. I am surprised. He is now president of the Canadian Manufacturers Association.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Even you do not understand the benefits; I have not sold you yet.

Mr. Lewis: He was fighting inflation.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I have not sold you yet.

Mr. Lewis: Fighting inflation by throwing people out of work at Honeywell Controls in Scarborough?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, no, no.

Mr. Lewis: Right. That is what—

Hon. Mr. Randall: There is an economic back-up there between the workers and the management and they both get the same kind of breaks.

Mr. Lewis: As a matter of fact, that too is opinion. I have never seen anything more loaded against the work force than is now loaded against them at Honeywell Controls in Scarborough.

You have a forgiveness feature of your loan. You go back over it and review it for five or six years, do you not? You apportion it, balance in the sixth year or you are saying that you have given all the balance in advance?

Mr. Etchen: No, we forgive one-tenth in each of the first five.

Mr. Lewis: You forgive one-tenth in each of the first five years and the balance at the end of the sixth year.

Well, Mr. Etchen, this is a matter of policy. I shall not put this labour on your shoulders.

I do not mind saying to the minister, that in the objectionable circumstances of that strike in Scarborough you, as a minister, might well call Mr. Wills in. I am sure you know him well—I am sure you are on a first-name basis.

You say to him: "You have got a lousy labour situation in Scarborough, it has been mishandled. The conciliation board gave a no-board report; the conciliation officers gave up on the company three weeks ago; bargaining and bad faith is immediately apparent. There is no reason in the world why it should not be settled. For God's sake Wills, you have got $250,000 of public money systematically forgiven over the next five or six years, behave like an adult and have some responsibility to your work force."

It does not mean that you are going to take away the plant from him. It does not mean that you are not going to forgive him the money. It just means that you ask him for some sense of social responsibility in return for the moneys which he has received gratis from the province of Ontario.

I do not think that is a particularly unworthy request. I do not think that it is a particularly inappropriate request—even if you were on his side in the labour dispute. Even if you thought what the UAW local was asking was reprehensible, you still have an avenue, by way of forgiveness of this loan, through which to approach this fellow Wills and say: "In our present climate of labour in the province of Ontario and the problems of unemployment, and while you are president of the Canadian Manufacturers Association, it is not a very intelligent position—to do what you are doing to the workers in Scarborough and take $250,000 in public money."

I do not really think that is so unfair, Mr. Minister, and it is worth considering. It reminds me of the other remark you made earlier on when you said we do not like to put industries into Toronto because of the pollution there.

Let me ask you something. You have given Kimberly-Clark—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I did not say we did not want to put them in. I said the chances are they add to pollution.

Mr. Lewis: They add to pollution. Right.

You have given Kimberly-Clark, an American corporation, a $269,433 forgivable loan. Am I right? Cannot that be checked out?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, I think you would be right.

Mr. Lewis: You think I would be right. I think I would probably be right too.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are very seldom wrong.

Mr. Lewis: You have given the Dryden Paper Company Limited, part of the Reed Group, a nonresident-owned firm, a $500,000 forgivable loan. Am I right about that? You have given—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do you object to these companies getting those loans?

Mr. Lewis: You have given Boise Cascade, as of May 1 this year, another promise of $100,000 for a forgivable loan. Am I right in that? It is an American firm is it not?

Hon. Mr. Randall: What difference does that make?

Mr. Lewis: Just a second. You have given Ontario-Minnesota Pulp and Paper Company, a totally-owned subsidiary of Boise Cascade, $117,083 as of June 10, 1968. I think I am right in that.

And you have given Domtar, which is a reputable Canadian company, and was just fined $1,000 for pollution under section 27 of The Ontario Water Resources Act, you have given them a $484,000 forgivable loan in one place, and you have now given them $439,000, which we all hope will be expended in the Cornwall area—1969.

You have given $2 million in forgivable loans either to foreign-only pulp and paper companies, or to the Canadian pulp and paper company which, for whatever reason, was found guilty of pollution and fined $1,000. Am I right in that?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right.

Mr. Lewis: Okay. Has it ever occurred to The Department of Trade and Development that to hand out between $1.5 million and $2 million to the major polluters in the province of Ontario, without requesting them to terminate their pollution, is perhaps a peculiar use of public funds?

Hon. Mr. Randall: You know, with all your brains, this is what amazes me.

Mr. Lewis: I am not asking you to comment on my brains.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am going to analyze you for a minute. With all your brains you think that they can wave a magic wand at a paper plant and overnight they can solve pollution. You think a lousy $1,000 fine will stop the company. You think the—

Mr. Lewis: A lousy $1,000 fine?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is what you said, is it not?

Mr. Lewis: Your language. I did not use that language.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You said a $1,000 fine.

Mr. Lewis: I am very selective in my language.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are. Yes, I know you are. You use a $3 word.

Let me point out to you that the loans that these people are getting are providing jobs for the fellow sitting on your left over there in northern Ontario. I am going to ask you right now, would you want us to withdraw all those loans?

Mr. Lewis: Did I say that?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am asking you.

Mr. Lewis: Did I say withdraw the loans?

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are indicating it.

Mr. Lewis: As sure as hell, I am not indicating a withdrawal of the loans.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You sure are. You are against them.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Hon. Mr. Randall: He does not want the loan to northern Ontario.

Mr. Lewis: Greater propriety!

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right; he does not.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. Lewis: Come on now, the Chairman is calling the minister to order.

Hon. Mr. Randall: He is calling the hon. member to order.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Sargent was the last one, Mr. Lewis.

Mr. Lewis: That is a personal vendetta which the Chairman is pursuing.

Mr. Etchen: Mr. Lewis, may I just throw some light on this because I think we are going a little off the track.

Mr. Lewis: No. I know that those firms are not engaged in pulp and paper operations.

Mr. Etchen: Just let us put this in proper perspective. Boise Cascade Home and Land Limited was given that loan in Hensall for building mobile homes.

Mr. Lewis: I appreciate that.

Mr. Etchen: They are not, as far as we know, and we have had this checked out, in the pollution business.

Mr. Sargent: You did not get onto mobile homes, did you?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Sure.

Mr. Etchen: Sure, and we are going to look after your constituent if you send him in.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Send them down.

Mr. Sargent: When they do come on down, you tell them to go back home.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Send him a wire.

Mr. Etchen: Boise Cascade are making mobile homes in Hensall. They are not in the pollution business, and the local people are satisfied on this.

Another one that you mentioned was Domtar in Cornwall. Domtar has been checked out by the local authorities down there. They are highly satisfied. This is one company that is not going to pollute. In fact we had an engineer in beforehand. It was cleared with the Ontario Water Resources Commission.

Mr. Lewis: I am delighted to hear it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You see; ask us the questions, and we will give you the answers.

Mr. Etchen: We held up the application of Ontario-Minnesota until we got a clearance on the pollution aspect from the Water Resources Commission Management. I would also like to throw some more light on this—

Hon. Mr. Randall: It was held up for nearly a year, if I remember.

Mr. Etchen: Yes, we did hold it up. We have issued instructions to all the consultants in the Ontario Development Corporation that before any loans are made to any company—and this was issued about a month ago—they have to be cleared with the Ontario Water Resources Commission, the air abatement branch, or whatever is the appropriate authority. I think that might answer Mr. Lewis' question.

Mr. Lewis: When did you issue the notice?

Mr. Etchen: About a month ago.

Mr. Lewis: You issued it about a month ago? After you had distributed $35 million worth of loans?

Mr. Etchen: I think I had better explain it. You have mentioned companies. I just said that I have indicated in most of the other cases we have taken a look at this. I indicated we held up Ontario-Minnesota.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Etchen, I am pleased that the anti-pollution aspect has finally come to The Department of Trade and Development in the administration of EIO loans.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Everything but the NDP department.

Mr. Lewis: It came in April, 1970. It is a little behind the rest of the public in its concern for pollution, but I feel certain, Mr. Etchen, that you would have liked to do it at the inception of the programme, but only your minister held you up. I do not think that it has anything to do with the civil service. I know that it is government policy and I am relieved that government policy changed by April, 1970. That is still not the basic point I was making, although one of them.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You mean you are going to change your story.

Mr. Etchen: May I just clear up this one? I indicated to you that we were doing this before then. We held up Ontario-Minnesota for a year. With Domtar, while the application was in, we had them check with the Ontario Water Resources Commission and the local people. Where we had any indication at all that there was going to be pollution, we certainly took a look at it. All that the instructions in April did was merely to formalize things.

Mr. Lewis: I see; so be it, fair enough. I am pleased to hear that the industries you are inviting into Ontario will not add to the pollution. I would have thought that to be the most modest of requirements. It is nice to know that it is being done.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I also point out the one at Fort Frances we announced in the House the other day, a $45-million plant, with $6 million being spent for pollution abatement equipment before they even get started.

Mr. Lewis: Before they even get started?

Hon. Mr. Randall: You will be happy to know that.

Mr. Lewis: Well it is—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Again, I want you to sleep comfortably tonight.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, it is just extraordinary; the homage that should be paid this grant knows no bounds. However, you are still giving significant sums of money to the major polluters in the province of Ontario. Now, no one is suggesting that the money—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You prove it! Prove it!

Mr. Lewis: —well, I have it right here in front of me. Boise Cascade, Kimberly-Clark, Dryden Paper, Domtar—as a matter of fact, you know, Ontario-Minnesota is hardly something that one should pride oneself on.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They are bringing the wagon for you now.

Mr. Lewis: If it had not been—you know, I am glad to see that your devastating repartee gets a lesser and lesser response.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): That was one of his better efforts.

Mr. Lewis: Boise Cascade is an interesting example, Ontario-Minnesota would have been brought to court by your government two or three years ago were it not for the personal intervention of one John Simonett, who was still Minister of Energy and Resources Management before he ascended to a more senior portfolio. The truth is that many felt very strongly in the province of Ontario that Ontario-Minnesota was ravaging the north more directly than most companies. They are all under ministerial order. These companies to which you are granting large sums of public money are under ministerial order, ministerial warrants, and have been directed to clean up pollution and many of them have been delinquent. Some of them are still being fined on a regular basis.

It seems to me that it would be right to use the EIO loan—if one insists on having the programme—as another lever to prod them into action. That is really what I am putting to you. My colleagues from northern Ontario do not view it as a way of removing industry from the north. My colleagues in northern Ontario would view it as a way of forcing those people to eliminate pollution much faster than they might be willing to do. If they are going to get $500,000 gratis from the government, then they do not continue polluting Lake Nipigon or Kapuskasing, or wherever they happen to have a subsidiary that is engaged in a major pulp and paper operation.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You know it staggers me how far-sighted the people in your party are. I have been in this House for seven years, and I never heard you mention pollution until the last year, when the newspapers and everybody else started to mention it and you climbed on the bandwagon. Now it has become one of your—

Mr. Lewis: No, no!

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, I have been here seven years and never heard your platform on air pollution.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): In 1968! You are a little out in your figures.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Okay, 1968. We have been doing something about it since 1965.

Mr. Martel: My predecessor who was in the area, Bob Powers, introduced the bill in 1945, so do not hand me the guff.

Mr. Chairman: Order please! Mr. Lewis has the floor.

Hon. Mr. Randall: There has been $2.5 million spent on pollution by industry and government since 1957 in this province. You never mentioned—

Mr. Martel: Too bad you would not spend a little in the southern areas.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, you will agree, sir, that we have been maligned and slandered and that something should be said in defence. I remind the minister of KVP and Espanola and Premier Leslie Frost, who has also ascended to another position—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Just one case.

Mr. Lewis: One case. I will remind you that in the major debate in the Legislature in 1966 it was the hon. Mr. Simonett who said that there would be no more pollution in the province of Ontario by 1970—a clairvoyant, a man of accurate prediction!

You know it is a sustained battle for us, and we like to use every single lever we have, and if you are going to give away $2 million of public money to pulp and paper polluters, then you should extract from them a commitment as to when they are going to stop polluting in northern Ontario or they do not get their money. And you will find they will stop so quickly it will surprise you, even with your scepticism. That is a legitimate request to make of companies that have wantonly done what they are presently doing to the environment.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will pass on your compliment.

Mr. Lewis: Thank you very much. It is the first time that you have so amiably accepted my suggestions.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh, I am always agreeable. You know that, Stephen.

Mr. Lewis: I have one more question to ask and then I will shut up, as you would wish me to do.

What about Courtaulds, that worries me slightly? How do you differentiate between the amounts of money you give for one product line and the amounts you give for another division? How can you continue pouring money into the same plant when it has already laid off over 600 people, never seems to hire as many again and is constantly in jeopardy of laying off further?

All of us in this House would wish more jobs for the Cornwall area, but does this not show an amazing lack of planning for Cornwall, to keep on pumping public moneys into a plant that continually closes its divisions? There has been a lot of information elicited here today—which some of my colleagues will elaborate on—about the Cornwall area which shows it is even more surprising than that.

But let me ask you about Courtaulds alone, because we have had an exchange on this in the past.

Mr. Etchen: Well, Courtaulds have several divisions.

Mr. Lewis: Right.

Mr. Etchen: And we gave one to expand the synthetic fibres, because this was definitely going to increase jobs. The rayon line was closed and the one that we gave was for this different product, for the equipment. So one of the loans we gave was for a different product, it was not for the rayon line.

So what we are saying in effect is this: Okay, they are going to close one down anyway, but they have an opportunity. They run several divisions. The rayon division is going to be closed for economic reasons, so this is something we just simply have to face. Now they are going into another line which makes business sense—which looks as though it has a reasonable chance to expand some jobs.

It is not a question of whether we can bring back the rayon line. It is uneconomic; it is not going to go; the company itself has made the decision, not us.

We looked at it and we saw they were going into synthetics which they were prepared to do, if they got assistance. While it would not compensate for the loss of these jobs, there is no question about it, it makes sense.

It would increase employment, and particularly in Cornwall, which needed it. We realize, the same as you do, that there have been a substantial number of layoffs and this would be some contribution. It was already in Cornwall and it did not have to be brought in, it was something we could count on to give some assistance in the Cornwall area.

Mr. Lewis: You have given two loans to Courtaulds.

Mr. Etchen: The other one was for Caravelle Carpets, which is associated very closely; I did know at one time just what their association was.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh yes, and if they are selling $600 million of carpets a year all over the world and they are employing 1,000 people, that is what Cornwall needs.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, absolutely, I agree.

Mr. Etchen: Yes, well, it is very closely associated with Courtaulds.

Mr. Lewis: Who is doing that?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I say, in five years from now, if they are selling $600 million worth of carpets a year and employing 1,000 people, why that is what—

Mr. Lewis: In five years from now?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Sure.

Mr. Lewis: Right, well—

Hon. Mr. Randall: We are optimists.

Mr. Lewis: Where lies the dreamer? Cornwall's history with Courtaulds has hardly been that auspicious.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They have been good employers in the past.

Mr. Lewis: Well, the loss of 650 jobs in three months is not the greatest reassurance.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Have you looked at the the lining in your suit lately?

Mr. Lewis: I try not to wear suits.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Take a look at the lining in your suit. I will tell you, Courtaulds used to make all the material that the suit manufacturer made the inside lining for your suits from. Today that all comes from Taiwan, and that is one reason why Courtaulds have had to close out their textile division.

Mr. Lewis: I know the problems of the textile industry.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They are going into other areas and the EIO loan—if they say, “We are going into a new product line, we are going to enlarge our production there, it may not be this 600 employees we have laid off, at least we will save 125 jobs.” If we had not gone in you would have been here today criticising us for not helping Courtaulds.

Mr. Lewis: No, that is not so.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Make no mistake about it.

Mr. Lewis: That is not so.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh, yes, you would have.

Mr. Lewis: What we are trying to say, or what I have tried to indicate, in basic, Mr. Chairman, is that there should be a number of other criteria in the establishment of EIO loans if they have to persist at all.

I, for one, am not persuaded that EIO loans make a significant difference in the location of industry, but apparently the minister is.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do you suggest that if we discontinue all other provinces will do the same thing?

Mr. Lewis. As a matter of fact, I think there may be other kinds of incentives. We discussed them in the House before; I am sure we will go into them again, this probably is not the place. But factors such as the labour relations of the company, the relationship of the company or the industry to pollution and its record elsewhere in the province—its involvement, in fact, in other parts of the world. I would even go that far in terms of the way in which it behaves as a corporation.

The insistence that there be total and absolute disclosure of all its financial dealings, if it is in receipt of major amounts of public money. Advance notice of six months to a year minimum, if these companies in receipt of public money are going to lay off employees, by way of shutdown or closure. All of these stipulations should be written into the granting of EIO loans, particularly when over 50 per cent of those moneys are going to non-resident corporations to increase our dependency.

You and I will never agree on the relative merits of foreign investment in Canada, but surely the conditions under which that investment is allowed, even by your government, should be fierce. They are extremely lax and it is worth trying in these conditions in all these separate instances the we have been discussing.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I just leave one thought with you before I get away from it, because we may never get back to it again. Let me just give you something; I have a report here.

From 1926 to 1968 we have more than doubled our population, and between those two years the long-term investment in Canada by non-Canadians, after deducting our investments abroad, has increased four-fold from $148 per head of population to $750. Net interest and dividend payments have slightly more than doubled from 22 per head to 47 per head—this is where you win—but the average income of Canadians per head has increased five-fold from $452 in 1926 to $2,490 in 1968.

So for all that increased investment and the know-how that goes with it we are paying an extra $25 for each Canadian, and with its aid we have gained the income of more than $2,000 for our people. Now, you go to Ford and American Motors and any of these companies down in eastern Ontario or anywhere they have an American subsidiary, you ask the municipal fathers or the labour unions if they want those companies to fold and leave Canada, and I will tell you what they will tell you, they will run you out of town on a rail.

Mr. Peacock: Do not tell us that all of that investment accounts for all of the five-fold increase in our levels of income because it does not.

Mr. Lewis: Right.

Mr. Peacock: Billions of dollars in investment on education account for a good piece of that increase in the levels of income.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Sure, this just goes to show you that they are good Canadian—

Mr. Peacock: To the benefit of those corporations!

Hon. Mr. Randall: —corporate citizens and without them you would not be as far as you are today.

The other day in the House my hon. friend said, “Do you know that Ford is down to four days a week and American Motors have been laid off for two weeks?” They are two American companies and I do not know why you even bothered bringing them up.

Mr. Peacock: It does not excuse our lack of financial data and equity participation, though.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will not change the subject, I am just telling you what to do with it.

Mr. Lewis: You are right, I do not intend to change the subject, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, let us drop it and get on with the vote.

Mr. Lewis: Well, such inflammatory and inciting statements. The fact about the EIO loans is that—

Hon. Mr. Randall: If I cannot match you I will join your party.

Mr. Lewis: —they do, in fact, shore up exactly what you have now described, and what you have now described has two really serious flaws in the logic. First, is the amount of—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Here comes the twist.

Mr. Lewis: No—the amount of the increase that is due to investment in the public sector, not your private corporations but in the public sector, in terms of improving the standard of living and the basic economic wherewithal. The second reason is—it amazes you to hear me talk about it—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: Indeed it does, it amazes me to hear you talk about it as well. The truth is that all of this money you talk about is our money, it is not foreign investment. It is Canadian money.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Would you have had the money if they were not here?

Mr. Lewis: They own us and control us with our own money.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Would you have had the money if they had not been here?

Mr. Lewis: Well, I may say to you that in the year 1970 the money is here and there is no reason in the world why we should not take control of it and insist on behaviour which invests for the benefit of this province.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Your party is now advocating confiscation.

Mr. Lewis: You know, I am not even going to reply to that nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is exactly what you are saying.

Mr. Lewis: —I am not even going to get into that foolishness with you.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Confiscate all the foreign money in this country.

Mr. Lewis: Is that what you—

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is what you just said.

Mr. Lewis: I do not know how the Chairman is containing himself.

Mr. Chairman: It is difficult.

Mr. Lewis: He is very close to the minister and he is containing himself. We are saying to you that you have the right as a minister to exact from these corporations rules of behaviour which are in the interests of Ontario's economy—no one is talking about confiscation—because it is our money with which we are being controlled.

You know all the figures that are involved in that equation, and it is time that you moved on it instead of reinforcing it by granting more than 50 per cent of your EIO fund to non-resident corporations. That is a perfectly legitimate argument; you do not have to “red herring.”

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am not “red herring.” What would your party do if you come to power tomorrow.

Mr. Lewis: What do you mean “what would you do?”

Hon. Mr. Randall: In reference to foreign investment.

Mr. Lewis: Could I, Mr. Chairman? I would like the rest of the afternoon and evening.

Mr. Chairman: Now if you will come to order, I—

Mr. Lewis: Now we have been asked a question by the minister and I am sure the Chairman feels that there should be a reply—

Mr. Chairman: You have the floor if you wish.

Mr. Lewis: Would you like to—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Go ahead—give me your views as to what the NDP would do if it came into power tomorrow. What would it do about foreign investment—how it would stop it and what it would do with the investments now here? In other words, changing the rules in midstream.

Mr. Sargent: That is not in the vote.

Mr. Lewis: What do you mean it is not in the vote? Is it in the vote, Mr. Chairman, because I will take some time? Do you want to discuss the—let us first discuss some of the areas that we have been talking about this afternoon. Let us discuss the pulp and paper industry—

Mr. Chairman: I do not wish to inhibit the discussion particularly between the member and the minister, but I would ask you to stick to the votes that are before us; 2207 and 2208. Carry on.

Mr. Lewis: I would like to, with the permission of the committee, rather than taking the committee's entire time, I would be pleased to table a simple appendix to these estimates setting out the policy very clearly, on foreign control and foreign ownership. It has appeared publicly before in the Toronto Daily Star by Donald MacDonald. You may recall that you yourself wrote on that page, Mr. Minister. I think it would form a worthy adjunct to the estimates as herein discussed.

Mr. Stokes: The members of the committee said put up or shut up. I think they insist that we table it.

Mr. Lewis: I know what is going to happen if I—I would like the minister's permission for that. Then it will be available once and for all. Later in these estimates, perhaps at 8 o'clock, when we reconvene, we can pursue matters even further—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Table it. Let me have a look at it.

Mr. Lewis: —go into some of the details.

Mr. Chairman: Have you finished with your questioning, sir?

Mr. Lewis: I have finished with my questioning, but I reserve the right, sir, to re-enter on the subject. I would appreciate that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Yakabuski.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Mr. Chairman, in view of all the earth-shattering talk of the last 40 or 50 minutes my words may seem quite insignificant. However, I have observed with interest the various cases brought up by different members pertaining to applications for IEO and—

An hon. member: EIO.

Mr. Yakabuski: EIO. Okay. In most of the cases, after the minister or Mr. Etchen has had an opportunity to explain, we see where the branch, or ODC, has had a very valid reason for turning these down.

Now, I could cry too, because last winter we had an operator in our area who was turned down and, of course, immediately he mentioned cases like Union Carbide, Huyck—the largest corporations—and I felt badly that my good operator in my constituency was not able to receive this loan. However, when the case was laid before me with all the details, I readily understood why the loan was turned down and for very valid reasons. I think this has been the case so far in all the isolated cases I have heard mentioned by Mr. Sargent; Mr. Deacon this afternoon had mentioned Nipigon Plywood, and it seems that he came here with only half the facts or only one side of the story, and when we know the whole story we readily understood why the loan was turned down.

There has been a lot of talk about Canadian ownership and Canadian control. It was discussed here yesterday; it has been discussed here again this afternoon at some length, and I think it is not only they on that side, but we on this side also who are quite concerned. We would feel much better if there was greater Canadian ownership, more Canadian control, but it is a fact of life and nobody to date has given any ready answer to this very important problem.

You can talk about it in theory. Mr. Deacon talked about the Canada development corporation, first mentioned by Mike Pearson about some five years ago perhaps, but nobody has told us why the Canada development corporation has not got off the rails. I am sure there are reasons; there have been obstacles in the way. These things do not have simple answers. And I have to agree with my friend from Parkdale (Mr. Trotter): We all feel there should be greater Canadian ownership, more Canadian control, not only in industry here in Canada but also in the trade union movement.

Only a couple of weeks ago in the House, the member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) mentioned that the United Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers were sending millions of dollars over—

Mr. G. Demers (Nickel Belt): It is the Steelworkers.

Mr. Yakabuski: The Steelworkers was it? They were sending millions of dollars over to Pittsburgh, and he held out his hand and said, "they are shoving a few crumbs back in the palm of their hand."

I think if we may concern ourselves about Canadian ownership and Canadian control, we have to deal with the two things, because they go together. I am reminded, too, that back on, I believe July 8, 1964, I happened to be in these very buildings when the typographical union—is that the one that was at the Globe, the Tely and the Star?—the local union voted to accept the contract offered by these three dailies at that time. Head office in Colorado Springs, Colorado, said, "No"—

Mr. Demers: Yankee imperialism!

Mr. Yakabuski: —and for three winters I would occasionally walk up the street in front of those papers, and here were those poor workers with those sandwich boards on their back, their shoes worn out, and they stayed there until their boards rotted and fell off and their shoes fell off too.

Now that is a terrible situation, and it is a real tragedy when we have that kind of control from outside the country. Certainly we all feel badly about this, and I hope in the coming months and years we will find answers that are practical to this very disastrous situation.

As I say, you cannot talk about control of industry and control of corporations without talking about the trade union movement also. That is all I have to say.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Yakabuski is completed? Mr. Sargent.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, with all due respect to my friend, Fern Guindon of Cornwall, in going over two years of loans here, I find that in Cornwall there was a loan to Forged Steel Valve, $500,000; Linwood Upholsteries, $51,000; Domtar Fine Papers, $439,000; Eastern Cloth, $261,000; Linwood Upholsteries and Furnishings, $49,000; Mosaic Artistic Glass, $32,000; Iroquois Template, $82,000; Compa Records, $198,000; Glencoe Cheese Factory, $35,000; Forged Steel Valve, $500,000; Caravelle Carpets, $81,000; Chisholm Lacrosse, $18,000; Cortel, $199,000; Howard and Sons, $144,000; Kraft Foods, $500,000; Sims Cabs, $45,000—in all, possibly 10 or 12 loans amounting to probably $3 million or $4 million going in there.

Hon. Mr. Randall: $2.5 million, I think it is.

Mr. Sargent: And they probably need every nickel of it, and they probably need another shot double that to cure the present— But we have this task force that the minister is going to chair tomorrow, I understand, between Ottawa and himself.

Hon. Mr. Randall: My deputy is down there today.

Mr. Sargent: Insofar as the Cornwall area is concerned, as the minister knows and the Chairman knows, the Grey-Bruce area is the lowest in the economic fabric of our whole economy. We have the lowest income, running from $1,500 to $2,000 at the highest; $1,700 is the average income of our people. I think if there is one area that needs a task force to go in and do a job, it is that area, and this department is the one that can give us a shot in the arm that we need. I would like to have the minister put that in the back of his mind and say that, as a target, you should pick the lowest area and go to work there.

Fern has done a good job getting all these injections down there, and the fact that he is a member of the Treasury Board would not hurt him either, I guess. But it is interesting to note that we have the hon. Provincial Treasurer on Treasury and he has done a pretty fair job with that industrial park of his in Centralia. I would like to ask the minister, when did you change the ceilings from $500,000 to $250,000? Was it May, 1969?

Hon. Mr. Randall: What did you say?

Mr. Sargent: You changed the formula for the areas of the province. Eastern Ontario was knocked down to $250,000, was it not?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No. It was left at $500,000. But southwestern Ontario was knocked down from $250,000 to $100,000.

Mr. Sargent: Yes, well, let us just have a look at that now. There was a series of loans for Centralia—Dashwood Industries, $250,000; Daymond Company, $142,000; Paul Lamp, $250,000; Vokes, $18,000; Dominion Road Machinery, $136,000; Western Foundry, $89,000—a total of six loans for the Treasurer's area. I understand that the day before you made the ceiling in that area $150,000—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No. It is $100,000; it was formerly $250,000. And anybody who made application before we changed it, got the $250,000; there was no change.

Mr. Sargent: I understand that the day before you made the ceiling $100,000, that area got a total for $250,000. They knew the target date was going to be $100,000 the day before you granted them the $250,000 loan. Would that be to Dashwood Industries?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I could not tell you that exactly.

Mr. Etchen: All companies, not just Dashwood, but any company in the province of Ontario that had received an approval in principle, irrespective of where it was, irrespective of what the company was, any company that had an application that had been approved in principle, prior to June 30, 1969 was eligible for the $250,000, even though on July 1 the amount was cut. This was applied to everybody. This information was sent out in notices all over the place. Nobody had any special in, and never has had. I am going to deal with that point later.

But just let us clear up this point. Every company was notified that it had been approved in principle—they had to get their applications in—that after June 30, as had been announced years ago, the existing programme was going to phase out. This was made known to everybody. Everybody was treated alike. Those who had got applications in, approved in principle by the end of June, provided things checked out, were given the $250,000. There was nobody—it did not matter who he was—who had any special treatment.

Mr. Sargent: All right, Mr. Etchen, would you advise me about the Centralia area deal? What loans had been approved but their programmes had not been activated? What loans that had been approved in Centralia had not been taken advantage of?

Mr. Etchen: There were three EIO loans approved in Centralia. I am just looking them up for you. One was to the Daymond Company, one was to Hughes Vokes and—

Mr. Sargent: Has Dashwood taken advantage of the loan and is it in operation?

Mr. Etchen: Dashwood Industry is not in the Centralia industrial park at all. They are in the village of Centralia, which is several miles away.

Mr. Sargent: Have they taken advantage of it?

Mr. Etchen: Yes, they got a loan. I will just look it up for you.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They qualified as a designated area.

Mr. Sargent: I see. What about Hall Industries' $250,000 loan?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They went into Centralia.

Mr. Sargent: Are they in operation?

Mr. Etchen: Yes, they are in operation.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They are one of the biggest employers down there. Hughes Vokes is another one.

Mr. Sargent: All right.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I just say to the hon. member, if an area is designated, I do not care where it is, if it is Owen Sound or anywhere else, if people come into see us, the application is processed. If they qualify and they are going to build a plant, they get a loan. It does not matter where they are located, I can assure you.

Mr. Sargent: Finally, Mr. Chairman, the motivation behind the ODC loans is, as the minister says, to create jobs. Our party's submission, since the launching of these estimates, is that a great segment of the economy is not having access to this money. We are saying nothing about the jobs but the right to stay in business, to borrow money and the same amounts as American firms are enjoying.

Now going through these loans here—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You mean all firms, not just American.

Mr. Sargent: I have no beef about Ontario firms getting operating capital for expansion. That is our business.

Hon. Mr. Randall: An American firm is an Ontario firm if it is operating here, as far as we are concerned.

Mr. Sargent: You are not an nationalist. I think our party stands for Canada and we like to protect Canada.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: That is fine. In a nice way, I would like to tell you that this guy, the hon. nice guy standing there, is selling us down the river to the States. There are no two ways about it. When you get $15, $16 and $17 million handouts in one year to firms that are in excess profit brackets over there and which will be in our economy anyway, because—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Can you guarantee that?

Mr. Sargent: Pardon me?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Can you guarantee they will be here.

Mr. Sargent: Well, they—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh, no, oh no!

Mr. Sargent: By virtue of the fact that we have created this, generated this economy, they are coming here to get their share of the market, and the motivation—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me ask you one question. You know when your area was designated federally—

Mr. Sargent: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: —it was a holiday playground. The minute it was designated federally you got industry in there and became an urban centre with a number of industries that went in. Now you are not sitting here telling me that those companies that went in were going to go there anyway? Those companies went in there under the federal designation, because Ottawa had an incentive plan, the same as we have in EIO. I do not care what anybody says, because I happen to be pro-American does not mean I am anti-Canadian, believe me.

Mr. Sargent: I did not mean that, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I do not think that anybody is more Canadian than I am, but I think I have—

Mr. Sargent: I take that back. I do not mean that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: —a different philosophy about industry, foreign investment here, than most people have. I take a look at it on the basis of the long run and the overall picture of the economy. But I just want to point out to you, that in your area up there, you took advantage of the federally designated area, and you got several millions of dollars. In fact, the only criticism that I would have of the federal government programme—and I think you recognize it—they left it on so damned long, that after they mopped up unemployment in Owen Sound, then people started coming from as far away as Newfoundland and flocked in there. Your municipal authorities had to extend the sewers. They were short of housing. Then these firms did not develop all the jobs they wanted and the plan was lifted off. You were left with a number of people who came there looking for jobs.

They were not Owen Sound people in the main, as you recognized. When I talked to you, I recognized that we must do something—I think you had 12 per cent unemployment there when you spoke to me—so we designated it. I think we have got two loans in there now. If there are any other prospects, bring them in and we will look at them. It does not matter and I do not care where they are. If we can get them in Owen Sound, I will get them in Owen Sound.

But I just want to point out to you, that despite what some of your friends here are saying that they would go anyway, and I do not care whether they are worth $10 billion. They will go where they get the best deal from any province or any state in North America. You can talk yourself blue in the face and you can never prove to me that because we gave them an incentive loan we are wasting the taxpayers' money, that they would go anyway. They will not go anyway.

They have gone where we want them to go because of an incentive programme and nothing else. I talked to the mayor of Cobourg the other day, and he said, "Mr. Randall, we have five industries in this town, and every one is American, and thank God for Americans, or Cobourg would be a cemetery with lights." I just ask you to think of that for a minute.

Mr. Sargent: All right, thank you. You will remember—

Mr. Lewis: That's where you get your quips from Mayor Pulford of Cobourg?

Mr. Sargent: In the three years of loans I have circled, I will just take any one page. Here is a case. I have got $10 million in loans here and in all these loans they employ fewer than 400 people. Here is a loan to Adult Milk Products, $329,000—12 people employed. Here is a loan to Book Print in Kingston township, $419,000 with nine people. The job flow it says will be 38 eventually, but that is a hell of a lot of money for nine people.

Mr. Etchen: Can I just clarify this for you, so that we do not get off the track? With Ault Milk it is quite true that the jobs were only 12, but let me tell you what the other benefit is. Without this, the maintenance of—

Mr. Sargent: I cannot hear you, I am sorry, Mr. Etchen.

Mr. Etchen: The main reason for giving the loan to the Ault Milk Company—

Mr. Sargent: Adult Milk.

Mr. Etchen: No, it is Ault, A-u-l-t.

Mr. Sargent: I am sorry, mine says Adult Milk.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No relation to Jimmy Auld.

Mr. Etchen: Was the maintenance of the markets for the milk producers in the area?

Mr. Peacock: They are one of those who postponed the use of their loan.

Mr. Etchen: No.

Mr. Peacock: You gave us their name on the list.

Mr. Etchen: It has been delayed, but this was admissible because of the slowdown. The reason we gave it to them was the fact that this would help the farmers in the area as an outlet for their milk products. This was the main reason. We have got the jobs to 12 jobs which, when financial conditions ease, will be just an extra bonus.

Mr. Sargent: My point is I am not trying to knock any one individual loan, but the overall policy of motivation is jobs—

Mr. Etchen: Only partly. Let me tell you that we want to see new technology as well. We are not just looking for jobs. Jobs are important, they are a high priority, but when you are looking at a case of why give them an EIO loan, we look for other things beside jobs.

Here was a good example. We are looking particularly for new technology, because unless this province does maintain a good rate of introduction of new technology, we are going to fall far behind. A lot of industries that are in production today are going to be as outdated as the bow and arrow in another 10 to 15 years. We have to encourage new industries, new types of industries, new technology. Therefore, in some of these more sophisticated industries, remember this, if we do not get them in, we are going to be like one of the banana republics.

We may give them an EIO loan merely to bring in new technology which is going to keep up the rate of development in the province. There are other reasons we make loans—to increase exports, reduce imports, these are all factors which come in. I agree with Mr. Sargent that jobs are highly important. I just want to point out that when you are looking at the jobs you must look at all the other benefits that go with it; increase in exports; reduction of imports; encouragement of technology; maintenance in some of the agricultural areas of milk outlets for farmers. There are quite a number of—

Mr. Sargent: To take a Kraft, or Campbell Soup Company, and give them a $0.5 million, when automation has come into the act, they employ 50 people. You side with technology, new technology. If they are going to go to automation you are still going to loan them money to put up a big plant to employ 50 people? You give them $0.5 million, which is ridiculous.

Mr. Etchen: They went into Hallowell township and this was an area where employment was badly needed, as in a lot of these cases. When I was in Charlottentown township—

Mr. Sargent: That's Norris Whitney, I would say.

Mr. N. Whitney (Prince Edward-Lennox): I am glad to have it.

Mr. Etchen: Let me say this. There is a cost of having unemployment. I do not have to tell Mr. Sargent; he is as well versed in this as I am, but I would like to give you this example. When I went down to Charlottentown township last year I was talking to the local officials there. They told me the welfare roll had been just about eliminated. I am talking about the people who were able to work. There are always people on welfare who cannot work for various reasons.

I do not want to go into this, I am not an expert, but this was a particularly good case, where there was a high level of unemployment in the area, the chances of attracting an industry to these areas is not very great, let us be quite honest about this. Therefore, Campbell Soup, by going into there, will provide a fair amount of economic stability.

They are not a company that is going to fold up overnight, and the secondary and tertiary effects of having a pretty stable unit like theirs, particularly in an economy like Hallowell township, is 100 times greater than if you put them in at Bay and Yonge, as the minister likes.

Mr. Sargent: I will not hold this too long, Mr. Chairman; one more. I am glad to see—

Mr. Etchen: I would like to just make one other comment. With due respect to Mr. Sargent, for whom I have a lot of respect personally, I would just like to tell him on what basis these loans are made.

When these applications come in we have no idea as to who they are, what they are, what political stripe they are. These are—

Mr. Sargent: Hold on—

Mr. Etchen: I just want to make this point clear.

Mr. Sargent: These loans are approved by the minister, are they not?

Mr. Etchen: No they are not. I want to make this point abundantly clear.

When they come in they come in to officials of this corporation, and these officials look at it strictly on the basis of merit. We do not know who they are; we do not know what—let me put it this way, all that we look at is: Is this a good case? Does it make sense?

I want to make this—

Mr. Sargent: We will buy that, okay.

Mr. Etchen: I just want to make this abundantly clear, because the point has been raised before, and I think it casts aspersions on the officials and—

Mr. Sargent: We had an experience with Fairfield, and you know what happened there, so do not tell me it was not political ends. You may have changed your practice, but it was political ends.

Mr. Etchen: There were no politics in it at that time, either.

Mr. Sargent: Well, they closed the plant the day after the election, you know that. It was through your office the order came.

Mr. Lewis: Just coincidence.

Mr. Etchen: No, wait a minute—

Mr. Sargent: They closed the plant the day after the election.

Mr. Etchen: We wrote you all the facts. I want to say that in October of that year the plant was still operating. I do not want to go into all that. All the facts were put out in the minister's statement.

What I did want to say was that the minister does not see the loans. Let me tell you this, the minister does not see the applicants at all.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Etchen, I told this hearing when it started I would stake my seat in this House on what I said is right, and I will stand by that, and if you will have a hearing, or a commission on that, I would like to bring that into the public eye—what happened there—if you want to.

Mr. Etchen: No, I just want to tell you what the procedure is and leave it at that. Anything of politics is outside my realm. I just want to tell you what the procedure is.

When an applicant comes in he goes to a team of consultants. I do not see him, I do not know who comes in. The minister does not know who he is. At that stage, if he is going to be turned down, he is turned down. I do not know—

Mr. Lewis: Except for Honeywell Controls.

Mr. Etchen: I am sorry?

Mr. Lewis: Except for Honeywell Controls.

Mr. Etchen: At that stage, neither I nor the minister or anybody else knows, and that is where it is turned down.

If the case is going to be proceeded with, then it goes through the normal channels—it goes to our internal officials, it goes to the board. The board says yes or no, and from there on in the minister takes the board recommendation to the cabinet.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you very much.

I am glad to see the minister is getting to my—I see a loan here of $23,000 to Gross Welding for two people, they employ two people. Now that is significant of something, that the small independent operator is getting some recognition from the department. But, somewhere along the line, in the area of business, there should be some loan fund that the Canadian businessman who employs 50 or 100 people in a wholesale house, or a chain store—a small operator—he should have access to money. I will not flog it again, but there should be some way. These men got their money because they are manufacturers, right? But that does not matter. This is part of a service industry. There are other cases—here is a man who got a loan of $50,000 for seven people. That is the great need, Mr. Minister, for the small businessman to have some access to money that the chartered banks will not give him now. I would like to say finally you have $10 million—in a few months I think that is—$10 million of for-giveable loans to give away for fewer than 4,000 jobs.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Can I make one comment here before we finish up? Do you know what it costs to provide a job in Canada today?

Mr. Sargent: I have no idea.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They figure it runs anywhere from $25,000 to $250,000 per job, depending on the skill and the technology employed in the plant. Let me give you an example. The Ford plant at Talbotville started off with 1,500 employees. My understanding was it was a $16 million investment in plant and equipment. That is $40,000 per job that Ford invested to provide jobs for 1,500 Canadians. Henry Ford himself told me that those people had never worked in an automobile plant before, the majority of them, but having had several weeks of training, it is the most efficient plant in the Ford empire.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: You are on first-name terms with Henry Ford?

Mr. Chairman: Order, order!

Hon. Mr. Randall: The last figure I had, said they had 2,000 people employed.

An hon. member: It is a good plant, too.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am saying it is, but I just want—

Mr. Lewis: They will all vote NDP.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right. You see, I put it in there so they could vote for you.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order! Mrs. Renwick.

Hon. Mr. Randall: As long as you got the point, that is the main thing.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): I would like to ask about a loan that was made to Vio Breeding Laboratories in Ottawa, as to what sort of market there is for their product and if they are in business now? I checked in December and they were not yet operative. If they are not operative, what is the delay?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think, Mr. Etchen, you have the facts on the Vio quotation, have you not?

Mr. Etchen: Yes, one of the main reasons we made this loan is that there had been a substantial reduction of imports from the United States. It was also in a small town in a small municipality in eastern Ontario. The company was not able to do this unless it had had an EIO loan.

Mrs. M. Renwick: A shortage, Mr. Chairman? A shortage of imports of what?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will tell you what they do. They breed animals for research.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Right!

Hon. Mr. Randall: Most of those animals have been brought in from the United States and they decided to go into the business. These fellows, I believe, come out of the National Research Council in Ottawa or got their idea from the National Research Council. They wanted to go into the business of breeding their own animals for research. In fact, they were back to see us the other day about extending the plan of getting into another area of breeding animals for research purposes.

Mrs. M. Renwick: This is a Canadian plant then? Not a subsidiary of a U.S. one?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am not too sure if it is an American company. Is it?

Mr. Etchen: It is a Canadian company. It is bringing in a new technology. As a matter of fact, they are doing very well there, considering the expansion.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Are they from Europe rather than the United States, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The chap who came in to see me, I would say, is Canadian, from Montreal. I think he is—he is a chemical specialist. He has a Ph.D. of some sort or other—

Mrs. M. Renwick: I am sorry, I did not hear Mr. Etchen.

Mr. Etchen: As far as I can understand it, he has a Ph.D. in animal husbandry.

Mrs. M. Renwick: They are breeding—correct me if I am wrong—specially-bred disease-free mice. What would the market be for those?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They tell me it is unlimited because they have to set up the facilities to start the breeding there, and over many months they have to make sure that they are not contaminated. Otherwise, if they take them to a laboratory and they give them a toxin, if there is anything else in the system the toxins do not work. They may take many months of study and then find that they wasted their time and their energy in even trying out the new toxin.

Mrs. M. Renwick: We realize, Mr. Chairman, it is unlimited. Can the minister answer my question as to who the markets are?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think the markets would be areas like the insulin plant here—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Not industrial chemical markets?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I think they are primarily in the medical labs and areas like that. Wherever they are doing research on animals or mice of any kind I would think. They supply the livestock. This is my understanding.

Mrs. M. Renwick: But you understand it is primarily for medical research.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I understand that that is their—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Not necessarily industrial?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I understand that that is their major supply house, yes.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Are these then in operation? When did they go into operation if they were not by the turn of the year?

Mr. Etchen: They are in operation.

Mrs. M. Renwick: They were breeding but they were not selling in December.

Mr. Etchen: They are in operation.

Mrs. M. Renwick: And considering expansion, you say?

Mr. Etchen: Yes, they are now considering expansion.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Minister, considering expanding?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, I think that he came in to see me and told me they were going into another type of animal and needed other facilities. I asked him to get his package together and come back and see us. He has not come back to me. Whether he has been in to see ODC yet, I am not sure.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thank you. I would like to ask about the product, the process and the market for the chemical companies which have received loans. Allied Chemical of the Allied Chemical US with $100,000, loan; Union Carbide of Union Carbide Corporation US with nearly $0.25 million; Hooker Chemicals Nanaimo Limited, $0.25 million; Scott Laboratories; Howard and Sons; and the Borden Chemical Company.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know if we have all those details handy.

Mrs. M. Renwick: The product, the process and the market.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They very seldom set a chemical plant up for one product. I think that the Allied Chemical people specialize in industrial chemical acids.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Sulphuric acid, but what about this loan? Is that for that type of plant or for a different type?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The one that went in Sudbury, I think, is to take the fumes out of one of the Falconbridge plants and turn them into sulphide. Now the one in Belleville, I think, is in different chemicals.

Mr. Etchen: Industrial chemicals and plastics.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They have a series of chemicals that they would manufacture in a plant of that size that fit into the plant. I do not think we would have a list of what they—

Mr. Etchen: As a matter of fact, on the one in Belleville, there is no other manufacturer in Canada of capran, which is a film used in food packaging, and this is a kind of a new technology we are very interested in.

Mrs. M. Renwick: What do you call it?

Mr. Etchen: Capran. It is capran film and it is used in food packaging.

Mr. Chairman: Can I call your attention to the time and suggest that you continue your questions at 8.00 o'clock? We will adjourn for the dinner hour.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The best idea I have heard this afternoon.

It being 6.00 o'clock, p.m., the committee took recess.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT (continued)

Mr. Chairman: We will have to get started here. Are we in vote 2207, may I ask, or 2208? Vote 2207. Proceed.

Hon. S. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): We combined the two of them, 2207 and 2208.

On votes 2207 and 2208:

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Chairman, I was asking what the chemical firms were doing, where they were marketing. I think I might as well ask the question as it comes to my mind very clearly and see if there is a yes or a no. Are there any government moneys being loaned to companies which are manufacturing any sort of component for war use for the United States in any of the EIO loans, either to Canadian or U.S. companies?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would not know. Not that we know of.

Mr. A. Etchen (Ontario Development Corporation): Not that we know of. We obviously do not know every little operation that they do in every one of the plants that they have, or that they are associated with, but to the best of our knowledge—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, would the minister with his—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I said no, I do not know of any.

Mrs. M. Renwick: With his broadening interest in tying in some form of pollution control and some form of labour standards, would the minister seriously consider, any time a company is doing this type of work, that the University of Toronto has declined to do this type of work; many firms in Toronto have signed papers and pledges, pledges on the recent invasion of Cambodia? I think it is very important that this consideration be taken quite seriously by the minister before using Canadian public funds.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me just suggest to you the reason there is an invasion in Cambodia—I do not want to get into a discussion about the war—is that the North Vietnamese should not have been there in the first place. Both of them invaded Cambodia, so let us get that straight.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Let us not get started into that subject—

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Would the minister consider it wrong, then, for Canadian funds to go into this type of operation, since it could very easily be moving into Canada because it is so unpopular now in the United States?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is unpopular for a number of reasons but I think the federal government—Mr. Trudeau answered that himself the other day and said there was a certain amount of defence work going on here in specialized companies that would continue. I think we would be guided by what the federal authorities would prefer us to do on that. As we say here tonight, we do not know of any companies that are involved directly in defence work.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, could I have a definite commitment from the minister that, yes, he would be concerned and would think it not proper for public funds in Ontario to go towards private companies for private gain of this kind? Because we have now in Ontario the opportunity for private companies to come in here and do this type of chemical preparation. This can be done now, unfortunately, as soon as Bill 194 is proclaimed. It can be done in Ontario without going through The Department of National Defence, which to me is a very serious situation. Government to government, Mr. Chairman, we stand some chance of two governments being totally responsible for what they are doing. Private enterprise, private entrepreneurs coming into Ontario and dealing privately with the government, is a serious consideration in my view.

I thought I would try to get the minister to commit himself that under his care there would be no Canadian moneys go towards firms which would be preparing this type of component for the U.S.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have no specific cases where we are allotting money. If you ask me would we do it in the future, I think it depends on the case itself.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Do you have any knowledge now what other kind of animal Vio Breeding Laboratories are going to be producing besides the thousands and thousands of mice?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think what they are producing—it was mice, to start with?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mice to start with, yes.

Mr. Etchen: And rabbits.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Rabbits, and they were getting into—I cannot tell you what their next production was. There was another animal, whether it was dogs or guinea pigs or something along that line, I have not the details because they never came back after they talked to us. They said they were going to enlarge their plant to get into some other breeding.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Does the minister have loans to Canadian Cyanimid?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Not that I know of.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the minister if Sprague Foods Limited of Ameliasburg made application for a loan through this department?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Sprague, is it?

Mr. B. Newman: Sprague—S-p-r-a-g-u-e. And if they did, why were they turned down?

Mr. Etchen: Well I personally do not know of that application, unless someone on the staff here does.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not recall seeing the application or knowing of it.

Mr. Etchen: As far as we know, we do not have an application. However, if when we go back we find we do, we will undertake to give you a report on it.

Mr. B. Newman: This would be back in April of one year ago, April of 1969. In fact, I have a letter addressed to the minister—actually from the clerk of the township of Ameliasburg—recommending a loan be made to Sprague Foods so they could help the whole agricultural community on the island by expanding their facilities, primarily their warehouse facilities, to be able to, first, store their products to be more competitive than they were; and then also to expand their facilities so that they could be at a more competitive advantage.

Mr. Etchen: I do not remember it and none of the staff here do, but we will look into it and if we have received an application we will send you a memorandum of it.

Mr. B. Newman: Good, thank you.

Mr. Chairman: Yes, Mr. Edighoffer.

Mr. H. Edighoffer (Perth): Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask one or two questions here. What is the average length of time for processing an application under the EIO programme?

Mr. Etchen: Well, that depends absolutely and entirely on the company, absolutely and entirely. We require certain information and our experience has been that where companies say there has been delay, the delay has been because we have not received the information within a reasonable period of time—we always make it specific what we want—our processing time, I would say, is not more than about four weeks. This is under optimum conditions, when we can go right through the whole thing.

Mr. Edighoffer: But generally you say it would take about four weeks?

Mr. Etchen: No, no; let me make this abundantly clear. If the company provides us with all the information we require promptly, the time would be about four weeks. But we have had companies—I personally have investigated complaints where a company has said, "You bureaucrats; you are holding the thing up. We never get any answers from you." And when I have investigated, in 99.9 per cent of the cases the trouble is the company itself has not supplied us with the information. Sometimes it is not entirely their fault, especially with the smaller companies; perhaps their auditors or accountants are a little lax in getting the accounts up to date, or it is a legal matter—with due respect to the legal profession—and they are not always as prompt as we would like them to be.

So it is not all on one side, and I would say if there are delays, in 99.9 per cent of the cases it is the company itself not supplying the information. There is no red tape with us; we have very little formal applications and all this nonsense. We take a businesslike look at the company. We want information; we cannot make an intelligent decision unless we have it. This is the basic problem.

Mr. Edighoffer: And did I understand you earlier in the afternoon to say that you review these approvals after a six-month period or a 12-month period in case the spade is not in the ground by then?

Mr. Etchen: Yes, we take a look at it. In most cases, as I mentioned earlier in the afternoon, there is a lead time for putting up the building and a lead time for ordering machinery. But even so, we like the company to come in and give us progress to start negotiating, and if they have not done that in six months, then we want to know why.

Mr. Edighoffer: Well, could you give me any information on how the arrangements stand with the Linton and Hearst Company?

Mr. Etchen: I am sorry?

Mr. Edighoffer: Could you give me any information on how the arrangements stand with the Linton and Hearst Company from England?

Mr. Etchen: As far as I know, the big stumbling block is clearance through the Bank of England. The Linton and Hearst Company, as far as I know, was ready to move a long time ago. They took an option on land at Goderich; they were ready to proceed. But, because it is an overseas company, of course, they are subject to the Bank of England, which has taken some time coming to a decision. I think this is what my last advice was, but I am relying on memory.

Mr. Edighoffer: It is very interesting to note how fast this went through ODC just before June 30 of last year.

I have just one more question.

Mr. Etchen: Well just let me answer that. That application was in—and I made this answer this afternoon—prior to the cutoff date. This applied to all of the companies that got the $250,000 after we put it down.

Mr. Edighoffer: On one other subject, I would like to know what co-ordination is taking place between ODC and The Department of Tourism and Information, on this $1 million that is going to be available for the tourist industry. The reason I ask this is that two weeks or so ago, I believe, the deputy minister of tourism was up in my area and was suggesting to the people that they sort of forget about industrial expansion, forget about their industrial commissioners and promote tourism. Would you look favourably upon the area of Perth and Huron counties for loans under this programme?

Hon. Mr. Randall: There is no restriction, if I can answer this for a second. As far as I know, there is no restriction geographically on the tourist loan. The tourist money that we have—and the recommendations would come from Mr. Auld's department to us; we administer the money for him and look after the details of checking the financial details and looking after the account for Mr. Auld's department. The decisions, with regard to assisting industry, come from there, and we will, as I say, administer the money. I think any area in Ontario is eligible for any part of this $1 million grant that we talk about.

Mr. Etchen: Provided it is a substantial tourist area and, as the minister said, The Department of Tourism and Information will set the guidelines as to what is a substantial tourist area. We do not. They set these guidelines.

Mr. Chairman: Thank you. If I may have the permission of the committee, I would like to ask a couple of questions of the minister. My concern through his offices in this particular sum of money would be this: I would like to ask the minister if he or his departmental officials have considered granting loans, possibly without interest, for the establishment of nursing homes in the private enterprise sector. This is a needed facility, and in fact would be viewed in some rural communities as an industry because of the employment that it would provide in local communities besides, of course, rendering a very useful service.

I am thinking particularly in the area of care treatment cases, cases that currently or in the past have taken chronic beds in active treatment hospitals and where they still require care, which would eliminate them from being eligible to become candidates for a senior citizens' home or an old age home. I think that this would be a very valuable and useful thing in our society at the moment, even though The Department of Social and Family Services does, in proprietary instances, grant 50 per cent of the cost of the establishment of these things, and I wonder if you and your officials have given this any thought?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. Let me say that we looked at it when Dr. Dymond was the Minister of Health, and we went into considerable research with him on the basis of using some of these homes, almost as an industry as you suggested, in areas where there are no factories around and no other institutions.

The basis for grants, of course, as far as the government is concerned, is that it must be a non-profit organization. And, on the basis of it being a non-profit organization, they would get grants from the provincial government—I do not know whether from the federal government or not. But, if it is a profit-making organization—and there are a number of nursing home organizations moving into Canada, building very fine nursing homes, almost on a motel scale, and they have been doing their own financing. But we have had discussions with the former Minister of Health; we have had them with Mr. Wells since he was appointed with regard to lending these people money on a mortgage basis through the ODC. We would have no objections, in our department, of giving consideration—I think Mr. Etchen can bear me out on this—to them for mortgage loans under the ODC, but it is a matter that has been under discussion. No decisions have been made.

Mr. Etchen: It is rather difficult because, operating under the Act—and I am not a legal man—I understand that there would be some difficulties in classifying a nursing home as an industrial undertaking.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Pitman is next.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): I would like to ask one or two questions of the minister. One of the things that interests me is that this is a very sophisticated kind of programme; I am talking about the EIO programme largely. It does not seem to have the degree of variety in choice which, for example, I found when I recently leafed through this publication put out by the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario on federal and provincial industrial assistance programmes.

If you look at Quebec, they seem to have a greater variety of programmes that suit different kinds of areas. You have The Quebec Regional Industrial Development Assistance Act, which perhaps is the closest to the EIO programme, but it also recognizes that there might well be a programme for financial assistance to fast-growth industries. That is, you are taking a particular problem and creating a programme for it—a programme that would stimulate the development of certain industries; deciding on certain industries which give a particular relevance either to an area or to a province and making a programme to stimulate that kind of industry.

The Department of Labour assistance: Here they are providing assistance to companies that will make an investment in construction or extension of works in factories but which will hire social assistance recipients—that is, people who are on welfare—and it seems to me that there might be some very real worth in making your programme a good deal more varied than a simple veneer type of programme which attempts to serve every kind of industry and every slow-growth area. Has your department ever considered making it a more varied type of assistance programme?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me say I think it has been highly successful, when you compare the industry coming in here to the industry that has gone into Quebec, regardless of the different types of programmes. We have had one of the most successful programmes. One question that you are bringing up is about fast-growth industries—

Mr. Pitman: You do not think you need that in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, let me just say this on the fast-growth industries: we would like to encourage fast-growth industries. I can think of the container business. I know a fellow who is manufacturing containers today in the Toronto area. It costs him something like $1,600 to make a container and, on a rental basis, through CN-CP, he gets his money back in 10 years. In his rent, he gets his capital cost back in seven; so in the last three years he makes his profit. And his difficulty is that he can rent all the containers he can produce, but he cannot get enough money to finance it. He has been to see us and, of course, we had a look at it. He has been to see his bankers; you would think he would be able to go to Bay Street or his bankers and borrow all the money in the world, but the return, as far as they are concerned, is over too long a period. If they got their money back in three years, they would consider it. We have had a look at it, but we have not been able to come up yet with any kind of a decision as to how much should be available to those kind of industries. I not only think of that one, but I think of my friends the Markham Machinery and Foundry Company.

When I was in the washing machine business they were renting out automatic pin-setting equipment, bowling alleys, and they would not sell them, they rented them. One time when I talked to them, they had $86 million in bank loans and they just could not borrow any more money so they had to stop renting the bowling alleys and start selling them in order to get the cash; and this is the problem today. A company can have too much business; it gets itself into difficulties. These things do happen, and we have no programme at the moment to finance those industries; but it is worth looking at.

Mr. Pitman: I am wondering if there might be a degree of sophistication.

I would like to ask another question on a particular item here, Mr. Chairman. I think we are covering votes 2207 and 2208 together and this concerns loans for pollution abatement equipment. Have you had very many applications for those loans?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Etchen can tell you. How many have we had to date?

Mr. Etchen: We have had 44 applications.

Mr. Pitman: What would be the normal amount of the loan you would make for that particular programme?

Mr. Etchen: I think the maximum loan has been set at $250,000.

Mr. Pitman: A quarter of a million dollars? Obviously you are not going to be able to accommodate 44 applications then, are you? Or is my mathematics as pathetic as it used to be?

Mr. Etchen: An application is quite a bit different, you know, from an approval.

Mr. Pitman: Yes, but the programme was only announced about a month ago.

Mr. Etchen: Just let me put it in perspective. We are aiming this at the small company—small existing companies, those that are going to be affected by the anti-pollution laws, or any changes in legislation or enforcement of existing legislation, where it would cause harm to a small business. This is where we are going to take a look at it, after the requisite anti-pollution authorities have made a recommendation.

Mr. Pitman: Does that mean the Ontario Water Resources Commission?

Mr. Etchen: That is right. In other words they will say to company X: you have to put in the equipment. Now if it is a small company—which it obviously has to be with the limit on the loan—and it can prove to ODC that it will suffer hardship by putting the equipment in, then we will make a loan. This has to be an existing company.

Mr. Pitman: I see. You are assuming that the new companies will consider this part of the input?

Mr. Etchen: Well yes. New companies will have to count on the fact that this is provincial legislation and when we are setting up the financial provisions they will have to make provision for this.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think in the main, the new companies coming into this or any other market today recognize that if they build a plant they have to have air and water pollution abatement equipment, and as a rule that is included in their financing, like the mill I talked about this afternoon.

I think the $5 million that we have to dispense was set up to take care of companies already in business. Suddenly a man walks in and says if you do not stop the air pollution we are going to close you down today. I had a case of a foundry up in Orillia the other day.

Mr. Pitman: Does the Ontario Water Resources Commission do that?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, but I am just suggesting if a man walks in today, in Peterborough, and he says "I am going to close the foundry down today if you do not put in the equipment," and the man says, "I do not have the money," this is what this programme is for; we loan them up to $250,000 to put in the equipment.

Mr. Pitman: Is it automatic? Let us assume the Ontario Water Resources Commission do say that—either do this or we will close you down. Is it automatic that you will give them the $250,000?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, you would have to make an application. In other words the application would come into us, and we would judge it on the basis of the recommendations that are required for that particular firm or business, whether it be air or water, and then we process it.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Is that a "forgiveness" loan?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, sir; it is a straight loan and it would be loaned to them for this kind of equipment. You asked about the amount of money and certainly if there were 44 applications it would use the $5 million up very quickly. But keep in mind, as I said before, that the $5 million is seed money.

Mr. Pitman: Ah, I thought so.

Hon. Mr. Randall: For instance if a man was going to put equipment into a foundry, it may take him three or four months to get the equipment installed, and so the money would not be utilized immediately. But when this $5 million is used up, I am sure that the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Kerr) has in mind that we should keep on with the programme because if we are going to put the heat on these fellows to clean up pollution we have to give them some assistance.

Mr. Pitman: I was going to come to that very point and to suggest that what you are doing is putting in a few seeds and hoping they will grow.

I was listening to a programme last night in which they were discussing the whole problem of environmental control in the United States. A conservative estimate was made on that programme of the cost of turning back the clock and trying to restore the environment in the United States; they think it will be $108 billion over the next 10 years.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would not doubt it.

Mr. Pitman: They say air and water pollution control together will cost something like $50 billion. Now assuming that Ontario would probably be at least equal to four or five states, one might very well assume that we are talking about five or six or seven billion dollars in Ontario to really do the job in this area. So what you have here is just a few pennies in terms of the kind of action that the government is going to have to take if it is really going to do something about restoring the water quality and the air quality in the urban centres of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think you will recognize, as we do, there has been a great deal of emotionalism about air and water pollution and not too many—

Mr. Pitman: A good deal of it on the part of the companies—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me finish. Not too many people are authorities on what constitutes pollution. First of all we talk about phosphates being a major polluter and now there is another group of scientists saying it is not phosphates, it is the carbon in there. Well when these people get together and decide what it really is, there is going to have to be a lot more money spent than is being spent at the present time.

I was in a plant today where a man spent $175,000 to put a collector bag and some equipment on a woodworking plant, and the inspector said "I am not satisfied, you have got to spend another $20,000." The man said "Well, there are two pieces of equipment I need to buy, but I do not know what to buy." The inspector said: "You buy one or the other." The man said "Might I not buy the one that does not work?" The inspector replied "Well, that is too bad, then you will have to buy the other piece."

So I asked the minister to send up somebody who knew something about the equipment so that the man, if he was going to spend another $20,000, got what he hoped would be the equipment to solve the problem. That is what he is doing, and these are the kind of things that I think we are going to be running into whether the inspector himself is an authority on what is polluting air or water, or not.

I do not think any of us want to see a manufacturer spend millions of dollars to do something and find after he has spent it that he could have put the money into providing more jobs and building more products.

Mr. Pitman: I think this is an extremely important item in terms of the total government activity, because as you have well realized, I think everyone is concerned about environmental quality. Everyone is concerned that we do it as quickly as possible; that at least we do away with what is obviously polluting; we may have differences of opinion as to whether this chemical or that chemical is good or bad, and whether one thing impairs water or impairs air more than another, but I think we have to do what is obvious. I am suggesting that what the minister should realize is obvious is that $5 million is not even a drop in the bucket in this kind of a battle. Can the minister give me any idea what he would see as the kind of—let us put it this way, has the minister's department, or does he know if the OWRC or if The Department of Energy and Resources Management, have done any assessment of that nature of how much it is going to cost over the next 10 years?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, we have not done any at the present time. It is a little premature. I think this question can probably be answered by the minister in his estimates. We are administering the money for him and I am telling you what I know about the programme. As you know, there is a group of people going out this summer to check on pollution problems in many areas of Ontario. I suppose when those research reports are back the province will have a little more information as to what can be done.

I recall three years ago, through the economic council, we did a research on septic tanks all through the cottage area. I will tell you there were not many cottages up there that should not replace their septic tanks.

Mr. Pitman: That is a very good point. Has there been any suggestion in your department that loans might be made to cottagers for pollution abatement?

Hon. Mr. Randall: At the moment, I do not know whether the minister has any idea of doing that or not. I presume he would know better after the summer is over.

Mr. Sargent: Is there federal money available for this thing?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am not too sure. I do not think any has been offered yet. I have not heard of any.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Hodgson.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): I would like to ask the minister if he would consider the Chairman's suggestion on the nursing homes, because I know in several parts of this province we have hospitals which are very small in nature but perhaps could be very worthwhile nursing home projects. If there was money available, I imagine there would be customers available for such projects if his department could assist them. I think it is worth taking a look at. When you start talking about a hospital facility it is maybe worth $75,000, but to sell it for some other purpose it might only be worth $20,000 or $30,000. Yet there was public investment in that facility. To go to a nursing home facility it might be worth the original write-off on the books, which would bring it up to about $75,000. Some loan or some assistance here might save some of the public finances that are already in some of these hospitals that now are outdated because of heavy X-ray equipment and the out-patient facilities that are necessary to serve a community. Yet they could be quite adequate perhaps for nursing home services that are necessary in a community. I think it is worthwhile looking into.

The other feature that you might consider is, rather than loans interest-free, writing off a part of the interest costs on such loans. It might be of assistance. I know one or two communities that it would very greatly help at this time.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have been looking at it. No decision has been made.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: I think in this area it might be of great assistance in regard to some of these small hospitals that are being abandoned.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, all right. Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: Thank you, Mr. Hodgson. Mr. Stokes.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): I would like to elicit from the minister, if I might, some indication as to how he sees the northern Ontario development corporation working with the announcement made recently by the Premier (Mr. Robarts) and the Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) who is going to be responsible for northern affairs. Having regard for the new money, or the renewed consultative services that are going to be focused on the north and its problems and the regional disparities that are quite apparent up there, I am wondering if he plans to take any direct action as a result of the Ontario Economic Council survey with regard to the forest products industries. They make several recommendations as to what is needed in order to, not only make the best use of our forest products that we have in abundance in that part of the province, but also to assure that regeneration is done on a scale that will provide for a maximum amount of allowable cut and to assure that the allowable cut that is going unused at the present time will be made available to those entrepreneurs who are willing to go in and exploit it in an orderly fashion.

I am wondering if the minister sees any way in which EIO forgivable loans, or ODC conventional loans, might be made available to those people who are interested in going in, if a wood-sharing operation was started in a realistic way. I am sure you are aware that about two-thirds of the allowable cut of the forest products material that is available in the province of Ontario is going unused at a time when the world demand for paper products is increasing annually to the extent where they think it will be doubled by 1980 and quadrupled by the year 2000.

I am wondering, if the minister feels that the northern Ontario development corporation, which is to be set up with additional funds, or guaranteed funds, if he would not implement one of the recommendations in the Ontario Economic Council's report for a much more realistic sharing of the wood to those users—you know, the pulp and paper industry, the logging industry and the veneer or the lumbering industry. It is quite obvious, from reading that report, that such is not the case at the present time. There is not a realistic sharing among all of the users who would like it.

I am wondering if the minister would consider, or the Ontario development corporation would consider, setting up a corporation whereby they would harvest the wood and resell it, or allocate it, on the basis of need, to the various industries in the area? I think that other surveys that have been made in years gone by tended to recommend such an operation, whereby maximum use of the available annual allowable cut would be utilized, providing jobs and more revenue to the province.

I am wondering if the northern Ontario development corporation would consider that kind of an operation where they would—not cut the wood, but act as a sort of a funnelling device whereby the various species of wood and various sizes of wood would be made available to those users on the basis of an annual allowable cut on a sustained yield basis.

Have you, or the Ontario Development Corporation, considered such a move?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me say that, prior to the report from the economic council, we recognized about five billion cubic feet of lumber is taken out of Ontario or cut each year and it could be another five billion cubic feet if we could get at it.

On the basis of that and the requirement for wood, we have had a long look at Mr. Marchand's Administrative Incentive Act, which is an infrastructure. An infrastructure means to build roads into areas. Perhaps some of that money could be used in northern Ontario to get at some of the inventory that you know is up there, the same as I do.

Insofar as the northern Ontario development corporation is concerned, all I can say to you is that it is in its infancy. It has started and, as I understand it, with my colleagues in the ministry of Mines and of Lands and Forests, any proposition that anybody puts forward up there will be given careful consideration by the new board that is going to be composed of men like yourself in the north country. If their recommendations come down we will accept their recommendations here and give them all the help we can. They will make the decisions and I think some of the things that you mentioned here—perhaps I would not want to be quoted as saying, "It is agreeable to us"—all I can say is that any proposition from northern Ontario is worth looking at.

I think somebody suggested here yesterday that perhaps we should be cutting up the wood up there and sending pieces of furniture down here to be put together like a General Motors car. That is not a bad idea. We looked at that a long time ago and I do not think it should be discarded.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): You will be discarding the furniture every year if you follow the General Motors plan.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have got to do a better selling job, I guess, than they do in the car business.

I think anything is possible. The one thing we want to make sure of is that if you are going to use that great natural resource up there, you want to do more secondary manufacturing, which is what you are driving at. This, I think, is the answer for northern Ontario.

We can sit down here and talk about getting a gum factory and a bicycle factory and it is fine, but these are hard things to get into an area that far north, as you recognize. But it is not impossible, if you get other industry started.

When I chatted with Mr. Marchand about his programme, he was not for giving any incentive money to pulp companies. He is very restrictive and I suggested to him that our difficulty in financing industries in northern Ontario is because industries are going down to Georgia. If there was not some incentive money available for industries to utilize our natural resources up there, it would be a hard job getting secondary industries.

We are going at it the hard way trying to get, let us say, a bicycle manufacturer up there, when there are millions of cubic feet of lumber that could be cut up by a furniture factory and shipped down here in semi-finished form. And, as you know, they still have to have a special designated area before any of that federal incentive money is available for such things as a pulp factory.

There is a possibility that some of the things that you mentioned could work out through the northern development corporation. Certainly, as far as we are concerned, we would look with favour on it. I would suggest that, if anybody has got any ideas, when the corporation is set up, they take them in to them.

Mr. Stokes: One final question. Do you anticipate that it will be necessary to give an added incentive to entrepreneurs we are trying to woo into the north? I am talking specifically of the EIO programme which has not met with the kind of success in northern Ontario that everybody hoped it would, because the availability of it was so general that it attracted people elsewhere. As a result, we did not get the kind of expansion and the kind of development that we had hoped for in northern Ontario.

I am wondering, with the inception of the northern Ontario development corporation, is it possible that you will make it more attractive by offering either more money, or more favourable conditions under which you will allow them access to this money? Perhaps through forgivable loans, or something more attractive than we have at the present time, which is available to almost every other part of the province.

I think this is the answer, when one considers that all of the reports that have come out recently say the only way you are going to attract people into the north and stop the exodus of young people out of the north is to provide some incentive. Maybe an incentive in income tax, in much the same way that we are doing to attract teachers and professional people into these areas where we lack so many of the amenities.

Do you see any way in which you can make it much more attractive, rather than through the conventional EIO loan which is available almost to everybody in the province?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is not available to everybody in the province; you recognize it is available in eastern Ontario. It has been the most successful incentive programme ever tried in northern Ontario to date, despite the fact that it is not as successful as we would like to see it.

But your major problem in the north, in my estimation, is the availability of markets for secondary manufacturing. In order to try to cure that we are opening an office in northern Ontario and our man in Minneapolis, who worked the mid-west States as our trade counsellor will work in northern Ontario. He will take the manufacturers or the producers up there by the hand, and see if he can open up large domestic markets in the United States for them where I think he can. The possibility is that increased grants up there may have an encouraging effect on industry to go there. But frankly, if you want my version of what I think an incentive programme is, or what incentive is needed for industry in slow-growth provinces as well as slow-growth areas, it is a consideration of freight rates.

Mr. Stokes: I was going to mention that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: When I talked to Mr. Marchand I said, instead of his going out and giving millions of dollars away to the provinces, and I include ourselves in that, perhaps he would be better off if he subsidized freight rates. A man could manufacture Arrow shirts in Truro, Nova Scotia, or Timmins, Ontario, or Moosonee or Fort William or Fort Frances. If he could get the material in and get the shirts back to Toronto, there is no reason they could not manufacture them anywhere. But the difficulty—

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): They are subsidizing the raw material coming out of the north.

Hon. Mr. Randall: —the difficulty is when you manufacture a complete product, and I know this is the problem my friends up in Fort William and Port Arthur have. They say they are caught between the freight rates of the west and the freight rates down here, and if there were some equalization of freight they could compete.

We have had a number of discussions with regard to freight rates. Whether anything like that will ever develop I do not know, but I think if there were money available at the federal level, this is where the money could be used to better advantage. That is, let the provinces run their own incentive programmes so we do not have a duplication of incentives as we have at the present time. I do not say that to be critical of the federal programme.

I just say that if I were having a look at it tomorrow and making a decision, I would think in terms of the freight hauled in and the freight hauled out to encourage more secondary manufacturing in distant areas. If you walked into the T. Eaton Company today, you would find a load of stuff coming in from Taiwan or Australia. I have seen lawnmowers from Australia. I have said, "Why do you buy them down there?" They say, "We get them at a good price." They get them when the snow is on the ground. The guy says, "They are a month late in getting here, so we have to put them in the warehouse." They have to nurse them all winter, and then they put them on as a fire sale next spring.

When I was in the appliance business, I saw this happen not once but 100 times. Eaton's built that big warehouse up on Highway 400—which I think you pass—I think it is 500,000 or 600,000 square feet of space, just to store merchandise that they are bringing in for sale. If you were working for Eaton's and they had a shirt fire sale on July 12, and they bought shirts in Taiwan and the shirts did not arrive by July 12, you may have to hold them until next July 12 before you could sell them.

When that warehouse was stocked very heavily in the latter days after the war with merchandise imported for certain sales, they realized they could perhaps get it closer to home and, of course, we have been doing some work on them, too.

I would imagine that if we look at the freight rates nationally as well as provincially, it may have a better bearing on locating secondary industry than perhaps the incentive programme we have right now. As I think somebody said, or you yourself said, if you have an incentive programme in eastern Ontario, does it detract from northern Ontario? I could say the same thing. If they have an incentive programme in Quebec that is better than ours, does it detract from Ontario to Quebec, or Manitoba?

I do not want to get into a rat race with other provinces as to who has the biggest incentive. But we are surrounded by states and provinces who work incentive programmes. They all have it.

Mr. Stokes: One final question then. Has the Ontario Development Corporation, in their consultative activities, or in conjunction with the Ontario Economic Council, made any survey of the kind of industries, secondary or primary, that have the best chance of success in areas like northern Ontario? I think the jet steel processing was something that the Ontario Economic Council became involved in a few years ago.

I spoke to Mr. Cranston about that. He indicated that possibly, the Ontario Economic Council, in concert with ODC, should be doing this kind of thing so that you could tell these people who might be attracted to the north what kind of industry would have the greatest possibility for success. Do you see this as a part of your activities?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, we see almost everything in manufacturing. I personally feel that the greatest contribution we could make to northern Ontario right now is to develop our natural resources there as quickly as we can and do as much manufacturing of those resources as we can on the spot. And put in as many service—

Mr. Sargent: And have a lot more air services.

Hon. Mr. Randall: To put in as many service industries as we can. I think service industries which would replace, maybe, secondary industries could operate there very efficiently. We are looking at all service industries that come in to see us, to see if we can locate them in the area. That is what our man in Minneapolis and Chicago is doing now. He is looking at any area where they say they want to come and build a mail order warehouse.

That mail order warehouse in Fort Frances or Dryden or North Bay or Sudbury, with 200 people employed filling orders is just as good as 200 fellows trying to make bicycle chains. Our legislation would cover something like that.

We have nothing in it that would prevent us from giving a grant, an EIO loan, to help them finance it. We recognize that in northern Ontario, service industries may be the easiest thing to get, because the freight factor is not in there. This is one of the things that would help.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Martel.

Mr. Martel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I want to continue on what my colleague and the minister have been talking about. As everyone is aware, the north is an area where the population is diminishing and the age factor of the people is probably increasing faster than any other part of the province. I think the EIO loan programme must take a new direction, that of being directly involved in development. I am not saying, before you run the red herring in, Mr. Minister, I am not suggesting—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No red herrings tonight.

Mr. Martel: I am not suggesting crown corporations holus-bolus. I am thinking about something like Sweden does, where the equity capital is retained by the government, and they move in to certain specialized fields to bring in secondary industry. I am thinking of secondary industry related to the products that are there. I am not thinking about the one you have used so often, bicycle parts and so on. I am thinking of products which could be developed from the nickel field or the copper field. I am thinking of copper tubing, copper wire and so on.

Everyone has to admit that certainly free enterprise has not really got involved in the development of secondary industry in northern Ontario, really to no extent whatsoever. I am suggesting possibly a certain percentage of government capital, a very small percentage, 10, 15 per cent in any one industry. Then you have the tab of the super salesman. Maybe the super salesman could get on his bicycle and talk some of the major companies who have need to expand in the fields of copper tubing and so on, or electrical parts. He should ask them directly to consider that we can entice some sort of industry that is going to have a northern market. I think it is pipe dreaming. The population just is not there. I think we are going to have to develop industry primarily for export and in a specialized field such as Sweden has done.

I think we can probably take a little tougher line. You know, Ghana has just taken over Falconbridge nickel company's holdings there and Chile and Peru have taken over the tin mines. I think companies are willing and want to locate in a province and a country that has stable government. They would be more inclined, when they see these things happening, to locate these industries in a country that has the stability necessary and has the raw material available.

Therefore, I suggest that it can come back to tubing or anything else. We can go into the nickel products. I think that this is the line we must take. Free enterprise is not going to do it alone and incentives certainly have not been all that successful; the possibility of us providing some of the equity capital, as I say a small percentage.

That way we are going to get the economic development and can assist and have a say in the economic development in the areas we want it, rather than hoping we can entice someone just to go there. Because if there is one thing we have to break down in the north, Mr. Minister, it is the one-industry towns which die on us.

And of course on transportation policy, and you know the great talks about it when we outlined our position just recently regarding growth centres, we have to develop towns that rely on a townsite which might push out 50 miles to tap a mineral resource and bring it into the operation located there. If that one particular site closes down you must still have related industry, maybe in another direction, so that your town does not die.

There are so many northerners who have lost their entire equity through towns closing down when industry dies. We no longer can afford, I do not think, to see working men lose their entire life savings by the disappearance of one company. I do not think we can rely on an industry that is just there for the time being, we have to really get down to the growth points. I think this is the only way we can work this in. Otherwise, this development of the north is just a pipe dream.

The last part of course is transportation. You know we haul, I am told that National Steel hauls, a ton of pellets out of the north at $1.78 a ton. Well that is about 30 times less, I would say, than a ton of other material going north.

I agree with you that we just cannot have a transportation differential in rates like we have, because transportation is not the problem it used to be. At one time you used to come out of the north and to run two divisions on a train you had to take 16 to 18 hours. You can cover the same distance now in six or seven hours, there is very little time lost. I do not think being located some distance away from the source of the market, particularly if we are going to specialize in things that we are going to use primarily for export anyway, is as critical as it was. The transportation distance would not be that decisive in locating.

I just think we have to take a whole new approach, because we just have not had the development by free enterprise in the north to make it viable. I would appreciate the minister's comments.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well let me go back and say that when I first came with the government we were running an export programme and I asked somebody, an advertising agency, to design a programme for me. The first thing they did was bring in a Dutch girl with a big hat on and a pair of wooden shoes, holding a cheese. The idea was supposed to be if it was good enough for the Canadians it ought to be good enough for the Dutch, or vice versa if it was good enough for the Dutch it was good enough for Canadians.

I pointed out to this chap: How many times have you been in Holland, I said. And he said, I have not been there for a long while. I said, did you ever see anybody walking along the street looking like this? He said, no.

I said this is a national costume; these people do not dress like you and me. That ad is a dead duck!

Now the point was this, that a lot of people have a false impression in Ontario. They figure you have got mines and forests and fishing and tourism, and when the mines wear out the miners move out and go on somewhere else. And as you recall, if you were here, we ran a programme two years ago, this is the north yesterday and today and we showed the modern universities, the modern televising plants, we tried to paint a different picture of the north in order to get people interested in recognizing that nowhere in the north is too far from the urban market. The reason I mentioned the T. Eaton Company and the Taiwan shirts a few minutes ago was to indicate that if you bring them 5,000 miles or 10,000 miles, certainly 500 miles is not too far away.

But when we get into discussion of freight in and out, this is where we probably bog down in some of these secondary industries. So I think your point is well taken. I think when we get the northern development corporation going, I would hope that I would be able to persuade my colleague that the north country has to be painted in a different way to what it has been painted in the past.

The way it is today, you have got a great asset going for you; but if you want to get secondary industry, I think we have to do a bit of a selling job. We have to paint the north country as close to the urban areas of the metropolitan market and not give the impression that everybody up there is a miner or is cutting logs.

You can recall yourself, in the old days, you saw a fellow with an axe or a fishing pole in his hand or going down a mine shaft with a miner's hat on. When I was peddling washing machines through there, these were the only pictures you saw of the north country and nobody ever figured that they had the things up north that they have at the present time. So we have been trying in our own way. Through the trade and industry branch, we have taken fellows out of the north; we have taken them all over the world on trade missions. As I can recall, our friends up in Kirkland Lake, who are doing a good job up there selling mining equipment, we have had them all over the world; they have done an excellent job. There is a good manufacturing centre in there; that is Heath, and —what is the other company? Oh, well, it does not matter—there is a company there that is manufacturing in the north and we need many more like that, and I agree with you.

I think psychologically, the north has to be sold as a good place to start secondary manufacturing. But invariably we come up against the problem of freight, and that is the thing that concerned me more than anything else. It is a concern I expressed to Mr. Marchand when we were talking about infrastructure incentives and incentives by the federal government duplicating perhaps what the provinces are doing—not intentionally but in figuring this is the only way to go about it. I think perhaps we need a whole new approach on the freight structure if we want to get secondary manufacturing in any part of Canada.

Mr. Martel: May I ask one more question? I mentioned the possibility of specializing as other countries do. Has any research been done on the type of secondary industry in a specialized sense that could be developed in northern Ontario. Again I relate that the only common thing, maybe would be related to the natural resource industry. The type of specialization which we could handle and capture a world market with, much as other countries have captured markets. The Danes have their cheese and so on.

Has any study been done on the type of specialization which we could do to corral a part of the world market and hang onto it permanently, so as to develop this type of export industry in northern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think that we could look at many things. I am not trying to be facetious, everybody is looking for the lost chord, as you know, and the difficult thing for us to do, is to find what we could specialize in with our natural resources. Most of the natural resources in the north lend themselves to many, many industries as you recognize, whether it be lumber or uranium or steel, or what have you. But we are always on the lookout for something that we can specialize in. Like the Bulova watches made in Switzerland. They are the kind of things we like to get our hands on, but they do not come up every day in the week as you can appreciate.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate you on your personal idea, they tell me, for bringing up the idea of nursing homes and the possibility of moneys being available. I think it is a very wonderful idea and I did not get the minister's reaction. Were you going to look at this and see if this is feasible?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes; I said we had a number of discussions on nursing homes—private nursing homes—and how they could be financed. The legislation at the moment is written so that if they are a profit-making organization they cannot get grants, as you will recognize. The nursing homes that have come to us so far, some of the bigger ones, have had no difficulty in getting their own financing. In fact there is a chain of them, I believe, in Canada now.

We have had one or two people in to see us, we have had some discussions. They did not have as much money as they needed themselves. On the other hand, I can think of one that came in to see us who went back, and on another we put his balance sheet together for him and he got his money from private sources.

As I told the hon. member here, as well as the Chairman, we will take a look at it again and see if there is any way we could give consideration to either financing a mortgage or financing the operation in any other way so we could get him started. I agree with the Chairman here, I think that a nursing home that employed 25 or 30 people in an area may be the only activity in which we could find work for people in a service industry, as I mentioned here earlier.

Mr. Sargent: Is there any mention here that it would take a pretty big load off The Department of Health at the same time?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Sure!

Mr. Sargent: I would like to wrap up, here, with this last vote before we come to housing. I want to say to the Minister that I have an increasingly healthy respect for the job he is doing. It is the first time I have had a good close look at this department, that is to sit down and really go into it. Although a lot of the things I said are still true—

An hon. member: How can you switch like this!

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am starting to get suspicious myself now!

Mr. Sargent: I am willing to look at the other side of the coin.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: I have the floor.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Sargent has the floor.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let us quit while we are both ahead.

Mr. Sargent: If you continue on your present tack, Mr. Minister, if this is not all just savoir faire to get off the hook and get on with the vote but the fact that you will look at these areas of concern to all of us, the fact that, really, in these other areas, I think that if John Parmenter were here to see the job you really are doing he would give you maybe three times the budget you asked for.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: What you can do is save free enterprise and keep it safe in this province if you get into the act of letting everybody share and be our guest, as you are doing for the American guys. That way, by having a mutual participation between the small fellow and government in creating this credit and making money available to make free enterprise work, then we will keep this province safe.

Mr. Martel: Out of the hands of the socialists!

Mr. Sargent: Out of the hands of the socialists!

Mr. Martel: That is right!

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): By using public money to subsidize the capitalists!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order!

Mr. Sargent: Somewhere along the line I think you could consider using the Province of Ontario Savings Banks across the province as the base in each area for the industrial incentive, as part of your network to help the economy.

On another matter, in this vote we have $5 million set aside for pollution and I, along with the member for Peterborough, agree that if you are doing a real serious job in pollution this is just a pittance, because one plant alone can take the whole $5 million.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, it is a maximum of $250,000 per plant.

Mr. Sargent: My thought on this is, if you are going to do a serious job on this, like the current issue of the Chicago Sun-Times: "U.S. Steel Indicted for Pollution." The content is here that the fines that the hon. member for Scarborough West was on about this afternoon, about Domtar paying a $1,000 fine for pollution, that is a licence to pollute. That is all that these $1,000 fines are—a licence to pollute.

These people are criminals who would pollute the air and the water. They are criminals, they are poisoning our people. This story reports that the plant supervisor at the south works of this United States Steel Corporation is going to go to jail. Yes, jail and a fine goes along with the pollution. So the fact that you take these big firms and you fine them, is as I said, a licence to pollute. But if you put a jail term on these guys who would poison our people, our children, our waters, then you have something that will make these guys sit up and believe you mean business.

So I suggest to you—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: —or something along that nature, because anyone who goes out and shoots somebody with a gun goes to jail. But if you do it through pollution, it is the error of your business.

Somewhere along the line we are going to have to get tough, and I suggest that the $5 million the Minister agrees is only a start.

I want to congratulate the Chairman on the one thought about the nursing homes. I hope that that comes into the operation. Thank you very much.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Peacock.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to belabour the ideological position of our party that was put forward this afternoon on account of the remarks I want to make now, because I think it is legitimate to take that ideological position based on the fact that many of the loans we have talked about have only been committed; they are not actually disbursed.

But I just want to make a few comments now within the administration of the programme, based on some of the answers we have received, leaving aside those ideological considerations for a few minutes to discuss what the actual impact of the programme has been. The minister and his officers of the corporation have said a great deal about the success of the programme. We have had some information about Cornwall, and we have had some information about the actual disbursements of loans in other areas of the province, and I just want to say that the overall impact, particularly for an area like Cornwall, which has received a fair amount of discussion, is far less than the government would like to assert.

We have had, I think, a total of 12 loans listed for the Cornwall area. That is the number I have on the list. Of those 12, from the statement that Mr. Etchen gave us this afternoon, it would appear that two of them have been withdrawn, the Belding-Corticelli loan and the A.P. Furniture Industries Incorporated loan. Another two, Forged Steel Valves and Howard and Sons, have been postponed.

Of the other two companies which have received loans, the two divisions of Courtaulds are in very serious difficulties, where the overall impact of the loans has not been achieved and where there has been a tremendous loss of employment—with the expansion of one of the divisions receiving the loans having done something to prevent the entire work force affected in Courtaulds from being put out in the street and some of them having been absorbed.

So out of the 12 loans in the Cornwall area that have been announced, six in some fashion—either by withdrawal of the application or notice of postponement from the company to ODC or severe economic difficulty resulting in loss of employment—have had considerable reduction in the effect of the programme in Cornwall. I am just wondering whether or not the minister would not agree that in discussing the success of the programme, in future he included in his statistics the kind of information that Mr. Etchen gave us today about the actual number of loans that are likely to have force and effect.

We know that 74 of the 234 have been fully disbursed; we know that another 51 have been partially disbursed. Of the remainder there is a $20 million balance still to be drawn on, some of that as a result of the necessary lead time not having been used up. But again I would think a good number of loans covered by that $20 million balance which has not been touched as yet, may well be in some doubt as to whether they will proceed.

One very notable instance is the Kingston Spinners that we spoke of earlier this afternoon, where a combination of the EIO and the conventional loans would have put $1 million in the hands of that company much before now if the arrangements had been worked out. But apparently the arrangements have not been worked out and long after that loan was committed to Kingston Spinners nothing has happened.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I just stop you for a minute? What would you have done? Would you have given them the loan? Would you have said, "Well, when you get everything else settled, come back and see us"? Perhaps the possibility of Kingston Spinners getting under way is predicated on EIO's action in the first place. We have taken the action to get Kingston Spinners organized. If they cannot finish up the rest of their financing, we cannot be accused of standing here and refusing to assist the city of Kingston because they cannot finish their financing.

I think you have to recognize that if EIO do not move first—and we said this afternoon that perhaps we are the key to the financing—if we do not move and give them approval—whether they go ahead or not, we have to move—if we do not move, then we will get into difficulties, you can appreciate.

Mr. Etchen: I want to say something else—

Mr. Chairman: I would ask that you speak more directly into the microphone, sir.

Mr. Etchen: I would just like to add something else about Kingston Spinners. I said we were negotiating with them, and the idea in the negotiations with Kingston Spinners is that we hope, and we have every reason to believe, that the ultimate project will be very much larger than the one that we announced.

Mr. Peacock: Right. I appreciate the minister's comments that the corporation has to be sure that the terms will be met, that the commitment of the ODC EIO loan must come first from any of these firms. I do not know very much about Kingston Spinners. I do not know what their relationship is to some other parent company. All that we have been told so far is that they are a subsidiary of a U.S. company.

However, the point I am trying to make and get across is that in terms of the actual impact of the programme—never mind the Stevenson & Kellogg reports, which I believe included many of the companies we are talking about that have now withdrawn and have now postponed—we should be informed of the actual impact, when the minister is dealing with the activities of the EIO programme, to the best of his ability to tell us and in as accurate a manner as possible. Because it does seem clear that of the $34 million of loans that have been approved, plus a large number of others associated with those loans through the conventional lending mechanism, the communities in question and the jobs in question are not getting the benefit.

We have got to scale down exactly what the minister is putting across to us as being the total impact of the programme and come up with a more realistic picture of just what the success of the programme has been. I appreciate that in many instances this is not going to be known for some time after the commitment of the loan. But in many of the instances cited yesterday in Cornwall, and again today, and for other areas, these loans were committed well back in 1968 and 1969, and the minister should not carry them on his books as part of the actual force and effect of the programme, unless there is some sign of the plant going up and the machinery being put in place and the workers being hired to put on the line. Now, I am wondering what happens to the minister's advances and capacity to grant other loans if he is carrying all of these along over a period of a year and a half or a year. Does this not reduce his lending ability?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh no, when we go to Treasury Board we recognize that some of these companies have had difficulty in getting under way, or they have not got their plants under way, and they are going to take longer to do it than they had specified. That is taken into consideration when we go up for next year's appropriation as far as the Treasury Board is concerned, because we do not ask the Treasury Board for any more money than we think we need to carry out the actual commitments for that year.

Mr. Peacock: Right. But in making up that budget request, you have to carry over those loans that have been committed but not drawn.

Mr. Etchen: No. This is a continuing programme. I would like to make that point again; obviously, I have not made it fully clear. Those loans that were definitely cancelled were never included in the statistics.

Mr. Peacock: Nor in the Stevenson & Kellogg report?

Mr. Etchen: No, they were statistics that we put out; allow me to be clear on this. The statistics we put out were where the company had informed us that they are not going ahead with the programme, and not in the statistics that we put out. I would say that there was no possible doubt about them.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They were eliminated before we gave you the figures.

Mr. Etchen: Yes. The figures that we put out state that none of the money that has been committed and the amount of jobs that these companies hoped to create and so forth—I told you earlier in these estimates that the figures that had been put out had been on the low side, overall, where they have been completed. Now, there is no way, unless they are going to stick to figures and forget all about those that have been approved, to say nothing about them at all until the plant is actually in. We could put our statistics that way; that would be one basis of putting it. But it would not give anybody, neither the members of the House nor the general public, the amount of money that has been committed and some of the things that they hoped to do with it.

I think the best way to present these figures is that we never claim anything we cannot actually prove, and we are simply giving the members of the House and the public information to which they are entitled on the number of loans, the amount of the loans and the jobs that they hope to create. Now this would be the best bet, as to the jobs the companies are going to create.

I have never heard of any financial institution that cannot operate otherwise; there are always cancellations. It always takes time to put a plant in, and this is just a startup of the programme, so there has to be this time when we are just starting and while the companies have to go into production; there has to be this lead time.

Mr. Peacock: All right. I am not quarrelling with the facts as they are presented in the minister's press releases announcing the granting of EIO loans. All I am saying to him is that until now, until the meeting of this committee to consider this year's estimates, we have relied on those same press releases to give us, the members of the Legislature, some idea of the actual impact of the programme.

I look at the Cornwall area, for instance. I look at the releases, and I look down the list and count approximately 12, I think; perhaps I missed one or two, and I may not have them all. There is Chisholm Lacrosse Manufacturing, Courtaulds Canadian Synthetic Fibres Limited, Cavelle Carpets Limited, Howard and Sons and so on, and of that number I see six that are not, in fact, contributing to the programme. Two of them because of economic difficulties and the other four because they are not in the programme.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is a very minute number again. There are 234 loans.

Mr. Peacock: Right. But you say that the programme is designed to serve communities such as Cornwall and, heaven knows, no one is disputing that Cornwall deserves this kind of attention. All I am saying to the minister, Mr. Chairman, is that, until now we have not been able to come to grips with an accurate assessment of the value of the programme to a community like Cornwall, and in the light of the information we have received today, we have got to revise that evaluation when we know that firms like Caravelle and Courtaulds are having difficulties, perhaps not of their own making, but there has been a tremendous loss of employment there that others have—

Mr. Etchen: There has been an increase, I am told.

Mr. Peacock: Yes. There has been an increase, true; but it has not, in any way, been able to absorb—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well no, but listen—wait a minute—

Mr. Etchen: There would have been the loss of jobs. That is what the record states. There would have been the loss of jobs at Courtaulds in the rayon part of the factory whatever happened. There was no way in which the company could maintain this, so this was a fact of life; there was nothing at all to what we did. With the two loans to Courtaulds, it would be for the best of the ability of the circumstance we had to work with which would alleviate them.

Mr. Peacock: Right, but it remains a fact—

Mr. Etchen: And I just want to correct something else. Belding-Corticelli actually is not in Cornwall; it is outside somewhere.

Mr. Peacock: No. It is just outside Cornwall.

Mr. Etchen: It was going to be in Charlottenburgh township. I do not see—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Peacock: I am not finished, Mr. Chairman. I am just winding up to say that I think that, as a result of this discussion, at least as far as Cornwall is concerned, we have a better picture of the actual extent to which the programme has been working for Cornwall, and it is something less than one would have estimated on the face of the information that had been provided to us earlier.

So I would like to know, of course we do not have time, but I would like to know to what extent this is true of the rest of the programme. Now Mr. Etchen has given us some of the figures in respect to withdrawals and postponements; but again I come back to the instance of the Kingston Spinners, where this presumably is one of those loans that falls within the $20 million balance. You do not regard it as a withdrawal, you do not regard it as a postponement because it was not in your list of companies that had notified you of a postponement. How many other companies are there like Kingston Spinners covered by the balance of the $20 million that is yet to be drawn as of this afternoon?

Mr. Etchen: Well let us clear up the situation on Kingston Spinners once again.

Mr. Peacock: It goes back to 1968!

Mr. Etchen: We are negotiating with Kingston Spinners a much larger project than was originally the case. As far as we are concerned, at least to my knowledge as I am standing here now, I have no reason to believe that Kingston Spinners' project will not proceed. In other words, I have every reason to believe that it will proceed.

I cannot guarantee it, because I cannot read the minds of the management. As far as we know at the present time this one will proceed. As far as we know we have not been given any indication that any of the others that we have not mentioned will not proceed.

Now I am not saying that some of them will not withdraw, what I am saying is that as we stand in grant paying at this time, we have not been given any indication that any of the others will not proceed. Now whether that will change or not, of course I have not got a crystal ball.

Mr. Peacock: Well, it makes one wonder about the others.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I just add one thing here? We have heard a lot about Cornwall today, and rightly so, because Cornwall is in trouble. We have done everything we can possibly do in our department to make sure that we process every loan for Cornwall regardless of the number of people employed. If we are optimistic enough, perhaps we can think that the Caravelle Carpets Company will replace the parent company one of these days and produce enough carpets to have 1,600 employees back there like it did, perhaps many years ago.

We have overlooked all the towns which have had a very successful operation; like Bowmanville, Cobourg, Port Hope, Belleville, Trenton, Brockville, Carleton Place, Smith Falls, Penetang, Orillia, Port Arthur, Napanee, Arnprior and many others. We have not heard very much from my friends here in the room today about our successes.

We have all heard about Cornwall, and I say, despite what has been said about Cornwall today, this government has done a fantastic job in trying to keep Cornwall floating. We recognize that Courtaulds are going to pull the plug, that is why we have put the pressure on to try to get industry in there. So I do not think we should be condemned. I do not think you are condemning us, but I do not think we should be criticized for the number of jobs we created in Cornwall, with the number of loans we have made, in view of the fact that Cornwall, as we recognize—I think your leader said so yesterday—is a very difficult area. It has been a textile town and it is one of those towns in which, unless we can get a big industry in there, we are not going to absorb those people as quickly as we would like to.

Mr. Etchen: Well, I would just like to add that I am encouraged by the Cornwall situation, but I have not mentioned it because we do not want to claim anything. We never attempt to claim anything that we cannot substantiate.

You say that so many have fallen out at this point, that is quite true. Well, here are four that we are processing right now in Cornwall which we have never mentioned. Cornwall Brass and Iron Foundries, we are considering in Cornwall; C-Tech Limited; Frepal Limited; and J. M. Bestner. And there are two more; Aries Company, for example. So that if you want the full picture on Cornwall—

Mr. Peacock: They are still in the application stage.

Mr. Etchen: They have gone as far as approval in principle from our consultants.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Etchen: Do you want the complete picture on Cornwall? I am giving you the complete picture!

We are not claiming these. You are saying that some fall out; so they do. I am saying that some have been replaced, and this is a normal course in events of any finance institute. Some fall out, some have come in to take—

Mr. Peacock: Take credit for what you have actually accomplished; tell us what you actually accomplished!

On vote 2207, Mr. Chairman, can the minister tell us why item 2 appears apart from vote 2208. It is: equalization of industrial opportunity loan forgiveness, $950,000.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is the amount of money that will be forgiven, on the 10 per cent annually basis, for that particular year. Am I right, Mr. Etchen? That is a provision that has been arranged for the—

Mr. Peacock: That is the one-tenth forgiveness each year of the first five years?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Peacock: You have to show these items twice then, once when the corporation receives its advance from the Treasury, or the consolidated revenue fund, and again as you forgive the—

Mr. Etchen: Yes; I think the intention is to keep the books straight.

Mr. Peacock: Have you as yet withheld any annual forgiveness note?

Mr. Etchen: Eight! You see it is just a start of the programme. I think there have been eight.

Mr. Peacock: Eight approvals of the forgiveness—

Mr. Etchen: Eight forgiven.

Mr. Peacock: Eight 10 per cents, is that right?

Mr. Etchen: That is right; Eight 10 per cents.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Gilbertson.

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): Mr. Chairman, Mr. Minister, I want to speak on Blind River, on industrial development for Blind River.

Now we have heard a lot of discussion here this evening about various ways of utilizing our natural resources, a lot of which is wood. As we realize, in Blind River for the last 50 years there has been a white pine sawmill operation and it has produced about 40 million feet of lumber per year, which is a large operation. In fact, it is the largest soft wood operation east of the Rockies.

Now I think that this experience of Blind River should be a lesson to us. Instead of an operation, such a large operation, just phasing out overnight you might say, or almost, I think that as the government we should have stepped in there soon enough to try to phase that operation out in such a way that a smaller operation could fit into the picture.

I know we are working at that now. We are trying to get some smaller wood consuming operations into Blind River, but when we think of the large amount of raw material that was coming out and being shipped away from there, surely there must have been some way that some industry could have been set up there to take up the slack and produce stock of some of the dimensions which we are aiming at now. I understand that through your department we are aiming at getting some wood-consuming operation in that will utilize and cut dimension stock that will create more employment.

Now we know that just regular modern sawmills today, even a small sawmill, which you might consider to be not as efficient as some bigger ones, are really quite efficient; and as a result they do not employ too many men. I know I was in a sawmill operation in my riding that was producing 16,000 feet every eight hours and there was probably only about four men on the floor. But it is a different story when it comes to where you have to take that lumber, you put it in the dry kiln to dry it, which creates considerable labour just to handle that lumber, to get it piled into proper ways to put it in the dry kiln; it comes out again and has to be rehanded. Then from there it has to be cut into dimension stock which creates considerable employment. I am familiar with the logging and lumbering operation. We sell to a factory in Sault Ste. Marie where they do this very thing.

In fact they make table tops, hardwood laminated table tops, and all that stuff has to be cut into various lengths and dimensions. I feel that a similar operation like that can go into Blind River. One of the important things in northern Ontario in this day and age is to utilize every bit of the wood, you might say everything but the branches, which they are doing in some of the modern, efficient mills in northern Ontario.

For instance, I would like to bring one to your attention. Mr. Minister, Dubreuilville. Four brothers went into the woods there and they drove a stake and said this is where we are going to build our townsite. If you go up there today, it is only about 10 years they have been operating, you have a population of 700 people there, in a very modern housing development, which I wish some day the minister could come up and see for himself.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If we ever get out of here I will join you.

Mr. Gilbertson: This is a modern example of what can be done. Now they would like to expand their operations still further by installing a presswood mill, you know, for making press boards. If they do that they will utilize every bit of all species of wood. There is one particular species that is not used very much and that is poplar and there is a lot of it up in northwestern Ontario. If they can install a pressboard plant they can utilize this and it would create a lot of labour.

While I am on this Dubreuilville deal, I know, Mr. Minister, we give incentive grants to various industries; this company has not asked for any grant that I know of, at least they have not got any so far, but there are some things that you can do for some of these places in northern Ontario. They are requesting to get some pavement in their town even if it is just on the main street. They are not asking for very much. I do not know whether this comes under your particular department or not, but I do not see why it cannot be so diversified that you can switch and help out in some way. They are not asking for a lot of money for they have done this on their own.

They have one of the most efficient softwood lumber operations in Ontario; and not just lumber—the produce pulp. They had a chipper, so the only thing they do not use is the branches now. They take it right down to two-inch diameter. I will tell you it does you good when you go up there, especially when you have seen in previous years how some lumbering operators have carried on, and the waste. I think that is one thing that we need to aim at, to see that we get operations in that utilize every part of the tree.

I have heard some say we have got the wood up in the north, why cannot we build furniture up there. I do not think that is feasible for the simple reason that transportation of furniture is a different story altogether from transporting dimension stock. You know yourself that when you transport dimension stock it is all baled and it is very compact and you have no problem to ship a lot of it. It can be made into the very things that the factories down in eastern Ontario, where they are running out of wood, are making. You could make that up in the north, cut the pieces to the right size and when they get down here they can just pick them up and they are ready to be made into furniture.

I have another lumbering operation and that is Hornepayne. It is similar to Dubreuilville. These are model lumbering operations that are worth looking into. I feel, Mr. Minister—we will go back to Blind River—and I would say that that is the most feasible thing that I can see in the future for Blind River as far as thinking about wood products is concerned. That is to put in some type of operation where they make dimension stock because it involves a lot of labour to cut these various pieces. You have got to have a lot of various types of saws, cleaners, and so on, dry kilns and so on. I would say that is one answer for Blind River. Of course, the next thing is, if a paper mill can be established, I would say that that would be the real answer.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Henderson.

Mr. L. C. Henderson (Lambton): Mr. Chairman, just a few remarks that go beyond Mr. Gilbertson's and his wood industry. With the modernization of our industries there came a great demand for pallets for loading different supplies for transportation. Does a pallet mill—this is wood manufacturing—qualify for one of your loans? Have you had any?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would think it would. Does anybody want to make a comment on that?

Mr. Etchen: We have considered this pallet operation. In fact, it has been part of a larger operation. Off the top of my head I think we have made some loans to that.

Mr. Henderson: They do qualify then?

Mr. Etchen: Yes, they do.

Mr. Henderson: Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: Shall the two items carry?
Agreed.

Votes 2207 and 2208 agreed to.

I thank the members of the committee very much. If you will allow, we will have about a five minute recess so we can bring in the other officials and allow a certain little courtesy to the minister. Then we will reconvene.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Does anybody want to be my guest?

Mr. Chairman: Now, if I can have your attention and if I can have some agreement here, I would like to call this; because of the way the items are drafted, we will deal with 2209 and 2210 together in a general way, and following that, of course, 2211 and 2212. They are related that way. If I can have your agreement, we will proceed and by some general consent we will call on Mr. Morrow first.

On votes 2209 and 2210:

Mr. D. H. Morrow (Ottawa West): Mr. Chairman, I have no long profound remarks to make but under 2209, item 1, subsidies in the form of contributions to the Ontario Housing Corporation to finance its operations, I would like to just say a few words regarding the Ontario Housing Corporation activities in the Ottawa area, particularly as these projects affect my own particular riding in the west end of the city.

I am aware of the fact that for several years now the corporation of the city of Ottawa, like other large urban municipalities, has been pressing the government strongly and has been appealing to the housing corporation to help them resolve their housing problems. Now that the corporation has built several large projects in Ottawa and have others awaiting final approval, the council of the city, as well as many property holders, is concerned over the social impact such large low-rent projects will have on local neighbourhoods, as well as, of course, on the people who live in these large complexes.

I am concerned in particular with the large number of units that have been built in my own particular neighbourhood in the west end of the city and the prospect of even more and greater development because of other proposals that are being put forward in the same area. To pinpoint this density of population for the housing authorities, I might say it is in that area of the west end bounded by Carling avenue and the Ottawa River on the north, and by Pinecrest and Richmond Roads and the Queensway. It is more familiarly known as the Britannia area; there is Britannia village and Britannia Highlands, which are referred to as the Britannia area of the west end.

My neighbours and I have already witnessed the completion in the last two years of two very large projects right on our own perimeters—I am talking about on the edge of our own properties—and now we have the prospect of two others in the very same vicinity, one proposal being as large as 420 units. If these two large new projects are added to what already exists in this particular area it will mean a tremendous concentration of one type of housing. In my opinion this results in a very bad, unbalanced population mix, for one particular area to have such a high density of population, of low rent housing population. Educational, recreational, religious and other facilities will suffer also from the lack of balance and social problems of a critical nature which I fear are certain to arise.

Now I appeal to the minister, through you Mr. Chairman, and to the senior housing personnel on behalf of the permanent residents of this area, to take a second look at their new proposals for the west end of the city before making any concrete moves, to see if something can be done to alleviate this situation which I have covered.

As the member for the area concerned, I wish to make my position perfectly clear. I am definitely opposed to any further low-rent development in the west end, in this particular section of the city, because I think the density per acre now is extremely high. I would like to see another type of housing or land use developed in this area in order to avoid the many disadvantages which I have enumerated as emanating from such high density of low-rent housing in one particular area of the city.

I believe the Ontario Housing Corporation and the people in that corporation now have the experience and they have the expertise with which they can now become more selective in regard to the size and the number of projects that are approved in any one area of a large urban city.

Mr. Chairman, I may say, and I have already said, I have many irate homeowners in my area of the city of Ottawa. I think perhaps their collective temper is going to rise and increase if this matter gets worse, so I would like to speak out on their behalf at this time. If some of the officials would care to comment on this particular heavy density of low-rent housing in this particular area that I have outlined, I would be pleased to hear if they have any further thoughts on the matter.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would like to ask Mr. Goyette to comment, he has been up to Ottawa recently on this.

Mr. P. R. Goyette (Ontario Housing Corporation): Mr. Chairman, it looks very much as if in the city of Ottawa we may somehow be suffering from our own success. We now have something like 3,000 family housing units either under management or under development, and we now have people living in about half them. Besides that, we have responded to the request from the city of Ottawa for something like 1,750 senior citizen units.

Now I recognize, Mr. Chairman, what the hon. member is saying. There is a concentration in this area, within a quadrant. We do have a project of 180 units I think in one area. There are another 136 not too far away and these have tended to be of the fairly high bedroom count.

The numbers themselves are not particularly high in terms of what we have been getting across the province, but this was an attempt to respond to the request from the city on their need of accommodation for large families. I think that if one did a survey, the city of Ottawa has had the capacity for providing a slightly higher per child count than some of the other municipalities.

Mr. Sargent: I guess they do not use the pill down there.

Mr. Goyette: No, but we are learning!

Now on the specific project you have in mind, we were all aware that there is a density problem, so we have done, really a couple of things! We have met with the board of control of the city of Ottawa and we are going to see if we can act as a catalyst with the developer and arrange to co-ordinate his development with that of the other adjacent landowners. That would be number one.

Mr. Morrow: Is this in the new 420-unit project?

Mr. Goyette: That would be, yes, in the new 420.

Now there is a problem there, sir. It still requires a zoning change in the city of Ottawa. If the zoning change is not given to the developer then of course the project will not go ahead. So it still depends on that zoning change, and of course the people in the area do have their opportunity to make their views known to the municipality and of course to the OMB. This project has been on the books for well over a year and we just do not know how successful it will be going ahead. But we did talk with the city officials to see if there was something we could do to work something out with the adjacent landowners and change the density somewhat, at least on the fringes.

At the same time there was a proposal. The proposal went as far as having federal approval for funds for a 250-unit senior citizens complex. It would have been on that same property and being mindful that some reservations were raised we were successful in switching the funds that would be applicable to that apartment high-rise unit to another project in the centre of the town; so that would have the effect of reducing the density.

I think on the last comment you made, sir, in reference to the social amenities, it would be a requirement in this one because of its size. Negotiations are going on because of the family content here, to build a social centre, which we were not able to finance successfully under The National Housing Act in recent years. But the federal government particularly, is now responding to desires with provision for some social amenities. So there may well be some separate building that would provide the kind of social amenity you spoke of.

There is, as you know, a separate school site. Some discussions are taking place between the Ottawa school board and the CBC about an exchange of land. In summary, we are mindful of the situation and we are going to see what we can do that will work out. We are not even sure whether the project will go ahead and we will not be putting any more projects in that particular area.

There is one which is not too far away which you have not mentioned. It has been split in half; one half of which would have been a rental housing project will now be a condominium project, which would be a home ownership for sale and which has a slightly different connotation.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Martel, for a question.

Mr. Martel: I have a question of the minister.

Mr. Minister I raised the matter with you sometime ago and we discussed it last week about the situation on the Home Ownership Made Easy. Has someone from your department been into Sudbury yet to investigate this particular complaint; and if so are there any results of the investigation?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Bob, have you got the story on that? Mr. Goyette would you like to take the floor again?

Mr. Goyette: Mr. Chairman, I believe this refers to someone who lives on Gary Street in New Sudbury.

Mr. Martel: Yes.

Mr. Goyette: In summary, this is a lot, a home lot, which was disposed of to an individual family to arrange for the construction of a house. The arrangement was made for the contract and the house was built and I gather the problem has been the house has not been built entirely to the individual's satisfaction.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is putting it mildly, yes.

Mr. Martel: That is putting it mildly. The Hydro was not satisfied either.

Mr. Goyette: All right; that is for the record.

Now yes, we have been in touch. As you know, that particular house is financed through The National Housing Act and inspections have been performed by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and by the municipal people. We have been in touch with Central Mortgage and we have been in touch with the builder, we have actually had a person try to get in touch with the family. The family apparently has been out in the daytime, but we did get to someone in the family.

We now will do what we can to see if we can bring the builder, the family and the inspectors together and I hope that maybe we can work something out for them.

Mr. Martel: Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Trotter.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few remarks on the subject of the Ontario Housing Corporation. I know that some of us on the opposition side of the House have often accused the minister of making flamboyant statements about housing in the province of Ontario and what the government is doing, and we have often called it housing by headlines. Well, no doubt today we are seeing headlines about Harbour City—that may come about and it may not—but we are also seeing other headlines that are far more serious, such things as the number of housing units that were built in February of this year was down over 78 per cent, compared with last year. In Metropolitan Toronto, the building of housing units was down about 90 per cent in the month of February, compared with the same month of 1969. And even though it is bad enough, it is almost disastrous that housing units are decreasing at such a drastic rate; in fact they are not being built. When we look at what was built in the Metropolitan Toronto area in 1969 we find that over 68 per cent of the housing units were apartment units.

When we talk about HOME or Home Ownership Made Easy, we find there are really very few homes being produced, so the average person does not have an opportunity to owning his own home, particularly the young people who are taking their place in our society today. And just to illustrate how serious it is becoming—and I take these figures from the "Canadian Housing Statistics" for 1969—as far back as 1965 the NHA borrowers came from the lower third of our population; NHA supplied nearly 18 per cent of our lower-income group, the lower third of our population, with housing, insofar as they can get loans. This was not subsidized housing; this was actually supplying mortgages.

In 1969, it was down to just over six per cent; in other words, only about a third of the lower third is getting any help to get their own home. And yet it is the upper third of our population that is getting the benefit of the National Housing Act. About 28 per cent of the upper third of our population in Canada—these are figures for across Canada, but they really apply to Ontario—about 28 per cent of the upper third used the NHA loans back in 1965. Now it is 44 per cent. In other words, even the upper third of the population, insofar as their housing is concerned, are depending more and more on The National Housing Act. And the lower income families are getting less and less opportunity to own their own home.

I think this is a major social disaster for Canada as a whole and, more particularly, for those of us who are more concerned with the people in the province of Ontario. I think we should examine—and we most certainly will examine—the role of Ontario Housing Corporation during the estimates, in what they are doing and what they are not doing in providing good housing for the people of this province. I do believe, essentially, that Ontario Housing Corporation, despite what accomplishments it has made, is becoming a bureaucratic monstrosity; it is simply not able to make the decisions and to give the people not only housing, but the type of housing they should have. In fact, Mr. Morrow brought up a very moot point about how we are building subsidized housing; there is no question that we need low-rental subsidized housing, but it is utterly ridiculous that we turn it into ghettos, and this is what is going to happen in the Britannia area if they proceed.

In some respects, they are giving the people who are going to live in those areas a stigma that actually does exist when people become identified with living in low-rental housing. So it is the quality of our living that we are not facing up to, and it is most unfortunate, because we in this province have the expertise and we have the resources to really do what we want if the political leaders will give the leadership that should be given.

There are many reasons, of course, why housing is so expensive, why the average person is not having the opportunity to get the type of housing he wants. And I do not intend to go into all the details at this moment on what is wrong. One of the main reasons is how we purchase land, and why we have allowed profiteers, really, in many cases, to rob the average person blind with the aid and help of the Ontario Housing Corporation. Whether they do it blindly or whether they do it because they do not wish to interfere with free enterprise, the truth of the matter is that the policies of the Ontario Housing Corporation have helped some of the very few to do extremely well at the expense of many of the people of this province, and particularly through the coffers of the taxpayers of this province.

To illustrate my point, Mr. Chairman, I want to go into two illustrations of where housing developments have taken place in this province and to try to point out where we have done what I think is this tremendous harm to government housing policies. I think it is extremely unfortunate and unfair that the old wives' tales are sometime proved, that if government does something or someone is working in government they are there because they could not get a job any place else.

We are just as capable, as a government, of doing things properly as is free enterprise; in fact, in many cases we have more opportunities to do things for the people of the province than free enterprise—and government is not profit-motivated, which makes a tremendous difference. But when government is inefficient, or when it is really playing up to private interests, when the political leadership has really been—as it is, in my view, in some instances—playing up to private interests, it makes government appear as if it is weak and highly expensive in the way it carries out the projects it undertakes.

One of the illustrations I have is near Metropolitan Toronto—I do not intend to go into it in great detail, because we have discussed it before—and the other is a considerable distance from Metropolitan Toronto. What has happened at Bramalea deserves to be recapitulated and studied as just what government should not do, because one of the first things that we as a government and as the Ontario Housing Corporation should do is to see to it that there is inexpensive land. It is not the business of government to shore up the prices of land in order that they do not interfere with the private market, and certainly in the two illustrations I have there is no question in my mind that the policy of government has played into the hands of private speculators, in some cases, to a tremendous amount.

You will recall that back in May, 1967, when the Ontario government—or at least the Ontario Housing Corporation—offered to buy about 1,666 lots from Bramalea corporation, there was a tremendous amount of headlines; in fact, I think it was around election time that some of us were very cynical and we said that HOME did not stand for Home Ownership Made Easy but was Mr. Randall's slogan of Help Out My Election. Well, I guess with the election results, it did on that occasion.

Let us take a look at what has happened at Bramalea and how it has cost government a lot of money and has put money into the pockets of people who should not have received the amount they got. Ontario Housing Corporation purchased these 1,666 lots for $10.7 million. That was eight per cent of the Bramalea holdings, and when they paid that $10.7 million, they paid twice the entire original price for the 4,500 acres that Bramalea bought. Now, I admit that the 1,666 were serviced by this time, but that still does not explain why, in buying eight per cent of the holdings, you can pay twice the entire original price for 4,500 acres.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Would you suggest we expropriated them?

Mr. Trotter: Expropriated them?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Trotter: Well I will get into that. But I would not mind expropriating here. If you are going to get good housing, I would not hesitate to expropriate. After all, you expropriate for public works; you expropriate for schools. Then I may ask, why do you leave 1,700 acres in Malvern sitting there? But if you are going to have good housing—

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is not sitting there; it is working.

Mr. Trotter: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is not sitting there; it is under way now.

Mr. Trotter: It has been sitting there since 1953. I will get into that before the estimates are gone, but that gives you some idea of what it costs. What concerns me when I think of the cost of Bramalea is this: During the week of May 7, there were only about 1,911 shares traded on the stock exchange in the city of Toronto, and they were running between $8 and $9 a share. Then as a result of what the insiders must have known was going on, there was some talk, there was a secret meeting with some of the council members out at Chinguacousy whether it was a secret meeting or not I cannot say. Suddenly a week later—that was the week of May 14—24,587 shares were traded and the price jumped to $11.70.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Would you call that a big jump, $2 a share?

Mr. Trotter: Oh, it has gone to $38. You listen. Then, the Home Ownership Made Easy deal was presented to the Chinguacousy council on May 26, 1967. Now, the two men who were the leading lights in Bramalea, an Alan Taylor and an Arthur Armstrong—Mr. Taylor was the president and Mr. Armstrong, I believe, was the executive vice-president—had options to buy stock at $5 a share. Naturally, when it was moving up, at around $11, they exercised their options. If they had sold immediately, they could have made an immediate profit of, in the case of Mr. Taylor, of $185,000, and of Mr. Armstrong of a little over $64,000. Of course, they hung on to their shares. I do not think they dumped them until the stock got around $38 a share.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): What is wrong with that?

Mr. Trotter: That is it; this is a typical remark from a Tory. We are dealing with a housing situation and you say what is wrong with that. I want to let you know what government money is being used for. All right, a lot is wrong with it. You people are so obtuse you do not realize you are robbing the people blind by the policies of this government.

Mr. W. Hodgson: You are getting excited again.

Mr. Trotter: All right, will you sit and listen? I am going to get more excited, before I get through with you. Now, by August, 1969, Mr. Taylor had realized in profits of $600,000 and Mr. Armstrong, of $550,000 that we know of. I really feel that that is a low estimate. But the fact is that government money had gone in at a time when we were trying to lower the price of land. On other occasions, I have brought this up. On that occasion, the government paid approximately $6,700 for a lot and they sold it to future home owners at, approximately, $9,000 a lot. In other words, instead of turning it over to a home owner, or a home builder at $6,700 a lot, the OHC itself was making a profit, simply because the government did not want to interfere with the private market. Again, I point out as a principle that one of the major purposes of the Ontario Housing Corporation should be to reduce the cost of land.

In any event, this is what happened. The Ontario government still went ahead. In April, 1969 they had another deal. From Bramalea they bought another 4,602 lots for town houses at $4,000 per lot. I think the total amount of money came to $18.4 million that was handed over by Ontario Housing Corporation to Bramalea.

They were going to build houses, at 18 houses to an acre, on land that originally cost $1,100 per acre. All right, it is serviced. What does it cost to service? Approximately, $1,000 an acre.

Hon. Mr. Randall: $20,000 an acre!

Mr. Trotter: All right. Their total investment was $20,000 an acre. They realized $72,000 on that acre that cost them a total of $20,000 including various expenses, a profit of $52,000. Now if we are short of money to build houses for the people of the province of Ontario why in the world should this government go out and pay a private company that kind of money? I say it is ridiculous and it is a shame to the people as a whole. Really, it is utterly disgraceful management of the coffers of this province.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I ask you where you could have bought the same kind of land in the same area at that time, if you were doing it?

Mr. Trotter: I can go into this. Why do you have to go and walk into Bramalea?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Just tell me where you can buy the land?

Mr. Trotter: All right, I will get into that because I will show you, in other instances, how the land has been cornered—and you sat there and watched it—land that has been cornered by private developers and you have had every opportunity to stop it.

When Bramalea originally moved into Chinguacousy township it was set up that, after all, this was going to be a satellite town. They were going to have industry, they were going to have one thing and another and the assessment was to be 57 per cent residential, 43 per cent industrial.

In fact, Bramalea, at one time, in an attempt to bring in industry, sold some industry property at a dollar an acre. Of course, the cost was transferred to the homeowners. It was strictly an economical deal. If you are selling to industry at a buck an acre, you have to pick it up some place else, so it is the homeowner that pays.

Even that did not work out. Industry still did not move out there and the so-called "balanced community" never did develop. I doubt if it ever will. If you have ever been around Bramalea you have seen that it is almost a dormitory town, where 80 per cent of the people work in Toronto and where 20 per cent of the people work in Brampton. If you ever want to call it a balanced community, or community planning, it is a pretty poor show.

In 1968, the Bramalea company, because they had not been able to make up the necessary industrial assessment they had promised, paid in penalties to the township $225,000. Then, along comes big-hearted Ontario Housing Corporation with this latest deal that they had in 1969 and kindly got Bramalea off the hook.

The Ontario government paid $11 million to the township and the company was released from the responsibility of providing that industrial assessment. So that the company was released, not only on the home lots, but also on 1,400 single and semi-detached lots. They were released from their industrial assessments out of the good graces of Ontario Housing Corporation.

The company, in this last deal of 1969, got from the government $18.4 million. They were released from the responsibility of their industrial assessment and then they were in a position to make further profit on the 1,400 lots that they still owned. Of course, on the 1,400 lots that they still own they are going to build houses. They are going to be building and they are going to be selling houses so they can make more money on that.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): How about the sewerage system that McKeough got for them?

Mr. Trotter: Yes. There again, we went into that one other time, but the Ontario Water Resources Commission have also been very obliging to these people.

Over and above these 1,400 lots, right nearby, Bramalea also has 4,000 acres of undeveloped land sitting there waiting for the right opportunity. And, of course, there is no question that this is going to be a highly profitable thing for them. I sometimes think that when the developers see that sign HOME, and we call it Home Ownership Made Easy, I rather think that they rather twisted it to say, "How to Make It Easy", because this is what has happened in this province in this day and age. There is no question that it has been sheer stupidity on the part of government—

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is just one man's opinion.

Mr. Trotter: I might mention, Mr. Chairman, that the tenants, when they lease the lots from the government, pay $43.50 a month; if they do not buy the lots and they lease them, they will pay $43.50. If it is figured in the same manner of a 35-year mortgage, they are going to end up paying about $18,270 for lots and they still will not end it at the end of 35 years. How is Home Ownership Made Easy under such standards as that?

That is one particular example, Mr. Chairman. When we examine the background of that field, there is no question it is a blot on the province from the financial point of view, but it also shows a lack of planning. And there is no question that the government is going to have to take a strong stand on what it believes a community should be.

I am old-fashioned enough to believe that we are capable of producing homes; that we do not necessarily everywhere have to put people in these huge high-rises that are really concrete filing cabinets; that people, particularly with families, have little opportunity to enjoy equality of life.

Many of us will want apartments; it depends upon our stage in life what we want. But studies have been made, and a thorough study is being made now, on the effect on people living in suburbia and, more particularly, people having children living in apartment blocks.

We just do not have any policies that are worthwhile to show that there is any determined leadership on the part of this administration.

I said, Mr. Chairman, that I had another example of where I think the government has really played into the hands of the developers. Also, even after it has played into the hands of the developers and purchased property, it has constructed a type of building and a type of accommodation for people that, in this day and age, should simply not be built.

I again underline what Mr. Morrow said. I do believe in subsidized housing, but I emphasize the importance of how you build it, where you build it, what are the amenities supplied, what is the opportunity—particularly for the children—to take advantage of the many cultural opportunities that are in the province of Ontario.

This is not an economic decision in supplying housing. We have to consider economics, it is true, but when the men who built Bramalea approached their task, they did it strictly on the matter of economics. They made no secret on it. They were in business, and they said it is how they are going to make a buck.

This is simply not good enough for those of us in this province who have to supply the proper housing, because if you do not have the good housing that we require, government is going to end up paying the costs of the numerous social disasters that take place in families who do not have the proper accommodation. It ends up in our courts; it ends up in welfare; it ends up in all the social services. These are the huge bills that pile up because we do not think ahead.

The volumes on the subject are numerous and they all point to one thing—that we simply do not approach the housing problem as we should. Bramalea is a shocking example of how we can build a lot of match-boxes without the proper amenities of life. But, even worse, it has misused public money to line the pockets of the few. A few have become wealthy and it really amounts to mansions for a few, while hundreds of thousands stand in line looking for a home.

Believe me, it is no exaggeration when I say hundreds of thousands. We know that there are approximately 15,000 applications in Metropolitan Toronto today for subsidized housing—well, for low-rental housing and homes for the aged, it comes to approximately 15,000, give or take a few, so that I am not far out in that figure.

We know today that approximately 80 per cent of the people of Canada do not qualify for an NHA loan. Many people—going back over the years—would call it socialism, but not too long ago I had an opportunity of talking to a man who thought I was a socialist. Now he is all worked up about housing, even though he is quite well off, because he found out that when his son went to buy a house, he could not buy one; so the old man put up the money. That young fellow's problem is solved. But we in government are dealing with the majority of people who do not have parents who can put up the money.

This government simply is not facing up to a tragic social fact that is with us today. It is a crisis, and it is a national disaster, and a very local disaster for us in Ontario, when we see that construction for housing units has decreased 73 per cent, say, in the month of February compared with the month of February in 1969.

Mr. Chairman, I had an opportunity to obtain from Ontario Housing Corporation a list of the contracts for family units for 1968 and 1969, for senior citizens' units for 1968 and 1969. It is interesting to peruse them, to look them over, because when you go over the list of contracts, let by Ontario Housing Corporation for family units in 1968, there were 39 projects, 39 contracts let. They are from all over Ontario—London, Kingston, Hamilton, from east to west. They cover a great area. But we look and find that a company called Headway Corporation Limited has got 12 of 39. Then when you turn and look at the contracts for family units in 1969, in that year OHC let 51 contracts, again all over the province, and 14 of those 51 contracts were let to Headway Corporation Limited. I notice there is one other company that got a contract, and I am quite sure, it is an associate—the Mayotte Construction Company.

Now, there is no other company that comes anywhere close to getting that number of contracts. I might also mention that for senior citizens' units for 1969, again all over Ontario, a total of 41 contracts was let, and this one company, Headway Corporation Limited, got nine of the contracts. There is no question that one particular company has been getting a great many of the contracts let by this government, and you know it is most interesting when you look at—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Are you saying they are crooks?

Mr. Trotter: I am not saying they are crooks.

An hon. member: But maybe you are inferring—

Mr. Trotter: You had better sit and listen. I did not say anybody was a crook. I might be telling you that the government is stupid. I got your prospectus. I want to give you an idea, before I am through tonight, just how they plan what they do. If they are low bid, I can give you some idea of the type of way they are cornering the real estate market. I think some people in northern Ontario better smarten up if they do not want some of their communities destroyed.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: Would the minister have for us tomorrow what those contracts were let at? We have the tender prices here. We would like to know the other price.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Our staff will have all the information for you.

Mr. W. Hodgson: Some lots are selling for $9,000 in Bramalea. What would they sell for in Etobicoke or Mississauga and in Brampton?

Hon. Mr. Randall: $13,000 or $14,000.

An hon. member: That is to OHC from their friends.

Mr. Sargent: And $3,500 in Saskatoon for the same thing.

Mr. Chairman: We will adjourn the committee for today and reconvene Monday afternoon at 3:15 p.m.

The committee adjourned at 10:30 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Trade and Development Standing Committee

MONDAY, MAY 25, 1970

The committee met at 3.15 o'clock p.m., in committee room one; Mr. D. A. Evans in the Chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Chairman: The meeting is called to order. We are on votes 2209 and 2210, we will take the two of them together; the Ontario Housing Corporation.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, when we adjourned the other evening I was speaking on what I felt was a tremendous error that the Ontario Housing Corporation was making in the way of purchased land and the various land deals it entered into. I had gone into some detail in the arrangements at Bramalea. Then just as we adjourned I had begun to speak on some of the contracts that had been let by Ontario Housing Corporation over the last two years and why I was concerned Headway Corporation Limited seemed to play such a dominating role in certain areas of Ontario, and in particular in getting a number of contracts.

I know some of the members from the government side of the House said I was accusing people of being crooks and so on. Now this is not the intention at all. I know of nothing illegal, just as Bramalea was perfectly legal. What I am complaining about is that I think it is poor business on the part of the government and does not give us the proper value that we should get for the people who require housing. The same thing holds for Headway Corporation Limited. I suppose if I was in the business I could make money out of it, just like many other people who take advantage of government policies.

Interjections by an hon. member.

Mr. Trotter: Not quite that far. It depends if you are strictly interested in making money, that is what they are in there for. These firms that are in the building business are strictly there for making money.

Mr. J. W. Snow (Halton East): What about lawyers, are they not in there for making money too?

Mr. Trotter: Yes, lawyers know all about that too! But Ontario Housing Corporation is in the business of building houses to see that our people get proper shelter; and it is not only a question of the number of houses that they produce, it is the kind of housing that the people of Ontario should have.

Now I pointed out that in provision of family units in 1968, Ontario Housing Corporation had let 39 contracts, and of those 39, and they were all over Ontario excepting the Toronto region, I believe Headway Corporation got 12 out of the 39. Of the senior citizen units all over Ontario, excepting Toronto, Headway got eight contracts out of 23. For 1969 on the family units, there were 51 contracts all over Ontario excepting Toronto, and Headway got 14 of them. On the contracts let for senior citizen units in 1969, there were 41 projects all over Ontario, again excepting Toronto and nine of them went to this one company, Headway corporation.

Now Headway Corporation consists of a number of companies that were combined. A prospectus was issued back in the latter part of 1969, which is not very long ago, Mr. Chairman. And really, in this prospectus there are a couple of items that really do amaze you. In fact, in their prospectus they go into the history of Ontario Housing Corporation to a small extent. They must have been extremely optimistic that they were going to get contracts from the government before they even started.

For example, on page six of their prospectus they say: "Once the transaction involving the lands in question"; and before that they give a long list of all the properties they have—they say:

Once the transactions involving the lands in question are completed the company contemplates the construction thereon of rent-geared-to-income housing for Ontario Housing Corporation, provided of course that the government approval is obtained.

Then on page seven, for some reason under a paragraph called Rent-Geared-to-Income Housing, it touches on Ontario Housing Corporation. They say:

Ontario Housing Corporation, a crown corporation, was incorporated by the province of Ontario in 1964 for the purpose of developing and managing rent-geared-to-income student, family and senior citizen housing in Ontario.

One could not help but wonder why a crown corporation has to be mentioned in the prospectus of a private company.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): There is no law against it though, is there?

Mr. Trotter: There is no law—I said there is no law against all this, what I am objecting to is the policy of the government. I am not saying there is anything crooked, I am not inferring that at all.

The company was awarded its first contract for 16 family units in Ansonville, Ontario, in May, 1966. The total value of sales to Ontario Housing Corporation in that year amounted to $237,997. In the year ending August 31, 1969, the company sales to Ontario Housing Corporation amounted to $300,800-plus.

At present, the company is constructing or holds contracts or is completing contracts to construct a total of 1,412 family and senior citizen units in 25 municipalities in Ontario. The total value of these contracts amount to in excess of $18 million over an 18-month period. The company anticipates that it will complete $12 million of Ontario Housing Corporation contracts in the fiscal year ending August 31, 1970.

The provision of rent-geared-to-income housing is of critical importance to all levels of government and it is anticipated that the operations of Ontario Housing Corporation will continue on the present or an expanded scale for some years to come.

I read that from their prospectus.

I am going to centre mainly on one particular region in Ontario where this company is engaged in business and that is in the Thunder Bay area. The Headway Corporation controls, in Thunder Bay, almost all available land on which to build, plus about a five-mile circle outside Thunder Bay.

Now, I think this is highly dangerous for any community, the fact that this company has a virtual monopoly. In other words, the various tradesmen must deal, virtually they are going to end up dealing with one company whether they are supplying bricks or mortar—in fact I believe Headway even have an insurance company in Thunder Bay at the present time.

There have been extreme examples where the value of land has gone up to a fantastic amount. For any of us who are even slightly familiar with Thunder Bay, it is hard to believe that a house now costs more in Thunder Bay than in Winnipeg, Manitoba. The example has been used before and probably will be used many times again where in a city like Saskatoon, in which the city bought up the land, it was able to develop and service the property at about $3,500 a lot to sell to the public. Here in a place like Thunder Bay, you have one area on two particular streets where 15 years ago the land was selling for $100 to $200 a lot and it now sells for $6,000 to $8,000 a lot.

Now it is serviced land at that point, but certainly the servicing does not make up the difference—

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is not Headway's property you are talking about?

Mr. Trotter: Part of it, yes; this has happened in the whole general area!

In other words, my argument is that Headway has a throttlehold on land transactions in the Thunder Bay area and I am concerned this one single company is building in 25 other municipalities in Ontario so that the community, I would say, is going to be virtually beholden to one large company.

Now it may be, when you go into the background of this, it was inexcusable for previous councils to sell land, at $1,200 an acre in certain instances, to Headway. It is most regrettable that, even on the local level, this happens.

What I am concerned about, and where I feel that Ontario Housing Corporation should step in, is to see to it that no company is permitted to gain a monopoly or a virtual monopoly in any particular area in Ontario. And it should also question what kind of housing these particular firms are putting up and what it is doing to the environment. I have heard a tremendous number of objections on just what has happened in the Thunder Bay area.

I will go into problems, but not in too great detail because we will be discussing these policies throughout the estimates, but I do want to present to you what I think is a basic problem.

What happened in Thunder Bay represents a basic problem. What happens, for example, when you have row housing in an area like Thunder Bay? Now I realize there is good row housing in Metropolitan Toronto, in fact if you are buying personally you can buy a good row house for as much as $20,000 in Metropolitan Toronto, but I do not believe that row housing is what many people really want or need. If you are in an area such as the city of Toronto, row housing and these large apartments may be necessary, it depends on the area in which you are in. But it seems ridiculous to me that in an area such as Thunder Bay they use row housing when they could very easily use the single family unit.

The costs of building are just not that extreme. I realize the cost of land in some areas of Ontario—and I live in one of those areas in Metropolitan Toronto—poses an extreme problem. But what happened in Thunder Bay was not because it was so huge or because it was a great metropolitan centre, it was strictly because a large firm had gained control; and secondly, the Ontario government, because of its policies, because of always sitting back and taking a very easy attitude toward all this, let it happen.

Now if we look at Thunder Bay, I would say under the thumb of a full-blown monopoly held by a land company, we find that they are building row houses without providing the proper facilities for a proper living environment. I think the member for Ottawa West (Mr. Morrow) touched on this when he was concerned about building too many low-rental houses in one area.

There is no question that this is bad for any community. It is bad for the people who live in the low-rental units, simply because it creates a ghetto.

And this is what we are doing, Mr. Chairman, throughout Ontario, whether it be in the great cities like Metropolitan Toronto or elsewhere. We are creating ghettos, which is wrong; and in Thunder Bay, it need not have happened because there would be lots of land available if government policies in purchasing land and in holding land had proper guidelines, properly enforced.

The people in Thunder Bay were not only concerned, the people that I have talked to, about land costs. A lot of their information and source of concern comes through such agencies as the welfare department and the children's aid department. I know of a school principal deeply concerned about what is happening to children living in the row houses in one area in what was formerly known as Fort William, the LaSalle—I was going to call it a compound, but in the LaSalle subsidized area where there are over 300 children. They were not in there six months, in an area where they never before needed a psychiatrist, but they were calling one in.

Concern reached such an extent that in what was the old Port Arthur area when they went to construct row housing they said, "We do not want row housing!" But regardless of what the people in that area wanted, Ontario Housing Corporation proceeded without really making any inquiries—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are not blaming health problems on the housing corporation? They probably had problems long before they were given a good place to live.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): The OHC took away the land they used for recreation.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They had recreation room before they moved in there.

Mr. Trotter: They sold the recreation land, and I will go into that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They got in there; the psychiatrists were not called in because they went into good houses!

Mr. Trotter: I am blaming these problems on Ontario Housing Corporation.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We do not accept them.

Mr. Trotter: Well this is your problem; this is why you are so obtuse.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No it is not.

Mr. Trotter: You are not only dealing with a shelter problem in this province, you are dealing with a social problem; if you do not have proper housing you are going to have extreme social problems. I do not care if they are welfare, if they are subject to the administration of justice, if they are mental health problems or what they are, many of them can be credited with poor housing.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You find the same thing in Rosedale.

Mr. Trotter: Well let us face it, I live in a—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Those kind of comments stop people from letting public housing into their areas.

Mr. Trotter: I am again telling you that you need public housing, but it is a question of the quality of housing and how you do it; this is a point you completely miss.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, we have the best public housing.

Mr. Trotter: It is not enough, today, to build these huge high-rise filing cabinets and put people in them and say: "Look you have got a roof over your head and it does not leak". This is not the environment that we, as public servants, should create.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Have you seen some of our low-rise public housing?

Mr. Trotter: Yes, and you have done some good in some areas.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have done a lot of good.

Mr. Trotter: There is no question that you have done some good, but you are not doing nearly enough. We know perfectly well that we are not meeting the housing crisis here in Metropolitan Toronto, let alone in other areas.

What I am more concerned about, when I discuss the Thunder Bay situation, is what kind of community are you creating? How are you treating the tenants?

Well now the policy of the corporation of course, at least in the Thunder Bay area, the rent-geared-to-income policy was that the houses, the row houses built there, were available to anyone, in any income bracket, who was prepared to pay the rent.

Many of us might ask how a situation like this can really benefit a community that we know, first of all, has indicated a preference for private home ownership.

Now you might say, well private home ownership is too expensive, the land is too expensive. My argument to you is that in most areas in Ontario it should not be. It may be difficult in downtown Toronto or certain areas of Toronto, but it need not be.

Anyway, you see these people caught up in a situation where they really have to have row housing because Ontario Housing Corporation says they must.

But possibly the more serious aspect is that while many citizens are being forced into rented accommodation they did not want in the first place, they apparently no longer have any say in what type of housing will be available for rent. I think this is another extremely important issue that must be dealt with when we look at the policies in Ontario Housing Corporation.

What do the communities as a whole want? And also we must ask the people who are going to be in subsidized housing what they want! What opportunity do they have to take part in planning the community?

Hon. Mr. Randall: You recognize that when we go into a municipality with a housing project we only go in after the municipality and the council have decided they want public housing and have made a survey; and indeed they have passed a resolution and they pass on and give approval to the plans for public houses before those houses are built. They look at the density problems, they make all those decisions before we build a house.

Mr. Trotter: Well if the Ontario Housing Corporation is just going to sit back and no matter what a council says, cram people in like sardines—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You mean we should overrule the local council and tell them we are going to run the show all by ourselves?

Mr. Trotter: Well you know when you look at Bramalea and you remember that some of the people that were on that council also sold the insurance and worked for the insurance companies, I think it is always wise to ask who you are doing business with.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes but—

Mr. Trotter: All right. What they did in Bramalea, sure it was within the law, but when you see who is on that council and guess what happens—

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is very good housing!

Mr. Trotter: We question that. We question the whole environment that you are putting up.

But I think for those of us who have attempted to look at the housing problems in Thunder Bay, the experience has led a lot of us to look closely at rent-geared-to-income housing, being built in this case by Headway, but more particularly throughout Ontario by Ontario Housing Corporation.

Now the policy of the corporation, by that I mean the Ontario Housing Corporation, was to set up housing authorities, Fort William had a housing authority, Port Arthur had one. They were really boards, because the authorities had little or no authority, they were volunteer organizations. And one, the one in Port Arthur, in particular, just about everybody had resigned except the chairman and one other man, who said he would resign as soon as they could get a replacement. I think they are still waiting for clarification since amalgamation, but really nothing has been done in that regard.

I think the so-called housing authorities that were set up in that area by Ontario Housing Corporation were more or less watchdogs on the manager of your housing project, to see that he collected rents and paid the bills. They operated from what was formerly Fort William and from what was formerly Port Arthur, and I really feel that authorities is a misnomer, because in fact they have little or no authority. Of course I suppose any group in these authorities have their differences of opinion, but the fact is that the authorities, even before amalgamation came through in the Thunder Bay area, seemed to completely fall apart, particularly the one in Port Arthur. And this was just on disagreements with the policy that Ontario Housing Corporation—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do you realize that your friends just behind you to your left in the House do not agree with you. They say the housing authorities have too much power and that the power should be taken away from them and given back to the housing corporation, so there is a different viewpoint, I guess between your two parties, is there?

Mr. Trotter: Well I will let the NDP's speak for themselves.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Well we certainly appreciate that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I just wanted to question a mis-statement here!

Mr. Trotter: What I want to emphasize is that the authorities do give an opportunity for a local community to take part in the decisions that are being made, just as I would encourage that a tenants' association should be formed in order to come to some understanding among the tenants that they do not feel that they are just pawns in the game, sitting in and dealing with the absentee landlord. Let us remember many people do regard Ontario Housing Corporation as the absentee landlord, particularly in those areas outside of Toronto.

Now I know there have been attempts—this is where I give as an example what went on in Thunder Bay, particularly in the LaSalle development, where I think the manager is a Mr. Higgins—an attempt was made in that area to find out if the tenants would want an association or what help they might require. I will not at this moment go into a long list of the complaints the tenants had against the management. The people who did the investigating and the inquiring into this matter found that a number of tenants who had legitimate complaints were afraid to complain, simply because they were the tenants and they were afraid of the objections of the landlord. Perhaps if we get into the tenant relations with the Ontario Housing Corporation I will deal with that in more detail.

But when tenants were being chosen for, let us say, LaSalle Place in Fort William in the Thunder Bay area—we still have occasion to look at Thunder Bay as either what was Fort William or Port Arthur because in my mind's eye I can place the areas better in that way, that is why I use the term.

This is a relatively new project. It has been up now approximately two years. It shows what some of the recent policies of Ontario housing were, certainly in that area. They found, a citizens' committee that looked into this, that definite discrimination was practised when tenants were chosen to go into LaSalle Place.

Hon. Mr. Randall: There was a representative of the mayor on the board, a representative was put on the board by Central Mortgage and Housing and one by the Ontario Housing Corporation. Do you think those people were discriminatory?

Mr. Trotter: Are you asking about those on the housing authorities?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Trotter: Well I do know that there were representatives of certain agencies, no matter who they were appointed by; I do not know which individuals were appointed by whom, to tell you the honest truth.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well I am telling you. The mayor appoints one, central mortgage appoints another, and—

Mr. Trotter: I know they are appointed that way, but I do not know which individual was appointed by whom or whom they spoke for. I do know this, there is general dissatisfaction.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well it was not a partisan appointment as far as we are concerned. There were three people appointed and they make the decisions on who the tenants will—

Mr. Trotter: This then would make my arguments that much stronger, if it was not partisan; I am still not sure. I know the party politics of one person and some things about one of the others, but it would emphasize my point even more strongly because they seem to be in agreement on what was wrong. They said only 20 per cent of these houses, that is of the row houses, can be rented to welfare and mother's allowance recipients. That, I think, has been the policy, in the past. Am I correct in that?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Around 20 to 25 per cent.

Mr. Trotter: Twenty to 25 per cent! And the discrimination evident in the ruling is carried further to include single parents with children as part of this minority. In other words they felt that it was not necessary for the parent to be on welfare, but if they were in the single parent category they included that as part of the 20 per cent allotted as well.

For example, a young widow or an abandoned mother with several small children may be unable to rent one of these units simply because she has no husband. Stated another way, this means that no rent-geared-to-income or low-rental housing is available to 80 per cent of the very people they were designed to benefit.

There is no ceiling on how much you can be earning in order to rent one of these units. This is what has been the policy, and what has surprised a number of people. This is so obviously wrong that recently new row housing has been built in this area, under Ontario Housing Corporation's rent-geared-to-income plan—that is in LaSalle Place, this area to which I will refer later—which is sufficiently cheap, ugly and inconvenient that no one would live there unless forced to do so by circumstances. Therefore the Ontario Housing Corporation has relaxed its 20 per cent ruling in this area creating a ghetto of single parent and welfare families and leaving this other and more lucrative project still inhabited largely by people who could have afforded unsubsidized housing.

In the rent-geared-to-income units, according to the housing authorities that I was able to contact in the Port Arthur area, welfare cases and mother's allowance recipients are not only classed in the 20 per cent group but have a separate rental scale. And this scale uses the basic maximum of $85 per month plus $5 for the first two children and $5 for each additional child.

This means that the local welfare is also being penalized by having to pay higher rent on behalf of our poor and thus will have less funds available to distribute for food and clothing.

Here is an example: A person who is looking into this, Mr. Chairman, found that a single parent with six small children was receiving a monthly welfare cheque of $160, plus rent. She should have been paying rent of $85, plus $25, making a total of $110 per month. In fact, she was paying even more than this scale indicates, because her rent was $115. This was reported to the housing manager and after a squabble it was finally settled. I believe it is adjusted by now. But the thing is, this would not have happened if there had been the proper organization.

Hon. Mr. Randall: How long ago was that, do you know?

Mr. Trotter: They settled that, at least they were in the process of settling it, about the early part of March. One instance of the lack of co-operation in dealing with Ontario Housing Corporation managers was the refusal to give a copy of the rent scales. We were puzzled—that is the note I have here—by the following figures that came from tenants as reported on their survey sheets. This is, again, taken from the LaSalle area.

This would seem to indicate, among other things, that in this area at least welfare recipients are paying a flat rate of $105.

I am not going to go into the 21 rentals that I have here to various tenants, but there is one thing that did surprise me. I know the system is under review and has recently been changed, but here is an individual, a man who is married with five children—there were seven in the family. His total income was $300 per month. His rent was $142, and to me this seems out of the way. It may be correct to your scale; I rather doubt it. There is certainly—

Hon. Mr. Randall: But if he is on geared-to-income he would not be paying $142.

Mr. Trotter: Well that is what they have him down for. Would that be right? But that is what he is paying.

Mrs. B. Meredith (Ontario Housing Corporation): We would like to look up the individual cases.

Mr. Trotter: I have 21 cases here. Some of them are correct. Some of them seem to be way out.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You let us have it; we will check into it and I can show you—

Mr. Trotter: This is what goes on and this deals with tenant relations. It all ties in. I seem for the moment to have wandered away from the Headway corporation, but I want to tie these ends together to illustrate my point.

I am trying to show the type of housing we get. This also affects your tenant relations, and this is an example. Again I can verify very thoroughly that tenants in the Thunder Bay area who are in Ontario Housing Corporation housing units—and this particularly deals with LaSalle Place—cannot have a relative live with them. This means—and I think this is general, I found this in Toronto as well—that widows and abandoned wives with children can never get back to work because they cannot afford to have babysitters and cannot have a mother or sister or someone like that live with them. Is the Ontario Housing Corporation trying to keep these women in their homes? This is the question I am asked—

Mr. Snow: Where do you get this information?

Mr. Trotter: A group of people got together in Port Arthur and—

Mr. Snow: You are saying things that are not right at all.

Mr. Trotter: Yes I am. It has been checked out.

Mr. Snow: No relatives living with them!

Mr. Trotter: Absolutely correct; and there are cases—and I will be fair with Ontario Housing Corporation—where this could be justified. I want to give you examples where it is not.

I know a place up on Davenport where they have relaxed a bit, but they even had a curfew. So that it does vary in some places according to the local manager.

But I think that basically, Ontario Housing Corporation is responsible for the relationships with the tenants. What I am concerned with—and I think we must emphasize this again and again—is that we are creating, in many respects, ghettos. We live in a free enterprise economy where we believe in the freedom of choice; and there is very little freedom of choice. What does a woman do when she has kids and no place to go? You would be glad to get Ontario housing. I phone up and I am glad to get these people in because they have no place to go. But simply because they are in a weak bargaining position we must be very careful we do not turn a good part of our community into mere pawns. They are entitled to equal opportunity but I do not feel that they are getting that.

I mentioned that they are not allowed to have relatives to live with them. In other words, if a younger woman could go to work, she cannot have her mother stay and look after the kids.

Mr. Snow: That is not true.

Mr. Trotter: Well, I know a place that does—

Mr. Snow: Not true at all, not true.

Mr. Trotter: Well, I know the minister is not that anxious to deny that.

Mr. Snow: He will have his say.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I said that a little while ago, I just like to keep on talking.

Mr. Trotter: Well, all right!

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think we announced in the House the other day that there was to be a new rent scale. The federal authorities came out with an announcement the other day by Mr. Andras. Now the income can be increased by $900 for a working mother so that she can have more income without being penalized.

Mr. Trotter: Yes, the working mother can earn what, up to $900 now without being penalized? It used to be $250.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): $250 now!

An hon. member: $900 now!

Mr. Trotter: It was $250 but it is going to $900.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Trotter: All right, the working mother—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am not complaining. I said we have been after this for a year and we finally got it. We are putting it into effect as soon as we can.

Mr. Trotter: The working mother can now earn up to $900. My concern at this point is that, assume the woman has been deserted and it is not a question of her working, it is a question that she wanted to bring her own mother in to live with her to look after the children and then maybe go to work. Some managers certainly will not allow the mother to come and live in. Whether this is the case in every building that is put up, I do not know. I know some in Toronto where this is the case.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Trotter: I am not saying that the mother now cannot go out and work assuming you pass new regulations. I am talking about the deserted wife. And this is important because there are so many widowed and abandoned wives. I think we could bear this in mind and this is the policy now. I am thinking specifically of LaSalle Place in Fort William. The widowed and abandoned wife who would like to get into the rent-geared-to-income housing is often unable to do so because, as part of the 20 per cent that suffer discrimination, there are few houses available to her. It would appear that in some cases at least she also suffers because her rent is being raised above the normal amount tenants have to pay, apparently in order to ensure that she remains excluded. That is why I have this list of 21 and I want to have you look into it. This will be all for the better.

Tenants have to notify their managers and ask permission to have a relative or friend come and visit for a few days. This includes their parents and children who are not dependent on them. Notice the report received, which I will give to you here, from a girl who had just returned from hospital.

Under the Ontario Housing Corporation rules these Canadian citizens are without their freedom. I think that is quite direct. How would we like it if those of us who live in apartments under the normal free enterprise system, had to call the superintendent before having people come to visit us for a couple of days? I am sure we do not call the superintendent!

Hon. Mr. Randall: I just want to stop you for a moment. Are you aware of how many freeloaders move in on these people once they get on welfare and get free housing?

Mr. Trotter: No, I am not.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You should talk to some of our social workers and find out what happens in public housing—how many freeloaders move in to take advantage of your dollars and somebody else's dollars. If we do not have some kind of a check you will get a good many more who will take advantage of welfare dollars to live off these people.

Mr. Trotter: You are making an iron rule for—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, we are not making an iron rule.

Mr. Trotter: —for everyone. It is quite true we hear so often today of people who are living off welfare and drinking beer and finding fault, but I think if you—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I did not say that. Let us clear this up. I did not say that. I said that the people on welfare have a lot of freeloaders move in with them and that is why they are policed.

Mr. Trotter: I think The Department of Social and Family Services will tell you that about two per cent of the people on welfare are freeloaders.

I once made a speech—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am not talking about people on welfare. I am talking about the people that move in and take advantage—the freeloaders.

Mr. Trotter: They are almost on the same line.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No they are not. I know a lot of single guys who drive cars and they find a girl up in a development apartment and they move in for the weekend. The car is parked out on the street. Somebody says, "Who owns the car?" She says, "Well, it is the boyfriend." "Well what does he contribute to the family?" "Well, he is only here over the weekend. He is gone the first of the week."

Now we have to protect these people. There are a lot of people who need protecting, as I am telling you.

Mr. Trotter: Maybe the tenant wanted the fellow there for the weekend.

An hon. member: Call the cops.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You try and call the cops. Try and find the cops.

Mr. Trotter: Well, I do not know, you sound awfully like George Orwell's Big Brother in 1984.

This is another thing pointing to the type of housing they get. This is the new row housing in Thunder Bay. The new row housing is all jammed together, with no decent space left for a garden or children to play in, in spite of the fact that neither lack of space nor cost of land were any problem. This is what I want to underline. Here in this particular area, in Thunder Bay, to begin with they had lots of space and there was property that even the city could sell. Headway's cost was $1,200 an acre. And yet here they are with little or no recreation area. The single unit dwellings and duplexes that do have back yards are sodded.

Mr. Nixon: Did you say the OHC actually sold some of that land?

Mr. Trotter: No, the city did.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do not help him, he is doing all right.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Parkdale has the floor.

Mr. Trotter: But Ontario Housing has really been a good bankroll here. The single dwelling units and duplexes that have backyards have been sodded. A low-income family with quite a few children could well profit from a vegetable garden and many express a desire for this, but they were not permitted to dig up the backyard. Now when I say that, we do not intend that the people just dig up the backyard for the sake of digging it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You could convince an old friend!

Mr. Trotter: But suppose they did want to have a garden. This is just not allowed. I know of instances where, in Metropolitan Toronto, some of the sod for these units has been supplied to the individuals, and by and large what I have heard of it, they have done a good job in keeping up the place. My own belief is that, despite the extreme cases that you get in public housing—and I as a politician hear about them—you get a good type of person. This is the vast majority of them, and I am concerned with the vast majority.

At LaSalle Place in Thunder Bay south a real ghetto has been created because of the row housing. The regulations are bureaucratic. For example, guests must leave by 11 p.m. Sounds like the air force! There is no bus service on Sundays and since this is an out-of-the-way area, parents and children cannot attend church. There are no stores close by. There are no laundry facilities. Headway owns the land right up to the buildings. No space has been reserved for recreation, and there is a high density of children living there. There are about 350 children.

This is the type of thing that the government must watch. You have got a company here which owns the land, that is, they wish to supply the facilities and they could have, but they have not done so. There are no stores. There are no churches. Most of these people do not have cars and there is no bus service on Sunday so that you have created a ghetto.

I was surprised to learn that there were not even any laundry facilities on the project.

Hon. Mr. Randall: How do you build these houses on Main Street—if you cannot find a place to build them on?

Mr. Trotter: You can easily create a community today—particularly where your land is relatively cheap. There are many smaller-sized apartments with a tuck shop in them; they have laundry facilities; they are near churches.

In Thunder Bay there are plenty of opportunities for development in that area.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are aware that until two weeks ago the federal government would not spend one dime on recreational facilities or commercial facilities in the development until Mr. Andras—

Mr. Trotter: So what!

Hon. Mr. Randall: —taking out recommendations, changed the regulations and we can now allot a certain amount of space on a federal-provincial partnership for these things you talk about.

Mr. Trotter: So what?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do not say, "So what", I am answering you.

Mr. Trotter: Look, you have your responsibilities!

Hon. Mr. Randall: We realize them.

Mr. Trotter: I am well aware that the federal government spends a subsidy of over $5 per person on railway subsidies and 65 cents on housing. I do not think that that is enough, and I am not here to make excuses for them, but what I am saying is that it is your responsibility. In fact, we talk so often about our constitution and how important it is that Ontario keep its rights. This is your constitutional responsibility. You cannot have it two ways, and this is what you are trying to do.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You mean if we could afford the 90 per cent and they will not give it to us when we put a commercial establishment or a community centre in, we should just go ahead and do it anyway.

Mr. Trotter: I think it is a mere pittance, what this wealthy province has put into housing.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh yeah!

Mr. Trotter: After all, no matter what the faults of the federal government are, you would have had hardly any housing if it had not been for the federal government.

Hon. Mr. Randall: What do you mean? You would have not had any housing if it had not been for us. All they ever did was assist in the banking.

Mr. Trotter: Even these huge plans you are always announcing, 90 per cent of it is the federal tab.

Hon. Mr. Randall: And they get it back with interest just like the Bank of Commerce.

Mr. Singer: The one in your own riding was announced on the eve of the last election.

Hon. Mr. Randall: And they get it back with interest just like the Bank of Commerce.

Mr. Trotter: Yes, it may well be.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The one in my own riding, for your information, my friend, was fully paid for by the province of Ontario.

Mr. Trotter: It is up to you to see that we get—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Because the federal government would not go along. We went without them when they would not give us an answer.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Parkdale has the floor.

Mr. Trotter: I may point out that it was found in investigation of what went up at LaSalle Place that the building has been so poorly built and many tenants complain about the noise.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It was built to NHA standards.

Mr. Trotter: Well, you may say there are lots of kids—

Hon. Mr. Randall: It was built to NHA standards.

Mr. Trotter: Well, your standards evidently are just not good enough or your inspectors did not see it, but it makes these units most unsatisfactory. But the main thing wrong with this is that psychologically it is bad for the children—and this is where you are falling down, on the quality of living that we should be able to give the people in this province.

I had mentioned that some of the land had been sold. In fact I think it was in this very area in LaSalle. When this study was made of the LaSalle area we found that the land was sold by the city for $1,200 to $1,300 an acre. This is why I am amazed that no proper recreation facilities were made available, because certainly you cannot complain about the cost of land there.

Now when the LaSalle project seemed to have so many problems and they knew that a psychiatrist had been called in to help the children within six months of it being set up, the people in Port Arthur who were going to get a public housing project were deeply concerned. They protested and they wrote letters saying that they did not want row housing.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me just stop you for a minute. Are you saying that they moved in and in six months all these problems had developed and we had to call in the psychiatrist?

Mr. Trotter: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They did not have a problem before that?

Mr. Trotter: Heaven knows what problems they had before, except you concentrated it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We brought them together so we could help them.

Mr. Trotter: Well you certainly did nothing to help solve their problems.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You cannot do it in six months.

Mr. Trotter: In fact, this is why there were so many resignations from the Port Arthur Housing Authority. They protested row housing and then the Ontario Housing Corporation people came down to discuss the matter with them. I am informed that a Mr. Pullen of Ontario Housing Corporation arrived in Port Arthur, or was in Port Arthur with all his plans, and the people in Port Arthur found that it was a foregone conclusion that row housing was going in regardless of what thoughts the people in Port Arthur might have and even the people appointed by Ontario Housing Corporation might have; they were completely disregarded. As someone in public life, I may ask why were the people in Port Arthur not listened to, whether they were on the authority or not? For in spite of their efforts to prevent row housing in Port Arthur, the Ontario Housing Corporation arranged with—and there it is again—Headway Corporation, to commence construction of this type of housing in the John Street area of Port Arthur.

Already among prospective tenants, I think, there was some reluctance to go there; but there was no question but that it would be occupied easily, simply because—at least in my mind it would be easily occupied—the demand for housing is tremendous. But again, I think the system that they have created there is going to be creating a ghetto.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, from the information I have, that there has been a general feeling expressed by citizens who have voluntarily served on the Port Arthur Housing Authority of frustration and outrage. And I do not wonder, because they have been completely disregarded in any of the ideas they had to suggest, and they were deeply concerned because the rent-geared-to-income units in Port Arthur have now been increased by 100 per cent, and the entire 100 per cent increase has been in the row housing. All the same kind; all jammed into a ghetto the same as LaSalle.

Now the accelerating pace of rental units to absentee landlords—namely, Ontario Housing Corporation—makes all of us, I think, deeply concerned for the social implications that rental housing can have. And I wonder if we are creating the gigantic slums of tomorrow that some other government is going to have to solve, because this Ontario Housing Corporation has a bureaucratic attitude of forcing citizens into the type of housing that is very unsuitable. I can only emphasize that these people are caught within a vise, with a large corporation like Headway Corporation, on the one hand, in essence controlling available land and certainly having the ear of Ontario Housing Corporation; and on the other hand the Ontario Housing Corporation which is listening to the large landowner, not to the tenant or the people who are interested in upholding the tenants' cause.

Hon. Mr. Randall: How can we listen to him until he becomes a tenant? By that time he is already in the house that is built.

Mr. Trotter: Well these housing authorities had gone about first to see what had happened at LaSalle in Fort William. They went around and talked to the tenants—I can give you a list of what they said—and then they realized what was wrong with LaSalle Place in the old Fort William area. So they said, "Please do not put up row housing in Port Arthur." But they were completely disregarded. And it is not only not listening to the tenants, neither is it listening to the children's aid, the welfare and, as I mentioned before, the school principal who would like to tell you what it does to an area. Again I emphasize, we need in this province, and in this country, subsidized housing, but also the quality of housing; what you do, how you are going to treat the people who are in the houses is important. And this is the thing that the minister is not facing up to at all, because these complaints are general. It is not just the very few that cause a lot of trouble, but it is the vast majority I am concerned with.

If you are going to stick to row housing and the type of housing that they have put up in Thunder Bay, you are going to have nothing but monotonous, unimaginative houses and housing at an inflated price. If they are only going to be built by one company, what is the competition? In fact, how can any company, without sufficient capital and almost as big as Headway, move in to compete with Headway? This one company has simply become too large.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to dwell any more at the moment on the Thunder Bay situation. I seized upon it, more or less as an example of what I think is going on in Metropolitan Toronto; I think it is going on in many communities in Ontario, and I knew that this one in Thunder Bay had been well researched by people who had a great deal of experience in this. I accept what they have found because it answers so many things that I have found in the Toronto area and from other complaints in other areas.

It is most regrettable, Mr. Chairman, that we never did follow through on one suggestion made by the former minister, Mr. Macaulay. He came up with the idea of using rent certificates and having people spread out in the community so that the general populace did not know if they were in a rental housing home or not.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are aware what happened, are you not?

Mr. Trotter: Oh, I know; you blame the federal government.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I do not blame the federal government; I blame the landlord. Once the lease ran out, the landlord found he had a sugar daddy, he doubled the rent. The only way you could protect yourself was to buy the individual unit at the price he wanted to sell at.

Mr. Trotter: Well the Ontario Housing Corporation might know how the average person feels now when he is arbitrarily told by the landlord that their rent is going up $25 a month. This has been going on all over the province. Unfortunately, government has just sat and let it happen.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The federal government, you mean.

Mr. Trotter: You are sitting and letting it happen; it is your responsibility.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We are the only ones who are making a contribution to low-income people and modest-income people in the province today.

Mr. Trotter: The only ones?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, we are the only ones.

Mr. Trotter: Well, let us face it, this is your responsibility.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We accept the responsibility.

Mr. Trotter: And you are not matching up to the demands?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We are accepting it; we are doing it.

Mr. Trotter: Well, what do you mean when we read these headlines so recently about housing being down 90 per cent in Toronto and down 70 per cent in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Are you blaming that on the province, when the private landlords and the private builder cannot get mortgage money? Do you blame all that on the province? We are the only ones who are building houses under these conditions.

Mr. Trotter: Why you sit back and you say you could not carry out the rent certificate programme simply because the landlord doubled the rent on you.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right.

Mr. Trotter: You just sit there like a bump on a log and say, the landlord is doing this and then we throw the whole system on them—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, you sit there like a bump on a log and make a lot of asinine statements.

Mr. Trotter: I am pretty sure you are pretty dead on it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They are asinine statements.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): You should not make statements like that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Sit down and shut up.

Mr. Bullbrook: I will not sit down and shut up.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Sit down and shut up.

Mr. Bullbrook: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, rise on a point of order.

Mr. Bullbrook: Why do you permit that man to make statements like that?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Because I am the man who is—

Mr. Bullbrook: You are the Chairman here and he invites—you see, I sat in here last week—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Good for you.

Mr. Bullbrook: I rise on this point of order, and say the abuse of our legislative process by this minister—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh, cut it out!

Mr. Bullbrook: —by that minister and the way he acts, surely, you as a Chairman of this committee can tell him how to act and not use phrases like that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We do not need that legal advice from you.

Mr. Chairman: I must say, that in here last week, all the time, there were quite a few insults coming from your party, too.

Mr. Bullbrook: I am not arguing about that. I am not talking about that. I am suggesting that as a minister of the Crown he should conduct himself in a way that does not invite that type of response.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Then why do you not do the same thing yourself?

Mr. Bullbrook: I do not talk that way. You see, I do not talk that way; that is the difference between you and me.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You think you do not.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, we have been throwing facts at this minister. I think the facts that I have thrown at him are indisputable. We are deeply concerned in the Liberal Party, and I think the populace as a whole are deeply concerned, with what is happening with our housing programme.

As I mentioned the other evening, I am concerned with what has happened at Bramalea. I think what has happened in Thunder Bay is another example.

You only have to read the front page of the Globe and Mail last Saturday. A reporter went into some detail of the costs of housing in the Glen Chapel area where we as a government seem to sit back helplessly and do very little, really, to solve a major housing programme or a major housing need.

In conclusion, I want to emphasize that the government simply must assemble land itself; you cannot leave this up to Headway Corporation to us its own profit motive schemes. I admit they are in business to make money, I know Mr. Armstrong and Mr. Taylor, the gold-dust twins of Bramalea, make no bones about it, and that is their business. But it is your business, it is the business of this province, to see to it that people are supplied with decent housing at a price they can pay. Surely it can be done?

The cost of land is not the whole answer, but certainly if government would assemble land on its own, it could pick up this property in Thunder Bay at $1,200 an acre just as easily as Headway could. This is the thing that shocks and startles me; that a private company can do a thing like this, or that Bramalea can make nearly $52,000 an acre profit.

This just is not right and, really, they are doing it with the blessing and really with the help of Ontario Housing Corporation. You are not living up to what you are supposed to be doing.

In the estimates, as these continue, we will go into greater detail of where there are many errors, or sins of commission and omission, on the part of this government.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We will be delighted to hear from you.

Mr. Trotter: And you most certainly will.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We hope you will accept the facts when they are presented to you.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I do not want to talk about the general operation as such. I want to zero in on one particular problem in the Ontario Housing Corporation.

Just prior to the 1967 general election, in fact on the eve of the 1967 general election, the Minister of Trade and Development announced the grandiose plan of the housing development for the Saltfleet mountain. At that time it was called the "Satellite City". We seem to have dumped that phrase and we are now calling it a community development.

At that time I pressed him, and from the time I was elected, until recently, I pressed the minister continuously to find out what was paid for the land that was purchased particularly, because I felt that the number of companies that had been involved in the development prior to the Ontario Housing Corporation finally purchasing it would lead me to believe that the price had become grossly inflated over the two or three years from the time that Kronas Real Estate first started assembling the land until it passed through the hands of some company called John Anco, which I am not familiar with, and then subsequently into the hands of the Ontario Housing Corporation.

Anyhow, recently, within the last six or seven weeks, the Saltfleet community development plan was made public. I must confess that I am very disturbed by one feature of it and I raised it in the House today. I want to find out from the minister what kind of logic it is that does not see far enough into the future to recognize the difficulties that are going to be encountered by the people who are going to live in that community if the quarries that presently are in existence and are likely to be in existence, as I understand, for about 20 years, are permitted to be maintained.

The minister indicated today in the House that there was going to be some kind of greenbelt established between the residences and the quarrying operations. The plans as I see them—and I have them in front of me—do not indicate anything of the sort. In fact, they indicate that the very first phase of the development, that phase that is under the control directly of Ontario Housing Corporation, which has, I do not know, 1,000 acres or more, is going to be directly across the street from the existing quarrying operation and well within the distance necessary, whether you plant a few trees or not, to make the quarry, including the blasting and the dust, a nuisance and a hazard to the people who are going to live there.

If you have it in front of you—and I do not know if you do—but if you happen to have the development with you, you would recognize on plate 23 that it shows quite clearly that there are going to be single-family and perhaps joined, multiple-family dwellings on two sides of the triangle surrounding this quarry. There is also going to be a high school within 200 or 300 feet of the permissible quarrying area. It just does not make any sense at this point, as far as I am concerned. I am inclined to feel that Ontario Housing, before buying it, should have recognized that if this quarry is going to be maintained and continued in operation for the next approximately 20 years—they tell me that is how long it will last, I do not know—then it does not want to be faced with nothing but heartache for that length of time. It would be cheaper now to try to phase out the operation and eliminate it from productivity, than to sit from now until the year 2000 perhaps, with people having purchased homes and being subjected to what is really an obnoxious industry right in the centre.

The quarry is owned by Cope Construction and the city of Hamilton has had its belly full of Cope before. Cope owned a piping operation on Lawrence Road in the city of Hamilton, and the city for years has been battling with them to try to get it moved. I can just imagine what is going to happen when there are 80,000 people living in this planned community with Cope still carrying on their operation as a quarry and carrying on their operation as a pipe-making concern—and that is what they are now doing—right smack dab in the centre of the community.

I cannot for the life of me understand how the Ontario Housing Corporation could plan to develop this kind of a plan with, as I say, an obnoxious type of industry in the middle. It is stated quite clearly that the community was supposed to be a residential community, that there was not going to be any industrial development in the area, that the employment opportunities would be located in the city of Hamilton and in the Saltfleet region below the escarpment area that is an industrial park.

Anyone who has looked ahead would recognize the problems we are going to face, and they are going to be fantastic. We are going to be faced with this on a day-to-day basis. Whether or not I am still here when that happens is really immaterial, but I dread the thought of being the person who has to represent the people who are going to be faced with this quarrying operation about 300 feet away from the doorstep. And under the present legislation that is what will be permitted.

It just makes no sense, and I hope that during the course of the minister's answer he can assure me that steps are being taken to eliminate this entirely. Not as it is phased out by the company involved, but that it will be phased out on a planned basis prior to the residential development actually taking place.

Now the other problem that arises from the development of an 80,000 population community is that the township of Saltfleet has over the last three or four years been able to bring about some kind of balance between their residential and industrial assessments. They have been able, in the last two or three years, to bring into proper balance the moneys that can be raised from industrial assessment vis-à-vis the moneys that are raised from residential assessment. It appears to me that by placing this community there without giving any consideration for providing moneys to Saltfleet township to further encourage development in their industrial park can only prove to be a pitfall or will bring about the downfall of Saltfleet township's financial viability.

Now what Saltfleet really needs in this instance is a commitment—they may not have asked for it but in my view they need a commitment—a commitment from Ontario housing, actually from the Ontario Development Corporation or perhaps from The Department of Municipal Affairs, but from the government at least that there will be moneys made available to them in order that they can develop the industrial park in a way that will maintain the balance that they have sought for so long and finally achieved. If you permit 80,000 people to suddenly arrive in the middle of the township it is quite obvious that they are just not going to be able to cope financially with the problems that will be brought about by that kind of development.

And you are also putting a tremendous burden on the industrial development in the city of Hamilton, because not only is this development taking place in Hamilton but on Hamilton Mountain there is development that will also provide for some 80,000 or 100,000 additional persons over the next 20 years. Industry in Hamilton is having a tough enough time, at least at this particular juncture, to provide employment for people; we have to be very sure that we do not overburden the area.

Now I am not opposed to the development, I want to make that quite clear; but what I do want to see is that the development be considered in its entirety and not be sort of compartmentalized; that we talk about providing housing on the one hand without giving consideration for the difficulties that this township is going to face in making sure that it can afford to provide all of the necessary services for the other people in the township, and that its money is not going to be drained to meet commitments to the new people in this setting.

I do not want, you know, to sort of go on and on indefinitely in this. I would still like to know from the minister the cost of purchasing the 1,600 acres that have been purchased by Ontario Housing Corporation for this development. I think at this point there can be no harm come from it, and I suggest that it would be useful to get an idea in terms of what it is going to cost for the future development of the entire section. I would like to know whether there is any programme of phasing out this quarrying operation. It makes little sense to me. No one would plan a city and plan it around a quarry, you know; no one that I have ever heard of would plan a city around a quarry that is in operation and likely to be in operation for 20 years. Third, what plans are underway, in terms of the government as a whole, to make sure that this operation and the development of this area does not overburden the residential taxpayers of the community as a whole, that there will be moneys available for the township council to encourage the industrial development that will be necessary to provide employment for these people.

And finally, what in heaven's name commitment has been made in regard to the freeways that are presently shown on the development maps and that are in actual fact, in my view and from speaking to counsellors and speaking to municipal officials in Hamilton, that are not really even in the planning stage as yet? Just to indicate what I mean by that, No. 53 freeway, for example, in the city of Hamilton which we were counting on, to some extent, to provide the east-west major route, the city of Hamilton at the present time is not contemplating it. The Department of Highways indicated to me less than a year ago that they had no say in it at all and that they were not in any way really seriously considering its development, that it was a long term project likely to take place sometime in the obscure future. And yet it shows here; and it even shows the projected traffic pattern and how it is intended the people will be moved from this section, without any real firm commitment as to whether or not it will ever take place. These things are quite worrying, because I can imagine, once two of the stages of this development have taken place, the Highway 20 and Monk Street to Albion Falls, down the Albion Road will become so clogged with traffic that the cost of relieving it will have to be borne at least partly by the town of Stoney Creek and partly by the city of Hamilton; and perhaps even partly by the township itself.

The plan, though, it is very fine in its concept, the overall programme that is laid out looks very nice. But there are so many problems that can be seen when you view it that it becomes almost unbelievable that you could even begin it in 1970 as is proposed.

The first stage is supposed to be underway in 1970. I cannot see, having studied it fairly thoroughly, how it would be possible to even contemplate this being underway within the next two years. There is so much red tape and so much planning and zoning, and permission has to be granted in so many areas, that I do not see how it is going to take place within two years.

Yet it was stated, and the deputy minister was at the meeting, that it was proposed to start within this current year. I do not see it happening.

There was another matter raised, and I think—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I just want to assure you that every piece of land we have ever bought we have run into the same problems; you are not presenting any different problems. No matter where you buy a piece of land you are going to run into all the objections as to why you cannot go ahead. If you listen to the objections you would never buy a piece of land.

My friend here on the right just thought we should be out buying land, but no matter where we go to buy land, I do not care where it is, we get a thousand reasons why we cannot proceed and why we should not buy it in that particular area. There is nothing new, I do not think, in the housing field. No matter where you go to build houses today, for modest-income people, there are a million reasons why you cannot get underway.

Mr. Deans: This may well be true. I hope that the minister does not consider the objections I am raising as good ones—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am just suggesting that not only in Saltfleet but in Malvern, you name it, anywhere else, you get the same problem.

Mr. Deans: Well I just want to raise one small matter. A matter that was expressed very clearly at the meeting that I attended was a very definite concern over the movement of cemeteries in the area. I raised it with the minister prior to the meeting and the indication at that time by the conversation we had was that they were going to be moved. It appears now that there is another view being put forward. I did not enter into the discussion at the meeting because of the discussion that we had had previously. I did not want to make it appear that I was trying to say that the minister says something different, but I would like it cleared up. Exactly what is the intention with regard to these particular properties?

I would like to stop there to get some answers and perhaps pursue it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: All right; perhaps Mr. Goyette will take care of your questions. I have a call here, I will be back in a second. He will answer for you.

Mr. P. R. Goyette (Ontario Housing Corporation): Fine, Mr. Chairman. I know the member is very well informed on the Saltfleet plan and so I do not know if it is useful to go into too much detail, but you could stop me if you do not think I am going far enough.

Certainly we are part of the 3,000 acres, we own 1,600 acres; but the quarry is not part of our holdings. There is no doubt in our minds that the quarry does not help us in this kind of development and we will do all we can to alleviate the problem it creates.

It is my personal opinion that the presence of the Ontario Housing Corporation in that area will probably improve the situation with regard to any difficulty which the quarry may bring up. Otherwise it might have gone on on a piecemeal basis making this a rather difficult area.

Now what will happen to that quarry in 20 years, not too many of us in this room will really ever know. At the moment, we are not purchasing it because the cost of that quarry, which is a business enterprise, I am sure would probably put the land cost beyond our capacity.

Several things might happen. It might well be that the extension of the quarry might not continue, if, indeed, the present owners feel that the value of that land may be more as residential land with a high density population rather than as a quarrying operation.

I think this is something we will have to get to as we move along. The quarry is outside our land. To the extent that we have influence on the official plan, you have properly said that we have done what we could to create some buffer zones, and we think that will be more of a zone than there otherwise would have been. We are giving up some open space around that area.

Another point I think you made was the question of the location of that quarry in terms of the first area of our development. The first part of the development, I think, will really take place south of Mud Street. If we can get together, between Mt. Albion and Second, whereas the quarry is actually north, is it not, of Mud Street.

I drove by it the other night, and it is not right on Mud Street—

Mr. Deans: No, but all of the quarrying land runs right to Mud Street.

Can I answer something for you there? The first stage of the operation actually is, as you say, south of Mud Street, abutting Mud Street on the southerly side and almost all the way from Highway 20. It goes to Second Road, which is opposite the quarry at that point.

Mr. Goyette: Yes, about half way.

Mr. Deans: The problem that has been raised with me is that the residents of Leckie Park, if you are familiar with that area, they inform me that even now the blasting from the quarry causes damage, and they are at least three-quarters of a mile away, probably a little over a mile. Yet you are going to be building within 300 feet of the same quarrying operation.

Mr. Goyette: Well it is very difficult right now to be specific. As a person that is involved in this and with our other colleagues, we certainly hope we can do something.

Mr. Deans: What happens if you cannot?

Mr. Goyette: Well, there are lots of ifs in the world. What if—

Mr. Deans: But there is no indication that you can.

Mr. Goyette: As you said earlier, the problems and the complexities of putting all this together are immense; we will get it together.

The other thing we must remember too—and that is why it is difficult to be precise with you—is that we are still only at the official planned amendment stage and we have been looking at the 3,000 acres, of which we have the 1,600. As you know, there will be further steps as we move in to what are known as the secondary plans and subsequently into the registered plans.

As we move along there we still have to go to the council, the planning board, the OMB and we will be like any other developer in moving along.

The other thing, too, you have to take into perspective—and it is not really within my competence to parry with needles in this verbal embroidery game—we are talking about 75,000 people, so that the quarry is really only a part of that total complex. I suppose you will come back to me and say, "well, that is fine, but what about the 20 people that are near the quarry?"

Mr. Deans: Oh not 20 people. Oh, heavens no.

You are talking about people who will be directly abutting it for an excess of one mile on Mud Street and at least a mile and a half on the other—the hypotenuse of the triangle.

Mr. Goyette: I think I will now go back, if I may, to my opening sentence, that I recognize, as do our colleagues, the existence of a quarry in a piece of land does not make our development any easier. We will do what we can when the time comes to it. The quarry is there, Mud Street is there, development would have taken place and so it would have been a problem, no matter who would have had the land.

Mr. Deans: I suggest to you, first of all, that the time has come that we talk about planning and not being caught with the same problems that other people have met. We continually talk about planning for the future and not being caught up in the same difficulties that we have been caught up in in years gone by. We are always saying that when we plan communities, if we are going to plan right from the ground up, that we should make sure we do not make the kind of mistakes that have been made over the last umpteen years because of inadequate planning, or lack of it altogether.

What you are doing is saying to me that you hope that nothing untoward will take place. You hope it will not be obnoxious, and if it is, you will do what you can, when it becomes obnoxious, to eliminate it.

I assure you it will be obnoxious. I guarantee it; I will bet you a year's salary it becomes obnoxious.

Mr. Goyette: I know that a quarry is obnoxious. We realize this. The question has been brought up and this is one of the steps you take along the way—I think this is something you resolve one way or another. And, my friend, if we do not get at it, we are going to hear from a lot of people.

I wonder if I could make just a couple more comments, Mr. Chairman, without imposing on the committee's time too much.

I guess you had another couple of questions about a start. It is a question of what is the definition of a start.

Mr. Deans: When are you going to dig holes for houses?

Mr. Goyette: We are going to be digging a hole for sewers, which must be put in before you dig holes for houses.

Mr. Deans: Is the agreement signed?

Mr. Goyette: The main trunk sewer is the starting point. It comes over the brow of the mountain. We had some general agreement—on the agreement we are talking about.

The situation we were at was the question of getting the funds approved for about $1.5 million that is required. That was involved with both the provincial government and the federal government, and the federal government approval has just recently been going through.

We had our open meeting. We will be meeting with the two councils to sign our agreement.

Mr. Deans: In other words, there is now agreement between Saltfleet and the city of Hamilton, which is where I understood in the House, from questions that I asked, the problem lay—that Saltfleet and the city of Hamilton had not yet come to an agreement on the providing of the services.

Mr. Goyette: Fine. There is nothing inconsistent with that statement. That is the position we are at. We are just on the verge.

Mr. Deans: Has it changed?

Mr. Goyette: We are bringing the two together. It also involved, in our discussions with the city of Hamilton, the extension of a trunk sewer there. They were looking for that trunk sewer too.

So I think, with a trunk sewer on the Hamilton side of the mountain, I have been led to believe by the people involved, that we should be able to move along. We have not yet formally gone to the councils.

Your next point had to do with balance of assessments. I think that we have indicated that we could not, nor would the OMB allow us, to go into a position of imbalance, because—I am not sure of my fact—but I believe that the township, at the moment, is limited to a certain number of building permits. In other words, it has been increased slightly over the limit. There are not many, but there are not that many services in Saltfleet anyway and that is their main problem.

On the Leckie Park area that you talk about; there is not much chance of them getting any more housing because whether it should have been approved in the first place is doubtful. I know The National Housing Act never approved houses there because of the sulphurish water content and that sort of thing. We will have their commercial content and we would hope that in dealing with the municipality we can arrive at some kind of balance. That has just got to take place and we have given an undertaking that we would take a crack at it.

The money drain, I think, does relate; I do not know whether you are draining the rest of the community or whether you are draining Hamilton. I do not think that will take place. Was there anything else?

Mr. Deans: The cost of the land.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The cost of the land was $4,000 per acre for the present housing. When you asked me about it in the House the other day—a year or so ago—we were still assembling some of that land.

Mr. Deans: $4,000 per acre average?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Deans: Could I pursue it with you just for a moment, this whole plan? What you are really doing, from what I can see, is that the first phase of the development is going to be, at least partly, directly opposite the quarry. In other words, you are going to develop in an east-westerly fashion—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Can I ask you one question? You are probably more knowledgeable than I am. The Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) has taken some action on the Niagara Escarpment with reference to quarries. Has this anything to do with this particular installation?

Mr. Deans: Not really, this quarry will still be in existence. This is one of those that will still be there.

Hon. Mr. Randall: When the other quarries are stopped or out of business or allowed to proceed, this quarry will not be included?

Mr. Deans: No, this apparently is not one of the ones that is likely to be involved.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): The deputy minister has already said that all of them will get permits to continue their operations.

Mr. Deans: So there is not likely to be any problem there. It is going to continue on.

What I want to ask you is, since the services are being provided from the Hamilton direction, from the westerly end of the development, why did the development not take place on a north-south axis, moving east and extending the services as you go? With the notable exception that I want services to Leckie Park, but other than that, for health reasons, if for no other, why would you develop it so that you were developing right opposite the quarry in the first stage? Why not develop toward the quarry slowly? The whole development is going to take 10 or 14 years anyway, and by that point when you get to the quarry you will be much closer to its demise. Why was that not done?

Mr. Goyette: Is it not just simply that the main trunk sewer, coming up, is indeed coming up on a north-south axis. We are south of Mud Street and that is the closest we can get to the trunk sewer. If we start going towards Highway 53, or Pembroke, or down towards Leckie Park, that puts it right down in the farthest corner and the cost of the main trunk sewer would be prohibitive.

Mr. Deans: Well of course you have the main trunk sewer. The main trunk sewer I understand is going to come up Redhill Creek.

Right? It is going to come up the Redhill Creek Valley and then travel along Mud Street? Is this correct?

Mr. Goyette: It is to Monk Street.

Mr. Deans: Then it branches?

Mr. Goyette: It has to go along Mud Street, depending on the ground. I have not personally followed that sewer all the way over. We have our outside consultant doing it. But I would be glad if you wanted to go into more detail, without impairing anything you have got to say in committee. If we could go over the plan I would be delighted to sit down with you on the details of it.

Mr. Deans: What I want to say about it is this: the main trunk sewer travelling the north-south direction will come up at approximately to the western extreme end of the development. Right?

Mr. Goyette: I think it is central.

Mr. Deans: No. No, it cannot be central. It has to be almost at the extreme west end. Redhill Creek comes up at the extreme west end. The Redhill Expressway comes up at the extreme west end, so it has got to be at the extreme west end. It has got to be in the area of Albion Hills.

Mr. Goyette: Yes, I am sorry. Yes. Hamilton East and West are always deceiving.

Mr. Deans: I am sorry—

Mr. Goyette: It is on the other side of—

Mr. Deans: So it is at the very westerly portion, right? Therefore, any branches taken off that will travel easterly in order to service the proposed development. Now it makes sense to me to develop the sewer in an easterly fashion the full width of the entire development, rather than develop this narrow strip, which then will mean development opposite the quarry in the first stage.

By the time you get to the quarry, which is, I would think, probably a little better than half way across the development travelling east, you will have taken up ten years, maybe longer. By that time, you will have a better idea and will have been able, I hope, to negotiate the quarry out of existence. Otherwise we are going to end up with 10 years of heartaches, and a lot of problems.

Mr. Goyette: Have you had the opportunity of discussing this with our consultants who are working in Hamilton?

Mr. Deans: It is not easy.

Mr. Goyette: I would be delighted to sit down with you and I am sure, with your permission, we could go over that detail.

Mr. Deans: I hope we will be able to do that. Before the next estimate comes up, I want to say to you that I do not believe you should continue with the development in the area immediately abutting the quarry unless there has been a definite decision made as to the future of the industrial development in that area. I do not think that we can permit it to be a year-to-year matter, hopefully overcoming its own problem, or the pressure of OHC being able to overcome the problem for it. I think that you have got to say quite clearly that you have x number of years to phase out. You can do what you like with the land, but you cannot continue to use it as a quarry if we are going to build residences across the street.

Mr. Goyette: We will record that opinion. There was one last point, Mr. Chairman, and that was the question of the cemeteries. There are several cemeteries in the area, and I know you know them better than I do.

Mr. Deans: Yes, five.

Mr. Goyette: The main ones, and you heard me make that assurance to the people, we certainly would not touch. The second part of the statement is we would not touch the small ones unless they wanted them touched. I would be glad to put on the record that one elderly couple came to me after the meeting was over. A couple rather too shy, I think, to say something; they were very concerned about whether we would be doing anything, as they explained it was consecrated land. I gave them that assurance again that we would not unless they themselves had come to some conclusion that it might be to their advantage.

As you know, there are, I think, in one locality, for example, three or four stones by the side of the road which, right now, I think, are in despicable condition. The spray hits them and it struck us that maybe they might like to suggest to us, if these were the owners and those involved, and it was consistent with The Cemeteries Act anyway—and we are well limited there—that we might even be able to accommodate them by some movement in which they might be put together and protected and landscaped in a slightly different way. So again I do not think—

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): It has been proved that even the dead are being bothered by pollution.

Hon. Mr. Randall: But we have not had a complaint yet.

Mr. Goyette: I do not think there is anything inconsistent with what you have been getting there.

Mr. Deans: Okay, fine! Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think we should answer, Mr. Chairman, many of the questions that Mr. Trotter posed here. I would like to leave Bramalea, because I am sure my friends in the NDP want to make a comment. But I think we should answer some of Mr. Trotter's questions if it is okay with you.

I think the first is going back to Headway construction. I will give you some facts on this, but I should point out that bringing in the HOME programme has brought a lot of the smaller builders back into the market who were eliminated because they could not buy land. The land was too expensive anywhere, so the small builder just hung up the key and went to work for somebody else. The small builder is today building one, two, three, four and half-a-dozen houses.

For instance, if you rented a piece of land from us in Trenton and there were 15 of you, you could go to a small builder and say I will contract for you to build me a home within that $24,000 bracket including land. This brings the small builder back into the building business.

In view of the fact that we have not had availability of land at prices a small builder can participate in, it is obvious that some of the bigger builders and some of the more efficient builders have been able to quote on a lot of the Ontario Housing Corporation jobs. If they are efficient builders, when they make a quote they quote on the builder proposal that goes before our board. It goes before our Treasury Board; it goes before cabinet and has to be approved, in the main, by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and their Treasury Board.

When it has gone that far, I think it has had a pretty close scrutiny. And there has also been a shortage of mortgage money. For instance, people like Headway whom you mentioned, may have owned land up in Thunder Bay area. But if they could not get mortgage money they finally said: "Look we are stymied; we cannot do any private building because we cannot get mortgage money from the insurance companies or the mortgage companies. Is there a programme that we can work on with the housing corporation?" So this brings them into our office and we have had a lot of people in our office over the last three or four years who could not get mortgage money. So it does not necessarily follow that because they are building for the Ontario Housing Corporation there is anything wrong with their getting a contract—unless they are getting more than one contract—and I will point it out to you in a minute.

I want to cover one other point. I should cover this Headway situation before we get any further and point out to you that Headway's contracts in the two years, 1968 and 1969, were in 35 municipalities, most of them in small communities where other builders were not interested in making proposals—you would be surprised how many times we put out a proposal and never get a bid from a small municipality. And this company set up to specialize in small municipalities and took contracts in these areas I am talking about. In 18 cases alone, Headway's was the only tender. We could not get a bid from anybody else. And quite often you get complaints, and some of our members stand up in the House, saying, "How come you took a survey of need there six months or a year ago and nothing has started yet? The chances are we check it out and find no builders will accept a proposal from that area and we have to find a builder from outside to go in and do it. In seven cases only two submissions were received. Headway altogether has 61 contracts for 1,413 units, and to obtain these 61 contracts they made 216 proposals. So it shows how efficient they are at making proposals. That was up to May 25, 1970. The suggestion that Mayotte Construction Company is related to Headway in any way is incorrect.

The officers at Mayotte Construction Company are R. Mayotte, president, Ed Mayotte, vice-president, so they are nothing whatsoever to do with Headway.

Now here are some of the towns where Headway has built. Elmont 60; Armstrong—that is a hell of a place to build houses—6; Blind River 12; Brighton 10; Calvert 12; Carleton Place 16; Chelmsford 20; Dryden 10; Durham 11; Fort Frances 10; Fort William 102; Kenora 14; Kenora 22; Leamington 12; Longlac 12; Markdale 12; Meaford 10; Meaford 8; Midland 12; Mitchell 10; Moosonee 15; Neilson and Garson, wherever that is, I guess—

An hon. member: Outside of Sudbury!

Hon. Mr. Randall: Outside of Sudbury, 6; North Bay 36; Orangeville 12; Orillia 16; Orillia 32; Penetang 12; Peterborough 50; Picton 16; Port Arthur 97; St. Thomas 28; St. Thomas 22; Sarnia 24; Sarnia 32; Sault Ste. Marie 26; Simcoe 28; Thessalon 10; Tillsonburg 8; Tillsonburg 24; Timmins 33; Timmins 33; and Trenton 22. And in many of those cases there was no other builder who would give us a builder proposal. And I might say that if you want to check your average figures on housing, we have provided through the housing corporation—or the houses that we have built and bought—housing from $13,000 to $15,500 including land. These all meet NHA housing standards and they are approved by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in the main. If we get a 90 per cent advance from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation it is their inspectors who approve the housing along with ours.

Mr. Ben: Is $15,000 including the land?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, $15,500, up to $15,500; the average I said. Now in the city it would be higher, in a smaller town it is lower.

Mr. Ben: What does your land run out there if it goes for $15,000?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I could not tell you off hand. But I am just saying our average cost on what we have built and have on the books today has run anywhere from $13,000 to $15,500.

Mr. Ben: LaSalle Park cost—

Hon. Mr. Randall: LaSalle Park was $12,867.94.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, is that over the range of bedrooms? That is $13,000 with a smaller number of bedrooms, $15,500 with a larger number of bedrooms.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, that is an average of everything we have got on the books. We have 112,000 people housed now, but 66,000 are children. So you can see the problems we have in finding bedroom accommodation for these people, and on the basis of $13,000 to $15,000. LaSalle is a good example of the kind of contracts we are getting from people like Headway.

Frankly, I do not think your member should have put the finger on Headway. He was just suspicious of the number of contracts they got. I think you can be suspicious if you see a man's name coming up all the time, but I just would point out there are many areas where builders will not come in and make a proposal. They do not want to go into these areas. They say, "We cannot afford to go, it is too costly. We cannot get people because we cannot get men to stay there." But these people will move a crew around and put them in movable mobile homes and build these houses and do the job for us. This is one of the reasons why Headway's name has come up more often than anybody else's.

Mr. Peacock: What was the total value of the contracts they got in those two years?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Have you got their total budget there?

Mr. D. Beesley (Ontario Housing Corporation): $12 million.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think we said $12 million.

Mr. Ben: How many units?

Hon. Mr. Randall: In 1968 there were 5,506—they got 7.9 per cent; in 1969 they got 8.2 per cent of the units being built.

Mr. Ben: Are we talking about housing units or apartments?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We are talking about housing units. Of the 5,506 units built in 1968, Headway did 7.9 per cent and of the 6,088 built in Ontario in 1969 they got 8.2 per cent. I guess we can get you the dollar figures—we have them somewhere. We will get you the contract figures if you want them.

Mr. Peacock: Sorry, I missed the totals in each year.

Hon. Mr. Randall: 1968 was 5,506 and 1969 was 6,088.

Mr. Peacock: Are these completions?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know whether they are completions, these are what they did.

Mr. Peacock: Contracts signed?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, contracts.

Now just let me cover another point. I mentioned earlier, and again I am not trying to place my emphasis on the federal government, I am just saying we have worked together, I think we have evolved some very good plans. The federal government up to now would not participate in commercial enterprises within a housing development. However, you saw the statement from Mr. Andras the other day and they are now prepared to help finance community centres and commercial establishments, if they are necessary.

Mr. Peacock: Day care centres?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Day care centres. They come into all that in this last statement of Mr. Hellyer's.

An hon. member: Mr. Andras!

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Andras, I should say.

Insofar as the Ontario housing authorities are concerned, as you know this has been under study. We have 41 authorities. There have not been any appointed since 1965 and we have been looking at ways to make them more efficient and certainly to help them work with the tenants. I announced three or four weeks ago that we were going to set up area boards. The first place we started was Thunder Bay, because we were joining Fort William and Port Arthur, we had two housing authorities there and we wanted to put them together so we started there, putting up our first area board. We hope to have six or seven of them working this year.

They will be supplied with a manager, or an over-all man who can visit these various areas and perhaps give the kind of attention you are talking about—more attention to some of these areas of conflict maybe between the tenants, conflict with municipal authorities, wherever they develop. I think that when we get the area boards working we will have a better programme for the tenants as well as ourselves.

Mr. Trotter: Will any tenants be on the area board?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We are going to set up a tenants advisory committee to advise the boards. The reason for that is that we have read of cases, and I think it happens, where the tenants themselves do not want the next-door neighbour knowing about their personal affairs. I think I pointed out in Detroit where they had a tenants' association running the project 78 per cent of them were in arrears in their rent.

We believe that the advisory board can do all the things they want to do without necessarily being on the board, because the area board is being set up to listen to their advice on the things that they are concerned with. I do not think they are concerned with each other's personal problems in so far as if he did not pay his rent or how much money is he making. A lot of gossip goes on in these areas, as you recognize. I do not think it is good for the tenants to have other tenants looking at their bankbook.

Now these are some of the things—maybe you will disagree—but these are some of the things we are intending to look at.

I might say too that one of the things that the federal government have discussed with our people is they think our standards on public housing are too high. You do not think they are high enough, but they have told us they think our standards are too high. There should be some lopping-off of some of the things we have been doing in public housing. I do not know where we can lop off, but we are supposed to be having some meetings to find out why our standards are too high.

So there is a difference of opinion between yourself and perhaps our federal friends as to what is good public housing.

Mr. Trotter: If they call LaSalle Place good public housing, I certainly disagree with them.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Andras lives up there himself. I do not suppose he was there when we built it, I think probably Mr. Nicholson was the minister when that was built; I do not think that Mr. Andras was in on that one, but he lives in Thunder Bay, as you recognize.

But there are some of the things that I wanted to discuss with you with reference to Headway. Maybe Mr. Goyette would like to make a comment.

Yes, the value of their contracts to date is $18,194,188.

Mr. Trotter: Does that include the ones that are not completed?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That includes contracts awarded.

Mr. Trotter: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Contracts awarded, not completed. Some may be and some are under way.

Mr. Trotter: Yes.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, would it be possible for me to ask some questions at this point before we leave the subject?

Mr. Chairman: You are on the list here you know, and unless Mr.—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Are your questions along the same line?

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): All on Ontario Housing, but the whole subject will have quite a bit too.

Mr. Chairman: Would you like to yield the floor—

Mr. Peacock: Mine were on Headway.

Mr. Chairman: —to the man over there for a few questions?

Mr. Deacon: Fine.

Mr. Peacock: I wonder if the minister could tell us, in the case of each of the projects awarded to Headway, which received the largest value in contracts of any other proponent, in how many projects did Headway itself provide the land? Is that known? Do you have it with you? It is known, I imagine.

Mr. Goyette: No, I am sorry, I think we would have to dig that out. I would say that it probably would have been the owner of the land, in more cases than not. It has only been in recent months that we have been emphasizing acquiring the lands ourselves. But we could get that for you.

Mr. Peacock: So that where you issued a proposal and received a response only from Headway, the chances are that, until recently, Headway then went out and acquired the lands in that community where you had a small number of units and could not get anyone else to build? Correct? The value of the land is lost in the costing of the project on a per-unit basis?

In other words, were you able to separate out the cost of lands to the Ontario Housing Corporation, as against the cost of construction and other costs in completing the project? And were you able to compare that cost of land to OHC with the cost to Headway?

Mr. Goyette: The cost of the land is recorded in the proposal that he makes to us so that we would have the information. He reports to us what the land is and then—we do get a certificate, do we not? Yes. We get a statement from him of how much he paid for it.

The check as well is that as he puts the amount down—if he is dealing with senior citizens' units and he had something like $4,000 a unit for senior citizens, there is no way we would deal in that because our rule of thumb is that you try to get in there somewhere around $1,000, plus or minus. That would come out in the appraisal, and we therefore would not be dealing it.

Things have been sufficiently competitive that the price on land has been not too hard to discern. Furthermore, in most cases the land must be transferred from Headway, the proponent, over to Ontario Housing Corporation, which becomes the owner, and we have our thing there. Thirdly, we have our own persons who have gone to the municipality.

I make the comment that in those cases where we have asked for proponents to come forward, it has been generally on the proponent's own land, or that land on which he can get an option. It has been where we had not been readily successful ourselves in obtaining reasonable land from the municipality.

Mr. Peacock: In respect to family units though, what kind of control do you have over the trade-up or profit which the developer attempts to realize, in respect to Headway—and we have only got one proponent's—

Mr. Goyette: I think as a generalized answer to that question in respect to any developer he must tell us what the land is. If the land is out of order, obviously we would not get involved.

Mr. Peacock: The price?

Mr. Goyette: Price, that is right. Now what he bought it for in the first place and what it is costing now, I am sure most members are aware, you never can clearly discern that. It might have been a piece of land from maybe 50 years ago. It may be a piece of land that is left over from another development. It may not have been registered in its own right, but our main check is that our appraiser, in making a report to the board of directors of Ontario Housing Corporation, must make a judgement of that land and its value in relation to the market.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think it must go back to the fact that again it depends on the density. For instance, a piece of land can be more valuable closer to the urban area. If you can get density on it, then you can afford to buy the land, but if you are going to put single-family housing on it, you have to buy the land fairly cheaply. I think a member brought up the fact that I do not think we need town housing in small towns. I disagree with him. I think we can point out to him that in many areas, if we did not have town housing in small towns, a lot of the people, with the wage rates they are earning in those towns, would never be able to afford to move in or even to buy into their own housing.

Today you will find town housing going up in almost every small town in Ontario, and I give you an instance. A man came in to see me a few months ago from Sudbury. He has got houses there finished at $19,800 and $21,500. The miners up there, after being on strike, could not even afford the $1,000 down payment, let alone being able to carry those $19,000 to $21,000 houses. He was offering them to us as a package, because if we put them under the HOME programme and financed them through the housing development corporation, a buyer pays five per cent down. Perhaps we could have helped him, and that is still under discussion.

I do point out that single-family housing is not going to be possible, even in the small towns today with the way land costs have gone, the way servicing costs have gone and what the municipalities are providing in the way of services. The land costs even in the small towns can be almost prohibitive for single-family housing, but still people want to live in their own home. They want to have home ownership instead of paying a rent to somebody and getting a living room full of rent receipts at the end of 35 years. At least, they have got an equity.

And keep in mind most of those people sell in seven or eight years and make a profit and move on to somewhere else. I do not think anybody hangs on to a house. The average period is seven or eight years. So I think if they can get a chance to buy under the programme we have here—under town housing or row housing if you want to call it that—it is a far better way of housing people than any other way.

I do not think we are ever going to get away, from here on in, with building single-family housing in small towns unless we can get the land very, very cheaply, because the builders have got most of those places. Where they have built single-family homes, they are asking $30,000 or better for them. You can go not too far from Toronto and you will find $30,000 or $35,000 homes going up left, right and centre. If it was not for the HOME programme there would not be any homes under $30,000.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for York Centre. He has wanted the floor for some time.

Mr. Deacon: Still on Headway, who checks that the specifications are met when these units are built in these remote spots? Who is doing that check of the specifications?

Mr. Goyette: There are three groups of persons who do that. These would be the city municipal building department, the inspector of the Ontario Housing Corporation and the inspector of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, which has been involved in the loan.

Mr. Deacon: Would you not have provision in your specifications for soundproofing between units?

Mr. Goyette: Yes. The soundproofing between the units is specified in the national building code, which is the basis for The National Housing Act standards.

Mr. Deacon: I was quite surprised to have a virtual whisper heard between units that Headway built in Longlac. I was wondering if things like that are the result of deficient building and because they are not meeting the standards.

Mr. Goyette: No. With respect, I understand what you are talking about. This has been of some concern to us too, but it does meet the standards regarding the decibel count; it depends on how your studs are put together and it was the basis of a proposal call that this must meet standards. We are now changing over and we are asking for a full block wall both for soundproofing and because we have a little more confidence that people enjoy the block wall and feel a little safer with it from a fire protection point of view. So we are moving from the single-stud wall which does not keep out all the noise; I have admitted to this, and we are now—

Mr. Deacon: They are very well sound insulated, and it certainly is amazing to me—

Mr. Goyette: Well it is a question that it did meet the standards, and this was pretty well acceptable.

Mr. Deacon:—when I think we have never realized that the national building code standards are that much below what I should consider reasonable.

Hon. Mr. Randall: When were you in Longlac?

Mr. Deacon: I have been in Longlac two or three times in the last year. I went into one Ontario housing unit, and they were quite concerned that they could not have a place to hang their laundry because—

Mr. Goyette: Did Headway build that?

Mr. Deacon: Yes, it was Headway construction, and there were a lot of problems in that development in Longlac. I was very pleased, though, that you were going ahead with projects in these towns. I think it is a commendable programme, because they do need housing in those spots as they do in larger places, but I was also disappointed in the quality of the housing that was put up. It was well below the standards I have seen you building in this area.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well as Mr. Goyette said, they were built two and a half years ago, and certainly there have been some changes in our standards. On the other hand, if you know the standard, you can go too far the other way and price the house right out of the market.

Mr. Deacon: Well, I recognize that, but I think that the standards should include reasonable soundproofing.

Before getting off this general area, the minister of Ontario housing is "Mr. Free Enterprise" in the province. I was wondering when we got this report—I got mine on April 14 for 1968—how you would have made out with General Steel Wares if you had published your report for the year 1968 on April 14, 1970. Do you not think you would have been before the Ontario Securities Commission?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think we would have been.

Mr. Deacon: Why should you get special treatment now that you are minister of housing?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well the calendar year and the fiscal year are two different things, as you can appreciate.

Mr. Deacon: This is for a March 31 year-end?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Right. As you recognize the auditor has to approve our statement. Until we can get it audited, we cannot publish it.

Mr. Deacon: Yes, but the auditor could not even get you to close your books last year until September for a March 31 year-end. Why is it that Ontario housing is the one that the auditor points to as the one that is holding up the closing of the province's books? Right, Mr. Goddard?

Mr. A. C. Goddard (Ontario Housing Corporation): I think that was the case last year.

Mr. Deacon: Well, this year they say it will not be closed until June.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, answer the member's question. What will be the difference this year?

Mr. Goddard: We invited the provincial auditor to come in two weeks ago. We are already closed for the fiscal year 1969. That is a little improvement.

Mr. Deacon: That certainly is, but it certainly is not as good as would be expected of you, Mr. Minister, if you were again president of General Steel Wares.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will take the reprimand and do something about it next year.

Mr. Deacon: You also should think about having your year-end coincide with the province's year-end, so that when we get statements we can compare the two.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have to have it coincide with the federal government's. Is that right, Mr. Goddard?

Mr. Goddard: Yes, sir. With the closing of projects under our management, if we were to have a fiscal year-end that was different than CMHC, it would create more problems. All of our projects with CHMC tie in with an amortization date which follows a calendar year.

Mr. Deacon: Well, you have to have an audit for March 31, anyway; you have to have one for December 31. There are such things as quarterly statements that other businesses provide, and I cannot see why you still do not put out your report to us coincidental with the official budget so we can see how it all breaks down according to the overall estimates and have your special report to CMHC for their purposes.

Mr. Goddard: I really cannot give you a definite answer to that.

Mr. Deacon: I would suggest to the minister that it might be very helpful if we had our published reports from all the departments, including yours, tying in with the province's year-end, and you could have special reports for some other government's purpose as well.

Mr. Ben: He pointed out that 80 per cent of their money comes from the federal government.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is not true. Do not forget that it is paid back to them.

Mr. Deacon: You have a $96 million budget here, but in the way you are spending it, as I have submitted to you before, I think you are putting the wrong emphasis. You are costing us in this province at least $750 million a year in excess prices for land, because you are not going after the root causes of our housing problem. The root cause of the housing problem is the cost of land, and your responsibility here is to provide people with housing at the lowest possible cost. Why do you not go to the main cause of high costs, which is the shortage of serviced land and land which municipalities are prepared to allow building to go ahead on? You have gone ahead with major public housing, which is very commendable, but do not forget what happens in so many nations when you make it so difficult for the private developer to operate that you get into the public only. You have in Stockholm and Glasgow the worst housing shortages anywhere in the world.

Unless you create the circumstances where there is free, open competition and there is an ample supply of serviced land on which people can build, you are going to have trouble. I am surprised that you, as a so-called free enterpriser, continue to emphasize land banks instead of emphasizing making available serviced land for anybody who wants to build, including yourself.

You are not doing that. You are still not making your colleagues recognize the basic necessity here. You have got to have services; you have got to have the municipal co-operation. You have got to eliminate these delays and the red tape that add so much to the frustration that every builder has, including yourself. You are certainly one who has had it—your Malvern project is one of the best examples. If you would give leadership as the man responsible for housing and say to your colleagues "I want more money to provide these necessities for municipalities"—it is not very much we are talking about.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Especially in comparison to the money in your EIO loans.

Mr. Deacon: That is right. You look at the major increase in the cost of housing. The building costs, because of new methods of building and things like that, have gone up maybe 50 to 75 per cent in the last 10 years, but nothing like the land cost. In the last 10 to 15 years you have seen land costs at Malvern go up from the $500 or so an acre you paid to—what is it today?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I did not pay that. It was bought long before I came.

Mr. Deacon: Well, whoever was before you—the government.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I did not even promise houses in 1950. I promised houses when houses could start—

Mr. Deacon: The fact is the land was bought cheaply.

An hon. member: In 1943, it was one of the 22 planks in this platform.

Mr. Deacon: Would you sell it for $50,000 or $75,000 per acre? It would certainly be a fantastic increase in the price of that land. A 10,000 per cent sort of thing!

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I just point out—could I ask you one question?

You know all the land that is held, at Markdale—in Erindale—was already owned by developers. It had been owned by developers for many years and sewers and water are going through there now. I wish you would go out there and price those lots and see if, as the Ontario Housing Corporation, if you can get yourself a bargain on those lots.

The point I am trying to make is this. I think the idea is an excellent one if the developer who owns the land felt the same as you do. That because the government put the services and water through he would sell us part of his holdings at what he paid for them. This is just not in the cards.

If we run the sewers and water through when we do not own any of the land, I can assure you he is not going to build anything less than $35,000 homes. I think they are talking about building $80,000 and $90,000 condominiums out there. I do not have the same faith in these developers that you have; that if I run the water and sewers through there, they are going to give me part of their holdings to build housing for the modest-income people.

Mr. Deacon: I do not seem to be able to get the idea across to you. I do not think any developer is going to be in the business of giving away land. There is no charity in him at all. What he is governed by is what the supply of competitive land is.

I can remember well from my experience in the land business, because I was in it for a few years and I know what it was like when you owned raw land. The fastest way for anybody to go broke in the land development business, in the real estate developing and housing development business, is to own raw land too long. The carrying charges of the land, both in interest and in taxation can really put you out of business in a hurry.

The only thing that you can keep on looking at is what you are going to be able to realize for that serviced lot at some time in the future. If there is a feeling, as there has been for the past 15 years, of artificial continuing shortage of availability of land which we can build on in this area where this government has maintained a policy, of being certain that the supply of land on which people can build, the land which is serviced and which municipalities have agreements for, is well short of the demand, there is only one thing we can expect to result and that is what has resulted—the worst spiral in land costs anywhere in North America. It is a most outrageous situation that a so-called free enterprise government would be making it absolutely an ideal situation for the worst side of free enterprise, this land speculation that has occurred here.

We would have to nationalize land under such continuing circumstances, because this outfit has never recognized that what we have got to do is not have just 50,000 lots available for an 80,000 demand. We should have 100,000 serviced lots available in this province. Tax that land at its market value today, because as soon as you can put services on it you should be able to assess it at its full market value. But be sure that there are plenty of services available.

You talk about Erindale. The number of lots we are talking about developing at Erin-dale, plus the others in the corridor, are nothing like the number that the builders think there is a demand for.

But what if this government, with your urging, were to say: "We are now going to adopt a policy of having Ontario Water Resources Commission build sufficient plants for water supply and sewage treatment." And then put in the trunks and make the use of those supplies, plants and the water supply available at rates competitive with Metro Toronto, for example? What if this province were to say to municipalities: "We are going to give you assistance of some form"—and I can suggest the form it should take—"over a temporary period to give you time to absorb the initial high costs of housing?" And what if we were also to bring in policies that made it possible for municipalities to not have to go through the Ontario Municipal Board for all these approvals?

We just had the member for Wentworth discuss the situation. It is ridiculous. If the Ontario government were to look after putting in these services it would not cost them in any one year, in subsidy, more than $10 million—and I have done a lot of calculations on this thing—to ensure we have ample trunks and sewers available in the corridors of development we have now designated.

I compliment the government for having at last come forward with the "Design for Development" plan, but there is no point in coming through with an overall plan unless you put the muscle in that allows people to develop in these corridors. What is going to happen as a result of this government's plan? Without the necessary supply of services on a competitive basis, without the necessary assistance to municipalities, without the necessary cutting out of red tape that we now put in the way of developers, it is going to be the worst land speculation you ever saw, all the way east and west across this province.

And there are going to be tremendous pressures—and reasonably so—from people just outside that boundary which you are trying to stop development in. We want to have the greenbelts. We want to have the desirable things. But what we are doing right now, by your lack of energy in pushing for ample services and ample financial assistance in municipalities, we are just creating the worst problem that we ever had in our history.

Mr. Allen, the past chairman of Metro, said to me a couple of years ago: "I really think we are the authors of our own problems by restricting the amount of development artificially." We are restricting it by the availability of services because we cannot afford much more than we are doing in Metro and we are restricting it also by our need for viability, we have to keep our assessments well within balance.

But to the province the amount of money that would make the difference is very small. Twenty million dollars is the total amount that I estimated. You could really change this by a subsidy of $20 million to Ontario Water Resources Commission, by a similar amount of $10 million distributed to municipalities as subsidy payments for low-cost housing. You could change the atmosphere in this province overnight. And if you made it an announced policy that we are going to be sure that there is an excess of supply of building lots, you would take the spark out of this spiral of land costs overnight.

I can assure you, as someone who has sat on a board and worried about a $2 million land purchase and said, "How are we going to get our money out of that with all the delays in getting the land serviced?" I know just how the feeling is with the high cost of money, with the shortage of cash there is today. A change in the policy of this government would make the whole thing look different overnight.

But what really concerns me is that you are now in bed with the speculators because you own 12,000 acres of land. If that drops below your cost you are going to have to answer to your cabinet colleagues. They are going to wonder why you bought land in Kitchener for a certain amount per acre if you cannot get that much for it. Maybe this is a concern on your part. I would hope it is not.

I would hope that you would say: "I do not care what I get for the land, I am going to be sure that we have available in this province a full supply of service land; that services are not short and are not the cause of high land costs."

Look at the town of Fenelon Falls. A house lot sold four years ago, no seven years ago in Fenelon Falls, for $700 on a little street. There was then no shortage of places to build in the town. Then, the last lots available, because of Ontario Water Resources Commission restrictions, get used up. That same lot sold for $9,000 last winter—$9,000 up from $700. This is all because of our artificial restriction of the supply.

You can go to Sault Ste. Marie and you can buy service lots outside Sault Ste. Marie at very little over the basic $30 or so per foot frontage cost of the streets in the locality because the demand has not been in excess of the available supply. They have been able to manage the situation out there.

But in areas around the province where the demand is in excess of supply, I think you missed the boat by not really driving hard on the supply situation and being certain it is well in excess of demand. Then the free enterprise system can operate. Then there is no excuse for builders not coming in and doing a job.

Erindale, I can assure you, would be scared skinny if you told them that we were opening up land all along the corridor. We are putting in these big trunk sewers and these mains and we are going to allow all kinds of people to open up. We are not going to keep the market nice and controlled so the price goes up every year. You should see a change in their tune. They will sit on raw land for only so long and it is time, I think, we recognize this if we are to call ourselves a free enterprise government.

I was just doing a little bit of recalling of the situation out our way in Markham township a few years ago. The price of $500 an acre, even in 1958 was a fair price. But when they start hearing of people getting $25,000 an acre five miles to the south because that is where the services are, that is when they start asking for more and more and more. The more they start asking higher prices for this raw land the more the whole thing builds on itself. But we should have such a supply of serviced land close to wherever we want development in excess of all the possible demand necessary. Then you will see the land go back to its economic value for the purposes it is best suited for at that time. We would not have this speculation that occurs because of high prices in the cities pushing into the country surrounding it. You would have the land around Saltfleet—maybe the land there around that gravel pit—at the economic price of the land for gravel pit purposes, as long as they can operate a gravel pit. Otherwise, it should be darn close to the agricultural value of that land.

If we did this, we would eliminate so many of our problems. We are having a terrible time out our way. The farmers do not want to have the land go out of the family's hands but if they die, how can their family afford to pay the estate tax on land that is now at $2,000 or $3,000 an acre? Sure they can sell out and go farming if they can find a farm somewhere else, but they do not particularly want to do that. They enjoy farming and everything in their life is not the almighty buck. They do like to have that family tradition go on. They know they are in a green belt for many years to come, perhaps.

We have got to do something to pull the plug, to prick the balloon, that has gone into land development around this province; and it is in your hands. You are the minister who has a core of responsibility here. You know from your experience in Malvern that first of all you could not get the municipality to service you because it could not afford to put a trunk away up there. But you could have, as the province, put the trunks up there. The municipality could not afford to have a housing development go in because it would have thrown the assessment out of balance. But you could have given assistance to the municipality to offset the impact of that low-cost residential housing at that point.

They could not get by the Ontario Municipal Board, perhaps, or the Ontario Water Resources Commission, or some building code restrictions, but you could make the provision for those things. You have the power here, in the provincial government, of doing these things. It would be different if we were talking about huge amounts of money, but we are not. We are talking about relatively small amounts, even in your budget.

Mr. Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but we should adjourn. Mr. Randall has to leave and we could come back tomorrow at 3.15 and—

Mr. Deacon: No, I am pretty well done.

Mr. Chairman: I will take you as I have you on my list.

Mr. Ben: I think—am I next, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: I will make sure that you are next.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I have the Eedee awards tonight. I am sorry. There are 782 Eedee awards tonight selling fashions all over the world. If you want to come, you are welcome.

Mr. Singer: We could provide houses for 500,000 if he would spend a few hours here.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We will listen to you.

The committee adjourned at 5.30 o'clock, p.m.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT (continued)

On votes 2209 and 2210:

Mr. Chairman: We will call the meeting to order and the first speaker will be the hon. member for York North.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): I think perhaps Mr. Hodgson (York North) might object to you calling it York North.

Mr. Chairman: It is York South, eh?

Mr. Deacon: York Centre.

Mr. Chairman: Oh well, as long as I got it close. It is one of the York ridings.

Mr. Deacon: I got right in the middle.

I wanted to carry on because of the minister (Mr. Randall) mentioning to me that he could not quite understand the arithmetic I was doing.

I wanted to point out the basis for the arithmetic I mentioned and that a $20 million direction of funds—$10 million to services and $10 million toward a subsidy to municipalities—would really change the whole atmosphere within the province with regard to the availability of lots on which people can build houses.

The first point is that I have checked with different groups of builders who have had to build outside the normal places that services were available, such as in Metro, of a municipal nature, and they have found that a contribution of about $750 per lot has taken care of the basic trunk mains, the water filtration plants, the sewage plants and the sewage trunks that they have had to build. It has varied from $500 to $1,000, but they said a mean figure of $750 would not be very far out. This would certainly be particularly true when they could work on the basis of a well-integrated design and did not have to worry about municipal boundaries and have to be confined to location of plants or sources of water.

Based upon 21,000 homes built in Metro last year and a total in the province of 80,000 in all, they felt that the sewage plants that would be in demand for this type of service would require in the order of about $50 million a year.

If you project revenues on such projects as I have stated before—the Lake Huron pipeline and some of the other trunk projects, such as the Brampton one where the Ontario Water Resources Commission does it on a pay-out of that particular project—it has to be fully paid out and they have their estimates of low revenues in the initial years and the estimates built up as the volumes build up. But they estimate their rates on a basis that will pay out the full cost of the project over a period of time.

There is no leeway for them to get any sort of assistance from the government in the way of an annual subsidy so they can set a rate that is competitive. As a result of having to set these rates or suggest these rates to municipalities that involve often a very high cost to the municipality for the services, there is a great deal of resistance by the municipalities in just entering into negotiations.

Richmond Hill this last year was offered a deal by the Ontario Water Resources Commission at nearly four times the existing cost of water in Richmond Hill, and certainly about five times what the cost of water is in North York. Naturally Richmond Hill is prohibited from going ahead with such a project. But if the Ontario Water Resources Commission could work on the basis of water supply to a large area knowing that the plan of the province was for developing or stimulating development in that area, the market studies would certainly make a lot of difference if the rates were competitive. The subsidy of $10 million that I worked out was based on using several different examples of projects that have come before the commission. I would think that would be in the order of the subsidy required.

I could be off, but I am darned sure I am a lot closer to the subsidy required than the Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) was in his estimate last year that he gave to the House. I think he was only $50 million out. I am suggesting I might be 20 per cent out or something of that sort in what I am suggesting here. The basic concern is that the province undertake a sufficiently ambitious programme and say, "We are going to provide the services. There will be no shortage of services. We are not depending on a municipality to arrange the financing."

From an engineering point of view, I mentioned it is the most economical. You do not have to confine your source of water to ground sources which are being depleted. You can go to a lake and build a pipeline because of the long-term plan, particularly now under this new Design for Development going along the lake corridor. You do not need to worry about where the sewage effluent in the plants is. You can build a pipeline to take the effluent down to a lake site for tertiary treatment if necessary. You can certainly build them more economically. You do not need to worry about the sewage plant being outside one region in particular where the development is taking place. The province has a right to go anywhere there.

You can stimulate development where the province designates when you put those plants in, and do it in sufficient quantity to be sure there is nothing of that nature holding up a development. If people want to develop they can do so.

The other thing is, when the province does designate such areas for development, it would then have a good reason to have them zoned and assessed that way. Then you would not have such lands in areas where they can be under-taxed on the basis of agricultural value. You could tax it at full market value. That would be a very persuasive means of getting that land on the market because they cannot stand taxation combined with high real estate costs. You would eliminate the Ontario Municipal Board consideration of whether a municipality had the financial strength to do the financing.

That is what Toronto's problem is. They can only go to the market for so much every year. They are very much restricted in their capital budget. We are restricted too in the province to about $300 million or so, plus what the Hydro does.

But I suggest that the province would have a far greater leeway if it would get Hydro to go on its own as I have suggested to the Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton). It certainly is, according to institutional lenders I have talked to, something that could be readily done. It would mean that this greater degree of borrowing power would be available for what is a much more essential purpose to the pockets of the people of this province—that is getting land prices within their means. Of course, the costs of financing would be reduced a great deal.

I suggest to the minister that he analyze the thing. A $10 million to $12 million expenditure toward the subsidy necessary for OWRC to carry out such a programme would do the job in a very significant way. The OWRC should be developed into an Ontario Hydro of water and sewers. It would really do the job that Dr. Barry initially told us it would be doing when it was set up when he met with a lot of us early in the middle '50s to announce this programme. But, unfortunately, the province has not gone ahead on that basis. They have really just had it as a financing operation for local municipalities.

The next point that I discussed with the minister was this matter of assistance to municipalities. With your delays in Malvern you not only had the problem of Scarborough not being able to get the trunks up to that area—and for that reason they are saying it is premature—but you also had the problem of Scarborough not knowing how to finance the programme. Scarborough's position in the early fifties, prior to Metro, had been desperate because low-cost housing had been allowed to develop, which is something that we need. Socially, it is something that we have got to encourage, but municipalities are fearful of getting a large amount of low-cost housing on which they cannot get industrial-commercial assessment in the early years to help cover the costs of the required services.

If you put in a subsidy programme along the lines that I suggested here, which would be based on the actual construction cost of a house, excluding the actual lot price, you could give a tremendous incentive to a municipality to approve low-cost housing and housing, period, because as houses get up in size, they are self-sufficient on the tax revenues for that particular residence. But the scheme that I suggested was one that would give the municipality the assistance to initially reduce the resistance that those of us who have sat on municipal councils have provided, or put up, against any undue amount of low-cost development or any undue amount of residential development, period.

We were concerned that we would get ourselves into a financial bind. We were concerned that we would be in the position that Pickering got itself into because it had so much residential development, without the necessary industrial assessment. When it got itself into a financial bind, it could not attract the industry. Industry was afraid to go in there. So I suggest that this position and $10 million along this line would give an awful lot of municipal encouragement in these areas of great pressure for development around this province. There are not too many municipalities that are faced with this problem, but there are a number in these high-pressure growth areas that we are talking about and those are the main points that I wanted to bring up.

The question of access is vital. If you are concerned about the area to the west of Toronto where Erin Mills and others are hanging on to the lands and you cannot get sites for your Ontario Housing, there are other sites available along the corridors that the province has suggested are suitable for development. But they do not have the services, or the municipality does not want them to go ahead, or they have not got access. Access is something the province has the means to control and this is something an aggressive programme for the provision of public transportation by the railway lines and other means would do a great deal to overcome.

The offering of building lots would not be confined to a limited area as it now is. You do not have it really opened up, but if there are 100,000 on the market for a 70,000 demand, that market price is going to change, especially if this province will aggressively follow that policy and say with no inhibitions, "We are going to see that there is more land on the market, serviced land, than there is demand."

You, with your own portfolio or your own holdings of thousands of acres of land, if that were serviced and put on the market in a hurry along with this policy, would soon prick that balloon of high-cost land that we have around this province.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Hear, hear!

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. member recognizes that where we have land we have assisted in providing water and sewer facilities to that lot if it is ready for development. I refer back to 1968 when we made a deal with former Chairman Allen to help prepay the services to Malvern in order to get Malvern on schedule, the way we suggested it should go.

Mr. Singer: Oh, come on. On schedule! You have been talking about Malvern since 1954, not since 1968.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I did not come here till 1963.

Mr. Singer: Malvern was first talked about by Tory cabinet ministers in 1954.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is all right. I was not here. We got it on schedule when I said it would go on schedule. I suggest we have done something with that work in Malvern. We are doing it, as you heard the other day, at Saltfleet in Hamilton.

I would like to get a copy of what the member said. I see you have been talking from notes. We will get a copy of Hansard and I will check your facts and figures out with my colleagues. I might suggest to you that you gave me two pages yesterday which were rather incomplete but I forwarded those to my colleagues and suggested that as soon as the estimates are over I would like to sit down and discuss this in more detail.

Today you have elaborated a little bit more, and I do not presume you have that written out, but if what you have said is in Hansard when we get finished here, I would certainly like to take a look at it.

I think there is merit in the idea. This is not the first time it has been suggested.

Mr. Deacon: I have talked about this for the last two years.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I suggested when I came here that water and sewer facilities could be a utility the same as Hydro or the gas company, and I think you may have some argument with some of the municipalities about selling out their services—

Mr. Deacon: They do not have to sell them—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I know.

Mr. Deacon: —but for any expansion they have got to have it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I say if you want to look at the whole gamut of services, some companies have spoken to us about taking care of all the service facilities in an area, such as garbage collection. There are companies available today in the United States who are making a business out of providing all services in some of these satellite communities. We have had a look at some of them.

I think perhaps over the next few years there will be greater attention paid to some of these recommendations, but as I suggest to the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to have a look at those facts and figures and check them out with my colleagues and see if there is any merit in proceeding on this basis.

Mr. Deacon: You see the problem you are talking about is, you are talking about helping Malvern, you are helping the one out at the west there but they are all small projects on a very small scale. I am talking about a massive scale.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am talking about Ontario in general.

Mr. Deacon: Right. And we are talking about the areas in which there is great pressure. Do you know that it took 14 years to build that water line between Lake Huron and London and the reason it took 14 years is that the Ontario government insisted on the municipalities signing these agreements that they would take so much water at a certain price in order that that project could be financed out? But the Ontario government did not get its money, based upon those agreements. This was not the same as the Trans-Canada Pipelines deal where the pipeline company had to have these contracts for the sale of the gas before it could get the money.

The Ontario government got the money on its own credit and could have gone to the municipalities and said, "Look, we are going to sell water and this is the rate we are going to sell this water at. We estimate your market is so much, but we are going to go ahead, we are not waiting for you to give us an agreement." They could have gone ahead and built that pipeline in a few months, not 14 years.

The Brampton sewer was the same problem. Brampton could not get sewage treatment. It was held up for years because of the tremendous amount of negotiating they had to carry out with municipalities. Even after they did, they had to have their agreement approved by another body, the Ontario

Municipal Board, because they are an obligation on those municipalities. The silly thing is that they are an obligation that absolutely does nothing to help the province raise the money. It is absolutely unnecessary from the province's point of view.

The province has control of where the planning is. They know the market demand. They can do a market survey. They can design all this and have control over it in a way that practically no other project builder can. They set up this Ontario Water Resources Commission with this end in view, they stated in the middle 1950s. Yet we are still talking about these piddling little projects here and there without really getting into the question and solving it.

I suggest that somebody who has been capable of coming in on some of the immense projects—and imagine the programmes that you have—is the one who has failed to date to seize upon the key to solving our housing problem. I really hope that you will look upon this thing, not as a little wee bit of a programme, but as an immense programme to solve the shortage of land on which we can build in this province.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Humber.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, I am a bit thrown off here by what my friend has just finished saying. I was all primed up to discuss Ontario Housing Corporation, but we sort of ran into municipal affairs and I think perhaps I will have to keep it on that vein perhaps I will have to see, now, how one can avoid it.

It seems to me that there are a number of aspects that have been discussed here, and a lot of aspects that have not. Primarily, this department is responsible for the Ontario Housing Corporation and not for the Ontario Water Resources Commission or anything of the like. It is not responsible for subdivision control, but since we have been on this point, I imagine we will have to continue because the Chairman allowed it.

I think the member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) was right in the first instance that this department is treating housing for the needy in a way that one would handle a filing cabinet—in other words, find a place to put them. The size aspect seems to be completely disregarded, and we are finding that a number of social ills are arising from this government's housing programme through the Ontario Housing Corporation.

The latest manifestation of this difficulty was recorded in the city of Toronto when the homeowners on Bain Avenue asked for fences to be put up to keep away Ontario Housing Corporation "instant slum" residents, as the headline, I believe in the Globe and Mail states. Yesterday there was also a report that Etobicoke has halted a housing project at Thistletown, because there just are not the proper social recreational facilities for the existing—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are not suggesting we put the fence up, are you?

Mr. Ben: I am not discussing the merits of the fences; I am not prepared to discuss what type of tenants you have in Ontario Housing Corporation projects on Bain Avenue. That is not the important point here. The important point is that until quite recently this department was taking no action to supply the necessary social amenities that had to go with this kind of problem. This department was concerning itself with solving a feasible problem, without in any way delving into the social problem to the degree that it itself has now created greater social problems.

I recall that at one time I favoured housing projects of the Regent Park type—until, at one stage, in preparation for a speech that I was going to make in the municipal council supporting such projects, I went and carried out some research to prove how these types of projects cut down on the need for health services, police protection and other needs of this nature. I was shocked to find that my illusions were completely shattered. Even though the Regent Park housing concept had cleared away what they call slums, there was absolutely no decrease in the crime rate in the area; there was absolutely no decrease in the need for social services, welfare services and other services of this type. All the Regent Park project had done was to change the physical area, but it had done nothing to change the social area. At that time, I became convinced that high-rise housing itself meant absolutely nothing unless you did something to correct the social aspects of the areas you were trying to improve.

I recall, when this department started to go out to buy apartments, I objected to it on two grounds. One, it was not doing anything to solve the housing crisis; all it was doing was shifting the housing crisis, or the burden of this crisis, from one group to another and in many cases, increasing the crisis. And, two, it was not doing anything at all to change the social environment in which these people were living.

One of the newspapers, in a kindness to me at that time—at one time they were kind to me—soft-pedalled what I was saying in reporting it, because they said the programme of this department, as they were led to believe, was that only 40 per cent of the accommodations in these apartments that were being bought by Ontario Housing Corporation would be turned over to subsidized housing, and in this way the people coming in would be brought into a new environment and perhaps eventually lose their need for subsidized housing.

At that time, I fell for that gambit. Now I know that it is not true, and that this department has completely lost sight of the social aspects of low-cost housing. It ought to do more than just supply the filing cabinet that the hon. member for Parkdale was mentioning; it ought also to supply needed social services so that the people can be upgraded physically, morally and mentally. In this regard, this department has failed miserably. It has now started to buy some apartments that have gymnasiums and swimming pools. They are always there with the fire hose after the barn has burned down, and when they do bring the fire hose, they forget to bring the water anyway. But that is their particular attitude on these things.

Out in Etobicoke, the appalling thing was that Etobicoke found out that the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation had sold 10 acres of project-owned land to private developers, without even asking them if perhaps Etobicoke could use—

Hon. Mr. Randall: We never sold the property.

Mr. Ben: I did not say you sold the property. I said Central Mortgage and Housing sold the property.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They have not sold it yet.

Mr. Ben: Well, it is reported that they did sell it.

Mr. P. R. Goyette (Ontario Housing Corporation): It is not consummated yet.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is not consummated yet.

Mr. Goyette: But an offer has been accepted.

Hon. Mr. Randall: There is an offer in; I understand that it has not been consummated.

Mr. Ben: But there was no agreement?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know whether there was or not; I just read the press, the same as you did.

Mr. Ben: Well, then, why do you say it is not sold?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Because you are very definite it is, and I am not definite it is.

Mr. Ben: You are pretty definite it has not been sold. And for this reason they stopped the rezoning, because there were no social community recreational facilities to handle the existing youngsters in that area, without the social problems being aggravated by another 240 units going in there.

Now there is a survey on the troubled child—we do not call it mental illness any more—in Etobicoke and the mental health association estimates that in Etobicoke, as elsewhere, about 10 per cent of the youngster population is what we call troubled.

But they point out that in some areas it goes as high as 30 per cent. One of these areas would be the Thistletown housing development area. If any place needs the social services it is the Thistletown area, and here we have the shocking situation where Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation entered into an agreement to sell that land without even asking Etobicoke or even asking you. At least, I trust you would tell me if they asked you.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We heard about it, yes.

Mr. Ben: You mean you heard about this before they entered into agreement with the developer, and you did not try to buy it?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We heard about it.

Mr. Ben: You did not try to buy it, and you heard about it before—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I said yes, we heard about it.

Mr. Ben: Did you hear about it before they entered into the agreement to sell, or after?

Mr. Goyette: So that we are not playing on semantics here, this sale is being arranged by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, which is a federal partner. To this extent the province is involved—25 per cent participation.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Twenty-five per cent.

Mr. Goyette: Now this land, the 10 acres that you are talking about, has always been zoned for the purpose for which it is being sold and it was zoned this way in concert with the municipality.

Indeed, at one time we ourselves, and I am using the word “we,” as the partnership represented by CMHC, wanted to have a little extra social amenity in there and we were discouraged from doing this.

Mr. Ben: By whom?

Mr. Goyette: By the borough. Just to keep this record straight, there were 500 acres there, and we are now down to only 190 acres of residential land. The partnership sold to the borough, at below market value, land for industrial and hospital use; it sold 61 acres to school boards and I think there are about eight school sites in there, which is much higher than the proportion around.

There were 65 acres that went to the conservation authority. There were 27.86 acres that went for public park purposes, which is well above, I think, the five per cent. Then there was the land that went for multiple senior citizens, singles and semis.

At one time it was our hope that we might have been able to put in 1,000 units—out of the 2,600 units, 1,000 might have been public housing, because the intent at that time was it would be a mixed integrated community. We concluded by ending up with just over 500; about 550 units are public housing and the rest are private.

So the piece of land you are talking about, for which an offer has been accepted, subject to certain things happening, is quite in conformity with the zoning and people certainly know about that. I think there are some people, some individuals—and my impression is it might be social planning persons or one of the associations—who feel that maybe they personally were not aware of this, but I think this was well known at the time. To go one step further, it was 35 units to the acre residential—

Mr. Ben: Twenty-four.

Mr. Goyette: Thirty-five is my information.

Mr. Ben: Twenty-four is mine.

Mr. Goyette: All right. There is other zoning allowed in the institutional or the commercial use. We are selling it as is. If the developer chooses to apply for a higher zoning, that is his concern. We find, too, that the density there—and I think this seems to be the problem why some people think there should not be any more housing on a site which has been designed for private rental housing and not public housing—is only about seven units to the acre, which is not any higher than the surrounding area.

Just to get our position clear on this, the zoning on that land has been well established. It was put together, as you know, by consultants and others, and it is interesting how this started off. It has more amenity conservation and public space than most of the things we are involved in. I might say there is a community church site that has not been built on. At the same time, there is a six-acre site on Mount Albion, which was disposed of to the municipality for the very purposes that some people are talking about now.

Mr. Ben: When?

Mr. Goyette: This would be several years ago. On it now they have, I believe, only the pool, and there is a room for a rink and some other amenities. The kind of social amenities that people might want to have, (a) could be put on that six-acre site, or, (b) could be put in in concert with the developers who have agreed to make some office space available in the commercial space.

I attended the meeting personally. One has the impression that the real issue is not the social amenities. If that is really what they want, I think they could be accommodated. I think there is some concern that the density of housing might be higher. I repeat, it is seven to the acre in that area, which is somewhat lower than what is found in the adjacent area.

That is the information that I have which I obtained from our federal partner.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, if I may continue, just to correct the learned gentleman—or perhaps we may both be some place down the middle—the area at present can take 240 units, which would be 24 an acre. You may be right in that you have to give up part of the acre for roads and lights, but the 10 acres at the present time is zoned for only 240 units. The developer was asking for 410 units. A survey in there shows that in the Greenholme neighbourhood area, there are 2,876 children and the teenage population is 412 and will be 1,114 in five years on the basis of the population.

It is easy for you to say that there is land there to provide these social amenities, but there are not those social amenities. What you are saying is it is okay for you to use all the resources at your disposal, throw tens of thousands of people into an area and then say to the municipality, "Here, build them the necessary social amenities".

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let us get the figures straight. Let us not have that "tens of thousands", because you have lost a decimal point somewhere. The man just pointed out to you that he is talking about 240 units. That is not "tens of thousands" of people.

Mr. Ben: Oh, now, come off it. You are talking about the 10 acres. We are talking about—

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have already pointed out that we have supplied the land to the township for the amenities you are talking about. But now what you are asking us to do again is supply the same kind of land, more land, for the same thing. When does the taxpayer win in this deal?

Mr. Ben: I am not saying that you should supply the land; I am saying you should supply the facilities, if you throw all those people in there—and do not try to wiggle out of it—

Hon. Mr. Randall: We are not trying to wiggle out of anything. The facilities are there.

Mr. Ben: —to that 10-acre bit. There were 600 acres in there originally, it was just stated. You gave away—

Hon. Mr. Randall: There were 1,000 acres in there.

Mr. Ben: All right, but your project started with 600-and-some-odd acres. What was the exact figure there?

Mr. Goyette: How we started with 500, is that your question?

Mr. Ben: Well, no, you started with a figure of some 600-odd acres. Is that what you started with?

Mr. Goyette: No, I started with 500.

Mr. Ben: Okay, 500. You gave away about 100 of that.

Mr. Goyette: We gave away about 310.

Mr. Ben: Three hundred and ten. What did you do with the rest?

Mr. Goyette: The rest is in housing.

Mr. Ben: All right. How many units are there?

Mr. Goyette: I think we have about—

Mr. Ben: If you put that microphone down, you do not have to keep bobbing up and down.

Mr. Goyette: Well, they have asked me unfortunately to stay with the microphone—this is recorded—my figure, Mr. Chairman, is that there are about 2,596 units, give or take.

Mr. Ben: Okay.

Mr. Goyette: And the overall density I quoted around seven. Now, I concede that on the 10-acre site—yes, my figures they gave me were something in the order of about 259 units, 240, whatever it goes, and they were asking for 370, which I believe—

Mr. Ben: Was it not 410?

Mr. Goyette: Well, I only have 370 myself, which I understand they are now probably going to withdraw.

Mr. Ben: All right. Well, how many people live on those acreages you developed, in those 2,600 units?

Mr. Goyette: I guess I would multiply it by, what, four? There are private and public; whatever you get, there are about four persons to the family at the most, three or four.

Mr. Ben: For a town of 10,000, do you not think you ought to have put in the facilities that you are now building for your housing units or that you are buying with your housing units? You were warding off criticism that you were buying units that had swimming pools, gymnasiums and the like. We were not criticizing you for that, but if you were warding off criticism and you were justifying your conduct, why was such conduct not justifiable five or 10 years ago?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, I will tell you why it was not. It is only in the last month that the federal government through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has agreed to a request of ours to include community facilities in their financing.

The first requisite we had in building houses was shelter at any cost. When we started in 1965 to build public housing—and we now house 112,000 people in this province—the first priority was shelter at any cost, and the second was, what kind of shelter. Now today, after the task force report and after recommendations from us, Central Mortgage and Housing, your government in Ottawa, the federal government, is now recognizing that funds should be supplied for these community facilities.

So it is not entirely the responsibility of this government or the housing corporation to go out and provide those facilities if there is no financial arrangement made with the banker who gets his money back.

Mr. Ben: Oh, tell me, who did you pass the buck to when you—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Wait a minute now, I am not passing the buck at all, I think you should listen to the facts. Listen to the facts, my friend, and do not go back five years and say, "You should have built these amenities."

Mr. Ben: I will agree with you that the federal government did not supply the funds or its share of the funds to do these things, but, tell me, was that an excuse for not doing it? Whose community were you planning? Were you planning the federal government's community or were you planning an Ontario government community?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me ask you a question: If we gave away, I think 310 acres here, costing the federal and provincial governments X number of dollars, and then we put housing on there and they paid 50 per cent of the subsidy, and if they said, "You went ahead and built these facilities and did not put housing on there, so we will not pay a nickel toward that increased subsidy because you have used up the land for community facilities," I ask you, do the people of Ontario want to absorb that burden? The answer is no.

Mr. Ben: Let me tell you something, smart guy. You caught yourself talking out of both sides of your face. When the hon. member for Parkdale was speaking and pointed out that 90 per cent of the money has been coming from Ottawa, you said: "And we get back every cent with interest". This is what you said.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right.

Mr. Ben: Is it not right?

Hon. Mr. Randall: He is absolutely right.

Mr. Ben: Okay, fine. Just a second, then.

Hon. Mr. Randall: He is absolutely right.

Mr. Ben: If that is the way you do it, it means that the money is coming eventually from the people who live there. Why, then, could you not have been putting in these facilities and having them paid for over the 40 years that you are paying for them at the present time?

Mr. Chairman, to the minister, the money that the Ontario government is putting up for housing also comes back to it, every cent with interest. So there was no doggone bloody excuse for you avoiding these responsibilities.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Not at all.

Mr. Ben: You are right, not at all. I am glad you admit it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The hooker, my friend, is very simple; that federal government always holds a threat that the 50 per cent subsidy to pick up—the subsidy for the people—would not be paid if we did not conform to Central Mortgage and Housing standards and bylaws.

Mr. Ben: And what, sir, prevented you from buying an additional five acres outside the unit land and putting up a community centre? What stopped you, sir, from putting a swimming pool in there?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Just the taxpayers' money.

Mr. Ben: Just the taxpayers' money? All week it has been cry, cry, cry. To hell with the taxpayers' health; to heck with their welfare; to heck if we are raising a generation of troubled children. It is always the taxpayers' money and it is always pass the buck to Ottawa.

I was at the borough of York the other day and they were crying the same way, that the provincial government should do this, the federal government should do this. I said to them, "Boys, you are getting to the point, the way you are always trying to get somebody else to do something, where eventually, as municipal politicians, you are going to have no responsibility except picking up garbage and paving potholes." Do you know what is happening with you? If you keep passing the buck, all you are going to be doing is doing what the municipalities should be doing. The federal government is going to be exercising your responsibilities. And all of us—

Mr. Chairman: Let us get back to the estimates.

Mr. Ben: All right, we will get back to the estimates.

Mr. Chairman: Have you finished, member for Humber?

Mr. Ben: We have not got away from the thing because—

Mr. Chairman: Are you finished?

Mr. Ben: I am not finished; I have not even warmed up yet.

Mr. Chairman: Then keep to the estimates and you will get warmed up.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: I am not speaking for the press. I am speaking for the benefit of old hard-head there.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is a good job somebody is hard-headed if you are spending the taxpayers' money, the way you throw it away.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: You did not take that as offensive, did you?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not think it is offensive. Go ahead and insult me, I am too ignorant, I never notice it.

Mr. Ben: Now, you said it, I did not.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, this has been the trouble with the whole concept. You are just creating concrete filing cabinets, shoving them in without any consideration for what effect it is going to have on them. In the meantime, the whole housing situation is critical because you do not really carry out your function. You call yourself Ontario Housing Corporation but it seems to me that the sole function seems to be Ontario subsidized housing.

You are doing nothing to keep down the cost of housing, generally, for the people of the province of Ontario. There are many ways that things could be done to drive down housing costs. I do not believe in nationalizing the property as was suggested by one of our colleagues. I believe it was the member for Peterborough (Mr. Pitman). There are ways that you could do it without so doing.

For example, I believe that the Ontario Housing Corporation could buy large areas of land in Pickering, in northern Markham, northern Vaughan and Whitchurch; that this land should be divided as land should be subdivided in good community planning. That is, there should be lots of varying sizes anywhere for 25-foot widths for semis to large lots for large homes and apartments of varying size and density. I think, thirdly, that we ought to get away from this concept that each house should have its own land and, perhaps, give consideration to the old English concept of the village common, where you have certain communal land and you have the houses built around it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We think The Condominium Act will do that.

Mr. Ben: The condominium is not quite this concept. I am thinking of a large open space in the centre where, you might say, the houses are built around a common and the common serves as a general area. I believe that one thing that has driven up the cost of houses is the fact that municipalities insist that subdividers put in all the services such as paved roads, sidewalks, storm and sanitary sewers and curbs and insist that the subdivider pay for those.

In other words, the municipalities found themselves in financial difficulties and (a) they stopped putting them on local improvements; (b) when they threw the burden on the subdivider, they made him put in all the services at once. In many, many areas there were no sidewalks and people do not want them. I do not have sidewalks in my area and I have a storm ditch. The road is not of the type that is now asked for by communities, that is with a six-inch concrete base on top of which is a four-inch layer of asphalt, all of which rests in turn on another four to six inches of gravel. To ask that all of that be put in and then have the home buyer pay for it is ridiculous.

This kind of stuff can be done in a number of ways: One, this government can do it and have it done on an amortization basis. I will use the words "amortization basis" as distinct from a local improvement basis because normally, under local improvement, these services are paid for in seven to 10 years, usually 7½ years in the Toronto area. I am thinking of an amortization basis of 20 to 30 years, which is closer to the life of the project than is the 7½ years.

Also, with the government doing this subdivision—putting in these services—they need not put in all these services at once. In other words, they do not have to put in the roads that I have just described, they do not have to put in the curbs, they do not have to put in the sidewalks, all of which the poor home-buyer has to pay for immediately he purchases a home. It is added on to the price; it is included in his mortgage. It means you have to have more and more money for mortgages and the like. So this would be one way of cutting down on it.

Thirdly—and in this particular respect I may not be ad idem with my friend from York Centre, the previous speaker—I believe that one way of solving the situation if you are going to subdivide all the lands I have mentioned and keep the cost down low, is to make use of the package sewage treatment plant. If you do not use the package sewage treatment plant you are going to obviate the one thing that I am trying to avoid, that is, leap-frogging all the land that is held by the speculators along the periphery of Metropolitan Toronto and other large cities.

There are hundreds of acres of land on both sides of Steeles Avenue which at the present time are not developed; they are being held by speculators. My suggestion is to go to the northern extremities of Markham, Vaughan, into Whitchurch and into Pickering, so that we will bypass all this. If you are going to drag up the services to serve these areas from the lake, then you are going to be servicing this land, and the idea of bypassing it is to drive down the cost—the value—of this land or force them to subdivide it now. If you are going to drag all those services in there, they are just going to bide their own time. You are improving the value of their land, and it is going to go higher.

Furthermore, after you bypass this land you must assess it at its highest potential use. I remember A. J. D. Gray who used to be an assessor for the city of Toronto. He was preaching for years trying to get the government to permit Metropolitan Toronto to assess land for its highest potential use. No way. If we would have had such assessment these people could not have been able to keep the land for five or ten years and have it increase in value.

In this regard—I cannot remember whether it was my friend from Parkdale or my friend from York Centre—I take exception to any developer who has kept land too long since the war. It has just not gone down in value, save and except in certain areas where the increment or increase of value was artificial. I refer specifically to the area around Milton, where the speculators who were in there drove up the price of the land on the conjecture that it was going to be a huge satellite city and it turned out that it was just a small area development. The value of the rest of the land collapsed.

A second example is in Streetsville where E. P. Taylor and his combine went in and it turned out that they were buying hundreds of acres for a huge development, which is starting to come into effect now, and all the land around there just shot up in value. People lost their shirts when it was discovered that only a certain area was being developed. That was speculative land. It was not being held for development at all. A lot of those people suffered.

After these lands are subdivided, I feel that the boundaries of Metropolitan Toronto should be moved to take in this land. People of Metropolitan Toronto may squawk, taking in all this area, but one reason why the municipalities that I have mentioned will object to this subdivision is the high cost of education.

In Vaughan, for example, last time I spoke with them they told me that a home has to be valued at $48,000 before they will recover their educational costs for one child. And they oppose new development going in there, unless it is costly redevelopment, because every time they put in a unit and a child has to go to school it costs the existing taxpayers more money. In keeping with this, the government will just have to pick up the tab for education in Ontario, otherwise the municipalities are going to continue to oppose this extension.

In Toronto, as you have read in the paper, the mill rate for general purposes in the city of Toronto actually was less than it was the year before. Nevertheless, taxes on a home assessed for $5,000 are going up over $45 because of costs for Metro. It is educational costs that keep getting out of hand and not the general operating costs.

This way we can spread the load for the 200,000 over the people in Metropolitan Toronto, and we will make this thing more feasible. Of course, there are some friends around here who would oppose strenuously the boundaries of Metro being expanded, but then I guess that is open for argument and conjecture.

You cannot just shove these subdivisions out there unless you also supply the necessary transportation facilities. You have to have a composite transportation system which, to my mind, is composed of both rapid transit and expressways. You cannot funnel everybody into one line of thought, nor to one transportation line.

In that regard, if I may just digress here, I just arrived at a new definition of a hypocrite. That is a person who drives all over town with a "Stop Spadina Expressway" sticker on his bumper.

At any rate, you have got to supply the necessary transportation facilities. If you have to subdivide lands to the degree that people who are presently holding land between the land that you will be subdividing and Metro will find it economically disadvantageous to continue to hold on to that land. They will have to start subdividing it, and subdividing it immediately, and as you yourself know, since you represent big business here, competition is the best way—

Hon. Mr. Randall: And small business.

Mr. Ben: Small business?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Big business and small business.

Mr. Ben: The darned trouble with you is you have graduated from big business, to small business, to monkey business.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I started with small business though.

Mr. Ben: At any rate, you are the one who preaches competition. You create the competition. Only you have the money, through the help of the federal government, to buy land in such large acreages. Only you have the money to do the proper subdivision and to bring in the services. Only you have the money to—again, through the help of the federal government—supply necessary mortgage funds.

You are in the mortgage business now, and I applaud you, by the way, for so doing. You have supplied money at considerably lower than the prevailing rates on these condominiums. I do not know if anybody has patted you on the back for that. Have they?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, they never pat me on the back.

Mr. Ben: You turn around, I will pat you on the back.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No matter what I do, I get a kick in the fanny.

Mr. Ben: No, I must compliment you. I have seen some of your 8.5 per cent mortgages.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am almost scared to bend over these days.

Mr. Ben: You admit that it has had some kind of an effect and an increase in this kind of situation could only increase the effect and bring housing more within the means of the average wage-earner.

I am going to try to end up, but I just want to say this. I am deeply disturbed that this department has not put enough emphasis on the non-physical aspects of housing. It is true that adequate housing at reasonable price is totally lacking in many areas, but just as they say that a man cannot live by bread alone, I am sure it holds that man cannot live simply because he has got a brand new sparkling apartment alone. There are other things that keep us going.

Unfortunately, this has been too much disregarded in the past. We are doing nothing to improve—well, I keep on saying “the moral situation.” Everybody thinks that I have become a clergyman, which I am not. But the fact is that there are other things that have to be looked after. There are mental needs, there are social needs that also have to be looked after, and not enough of this has been done in the past.

As I say, I am happy you are doing that now. You are starting to supply some of these facilities and some people in the community will accuse you of wasting money on frills. Believe me, they are not. These are something that I hope is going to produce a better citizen in the long run, but I would suggest that you had better start supplying these services to the existing units that you have spread out throughout Ontario.

I am not satisfied for you to report that there are so many thousands of units under construction and so many more thousands are planned. That does not stir me at all. It is when I hear you say that you are putting up a unit that contains these facilities, and these facilities, then I say, “Maybe the guy has got something under that—there may be snow on the roof, but there is still fire in the hearth.” I am going to leave it at that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Chairman, may I just answer a couple of things that the hon. member mentioned? First of all, I think in the press today one of the ministers in New Brunswick accused Ontario of using 93.5 per cent of all the funds available since 1963 to date and the man is absolutely right. Ontario has got an economy that can afford to take advantage of federal programmes. Sure, we used all the money they had available. The first time I talked to the first housing minister—the chap who lived in North Bay who died; I cannot think of his name—

Mr. Goyette: Mr. Garland.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Garland. He said, “I have got half a billion dollars for housing and nobody will take a dime out of it,” so I tried my best to take every dime I had while it lasted and succeeding federal ministers found that I was very receptive to any monies they had available.

We recognize that it has to be shared with the other provinces and if they can come into the housing picture, we are quite prepared to see them come in. In fact, we have helped many of them set up a housing programme.

The second thing, Mr. Chairman, is that we recognize the difficulty of some of the municipal bylaws and we are not interested in gold-plated services either. In some of the smaller towns we have got them to agree that they do not need sidewalks, they can use storm ditches and what-have-you. I live with those myself in York Mills. I had a septic tank in York Mills; I know they work very well. You would not get away with it today around Metro Toronto as you can recognize.

As far as the package plants are concerned, regardless of what you say, there are still major septic tanks and it is my understanding from talking to the former Minister of Health, the member for Ontario (Mr. Dymond), and others, that no matter what happens to the treatment of that sewage, when it comes into the pond where it is eventually dumped, or into the Credit or into the Don, it retains a nutrient that creates pollution and this is one reason why the water resources commission has been very reluctant to permit package plants in areas such as Vaughan and Markham. I have talked about this with engineers and with our people for the last three years.

Mr. Ben: The point is—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I just want to finish. The point is that I think I said in my submission that package plants could do a better job than septic tanks for the time being, provided we knew that eventually, as my friend, the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), has said, sewers and water will be available in those areas. We have talked along those lines, hoping that it could be a way to house many thousands of people in an area today that is unproductive—perhaps the north part of Metro.

Mr. Ben: If I may just interrupt you. I thank you for answering these things, but I would point out that the treatment plants in Metro Toronto, which also service the Bramalea area, do not take the nutrient out of the sewage. It goes in there with just as much nutrient as would a package plant; no more, no less, for that matter.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The only thing is the water resources commission does not want any more of them.

Mr. Ben: Well, the fact is it is no worse than the existing sewage treatment plants, and I might point out that the secondary treatment plants in the metropolitan area, after they treat the sewage—and this subject may not be to some people's taste—the water that leaves the treatment plant is safe enough to drink; it is chlorinated and safe enough to drink. It is cloudy, but if you let it stand so the sediment settles, it is just like the water that comes out of a tap, because it is so treated. And I would suggest that the package treatment plant could also offer the same type of treatment to the effluent going through there. Our sewage here is a mile out in the lake—the pipes go away out that distance—but it is still treated to that degree, and the Ontario Water Resources Commission now requires that. I am sorry I interrupted you.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The last point I wanted to make was on land accumulation. As you recognize, the federal government had some problems, and we recognize them too, as regards funds being available. This year alone we are putting up nearly $23 million on our own to buy land in the province of Ontario, and the federal government has put up $13 million. This is all they have to spend. We know they have some problems, and they are trying to share it across the country. But what I am trying to point up is that over the past years I think we must have spent almost $50 million in provincial money in land assembly in order to continue on with housing, particularly the HOME programme, because the federal authorities were not prepared to participate.

We have not neglected the fact that we should do something for ourselves, but there is a limit on how much money is available. I just give you those figures to indicate that we put up almost twice as much this year as the federal government, recognizing they have some problems. But we do not have all the money to do all the things we would like to do.

Mr. Ben: How many single-family dwellings have you bought in the last year?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have not bought any, because what has happened, as you will recall, is that about a year ago, I think it was, the federal government said they would be prepared to come back into the business of letting us buy units already built, as we started to do back in 1965 before we got our housing programme started. Then, later on, in talking to them, we pointed out that in the city of Toronto there is less than two per cent vacancy in apartments and if we went out buying apartments, I think all we would have done would have been to jack up the rents for the people who have to rent apartments at the present time. I think we would have created another shortage in apartment living almost overnight. If that was five per cent, which is harder to get to, then I think we could have moved in and bought some units, be it single-family or town housing or apartments, as we did up in Flemingdon Park.

Mr. Ben: When you started to buy apartments in the metropolitan area, the vacancy rate was less than one per cent.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Not necessarily.

Mr. Ben: But that is not the point I was trying to make —

Hon. Mr. Randall: In any event, I do not think that with the shortage of mortgage money today for the private developer, as you know, a lot of housing has been cut back, particularly the private developer's housing. And we would be making a mistake for the people who are depending on private agreements or private leases to go out and buy up any excess housing that is available today.

Mr. Ben: The reason I am asking about buying private single-family homes is that I believe that children of large families or growing families ought not to be in these concrete filing cabinets. If they have more than three children, then definitely you ought to be seeking private dwellings for them scattered throughout the community. I do not think that raising four children in an apartment in some concrete high-rise is in the best interests of those children.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think you would find most of those people are now going into town housing and condominiums. There are very few people—

Mr. Ben: Condominiums and town housing, yes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Ben: I think you should distinguish because you are assisting in some condominiums and town houses. In that I concur. I just do not concur in having them in high-rises. Whether it be condominium or not, is—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think most of our people are going into town houses; not too many going into high-rises. We recognize you cannot put families in high-rise apartments; that is, big families. We are putting adult families into apartments in some cases, but not with small children.

Mr. Ben: Have you any units, high-rise units, in a high-rise development which are reserved exclusively for senior citizens?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am sorry, I did not hear that.

Mr. Ben: Do you have any buildings in subsidized housing complexes where such buildings are reserved exclusively for senior citizens without children or with no children living in them, while in other buildings in that complex children are allowed? Do you understand what I am trying to say?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, you mean having it mixed in some buildings?

Mr. Ben: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Ben: Do you have such—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think we can point out that the 250 Davenport Road property where the George Hees plant was is all adult people—single and couples, primarily without children. There may be a son or a daughter of adult age, but there are no children in that building whatsoever. That was brought out when somebody said, "Well, you are putting children in there with no school facilities." We pointed out they are all senior citizens in that area. In the city here, as you recognize, we do not build senior citizens units in the city. They are built by Metro at the present time. Metro is looking after senior citizens.

Mr. Ben: I am afraid you lost the point there, Mr. Minister. What I would like to see is an area that is developed for subsidized housing like the Ontario Housing Corporation complex. Let us say that there may be ten high-rises or five high-rises in one large area. But in that complex, one building would be reserved exclusively for people without children. In other words, if the senior citizens wish to remain in the community where there were children around, they could do so without necessarily having children living in their building.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mrs. Meredith would point out that that does happen. Mrs. Meredith, would you like to make a comment on that?

Mrs. B. Meredith (Ontario Housing Corporation): Mr. Chairman, I am not quite sure of the question. I am not sure of the situation in a planned community where there is public housing. For instance, we will take Warden Woods, if I may, in Scarborough. The Ontario Housing Corporation has both row houses and high-rises for families, but the Metropolitan Housing Company Limited has a senior citizens' building within the same area.

Now in Metro Toronto, as the minister explained, Metropolitan Toronto Housing Company Limited, is responsible for all senior citizens, but Ontario Housing Corporation has one adult building in Metro Toronto at 250 Davenport road, with 540 approximately units, which is confined entirely, and housed entirely by adults. Was that your question?

Mr. Ben: It is all right. Is there, for the sake of an example, an area that you have developed, where you put up five apartment buildings? You could call it six or seven if you want to. I just stopped at five, all in a group. Was one of those buildings, it could be a 12-storey building, reserved exclusively for people without children?

Mrs. Meredith: That would be outside Metro Toronto, sir.

Mr. Ben: Where?

Mrs. Meredith: In Hamilton, or almost any place outside of Metropolitan Toronto. Then you have 41 municipalities and then you also have those particular buildings that are exclusive for adults only.

Mr. Ben: And they are surrounded by buildings which are mixed?

Mrs. Meredith: Yes, we have in several areas, mixed. In fact, Kitchener is one of them. We did have several conferences when we asked senior citizens if they would prefer this mixed. It had been suggested that the older people might like to live in an area where there were families, but separated. It was the older people who requested that they not live in the same municipality. In Windsor, for instance, we did go into this. Windsor is an excellent example.

Hon. Mr. Randall: One other thing, in our breakdown of the people on the waiting list, 68 per cent require bachelor, one-bedroom and two-bedroom. When a man builds an apartment house, as you can recognize, to get the economies of space, he has to make different size apartments in order to utilize the square footage allowed him for an apartment house. Then there is 22.4 per cent for three bedrooms, 7.3 for four bedrooms and 2.7 for five bedrooms. The great majority of people who are looking for accommodation today, are not necessarily people with large families.

They are people, maybe, elderly people or people without children or maybe one youngster, and 68 per cent of those people on the waiting list break down under those categories. To give some indication—if we are building a building, and I think this is so for almost every apartment you can think of, the builder, in utilizing the space available to him in that particular square footage, will build different bedroom counts. If we do have a mix in there it is because of the fact that we get a different bedroom count.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Minister, if we follow the reasoning, and I see those figures and this is what prompted me to raise the points. Since barely 10 per cent, just over 10 per cent, require the latter two kinds of accommodation, why not supply that accommodation by buying single-family homes, three- or four-bedroom homes, because that is what is required? In these apartments the space that would be required to house such families could, in fact, supply three bachelor or one-bedroom areas.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We think we are supplying that 10 per cent in our condominium programmes today quicker than we could if we went out and bought units on the open market.

Mr. Ben: Come on.

Hon. Mr. Randall: All right. You can take a look at it, but I just suggest to you that when you look at the mix, everybody thinks that public housing houses people with flocks of youngsters, which is not quite true. As I pointed out to you, the majority of people do not have youngsters but they have major economic problems; that is why they are on the waiting list.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have a whole series of questions I would like to ask the minister and then a short comment to make.

May I ask of the minister how soon the residents of the Glengarry Court apartments can expect the additional amenities? For example, two years ago they asked for approximately $130,000 worth of amenities which included a substantial park in the area, which has been provided; plus athletic facilities, including a swimming pool, shuffleboard courts, and a day-care centre. Now that day-care centre is not available, they have asked for some type of a common facility which they could convert to a day-care centre, and meeting rooms. When can they expect these facilities to be provided for them?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do you want me to answer it now?

Mr. B. Newman: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Riggs, would you make a comment on that for the member, please?

Mr. R. W. Riggs (Ontario Housing Corporation): Mr. Chairman, with the announcement from Ottawa on the new regulations concerning amenities and facilities, we entered into negotiations with the Windsor housing authority who are responsible for the administration of that project. We are now working out a programme which will be submitted to Central Mortgage concerning the expenditure of funds concerning the various facets of this programme and the time in which it is to be implemented. This will be done as quickly as possible with the Windsor housing authority's board of directors and inspectors.

Mr. B. Newman: When Mr. Riggs mentions "as quickly as possible," what does he have in mind, as far as time involved is concerned? From your experience with other areas how long a period of time do you foresee or envisage?

Mr. Riggs: In working out the programme, which would be the first phase, sir, I would think in terms of three months. In terms of implementation, this is partly at the discretion of the federal government, and I would not like to say at this time how long it will take for it is a major programme such as we know it to be.

Mr. B. Newman: All right. May I ask of the minister whether he has looked into the use of the Prince Edward Hotel as housing for senior citizens?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. I think that I will—

Mr. B. Newman: May I have your answer Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think that our people have looked into it and I think Mr. Riggs is the man responsible if we take it over, to tell you what we found wrong with it and what we find right with it. Would you like to comment, Mr. Riggs?

Mr. Riggs: The Prince Edward Hotel is one of the longevity hotels in the city of Windsor. It is a very large structure, a very old structure and it is on a very important corner in your municipality. The cost of renovating the building, converting it into reasonable-sized accommodation, would, in our cost estimate, exceed the cost of erecting a new building and putting in amenities in keeping with the recommendations of both this government and the federal government in recent pronouncements. At this point, it is an economic consideration and one which has the greatest bearing on any possible purchase of that property.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, if I may ask Mr. Riggs, how about if only a portion of the building was taken over, one or two floors so that you could accommodate the tremendous need for senior citizens and other types of housing in the community, rather than get involved in a very expensive complete refurbishing of the hotel?

Hon. Mr. Randall: You know that there are 400 suites going up there now?

Mr. B. Newman: I beg your pardon?

Hon. Mr. Randall: You know there are 400 suites, I believe, going up there now?

Mr. B. Newman: Yes. Likewise, I know there are 732 needed. I should not say 732. There are 1,132 additional senior citizens housing units needed, according to your recent survey, and 736 family units. So you see, we are not even close to meeting the demand. My thought is that, if it is economically possible at all to take over some portion of the hotel—if not the entire hotel—the department should certainly look into it and implement or provide this type of housing for the senior citizens. It is no good having the facility just dry-rotting on the corner of Park Street and Ouellette. I am sure that someone eventually is going to take it over. According to Mr. Riggs, it is not economically possible or feasible for the provincial government to take it over.

Has the department looked into the possible use in the community of St. Mary's Academy for housing or the Redemptorist College? Both of these are going to be phased out within the next year, or so, and also their substantial institutions and buildings. I do not know if they would lend themselves to housing, but if they would lend themselves, I certainly think that they could fulfil part of the need in the community. Could I have Mr. Riggs, maybe, provide me with an answer to that?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Talk about the hotel, sir, as well.

Mr. Riggs: I think the corporation has looked at two hotels in Windsor.

Mr. B. Newman: The Prince Edward and the Norton-Palmer?

Mr. Riggs: Yes, sir. We have also examined the liability economically of St. Mary's Academy. It is somewhere well in excess of 40 years of age, and once again would require great expense in remodelling.

Mr. B. Newman: No, it is only 30 years old.

Mr. Riggs: In looking into it now, once again there are extensive renovations to be made to turn it into senior citizens accommodation.

On your other point, I think in our conversations with municipal officials in the city of Windsor, combinations of leasing suites would always be a consideration, so long as the use of the building could be changed from what it is today. The suggestion that you have made, of possible utilization of a building which has been renovated by private interests, which I think is what you were inferring, sir, would not be impossible, and that could probably be very adaptable to getting additional units in Windsor and various locations.

Mr. B. Newman: You did not make any mention of the use of the Redemptorist College there.

Mr. Riggs: I do not think, to the best of my knowledge, that particular property has been brought to our attention.

Mr. B. Newman: Can I ask you, then, to look into it? I do not know if it is available at all at the present moment, but it will be within a year, I understand.

Hon. Mr. Randall: How much acreage is in it, do you know?

Mr. B. Newman: My interest is housing for not only senior citizens, but housing generally in the community.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do you know how much acreage this is?

Mr. B. Newman: I beg your pardon?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do you know how much acreage this place is sitting on?

Mr. B. Newman: No, I am not familiar with that.

Mr. Riggs: I will certainly look into it.

Mr. B. Newman: May I then also ask the minister, if the department is, at the present moment, building up a land bank in the community for future housing developments?

Mr. Goyette: Yes, we have got serviced land, which at the moment is almost a form of land banking. There is an adequate supply for anybody who wants it at the Fontainebleau subdivision. Secondly, we have acquired another acreage; we do have some land banking, there is some over by the railroad on the east side. But we do have land banking, sir.

Mr. B. Newman: If we are going to place any credence in the Doxiadis report on the megalopolis concept of the development from Milwaukee right through to Quebec City, we are going to need housing as the area is going to expand tremendously within the foreseeable future.

To prevent the continuous rise in the cost of land, it would probably be in the best interests of all concerned if the province would at this time attempt to purchase or take options to purchase large tracts of land just outside the present boundaries of the city of Windsor, perhaps, and hold them for future development. Has the department any of this concept in mind at the present time? Are you preparing for the Doxiadis concept of the megalopolis—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, to be honest with you, I do not think we have gone that far, looking at the Doxiadis report. I suppose one of these days it will be given consideration, but at the present time, no, we are not looking at it.

Mr. B. Newman: Has the minister ever given consideration to a rent subsidy programme for senior citizens? As it is today a senior citizen is subsidized when he gets into government housing. A lot of them who are unable to get into housing, as a result are being penalized—those who get into senior citizens housing will pay anywhere up to approximately 20 per cent of their income for housing. Would you not consider it to be fair to subsidize any other senior citizen who cannot get housing at the present moment to the same extent that you are subsidizing those who are able to get housing?

If one can get housing, one with a total income of $111.41 is able to get housing for approximately $30 or so a month by getting housing from the provincial government. Should another individual who is not fortunate enough to obtain government housing, not be treated in the same fashion by having his rents subsidized as in public housing?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is a new point. It is almost like a form of guaranteed annual income, as you will recognize. We take the people on the lower strata for public housing, particularly senior citizens. In your town today, in the planning stage, there are 732 senior citizens units being considered which will no doubt go through. In the proposal stage there are 220 family units in the proposal stage which will go through shortly and under construction—

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Minister, you are not answering my question now.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Wait a minute. I am going to answer your question in just a minute. Under construction there are 175 family units now and there are 400 senior citizens units being built, which is 575. When that project is completed, as asked for by the Windsor municipality, you will have 395 family units and 1,132 senior citizens units for a total of 1,527, and we have 91 acres now in Windsor to be developed as a land bank and we have 289 lots on the market at the present time. What you are asking me is, concerning people who can get in the public housing at the present time are already subsidized, but the people who have to wait and cannot get in on, say, the bottom of the list, are we not prepared to subsidize them? I would say at the present time the answer is no.

Mr. B. Newman: Are you not giving consideration to treating them in the same fashion as you are treating those who are getting the government-subsidized housing? Do you not think it is only fair that you should treat all senior citizens alike, especially those on a fixed income?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is a very commendable approach, but at the present time I do not think it is acceptable to the government to subsidize people who are waiting for public housing. The thing to do is build the public housing for the senior citizens as quickly as we can, which is what we are doing.

Mr. B. Newman: That is all well and good, but up until the time you have sufficient senior citizens housing in the community, you are requiring those on this fixed income to deprive themselves of the bare essentials with ever-increasing costs for rental in the community.

How does one on $111.41 get by when he has a rental to pay of as much as $125 a month—as much as that, and I am not kidding.

I am not saying that many are trapped in that price bracket, but I received many letters and I would say possibly hundreds of telephone calls from individuals in the community who just cannot get by, and so what do we do? Provide them with welfare? A lot of these people are too proud, but they would certainly like to be treated in the same fashion as we treat those to whom we give government-subsidized housing, and I think you have to.

Mr. Minister, you are the type of individual who should have no difficulty impressing upon your colleagues, you being the super salesman, that it is a matter of justice that we care for our senior citizens who cannot get accommodations because of the lack of accommodations in the community. We should provide them with a rent subsidy so that no more than X-percentage of their income is spent on housing, and if you give them housing or provide them housing in a government project, I think you should subsidize their rentals in any other part of the community to that same extent.

You are not being fair to them, you are penalizing them in the golden years of their life. In the years in which we, who have the responsibility for legislating, should be going all out in allowing them to live the balance of their few years with a sense of respect and in decency. May I ask of the minister if he is considering an interest subsidy plan to provide accommodations for people on low income?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, at the present time there is no provision for a subsidy on rentals, although I mentioned in the Legislature the other day, in a case where we were selling public housing to tenants already in public housing, depending on their present income, that we suggested to our federal friends—and I think that they are in accord with us—that the interest rate could vary with a man's income.

In other words, if he is earning $4,500 a year let us assume he paid five per cent interest. If his income went to $6,000 a year, he paid six per cent interest. This seems to be a fair way of looking at the sale of public housing to the present tenants if you have some of this category in your area. I think you would recognize this would be a good way to get them started into home ownership.

The only way you would subsidize, as I pointed out, is by looking at their present income, which is geared to income, and when we swing them over on to purchase, then we could take a look at the interest rate factor there, and I think the federal government would be interested in discussing it with us.

Mr. B. Newman: Is the minister aware of the U.S. federal housing programme 235?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am not aware of all the programmes. We have quite a bit of information filed, I am sure my friends would be—

Mr. B. Newman: I would like to put it into the record, Mr. Chairman, so that others may know just exactly what it does as far as providing housing to those on an extremely low income.

I am reading from a press report in the Detroit Free Press of April, 1970, where a couple with a son moved into a $17,500 home they paid only $200 move-in costs and their monthly payments are $104.25. This includes taxes and insurance, and they are purchasing the home in this fashion paying a two per cent interest on a 30-year FHA mortgage.

Now the qualified buyers on the 235 programme are provided a subsidy on the interest rate. It means that instead of paying eight and a half per cent, the buyers can pay as little as one per cent interest. This is provided by The Housing and Urban Development Department of the federal government, the federal government footing the difference in interest rates between the conventional interest rate and what they are paying. Under this programme, $7,000 is the allowable maximum gross for a family of three living in a community of about 40,000 people; that is the city of Ypsilanti, Michigan.

In Detroit, the maximum income for a family of three is $7,020 to qualify for the programme; in Ecorse, which is a suburb, the maximum is $5,940.

Another qualification is that families cannot have more than $2,500 in assets, including savings, stocks, bonds, real estate or personal property. Now, under the programme, the mortgage lender has his income rechecked every two years and if his income has increased significantly, his monthly payments may be revised. Thus, the government decreases its subsidy and the buyer increases the amount of money he has to pay.

You cannot buy a high-priced home under this 235 programme by the Federal Housing Administration. In fact, at the time of the writing of this article, they make mention that the maximum selling price was $17,500. When I look at this, and see the city of Detroit with a suburban population of well over four million, a city that I would say would compare favourably with the city of Toronto—there may be a little larger population than we have here, but with the problems that might compare favourably, you find that government has been able to provide housing to an individual, with that individual only providing $200 move-in costs.

I think we have to look very seriously at the type of programme that our friends to the south of us have in their attempt to provide housing. I understand it is a fairly new programme; it has not been widely advertised, but it is one that I think Ontario Housing should look at fairly closely and see if we cannot implement some portion, or portions, and maybe even the whole programme, in our attempt to provide decent housing for all our people.

I understand that Mr. Riggs is familiar with the programme. And, by the way, his dad, with whom I am very familiar; a very good mayor in the community not too long ago, has made a real contribution, not only in the field of housing, but in the general political life of the community. So I think if the son is a chip off the old dad, he will be a very fine fellow.

May I have Mr. Riggs' comments concerning the programme, now that I have buttered him up?

Mr. Goyette: Mr. Chairman, now that the member has played that game on my colleague, I think I can only come to his defence and not put him in the position of being compared with his father. We too know him on our staff and we are delighted and he is a most effective person.

I think you made some comments. Mr. Riggs has something to add, that this did not come off very well, but I answered and not Mr. Riggs.

You are really talking, I guess, in the area of the subsidized home ownership. We do not know too much about the plan 235 in the States. We do know that there have been something like 22,000 starts out of about 1.5 million starts. I suppose if we translated that into province of Ontario terms, it would be something in the order of 1,500 units.

Mr. B. Newman: But you surely are aware that it is only a new programme, so you cannot use such statistics at all.

Mr. Goyette: No, I think that there is some merit in what you are saying. I am not really on the defensive position here; I think it is something to be considered, I think, in the whole portfolio of various housing programmes.

I suppose in the province of Ontario we are expressing that, in some way, by maybe having our HOME programme under the lease programme, where we have a help instead of a subsidized interest rate. We probably help by leasing the lot and renting it to those families who have a down payment difficulty.

Besides that, I think too, that we may be expressing this as a start. At that time, when the public housing units in the single family form are sold to the existing tenants—and certainly, as mentioned earlier, that would be one expression I think of subsidized home ownership.

I think there is some validity to some of the points you are making. Maybe on a long-term basis the costing might be a little less if one were to gamble on inflation. I think if one were to gamble on inflation, it may well be that a mortgage amount payment and the rate might meet at some point about year 11 or 17.

In the United States, this is one of their forms of public housing—I think that they put it into the bundle of public housing programmes, along with the subsidized programme. They have been operating, I guess, at about 6.7 per cent per thousand of population, whereas in Ontario we have tended to give the emphasis on new housing starts in the public sector to get caught up where much was not done before. Our starts have been in the order of about 11.1 per cent.

I think that what you are saying is something that may well be useful as part of the portfolio of a housing programme. We are just working on it and it is something we will look at.

Mr. B. Newman: What does Mr. Goyette think of the FHA 235 programme? What is your opinion on that? Let us forget about the fact that it has not been too popular, or that it has not produced as many homes as we would have liked because of its newness. Is it a good programme or not a good programme?

Mr. Goyette: I find it very hard, just at the moment, to make a subjective decision plus or minus. I think it is a good idea. I think from the little I know about it they are having some difficulty in having the people relate to the programme. In other words, can you still buy your own house and will the people themselves do it? Will they go through the repairs?

We had something like this, you see, in urban renewal in Canada. You may know there was one attempt that within an urban renewal area a person might get a loan under The National Housing Act, and, while the terms were the current NHA terms, certainly the lending value placed on the house was of a sufficiently high order to dispose of any earlier mortgages. It is my understanding that under that Act, only two loans, I think, were made in Canada.

So, I think in principle—and this is my generalization—it has some merit. It remains to be seen whether people use that section to their advantage and, apart from that, we really have been concentrating on our own programmes.

Mr. B. Newman: May I suggest, Mr. Chairman, to the minister, that he consider a pilot project in some community on the terms of the U.S. FHA 235 programme? Let us see if you can provide accommodation for an individual for a $200 move-in cost and for a little over a $100-a-month payment which includes taxes and insurance. If they can do it, as I mentioned, in the city of Detroit, I certainly think that we should be able to do it in a lot of our communities across the province of Ontario.

In the Toronto area, where land prices are excessively high, it might be out of the question, but there are communities in which I think that we should be able to provide housing on a similar basis, or quite similar basis, to what they are able to do in the United States. And I would say, as this programme becomes more known to the public in the United States, that more and more will take advantage of the programme.

An individual will always take care of his own accommodation far better than he will rented accommodation. I think had we taken advantage of selling the accommodations that we have in some of our cities to the tenants, we would have had far better attention paid to the accommodation and maybe less damage, destruction or over-use of the accommodations.

May I ask of the minister at this time, if he will consider this U.S. 235 programme, have his officials study the thing and see if it cannot be implemented in Ontario, at least on a pilot project basis? Can I have that assurance from the minister?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me just say this. We will take a look at it. But let me point out to you that we are already doing something in a similar line in Ottawa at the present time. We had a housing development up there which we agreed with the federal government to divide; some would be rental, some would be sold. The houses are $16,000 on land provided by the partnership at the interest rate of six, seven and eight per cent. Families will move in there paying in the neighbourhood of the amounts you are talking about here, and I think that is a pilot project that is under way right now.

The interest rate may not be as low as you just mentioned here, but I think this is an attempt on the part of CMHC and ourselves to see if this programme can work out to lower income families. I said, and I say again, that the answer is not more public housing; the answer is more ownership of public housing by the people themselves at prices or at least within limits that they can afford without taking food off the table or watching children go without clothing. So we have a pilot project. But I assure the hon. member, I will take a look into the programme he has mentioned and see what the facts are there.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, when I see a person with an income of $5,940 able to purchase accommodations for himself, I think that type of a programme certainly is worthy of real serious consideration. I think we should attempt to implement it. The Ottawa programme that the minister mentioned, with a seven per cent interest, does not compare at all. In this case the interest is as low as one per cent. And as the income increases, then the interest rate increases. It is subject to revision every two years. I think we should look quite seriously at this and I hope that we can come up with some similar type of programme if not that type of a programme.

May I ask of the minister when we can expect the homes in the Bridgeview and other subdivisions in the city of Windsor to be put up for sale to the tenants? This was promised to them originally in 1967—that they would be up for sale within the next two weeks—in 1967, Mr. Minister. You were the minister at the time, and if you wish I can read the quotes on the time when the homes were going to be put up for sale to the tenants.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask of the minister, when we can expect—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not recall. You have the facts. I do not recall ever saying they were going to be sold.

Mr. B. Newman: I did not say you said it, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh, I see.

Mr. B. Newman: I said it was said in 1967. In fact it was used as a campaign promise in 1967 but it backfired on you fellows.

An hon. member: Did you say it?

Mr. B. Newman: Did I say it? I would never say a thing like that; I am not government.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I can assure you that as far as I am concerned I am an advocate of selling public housing to the tenants and I have indicated that in the last two and a half years. As you know, I go back to the first project we got through in Guelph, and now we have got the federal authorities to agree to another 1,000 units. Insofar as an exact date on the units you are referring to, I will have to confer with my colleagues here and see if they can give me any idea when they will be priced, serviced and ready for sale. Have you any idea, Mr. Riggs?

Mr. Riggs: Yes. I can talk on the subject particularly as to the Bridgeview homes. As the minister has mentioned here, CMHC after some nine months have finally concurred to allow this corporation to place on sale approximately 1,000 units, including our recommendation of the Bridgeview homes.

I believe it was mentioned last year in September that the corporation had submitted to CMHC a list of 5,000 units throughout the province of Ontario that we had recommended for sale. We have finally, within the last three weeks, received approval to proceed with 1,000 but we must secure on an individual basis, project by project, to proceed. One of the projects is Bridgeview.

We are now processing project by project through Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation with certain details that they want. I will name these details, such as the range of incomes in that project, the waiting list in that municipality, as to whether or not it is available to sell such housing and we are processing this material for their approval. Once we have received this approval project by project, I would assume that the sales will take place as expeditiously as possible. That is the state of the situation on sales at this point.

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask specifically of the Bridgeview project, have they been approved by Central Mortgage and Housing and by you people to be sold to the tenants?

Mr. Riggs: The corporation has approved the sale; we have recommended to CMHC who have not, to date, concurred.

Mr. B. Newman: You know, I have heard this buck-passing so damned long from you people, and when I use the word “damned” I use it advisedly, because I have had letters from CMHC that say—in fact here is one: “As soon as a concrete proposal is received from Ontario Housing Corporation it will be considered by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.”

Hon. Mr. Randall: What date is that?

Mr. B. Newman: That is January 15, 1969. There you are and I could show you some back in 1968. I have asked you this question in the House, Mr. Minister, for three years now and you have given me the same answer.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, no, no.

Mr. B. Newman: Yes. “Next week I will tell you.” Do not hand me this baloney. Tell me when you are going to have them up for sale.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You gave us a date of January, 1969, and the minister—

Mr. B. Newman: That is only the latest one. I gave up after 1969.

Hon. Mr. Randall: —the minister in Ottawa did not make a confirmation of that statement. He never committed himself until about a month ago or six weeks ago at the outside. Right? As soon as he committed himself, we took a look at the units you are talking about, and as Mr. Riggs said, it is one of the first we have submitted.

Mr. B. Newman: I have heard that story. I do not believe you people in your comments because you have not carried out what you said in the past.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Will you do me a favour?

Mr. B. Newman: I have asked you before—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Will you do me a favour?

Mr. B. Newman: I have asked you before and you said we are going to sell them next week or a week or a month later and you never held to it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I cannot tell you. Will you do me a favour?

Mr. B. Newman: Yes. I will always do you a favour.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Will you write Ottawa again and see what they tell you?

Mr. B. Newman: Instead of that, you phrase the letter the way you wish it. I will have it typed out in my name. I will send it to them and I will come back with an answer. They will not even know that you are asking it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are a member in good standing; you write them and see what they say.

Mr. B. Newman: I will do you a favour. I will go one better. You phrase it in any way you wish. I will not change it at all and I will ask my colleagues in there and see what type of an answer they will give me.

Hon. Mr. Randall: All right.

Mr. B. Newman: I will be glad to do that because I—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You have got a deal.

Mr. B. Newman: —because you are foot-dragging on this thing.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, not us.

Mr. B. Newman: You should have had those out for sale long ago. Is that not right? Even your own colleagues here agree with me on this.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You would not have had it at all if we had not—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. B. Newman: The member for Renfrew South (Mr. Yakabuski) even agrees.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. B. Newman: Let me tell you. If some of you fellows had one iota of the ability that Paul Martin has, you would not be sitting where you are now. You would be in the boardroom.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: A little order here. The hon. member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor).

Mr. B. Newman: I still have a few more items and then finish off with the minister.

Mr. Chairman: All right.

Mr. Newman: May I ask of the minister when he can foresee the demand for senior citizen housing fulfilled in my community?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think I mentioned there were—was it 300, no—1,500 and some odd in senior citizens—

Mr. B. Newman: You have got 400 coming in 1970 and 332 planned in 1971 but the request is for 1,132.

Mr. B. Newman: How many have you got now? You have got 400 plus 300?

Mr. P. Lepik (Ontario Housing Corporation): Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have 400 under construction now, and as soon as we can get a site the municipality has asked us for another 732 just recently. How long ago?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Two weeks ago the municipality asked us for another 732 in view of the survey that they took. We are prepared to provide them as quickly as we can get the site.

Mr. B. Newman: I think you are a little mixed up there, Mr. Minister, because your recommendation says 732.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No I said there were 400 already under—

Mr. B. Newman: Four hundred for 1970 is what you have in your recommendation.

Hon. Mr. Randall: There are 732 more to go.

Mr. B. Newman: And 432 in 1971.

Mr. S. Apps (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Chairman, I would like to get this cleared up. Are we on a specific vote or does everybody take his turn and ask questions?

Mr. Chairman: We agreed to take 2209 and 2210 and ask any questions on those two votes.

Mr. Apps: So we wait till we get our turn.

Mr. Chairman: You wait till you get your turn.

Mr. Apps: Then is it necessary to stay here all the time, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: No, no. If you want to go out—

Mr. Singer: It is entirely up to you.

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask of the minister, through you, Mr. Chairman, you still have not answered my question. When do you foresee that you will have accommodated the senior citizens in the Windsor area? Your latest report, and that is back in November, 1969—as of November, 1969—states that there is a demand for 1,132 senior citizens' dwellings. You are accommodating 732 in your two statements.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, there are 400 going up now, and there are 732 more to be built as soon as we can locate a site.

Mr. B. Newman: All right. Do you plan on accelerating the programme at all or not?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have not been asked to by the—

Mr. B. Newman: You have not been asked to?

Hon. Mr. Randall: If we need to be, I suggest you get after Mr. Pelly and let him put in some more figures.

Mr. B. Newman: All right. May I ask the minister if his department is looking into the mobile-home situation, with a view to using them as a means of overcoming the acute housing problems in many of the communities?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I did not hear the first part of your question.

Mr. B. Newman: Mobile homes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The mobile-home situation, as you recognize again, is a difficulty with the municipalities. If the municipalities would accept them, we would have no objection to them. But at the present time there are few municipalities that will accept them. I think in your area, if I recall, you do have a mobile-home site, do you not?

Mr. B. Newman: Not in the city, but in the county there are quite a few mobile-home sites coming up. I am looking upon it as a programme for the province itself. Looking at the popularity of the mobile home, or portable home, in the United States, and looking over the U.S. census bureau statistics, for every 10 new homes sold in 1968 at any price, six were mobile homes, and in 1968 for all the homes under $15,000, 90 per cent were mobile homes, and only 10 per cent over $15,000 among all the homes built in the United States.

I do not think it is a permanent answer for housing, but I think it could be a fairly substantial answer in some areas. I have mentioned the advantages of the mobile home in my comments in the House, and I do not intend to repeat them, but I think the province has to look upon financial assistance, or the giving of financial assistance, or the providing of financial assistance, to those who might want to use this type of housing as an answer to their housing problems.

May I have the comments of the minister concerning mobile housing and its possible use in overcoming housing problems?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me just suggest that there may be a problem in mobile homes that have been financed, through the finance companies primarily, and some of the banks in the United States who run their own financing institutions. I have stated, and I think my colleagues would concur, that we would not be reluctant to finance mobile homes if they are acceptable to municipalities here. In fact, a chap was in to see me the other day. He wants to set up a mobile-home site in a town not too far from here. I took him to Municipal Affairs. They had a meeting there. They in turn looked on it with favour and went to the Ontario Municipal Board and at that point they were turned down.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Randall: At the present time, we are still working with the Ontario Municipal Board to have the municipal officials point out to them that the town itself is prepared to accept, with the property, sanitary sewers and the handling of children who may be in those mobile homes; that if they are prepared to accept them, we are prepared to finance, so now we have the housing development corporation. These have been the two areas where I think mobile-home sales, in this province at least, have been slowed down to a walk, as you recognize.

Two years ago we changed The Municipal Act, at the request of the mobile-home manufacturers, to permit mobile homes to be sold here. I think there was a stipulation in our Act which was detrimental to their business, and we had that eliminated by the Minister of Municipal Affairs. If the municipalities will accept the site properly laid out for mobile homes, and garbage collecting, water service, sewers, electricity and school sites are available, such as in the case we talked about the other day, we would have no objection to assisting in any way we can to get it under way.

Mr. B. Newman: Would the minister have Ontario Housing look into the possibility of providing land for those municipalities or areas that might be interested in the use of the mobile home as an attempt to solve their housing problems?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. If the municipality wanted to do it, we would be glad to acquire land. But we still have to get permission from the municipality to accept that kind of housing, as you can appreciate.

Mr. B. Newman: One of the problems that the municipalities run into in this is the fact that they are afraid of the educational costs involved in mobile homes, and other costs, as one of the members makes mention. However, as for the number of children living in mobile homes, the experience in a series of units in the city of Detroit, in which there were 2,000 mobile homes, as I understood it, was 0.45 children per unit. So you can see that the number of children whose parents own mobile homes, in this experience, is very small. I do not know if it would be exactly the same in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Did you say 0.45?

Mr. B. Newman: Point four-five children per mobile unit.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Four and a half children?

Mr. B. Newman: No. One half of a child.

Mr. Singer: Not quite half a child.

Mr. B. Newman: Right.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The project we have looked at indicated there would be sufficient investment return from a mobile home to take care of any children in the area, and I think the Chairman recognizes that it comes from his area. We analyzed it very carefully before discussing it with municipal officials, and pointed out that there would not be a school problem with mobile homes.

Mr. B. Newman: I think that The Assessment Act could be changed to accommodate this, and if they wish to come along and set any type of restrictions concerning the construction or the development of mobile homes, I see nothing wrong with that. But I think we have to look upon this mode of living; it is here to stay, whether we want it or not, and more and more of us are going to get involved in this, especially in the early years of life and in the later years of life where one only needs accommodation for two people, a husband and wife. And I certainly would hope that Ontario Housing, through you, Mr. Minister, would be a little more vigorous in the promotion of this method of overcoming some of the housing problems.

Mr. Chairman: I know you have put up with me for quite a few minutes, and I want to thank you for it. That is the total comment that I have to make.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Chairman, in joining in this two-ring circus, you buzz upstairs and put in your two cents' worth and then come down here and give a nickel. I particularly want to discuss—and I do not know, as the circus goes on, exactly what has been discussed thus far—mortgages in Ontario under the budget statement, and particularly what views and what plans the minister may have in the second-mortgage market. I will proceed as though it were a carte blanche topic, which apparently is the way every new speaker proceeds, so there is a certain overlapping and repetition. I trust it will not be unduly so in this case.

In the budget statement, you announced that you were keenly aware of the difficulties—it is always nice to know how aware people are—and you are proposing in the budget to take direct steps for the supply of mortgage money for homes. You are going to put $50 million into a capital fund to do that. You say that will supply finance for approximately 3,000 mortgages. I suppose that represents about 16,660 houses, if you break it down in that particular way. However, if this money is to be divided between first and second mortgages and will include a maximum loan of 95 per cent of the lending value of the dwelling which apparently is placed—the lending value is set up by CMHC, which I never found to be particularly gratuitous, in periods up to 35 years.

About the 35-year business, my friend, Mr. Newman, has mentioned that under the veterans' housing concept operative in the United States after the Second World War, mortgages were given, at least to veterans, and to other elements in the community, for far greater periods. This is an old thing in the United States to help to alleviate their housing shortage, which would be even more aggravated than it is now had this plan not been in effect.

As I recall, looking at mortgages in the States, they went up to 60 years and the concept behind them was a long-term agreement of sale, whereby every dime you paid in, you did not have it in terms of rental, but in terms of a hire purchase agreement, in effect, which you would eventually meet. This corresponds to the temperament of our people; not least, to the temperament of the minister. Curiously enough, he seems to break the mould in his entrepreneurship of the ordinarily rather cautious and terribly secretive Canadian, at least ostensibly and perhaps only superficially does he do so.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lawlor: Ah, they secrete their glands, instead of letting their glands do the secreting. In any event, I speak of my own people.

The position is that you have not ventured thus far and only latterly, joining the Salt Lake City crew, do you enter into some kind of enlightenment extending these terms to 35 years.

The danger in the States, of course, was that the house would have come to ruination by the time that the mortgage was paid. This was a distinct possibility. However, houses are built in such a way and are occupied for periods of 60 and more years. It is not unusual to find such dwellings, and I would think that you, in concert with the Canadian authorities, should put together stress and emphasis upon extending the amortization periods of mortgages, up to 50 or 60 years. I think that in this particular way you will have the beneficial effect of reducing the equity substantially, reducing certain of the repayment terms very substantially. The fallacy or fault, of course, the nub of the issue, would lie with the interest rate.

And there comes the usury. The usury that I want to talk about specifically has to do with second mortgages. You are all aware that these mortgages are trafficked on the market at a discount, depending upon what the equity in the building is. They could range from about 18 per cent up to 45 per cent discount, right off the top of the mortgage. You buy it up—a $4,500 mortgage at $3,000—and the individual who gave the mortgage continues to pay on that mortgage at anywhere from 12 to 25 per cent interest on the $4,500. This, of course, is an ingrained iniquity which our system countenances. It is kind of a sore spot with me and, I think, an inherent viciousness built right into the mortgage market, into the housing market, at the present time, and has perpetuated itself for many years.

The minister, I hope, has the intention of somehow alleviating those pressures and that fact. Many years ago, even before Stanley's time, there existed in this province a unit of the department of development or whatever, having to do with housing mortgages. When I was a young solicitor, it was very prevalent and people were borrowing plentifully from it. The interest rates in those days, as I recall, were 4.5 per cent on second mortgages, and I do not think even they were subsidized. But the fact of the matter is that rate was lower than the prevailing rates of interest, even on firsts, and I think in subsequent periods they went up slightly higher, possibly hitting as high as six per cent. I do not think they went any higher at any time.

That whole scheme, for some nebulous reason having to do, I suppose, with the operations of the free-enterprising market, was discontinued. I felt, as a solicitor of that time, that it was a social fallacy for you to discontinue so providential a scheme. In any event, you saw fit to phase it out. I think probably the last one has been paid off. There may be a few of those mortgages kicking around still, but the office that it was operated out of has closed. It has been rather difficult to locate in the last few years, just who you go to in order to get those mortgages out of the way when they come to be finally discharged.

In terms of your present policy, is it your intent or do you envisage, as far as second mortgages are concerned, something parallel to a revivification of that particular scheme? I can hardly see how you would do so, since your first mortgages are to be co-terminus with the national housing situation. You have not spelled out, at least to my knowledge, just what your plans are touching the area of the seconds. Do you intend to charge 15 per cent interest or higher on those seconds? What periods of time do you propose for the seconds?

Seconds, we must well realize, must fall in somehow with the first mortgages as to what their termination dates may finally be. Would you take a situation where there is a first mortgage running for five years, which is the normal practice these days—you cannot, by extraction or by lulling the sirens, extract out of the trust company, mortgage company or insurance company, any greater length than five years these days. They are terrified, of course, of the interest situation.

Therefore, in most cases, if someone had to have more second mortgage financing to buy a home, with a first mortgage running for five years, what would the possibilities be of your second running for 10? How do you think that you would operate it? These are the problems that bother me for the nonce.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. I think to clarify the situation; in the first place let me deal with one thing at a time. We will be doing the evaluating insofar as the mortgage is concerned, not Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and I think our approach is a little different to what has been done in the past. I might point out that we have already committed ourselves for about $117 million in mortgages right now; $44 million will come due in 1970. $43 million in 1971 and $30 million in 1972 as the houses are built, which is over 7,000 units in the first few months since the housing development corporation has been announced by government.

We will go to 35 years as you suggest, and the only place we come in on the second mortgages is where a developer is able to arrange his own mortgage financing in the first instance, and he requires second mortgage money to finance the balance, then that would be at the same interest rate that we charge for a 95 per cent mortgage, 9.5 per cent, which is the present rate today. We do not intend to have any 12 or 15 per cent rates for second mortgages, as you have pointed out may exist today.

On the old Housing Development Corporation Limited there were 15,000 second mortgages at 4.5 per cent. There were 150 of those left when we took over the corporation from Treasury Board and which are being paid out now.

That was primarily phased out, I am informed, because the NHA mortgage arrangement became a lot more attractive than the programme they had originally. I think about the time they started it, five per cent money or five and a half per cent money was a very attractive figure. I do not think we are ever going to go back to that. There may be some accountants that disagree, but I would be inclined to believe that the lowest rate we are going to get for a long while to come is about nine and a half per cent and this is the rate we are using today. But we have no intention of moving beyond that nine and a half per cent rate, and anywhere we do take a second mortgage on some of the condominiums going up today, it would be at that nine and a half per cent.

Last year when we offered three guarantees to a developer we said, first of all, if you build a unit we will guarantee to Ontario Housing Corporation to finish it if the builder goes bankrupt. We guaranteed the mortgage company that if they advanced the money and the builder went bankrupt, we would guarantee to finish it. We also guaranteed if that he got it finished and if any of the suites were vacant for more than six months, we would take them off his hands. And we also guaranteed him that after the applicant moved in, if he went bankrupt or got run over by a truck, we would take that unit off his hands, so that in no way could he get stuck—and still we could not get mortgage money on the 75 per cent-25 per cent basis as the national mortgages are allotted. We could not get anybody to put up a first mortgage in that last year as you recognize it—there was none outside of the Parkview-Forest View which we had up here with Greenman. We had 400 suites up there. Nobody put up any money on that basis, so that is why we introduced the housing development corporation. The rate today is 9.5 per cent and we are taking 95 per cent of the value of the house—of the land—

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, I know the stink of iniquity that exists in this particular area. You know I could storm and pull out my hair and look weird about doing it all. I shall speak sadly and nostalgically. Although the financial interests in this country with whom you know you are fully cognizant, and for whom you did everything—you gave them carte blanche and iron-clad guarantees—and would they come forward with the money?

No, they would rather put it into the stock market. See what is happening now. I hope they suffer the consequences because their sense of social solidarity, their sense of need in the community, is very deficient.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawlor: One has to put up with this Act as an administrative government, despite all your spoofing and spouting free enterprise philosophy. God help us. You should move in on the situation and you should say to them—and I think it a perfectly legitimate function of contemporary government to say to financial institutions who will not support the public weal—you must allocate some of your funds—

Mr. Bullbrook: Right, where you need it.

Mr. Lawlor: —to this particular area and we will give you the iron-clad guarantee—

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I just make a comment here?

Mr. Lawlor: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mortgage money from the insurance companies was available until the budget before last was introduced by Mr. Benson. It changed the tax formula for the insurance companies from a basis where they were paying $2 million taxes—and I think your party was in agreement with this—to where they now pay $100 million in taxes. They are now taxed like a chocolate factory and they are investing their funds like a chocolate factory.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): They were getting a free ride—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Now wait a minute. I am not sure they were getting a free ride. It is a matter of looking how they handled the profits from their insurance sales to pay dividends and reduce the premiums. I am not going to get into an argument on insurance. I am simply saying that the day that budget came out, mortgage funds dried up from the insurance companies and are no longer available, unless as my friend from Downsview said the other day, there is participation from the—

Mr. Singer: Equity sharing.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If there is not that participation, I would bet an arm and a leg that money is not available. That is one of the reasons why we have had great difficulty in trying to finance the HOME programme. As you know, we got $60 million from the banks last year and in part of 1968, but, aside from that, the mortgage companies and the trust companies, the mortgage companies—the trust companies I should say—and the insurance companies would not put up any funds and we find ourselves—

Mr. Singer: The banks are not doing equity sharing; it is the others.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, the banks did; the banks shared $60 million when we first got going on the homes—

Mr. Singer: No, the equity participation—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, the banks are not in it. It is just the insurance companies right now, as you recognize.

Mr. Bullbrook: The trust companies were establishing stock portfolios long before the budget—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me just point out that, as you know, the trust companies, if you look at their brief to Ottawa and the Senate investigation committee, asked for a change in The Trust Act. Not only the provincial but the federal Trust Act permits them to invest their funds in other areas besides mortgages. The brief that I read pointed out that they made 1.8 per cent, I think it was in 1969, and if they continued at that rate, they would go bankrupt. Now I think—you probably recall it—some of the Act has been changed to permit them to get funds from other sources and put them into other sources. But, as I say to you—and I am not criticizing, I am simply saying—the tax change and the change in The Companies Act have meant that the funds normally available for home mortgages are no longer available unless there is participation, as my friend from Downsview said.

There is no participation in any projects that we build, as you will recognize. That is the reason why we are having to find the funds now to run the housing development corporation and provide the mortgage money. I can assure you that if we had not done that, there would be less housing going on in this province than there is at the present time. Now I am not going to argue whether Mr. Benson was right or wrong; I am simply going to say that the change at the national level certainly had a bearing on funds being available for mortgages.

Mr. Lawlor: Nevertheless, for you, Mr. Minister, you know for Pierre Trudeau there is one sacred place and that is the bedrooms of the nation. For you, Mr. Minister, there is only one sacred place—not the bedroom, but the boardroom. You just will not enter in—it reminds me of Frazer's Golden Bough. You know there is an island there that is sacrosanct and which no one may trespass upon without earning the wrath of the gods. Your gods sit in high executive places and want to be left in solidarity in your own peace and isolation. You will not touch. In any even you get a boomerang effect—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Chairman, let us clarify this matter now. There are millions of people with insurance policies. I expect that when you drop dead, God forbid, or get run over by a streetcar, your wife is going to expect an income from that insurance policy. If the insurance company does not take the funds they have and invest them to provide you with the promises they made when you signed the insurance policy, your wife and children could be in dire circumstances. I think you have to ask yourself, instead of accusing me of being in the boardrooms of the nation, if you were in the shoes of the insurance companies and the whole programme of reinvesting these funds was left to you, are you going to put them where you get the best return for your money?

Mr. Bullbrook: That is it. Right there.

Mr. Lawlor: The whole philosophy—

Hon. Mr. Randall: But not for the holder of the policy. Right?

Now wait a minute. The holder of the policy is going to suffer if the funds from pensions funds which are invested with the insurance companies or the premiums from policies are invested do not bring the necessary return to take care of their long-term commitments. A lot of people in the future could suffer. I am not defending. I am simply saying that if I am an investment manager, working for an insurance company, I would have to weigh all the circumstances. Maybe I would come up with the same decision as you. But for the moment I think you can see where the pace is changed.

Mr. J. N. Allan (Haldimand-Norfolk): Mr. Chairman, can I ask what vote this insurance deal comes under?

Mr. Chairman: This comes under all votes.

Mr. Trotter: It is actually mortgage money we are talking about and the Ontario Housing has—

Mr. Lawlor: There is a dearth of—

Mr. Trotter: —gone into the mortgage business. That is exactly what we are talking about.

Mr. Lawlor: There is a dearth of money in the world for mortgages and the reason for it—

Mr. Trotter: Pension funds come under it, too.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, pension funds would very well come under it, and the hon. minister's old favourite, the building societies. What ever happened to that one? That was the big news of last year's estimates. All over the front of the newspaper, I suppose he had made a trip to England a few days before. May I say we are slightly off the point?

Mr. Trotter: You are right on.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is another good point.

Mr. Lawlor: You know in your select tax committee, we were very cognizant of the role of insurance companies in the use of funds. It was shortly after we came back from our report, and this was unanimous, that we imposed extra taxes at this level of government upon the insurance companies knowing full well that they could well bear that brunt. I mean I am thinking of the premiums tax that we brought in one and a half to two years ago now. There are other areas in insurance company sinking funds and its use of public money such as we felt were very well subject to tax.

If Benson, or whoever the minister was at that time, was perfectly justified, that was not the reason. The reason partially, I suggest to you by the way, is in terms of what you have to face from major corporations, particularly from financial, of backlash.

There are many forms of backlash. One of them is to teach the government a lesson by pulling out funds from areas over a short time because the government bonds are altogether too solid a security to risk very greatly in the pull-back.

So the banking interests in this country and all the financial interests, seeking their own egotistic good to the detriment of others, are not cognizant of the wider range of the social whole from which they derived all their basic benefits. It is from the little guys—from you and I and others that the basic depositories are made. You can when you can lend on a banking principle of ten times the money to every dime deposited. Then you have created wealth in paper profit, in inflated bloody hot air. This is the banking principle. Then you are well along the way to becoming rather affluent.

In any event, these people have not carried their weight. They are not presently doing so. I am suggesting to you that you should say—just as you do, you know, in certain areas of the relationship with the federal government, at least—they have to retain, by law, sinking funds sufficient—at least the banking and insurance interests do—sufficient to cover a contingency that may arise in defined periods of time according to their outstanding commitments. Why can you not similarly allocate, say, two per cent of the fund, or whatever would be the necessary amount to be dedicated to mortgage financing in this particular area, since the crunch is on, since the need is so great, and since the derivation of the funds are from the very people who are going to be paying back the mortgages at exorbitant interest rates, irrespective, and this free-wheeling business is an abrogation of any sense of social responsibility? And you happen to be the minister—at least, I think, from the way you speak—you happen to be the minister who seems to be most inflated with this policy of blindness, the belief that the least you do the better, that if you have total chaos you have the best thing possible, that the invisible hand operates in the night—

Hon. Mr. Randall: This is what you find in socialism, not in—

Mr. Lawlor: We could go on forever on this particular thing. All right, I want to know at the moment what specific sum have you set aside for second mortgages. Is there a definite amount?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, we have set no sum aside for second mortgages, but within the housing development corporation, if second mortgage money is available, the funds will be provided as they are being provided for first mortgages. In other words—

Mr. Lawlor: You are aware that many manufacturing enterprises, in order to sell their wares, are providing second mortgage funds somewhat along the same lines? I am thinking, for instance, of Consumers' Gas. If a builder installs gas in his home he can get money from the Consumers' Gas Company for a second mortgage that he could not get anywhere else, in order to—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Maybe I can clear that point up. If a developer came to us and said, "Look, I am putting a project up in Sarnia and I got first mortgage money from Consumers' Gas, or the Hydro, or Elias Rogers, I got 75 per cent of the funds from them, I get five per cent from the customer, can I get 20 per cent from you?" the answer is if he is building to the HOME guidelines—that is $24,000 and under, including land and building, the 20 per cent of the second mortgage money would be available for him.

Mr. Lawlor: No question? Good.

I want to go on to a second point. To you, Mr. Minister, in the past two weeks looking in the highways area, we came across concentrations of highway maintenance people and highways builders acting in cahoots together with respect to the bidding they did and with respect to the prices they were paid—a monopolistic situation, which had been investigated by the combines branch of the federal government and which had gone on for many years.

Under the present situation with Ontario Housing Corporation, I want to warn you of what may be a real possibility of a similar thing with regard to the bidding that is taking place as it affects Ontario Housing.

From January 31, 1969, to April 30, 1970, 148 contracts worth a total of $172-odd million were awarded to 57 companies. Of these 57 companies 16—or 28.1 per cent—were awarded 85 contracts, representing 57.4 per cent of the total number of the contracts. The value of the contracts awarded these top 16 firms represents 72.4 per cent of the dollar value of all contracts awarded. The survey also pointed out the anomalous situation whereby eight firms of the top 16—$14 million and over—were so ranked by virtue of receiving only one contract. Three of the top 16 contractors have received 12 contracts or more.

It is true that the vast majority of firms with contracts valuing less than $4 million also received only one contract, but the dollar value difference is quite significant. For example, Falstaff Towers of Downsview received one contract worth $11,000,646—6.8 per cent of the total—putting it third in total dollar value. Headway Corporation of Toronto received 35 contracts—23.6 per cent of the total—worth $13,676,000, that is 7.6 per cent of the total money and ranked second in total dollar value. Ronark Development Limited of Hamilton received 13 contracts, 8.8 per cent of the total, worth $16,994,000 or 9.9 per cent of the dollar total. It ranked first in dollar value. Harrold Freuer Construction Limited of Kitchener received 12 contracts—8.1 per cent of the total—worth $6,142,000, or 3.6 per cent of the money. It ranked eleventh in total value.

There is a concentration of bidders operative here in the housing field. There may be many reasons for it. I just do not want to find out two years from now that the reason for it is there is some kind of mutual understanding operative among these builders as to their bidding practices and what not. I have to go upstairs now for a series of estimates, so I cannot press you further. If this—

Mr. Singer: Your planning worked a little slowly.

Mr. Lawlor: If I had time I would like to go into the bidding practices. How you operate them—

Mr. Chairman: I might say that this was all gone over last night by the member for Riverdale.

Mr. Lawlor: Riverdale?

Mr. Chairman: No, for Parkdale.

Mr. Lawlor: Did you give it a thorough going over, James?

Mr. Chairman: He certainly did. If you read Hansard you will get all the answers.

Mr. Lawlor: Are the contracts entered into by Coates Construction Limited, Headway Builders (Ontario) Limited, Boyd & Solman Limited, available to us—say the contracts from 1947 on?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would not see any reason why they would not be available.

Mr. Goyette: We would be glad to let you have the details of those. They are all public.

Just to knot that point though, we did, Mr. Chairman, go into that in great detail, yesterday, because those of us here who are, well, involved in this, would like to dispel this right now. We have been dealing with 130 contractors across Ontario; these have been the result of a public proposal. They have come forward on a competitive basis, they are adjudged by the staff, they are adjudged by the board of directors of OHC, by the Treasury Board of Ontario, by the branch office of—

Mr. Lawlor: Could we sit in there some time?

Mr. Goyette: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Lawlor: Can we sit in on their bidding?

Mr. Goyette: We would be glad to describe our practice to you.

Mr. Lawlor: No, can we watch it done? They did it for Highways.

Mr. Goyette: No.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Chairman, can we rise on a point of order for a moment? Because we have been waiting here, and we have obligations concerned with legislation going on in the House, might we get the information from the member for Scarborough Centre as to whether she will go to 6 o'clock?

Hon. Mr. Randall: If she does not I promise to do a song and dance to keep it going.

Mr. Bullbrook: Oh no, we want to come back and see that.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Chairman, if I had thought the member for Downsview was not going to discuss the same subject as I, I would gladly have let him get to the Attorney General's estimates. I would like—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You mean Mr. Brunelle is all finished?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. who?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Brunelle is all finished, you say?

Mr. Trotter: Evidently, yes.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Yes, Mr. Chairman. That is something you might look into.

Yesterday the member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. R. G. Hodgson) said that he would be sending a page boy back and forth from committee to the House to keep those of us who were trying to be in both places at once, as several of us are today, informed as to where the House was, or where the committee was. Have you had any action on that?

Mr. Chairman: No, none whatsoever. As a matter of fact, there is a substitute for the member for Victoria-Haliburton, yesterday and today. He is not on the committee.

Mrs. M. Renwick: He is not on the committee yesterday or today, right?

Mr. Chairman: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that if the remaining members want to recess now and come back at 8 o'clock it is okay with us. We are in your hands.

It being 5:45 o'clock, p.m., the committee took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Trade and Development Standing Committee

TUESDAY, MAY 26, 1970

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT

The committee resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m., in committee room one; Mr. D. A. Evans in the chair.

On votes 2209 and 2210:

Mr. Chairman: We will call the committee to order. Unfortunately, the speakers who were going to speak to these votes, 2209 and 2210, are not here so I am going to have to go to the next speaker. The member for Downsview has the floor.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, there were a number of points that I wanted to bring up. I had a list of them in advance, but listening to the various discussions that took place here, I have got an additional number of questions that I want to direct my attention to.

I was interested particularly in the minister's reply, and the replies of the members of his staff, to the scheme of the Housing Development Corporation and the series of commitments that have been made.

Now it may be, Mr. Chairman, that when I was absent from this country during the month of April, I missed some of the detail. I did catch, however, the announcement in the budget that $144 million were going to be devoted to the Housing Development Corporation and I did listen with some interest to the minister's statement that this is committed now over a period of three years at an interest rate of some 9.5 per cent.

Just starting with that, I wonder to what extent—and if this is repetition I am sorry, but I am not aware of it—to what extent is the commitment made in the form of more or less permanent obligations or substantial obligations to specific builders; or is this just a decision in the government's mind that it will devote a portion of this $144 million, or one of three portions, over the period of the next three years? Or is it allocated, in fact, to specific builders who are going to build specific types of housing over that period of time? Perhaps we can start with that.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): To clear up any misunderstanding, the first amount, I think, that the Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) announced in his budget was $50 million; to be followed by a further $50 million as soon as that was allocated, and that is in the works at the present time. Of the $50 million, I think what I said this afternoon was that $44 million had already been committed for 1970. We knew we were going to use $44 million—the buildings would be completed, the mortgages have to be honoured, before the end of 1970. Do you follow me?

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: So that $44 million for 1970 would be required out of the $50 million already committed. There is $43 million committed in 1971 and $30 million in 1972, depending on when a project is finished.

The second question is, "Who are they allocated to?" I can assure the hon. member they are allocated to the commitments we have made in Bramalea to build 1,000 units there—I believe it is on 1,000 lots in the next year—where services are provided and the lots are available.

The other commitment is in Chapel Glen Village. We have not made any formal announcement, but the story is out now that the Chapel Glen Village building permit was received last Friday afternoon. We are prepared to proceed with that, and some of those buildings, we anticipate, will be finished in early 1971. So there is a commitment there. And then, as you know, we have probably talked to a dozen or more builders who have land of their own and say, "Look, I will build on this land within the HOME guidelines of $24,000—no more—if I can get mortgage commitments." We have committed ourselves to make sure they get mortgage money for those lots they are going to build on within the HOME guidelines.

Then of course I think we said this afternoon there were something like 170 homes being built in Ottawa that the federal authorities were going to participate in last year and on which they changed their minds. The people came back to us and we said we would guarantee them mortgage money this year when their homes were finished and they needed the mortgage money.

So that is where the $44 million cash flow commitment is allocated. The others, of course—the $43 million and the $30 million—depend on when the buildings are finished; the money will be available for those sources at that time. Does that answer your question?

Mr. Singer: Well only partly. So that presently, as I understand it, if you are committed for $44 million in 1970 and then $43 million and then $40 million in 1971—

Hon. Mr. Randall: $30 million in 1972.

Mr. Singer: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Randall: $30 million in 1972. A total of $117 million—$44 million, $43 million and $30 million!

Mr. Singer: $44 million, $43 million and $30 million—and that is in 1970, 1971 and 1972?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. There will be more than that, I presume, if somebody comes in and says, "I can build in 1971; can I get money?" The answer is yes; but as far as we are concerned, the Housing Development Corporation is now recognized by the Treasurer as an Ontario government mortgage company and funds are going to be supplied as fast as we require them.

Mr. Singer: I see. Now how did you choose Bramalea and Chapel Glen rather than Edgemoor, or Singer, or Allan or even Apps?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The National House Building Association was in on this at the beginning and we explained to them how it was going to operate and their members submitted their applications on units that they were going to build under the guidelines of the HOME programme. This is how the money was allocated.

Mr. Singer: I see. Did you advertise or was it just sort of noised about?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Pardon?

Mr. Singer: Did you advertise or was it just sort of noised about? I mean, fellows in the know got in first?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We had a public proposal in Bramalea. I do not think we ran any ads that I know of; we just made it known by press releases by myself and by the housing corporation. The Treasurer indicated that mortgage money was available and as soon as that notice was received by people reading the newspapers they came and said "where do we fit into the scheme?" And we listened to them.

Mr. Singer: I am very interested, particularly in the fact that Bramalea is the first one mentioned, because Bramalea seems to feature very high in the government's priorities. Certainly we have talked about Bramalea just on the fringes of Toronto. My colleague from Sarnia (Mr. Bullbrook) is going to be talking about Bramalea a little later in the evening. I just wonder how Bramalea seems to be the first with the government most of the time?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me suggest to you, my hon. friend, that Bramalea were the first people to come through with 1,666 lots when we talked about the HOME programme, there were no lots available in Metro.

Mr. Singer: Bramalea is not in Metro.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, it is as close to Metro as—

Mr. Singer: But it is not in Metro.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Greater Metro is 50 miles or so, or 100 miles, around Toronto. Bramalea is as close to Metro as you can possibly get where lots are available. As far as we are concerned, whether it is in Bramalea, or Chapel Glen Village or anywhere else, if they come forward with a programme to build housing for the people within the HOME guidelines, funds are available.

Mr. Singer: Bramalea may be close to Metro, but the minister's definition of what is close to Metro does not seem to correspond with his colleague's definition. The definition of the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) is pretty adamant about the boundary lines of Metro. There is quite a great difference. When you get the Toronto-centred plan—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Probably Metro and greater Metro, yes.

Mr. Singer: Well, Metro and greater Metro. But when you get the Toronto-centred plan and you recognize the determination with which Mr. McKeough wants to hold the line, there seems to be a pretty definite distinction between what is in Metro and what is out of Metro. I am still interested in how Bramalea got to be the first with the commitment for this portion of the $44 million—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Maybe they are the most efficient?

Mr. Singer: I see, you figure they are the most efficient?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think they are very efficient, yes.

Mr. Singer: You think they are very efficient?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Singer: All right. I am glad to have that on the record, because as I say my colleague from Sarnia is going to have some questions to direct to you—

Hon. Mr. Randall: We will be glad to hear from your colleague for Sarnia, I can assure you.

Mr. Singer: —about some of his doubts about the efficiency of Bramalea, and I have some as well.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Fine.

Mr. Singer: I am very interested as well, Mr. Chairman, through you to the minister, in the limit of $24,000 for housing cost. As the minister, I am sure, well knows, the cost of a 50-foot serviced lot within Metropolitan Toronto today is $17,000. Is the minister prepared to accept that fact or do you want me to elaborate on that? A 50-foot serviced lot on a new subdivision in North York, Scarborough or Etobicoke, running no more than 50 by 150 feet, if you have got a big deep one, or 100 feet if you have got a shallow one, sells for $17,000, just for the vacant lot. Will the minister accept that? Or do you want me to bring you some more—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think in some areas you may be right, yes.

Mr. Singer: Okay. Now, can you tell me—

Hon. Mr. Randall: We are fortunate. We bought land for a lot less than that.

Mr. Singer: That is fine. Can you tell me how, within the bounds of Metropolitan Toronto, when you have to pay $17,000 for a new vacant lot, any of this scheme for mortgages can possibly be made available within the boundaries of Metropolitan Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Randall: You talk about Metropolitan Toronto; let us talk about greater Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. Singer: No, I am talking about the 240 square miles that comprise Metropolitan Toronto, that Mr. McKeough is so determined to preserve.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): Why not preserve—

Mr. Singer: Just let me finish. The fact is that Metro is bounded on the east by Peel; on the south by Lake Ontario; on the north by Steeles Avenue, and on the west by the line of Pickering. That is 200—

Mr. W. Hodgson: Your complaint is lying on the north boundary.

Mr. Singer: I recognize this is embarrassing to many Tory members, but let us just deal with it in fact.

Mr. W. Hodgson: It is embarrassing to you. Why do you not tell the facts?

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, can you tell me, or can the minister tell me, whether or not it is conceivable to anticipate that any of this $44 million which is allocated for mortgages in 1970 by the Housing Development Corporation, is going to be available for building new homes in Metropolitan Toronto? If even one penny of it is?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Singer: Where?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Edgeley village.

Mr. Singer: Edgeley village? Where exactly is Edgeley village?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is right in your riding. You were the reeve up there at one time, were you not, in North York?

Mr. W. Hodgson: Just below Steeles.

Mr. Singer: All right. Then how much is a 50-foot lot in Edgeley village—a serviced lot, a 50-foot serviced lot?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let us forget the 50-foot lot.

Mr. Singer: No! That is the smallest housing lot available.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, you are not thinking like a good lawyer right now.

Mr. Singer: No, I am thinking as an inquiring politician who wants to—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, no.

Mr. Singer: —bring you down to facts. Please answer.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We are not talking about single family housing in Metro and you know it. We are talking about cluster housing—

Mr. Singer: I am talking about single family housing—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, you are!

Mr. Singer: Please do not change my terms of reference. I am asking you if one penny of the $44 million that you are going to make available through the Housing Development Corporation, can possibly be spent in Metropolitan Toronto this year?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I would not say this year. In Malvern, maybe, next year.

Mr. Singer: All right.

Hon. Mr. Randall: But now let me just—

Mr. Singer: All right, so that is the—

Hon. Mr. Randall: —before you, wait a minute—

Mr. Singer: No, I am talking.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Wait a minute—

Mr. Singer: Surely you can answer a question?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I am going to correct this situation right now.

Mr. Singer: All right, correct it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have been talking about housing people in cluster housing, in town housing, in condominium housing. Do not try to screw up the deal—

Mr. Singer: No, no!

Hon. Mr. Randall: —as you are trying to do—

Mr. Singer: No, I am only trying to get down to what you are going to do.

Hon. Mr. Randall: In saying that, we said "all single family housing," my hon. friend, so do not get stupid over this. Just recognize what the facts are.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I am not prepared to exchange vituperations with the crude minister.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You mean if I sit back and be quiet—

Mr. Singer: I merely want him to answer questions relating to the facts as they appear. Now, No. 1 fact is that you will agree with me there is not one penny of your $44 million available to Metropolitan Toronto in the year of 1970 for single family housing?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is available if they can build single family housing.

Mr. Singer: For under $24,000?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Singer: All right. Now do you know of anywhere in Metropolitan Toronto, in 1970 or 1971 or 1972, where anyone can build a single family house for under $24,000?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I have said Malvern and Edgeley.

Mr. Singer: A single family house? On a self-contained lot.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Ask the man.

Mr. Singer: All right. How much is the lot going to cost by itself? Let the man tell me.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Between $6,000 or $7,000.

Mr. Singer: For $6,000 or $7,000? You can produce a 50-foot serviced lot for $6,000 or $7,000?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, we bought it—

Mr. Singer: You bought it, and you are going to put it on the market for $6,000 or $7,000? Mr. Chairman, I do not think that the minister is, in fact, telling the truth. This is a very serious charge and I say that he is so far wrong—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not think that you know what you are talking about.

Mr. Singer: There is not a $6,000 or $7,000 50-foot serviced lot within the boundaries of Metro. You cannot get one for under $17,000.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do not get so excited, just listen for a minute.

Mr. P. R. Goyette (Ontario Housing Corporation): You are talking about Malvern. We have our raw land costs, which you know are very modest. If we put our lots in at our costs—

Mr. Singer: Now you are talking about Malvern.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do not slide out of it, listen—

Mr. Goyette: You heard what the minister said for next year in Malvern.

Mr. Singer: All right.

Mr. Goyette: You never really know until all the tenders are in, and you know more about this than I do. At $6,000 we should be able to—that seems to be the guesstimate now.

Mr. Singer: All right. You are suggesting that you are going to put the Malvern lots on the market at $10,000 below the going price? Are you making that commitment now?

Mr. Goyette: If we could do it at that price we will—

Mr. Singer: Well, are you going to do it?

Mr. Goyette: We will do it at our cost, right.

Mr. Singer: Can you tell me why, if that is your present thinking, when you sold the Bramalea lots you sold them for $3,000 over your cost? When we criticized the minister in the House a year ago he said, "We cannot disturb the going market." Why are you now going to break the market out at Malvern by selling for $10,000 below the going cost?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We know you are a good legal mouthpiece, Mr. Singer—

Mr. Singer: No, no, just do not drag red herrings.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Just listen very carefully, and I will try to tell you—

Mr. Chairman: Let us keep this discussion short. Let us do the estimates—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, let us keep it to the estimates.

Mr. Chairman: —and use the procedure that we use in the House.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are trying to confuse two issues.

Mr. Singer: No, I am not.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh yes, you are. Now just listen to me for a minute.

We bought the 1,666 lots in Malvern, fully serviced, from a major development where lots were selling for $9,200 a lot. And we made it a commitment that we were not going to go in there and sell those $6,600 lots at that cost. Let me just suggest to you, my friend, if you and the member for Sarnia had gone in there, earning $10,000 a year apiece, and you had bought a lot across the road from a private developer for $9,200, and he, earning the same money, had bought one for $6,600, why could he not come back to his government and say, "Listen, you have to give me a refund on the amount of money over $6,600 I paid to Bramalea."

Now wait a minute, wait a minute.

Mr. Singer: You are trying to confuse me.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are not listening. You are not listening. Now listen. Just be careful now, you are not listening.

So the $9,200 was set; two people paid cash; I think 15 bought on agreement for sale. The balance today are still running and, when they exercise their option to buy those 1,666 lots in a private development, fully serviced, they will pay $9,200 now, or 50 years from now.

And so, what I am suggesting to you, if you want to walk out and talk to those people that own the 1,600 lots tonight, they will tell you that the lots are worth $13,500.

Let us finish with that for a second. Now we go back to Malvern, or Saltfleet, or Chapel Glen Village, where we have control of the entire—

Mr. Singer: We are talking now of Metropolitan Toronto—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Wait a minute.

Mr. Singer: —whether any of this $44 million is going to be available.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Wait a minute now. You are not listening now.

Mr. Singer: I am listening very carefully. I want you to direct yourself to the point.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Just concentrate. Do not try to talk me out of it, now, because you are not going to confuse me. I have been used to you for several years—

Mr. Singer: I have been used to you too, and I know you for what you are.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Just let me—

Mr. Chairman: Let us get through the estimates.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Just let me point out that where we own the entire development, which we do in Chapel Glen, and Malvern, and Saltfleet, those lots will be sold at our cost of putting the services in and the interest charges. They will not be marked up, as they were in a private development.

We walked in and bought just a few lots. Insofar as I am concerned, and I am sure my associates will back me up on this, those lots are going to be put on the market, as we said a few minutes ago, in Malvern, at our cost, plus administration charges. We are not going to mark those up, as happened in the 1,666 lots, where we had a reason for marking them up.

We got those lots in order to get the HOME programme under way, and if you want to talk to those 1,666 people, they will tell you, Mr. Singer, that the lots are worth $13,500. They never got a better bargain in their life.

Mr. Singer: No, you are begging the question.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I am not begging the question.

Mr. Singer: You certainly are begging the question.

There are two points. No. 1, even though someone might have bought something cheaper than they could now match on the terms that you gave, why was it necessary that you make 50 per cent profit from the people of the province of Ontario on behalf of the government?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think I just—

Mr. Singer: What was the reason?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I just made that point out.

We have three reporters in the back of the room here, two of them working for the same newspaper. If either one of those men went out and bought a $6,600 lot through the government of Ontario at the taxpayers' expense, and the other fellow got a lot for $6,600, and the other guy went across the road and paid $9,200, he would have every right to come back to the housing corporation and say, "Look, I got cheated across the road by Bramalea at $9,200. Which is the market price? Why cannot I get that 50 per cent gain that you gave to my friend who works for the Star?"

Mr. Singer: So then it is better that your friend who works for the Star provide a 50 per cent profit for the province of Ontario, rather than that you disturb your friends at Bramalea?

Hon. Mr. Randall: He has now got himself—

Mr. Singer: That is what you are saying.

Hon. Mr. Randall: He has now got himself a 50 per cent gain.

Mr. Singer: All right, now that is No. 1. I do not accept that at all—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, I know you—

Mr. Singer: I do not accept that at all, because I suggest to you, I charge—I do not even suggest, I charge—that you were protecting Bramalea in taking a 50 per cent profit that the government had no right to take, because people needed housing. You exploited those people. That is No. 1.

Now No. 2—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Not at all.

Mr. Singer: Let me deal with Malvern. Are you prepared to state that it is now government policy that you are going to make no profit on the lots that are sold out of Malvern? No government profit? Or are you going to support the real estate market, as you did with Bramalea?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I think I have already made it very clear that in Malvern we are going to sell our part of Malvern to the commercial interests and that is going back into community facilities—it is going back into reducing the price of the lots for the modest income people who are going to buy in Malvern. The same thing is going to happen in Saltfleet. The same—

Mr. Singer: I am not talking about Saltfleet.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I know—

Mr. Singer: Let us confine ourselves to Metro for a while.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I know you are not, but just let us not confuse the issue again, my friend.

Mr. Singer: No, no, I just want to talk about Metropolitan Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Randall: And the same thing will apply. Even up in Waterloo we have the 3,000 acres. Wherever the government—

Mr. Singer: I am not talking about Waterloo. I am talking about Malvern and Metropolitan—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I know you are not.

Mr. Singer: —Toronto. Now please stay within the terms of reference.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are very confused. You are confused.

Mr. Singer: No, I am not confused, and you are not going to confuse me.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We are trying to give you the facts and you do not want the facts.

Mr. Singer: What I would like from you is a positive statement. It is a very simple question. Are you prepared—

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is not simple—

Mr. Singer: —to put single family residential lots on sale out in Malvern; to sell them to the people of Ontario for nothing more than your acquisition cost plus carrying charges?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is exactly what we have said.

Mr. Singer: Is that a positive commitment of the government?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is exactly what we have said.

Mr. Singer: Now is that positive?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is exactly what we have said.

Mr. Singer: And you are not going to make a profit on it?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Having come that far—and this is important—can you tell me what your estimated cost of the sale of the 50-foot serviced lot is going to be in Malvern?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I understand the ballpark figure, when we get completed and the programme is under way, will be between $6,000 or $7,000, depending on the charges that go into it. The servicing costs are roughly $20,000 an acre. I want to assure you, my hon. friend, that the only lots that will be sold at a profit are those that are going into the commercial area, so that the profit from that can be turned back into reducing the land—

Mr. Singer: All right. That is fine.

Hon. Mr. Randall: —cost to the modest-income family.

Mr. Singer: How many single family lots are going to be available out at Malvern that are going to be sold between $6,000 or $7,000?

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are going to be around all night are you not? We will find it for you. Do not go away.

Mr. Singer: No, no. I would say that you would be able to tell us that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh, we will tell you. Yes, we have got it.

Mr. Singer: Why can you not tell me now?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Just a minute. Wait a minute.

Mr. Singer: We have been talking about Malvern for 14 years.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If you would just turn off that phonograph record we will tell you in about two minutes.

Mr. Singer: Seventeen years, 17.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We did not talk about it. I did not come here until 1963.

Mr. Singer: Along the way Mr. Chairman, could I ask another question? Perhaps you could give a quicker answer to this, while getting these figures. Could you tell me why Mr. Suters is not here? He is the head of your Housing Development Corporation. During the estimates one would anticipate that the senior civil servant in that department would—

Hon. Mr. Randall: That has nothing to do with the estimates.

Mr. Singer: I would like to know. I would say that is important.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I told you last night where he was. He was on vacation.

Mr. Singer: Where is he?

Hon. Mr. Randall: He is on vacation.

Mr. Singer: I see. Is he going to return to be the head of the housing corporation?

Hon. Mr. Randall: He is going to return as far as I know.

Mr. Singer: And is he going to be the head of the corporation—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You never can tell.

Mr. Singer: —when he comes back?

Hon. Mr. Randall: You never can tell.

Mr. Singer: No, I thought we never could tell. So Mr. Suters is on his way out. That is pretty obvious.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, I appreciate that the hon. member is not interested in anybody's side of the story but his; if he would just wait for a second or two. The breakdown on housing land proposed in the first development in Neighbourhood Eight is 340 single family; 85 semi-detached, which will produce 170 units; and land for 180 straight townhouse units, for 120 clustered townhouses, 150 terraced apartments and 400 high-rise. That is in the first development of Malvern.

There are 1,700 acres there, and you recognize that 800 acres fall toward the Rouge River. There are no services in there, so that will be the last area of Malvern to be developed.

Mr. Singer: How many years?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know. Your guess is as good as mine.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): How many years?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know. Your guess is as good as mine.

Mr. Singer: How many houses or single family housing lots are going to be made available for public sale in 1970?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not think we have said there will be any for 1970. I think we said 1971 would be the first.

Mr. Singer: The first time they are available will be 1971. How many single family housing lots are going to be available?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We would hope that the first phase of Malvern will be under way in 1971 and 340 single family units will be offered. It could be the latter part of 1971 or the early part of 1972 but we would hope to get them in 1971.

Mr. Singer: Will those be with houses on them or will they be just vacant lots?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They are vacant lots offered for sale.

Mr. Singer: How would James Trotter be able to buy one of those lots?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We would advertise the lots and James Trotter would make an application for a lot. Then the builders would take his builder proposal and go ahead and build it to the HOME Programme, the same as they do in any other—

Mr. Singer: Would these lots be sold to individuals or to firms like Bramalea?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They could be both ways. We think they are far better off to be sold to firms who come in with a builder proposal because it is obvious that if James Trotter decides to build a home for himself and find his own builder and builds one home in Malvern, he may be far better off to go to a builder who is going to build 50 houses who can dig 50 basements, buy 50 bathtubs and 50 doorknobs and 50 doors, and build it on an efficient basis. Otherwise he may wind up paying a hell of a lot more than $24,000 for a house if he cannot get it done for $24,000.

Mr. Singer: Would it be fair to assume that James Trotter or any other citizen of Ontario will not have an opportunity to buy any one of those lots? They will all be sold to companies?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, it would not be fair to assume that at all. They would be offered for sale and any individual could walk in and buy a lot and make his commitment with the builder.

Mr. Singer: With the builder who owns the lots?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It would also depend, as my friend said here, on the approval of Central Mortgage and Housing. But if he wanted to buy—

Mr. Singer: What has Central Mortgage and Housing got to do with it?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They are a partner.

Mr. Singer: Oh, I see.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They own 75 per cent. You forgot that, I guess. All I want to point out is that Mr. Trotter can walk in and make an application for a lot and he can pick his builder to build it if he so wishes. But I think Mr. Trotter will be well advised, if he wants to get a well-built home at a price he can afford, to have it built by a builder who is building maybe 50 other houses in the same area.

Mr. Singer: Is it fair to assume from what the minister says that Mr. Trotter is going to be low man on the totem pole if he wants to buy one of these lots?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Not necessarily, no.

Mr. Singer: Not necessarily? I do not believe that either.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think you are just a doubting Thomas.

Mr. Singer: I would say this, Mr. Chairman, through you to the minister, that when you have set the top figure at $24,000 you have pretty well excluded—certainly for 1970, and very probably you have got a little edge on 1971—you have pretty well excluded any of this $140-odd million, any penny of it, from coming into Metropolitan Toronto to assist the area of the province that has the greatest housing need.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You never mentioned that until now. You forgot that, did you?

Mr. Singer: I just do not see it. Now let me get on to—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do not brush it off.

Mr. Singer: I brush it off very substantially because I just do not think that with housing and land prices being what they are in Metropolitan Toronto, anyone can possibly build a house for $24,000 or under. So starting with that, and I think that is a most reasonable assumption—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You mean semi- or—

Mr. Singer: No, a single family house. So you have ruled out the ability of anyone in Metropolitan Toronto from benefiting to the extent of one cent insofar as this new mortgage is concerned.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I ask you what you would do?

Mr. Singer: Yes, I will tell you. I am glad you asked that question. Let me follow up what Mr. Deacon, my colleague from York Centre, has had to say earlier in these debates. He has urged upon you the importance of supplying at provincial expense or through provincial financing the cost of services, because the government's whole scheme seems to end up with making the municipalities either provide services or we will not have homes.

I have followed with great interest the announcements of your colleagues, the Treasurer and the Minister of Municipal Affairs, insofar as the Toronto-centred scheme is concerned and insofar as the new scheme for the new municipality of York county is concerned. I have followed with great interest, although with some frustration, the announcement that the boundaries of Metropolitan Toronto would be extended, at least on the north as far as some line that relates to the new proposed Highway 407. Your colleague, the Minister of Highways (Mr. Gomme), although he showed me great yards of maps, maybe 100 yards of them, was unable to indicate—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You would not be able to read them if you saw them.

Mr. Singer: Oh, I can read maps, too. I have had a little experience with them. He was unable to indicate with any certainty that that was the new line of 407. Your colleague, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, as recently as yesterday and after a series of questions, has been unable to say how far north Metro's boundaries are going to extend. However, yesterday he did stick to his guns and say it will go north; the line is under negotiation — inflexible negotiation, whatever that means—but it is inflexible negotiation.

However, in his statement he said that Metro is going to have another 50 square miles of land and, Mr. Chairman, it is very interesting to understand how large—I am sorry I have lost the minister in conversation with—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You have not lost me. I am all ears. You go right ahead.

Mr. Singer: The new 50 square miles of Metropolitan Toronto land is a city of Toronto and a half. For the edification of the minister, perhaps I could describe it this way. Metropolitan Toronto presently contains 240 square miles. Seventy of that is in North York, 70 in Scarborough, 40-odd in Etobicoke and 39 square miles in the city of Toronto. But what we are talking about is that 50 square miles. If we only extend the boundary northerly, it is another city of Toronto and a half. In other words, the new plans of your colleagues in government which have been announced as inflexible government policy would add to Metropolitan Toronto an area in size as large as the city of Toronto plus 50 per cent more.

In my very rough and inexperienced and inexpert guess, that would allow additional housing accommodation for perhaps 500,000 people. The only problem is, Mr. Chairman, that government policy has not encouraged the breaking of the land market—the breaking of this horrible system whereby a 50-foot lot now costs $17,000.

Just envisage: if you would adopt the kind of scheme that my colleague from York Centre was talking about, if the province of Ontario would commit itself to providing services—water, sewers and roads—to that new 50 square miles, how quickly you would break the housing market in Metropolitan Toronto. Accepting your guidelines, you want to contain Metropolitan Toronto. Within your own guidelines you want to extend the boundaries of Metropolitan Toronto on the north by an area that comprises the city of Toronto plus a half more.

You could house 500,000 people. Think what you could do with a little imagination if you provided services, not at the expense of the municipality, but at the expense of the government of Ontario to suddenly break the housing market, to suddenly say, "We have housing accommodation for 500,000 people." Think what you would do to the cost of that 50-foot lot that now costs $17,000, and think what you would do for the people who want housing accommodation, and who cannot afford it, because who can afford within the average wage, or far above the average wage, a house that costs $28,000, $29,000, $30,000, $31,000? Very few of our people.

So what you are doing is concentrating in pockets here and there, concentrating on your favourites—Bramalea and others—to provide an exclusive market and capitalize at the same time on the inflation. Think what you could do if you could adopt the theories put forward by my colleague from York Centre. Think what you could do if you were really determined to break the land market by using that 50 square miles.

The minister told us earlier in his estimates that there really is no problem about financing Harbour City. You are suddenly going to build islands—very expensive. You are suddenly going to create some of the most expensive housing developments to house 70,000 people at maximum down in the waterfront. You are going to disturb people by relocating airports. You are going to take over a very expensive parks system for the benefit of a few. Think what you could do if you embarked upon—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I think the member is wrong on three counts. We are not taking over any extensive parks system. We are not building the most expensive land in the world; we are building the cheapest land that you will find anywhere in the province of Ontario because we do not have to tear down any buildings and relocate people. We are certainly not creating high-priced land.

Mr. Singer: All right. You deal with this land. You are not physically taking over the park, but what you are doing by putting 70,000 people—I listened to you; you just listen to me for a minute—on the verge on that park, is that you are co-opting that park, that was built at the expense of the citizens of Metropolitan Toronto, for these 70,000 new people who are not now there. Certainly you are, and you are denying that park system, by and large and by default to the two million people in Metro who now use it. Certainly you are. Now—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You have not even been there.

Mr. Singer: What I am asking you to consider is this, by your magic financing system—and it is not going to cost anybody any money, you say, as you wave your hands around; it is wonderful—all the province has to do is guarantee the bonds, and it is going to build itself and be self-liquidating, and on an on. Think what you could do if you could use the same financial magic to take vacant land. You are not going to have to rip down a single house, because there are not any, from Steeles up to 407. Think what you could do, by the same system of a guarantee of provincial bonds, by putting in water, sewers and roads and providing housing accommodation at a reasonable price for 500,000 people. Does that not grab you? I mean, you are the man who wants to enunciate all these great schemes. Think what you could do to break the housing market. This is the thing that puzzles me—why, Mr. Chairman, does the minister not have a little imagination, rather than trying to erect a Randall monument down there where nobody really wants it? Why do you not deal with the problem where it exists? This is something, Mr. Chairman, that I just do not understand.

That is all I wanted to say on that point. I do not know if the minister wants to reply on that, but I have got several more points I want to make to the minister.

Mr. Chairman: I would just say to the member for Downsview, just go ahead and present your case and then—

Mr. Singer: All right, if the minister wants to interrupt at any time—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I suggest you go right ahead. I will wait.

Mr. Singer: All right. Now—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I just want to say that I listened to your friend this afternoon from York Centre—is it York Centre or York South?

Mr. Singer: York Centre.

Hon. Mr. Randall: And I think he offered a lots of facts and figures which are worth checking out. I see you concur with his thoughts. I want to show you that if they are worthwhile we will check them out and we will come back to him with the facts and let him give us an argument as to why they will or will not work. We are quite prepared to listen to anybody, including you.

Mr. Singer: You see, Mr. Chairman, the real bottleneck in housing in this Metropolitan Toronto area—and I am not speaking with the same authority for the whole province, but I certainly think I speak with some authority for Metropolitan Toronto—is the cost of land. Because land is in short supply and the demand far exceeds the supply, the price of land—raw land, serviced land—has far exceeded the ability to buy, not only of the average wage-earner, but of persons 50 and 75 per cent above the average wage level.

If this government is really serious about doing something to provide housing for the ordinary citizen who lives in Metropolitan Toronto, it is going to have to find some kind of a plan that is going to provide reasonable housing at reasonable prices on that 50 square miles of land that Mr. McKeough and Mr. MacNaughton were talking about, and the Premier (Mr. Roberts) has been talking about. Otherwise, we just cannot accept what you are telling us, because your new mortgage scheme is not going to help one citizen of Metropolitan Toronto.

Mr. Chairman, let me move on to one other thing. I would be very interested in getting the latest report on the development of Flemingdon which the minister announced on the eve of the election of 1967. Flemingdon, by coincidence, is in the minister's riding and I can well remember the August headlines—"Randall announces new plan for low-cost housing in Don Mills; start immediately." Well, immediately was not 1967 or 1968 or 1969 or 1970 and as I passed by there this morning, I did not see the shovel in the ground. Could you bring us up to date on that one?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, I would be delighted to. You never know what obstacles you are up against until you announce that you have a plan, and the minute you announce that you have a plan, anyone who has any objection to it comes forward. They object through a number of sources, perhaps through the municipality, or through the Ontario Municipal Board, and as my friend well knows, we had one particular gentleman who issued a writ against the Ontario Housing Corporation for $12 million and against Olympia and York for $12 million over some bonds he picked up at 10 cents on the dollar and he was able to stop any production there for 15 months.

Despite that, we went ahead and put in the services and contracted for the services recognizing that this would be settled eventually. And then we had the Sayvette Company who had a fight with North York with reference to taxes, and they felt a good way to bring the tax situation to North York's attention was to lodge a protest with OMB against the development of 3,200 family units in Don Mills which had nothing to do with them, until I pointed out that I could not think of a department store that needed more customers than Sayvette; and then they agreed that perhaps we were right and they had a meeting among themselves and we put up the meeting for OMB, within three or four days—I do not think the member is listening to me here; I am just talking to myself.

Mr. Singer: I am listening.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I just want to make sure you are not missing anything.

Mr. Singer: Oh, I would not miss a word.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, that is right. Hang on to every word because you are going to need it.

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I pointed out that Sayvette needed these 3,200 families and within a week that situation was withdrawn. Prior to that we had problems with North York. We want to make sure there are more community facilities there. As the hon. member knows, we built a $500,000 community hall in Chapel Glen Village, which was shared cost-wise by ourselves and the developer and which was promised by Mr. Zeckendorf, who

I believe was the first buyer of the Don Mills property.

Mr. Singer: He had a little financial problem, did he not?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, he went bankrupt, yes.

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Unfortunately, he went bankrupt—that is right. And so when all those matters were settled, then we were faced with giving away acreage. We started off with 70 acres; we wound up with 59 after giving a number of acres for community services; the last we gave was for community facilities to four religious denominations—I think it was the Catholics, the Presbyterians, the Methodists, and it seems to me it was the—

Mr. Singer: It was probably the Anglicans.

Hon. Mr. Randall: —the Anglicans. After we had given them the property, then they decided among themselves that only the Presbyterians and the Catholics could use it and they lodged a protest with the OMB, and eventually I got the gentlemen together and pointed out that they were not serving any purpose for themselves or ourselves, and that was settled, and as of Friday afternoon, at 5 o'clock, we received a building permit in North York that all the restrictions, all the objections were finished, and we could go ahead.

I might point out that the project will only get under way because this is the first systems condominium village in Canada being built by any government—there is a consortium of five major builders in there—to utilize the systems building procedure, and only by offering 95 per cent of the mortgage money were we able to get off the ground, otherwise there would be no mortgage money available for the project.

I might point out to the hon. member that at the same time that he says I was making promises to the voters, I also put 524 public housing units in my riding which a lot of members have objected to, not only on your side of the House, but on my side of the House. Anytime I go to put in public housing, there are more objections from people like yourselves than anybody else you can shake a stick at.

Mr. Singer: Oh, now just one moment.

Hon. Mr. Randall: So, let me just—

Mr. Singer: Do not make a statement like that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me just point out—

Mr. Singer: Can you tell me, which Liberal member has ever objected to the erection of a single unit of public housing?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh, I do not have—

Mr. Singer: Tell me one; just tell me one.

Hon. Mr. Randall: All right now, do not get excited; do not get excited.

Mr. Singer: Now, you made a statement.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do not get excited.

Mr. Singer: You said there were objections. Tell me one objection. Which Liberal member made the objection?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do not get excited. The names and addresses will be—I will be glad to check them out for you, but I am just suggesting—

Mr. Singer: That is typical of the minister—you make these blanket statements that have no meaning at all.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No I was not. There are very few areas where we can put public housing that the members either federally or provincially or municipally do not come forward and say: "Look, can you put it somewhere else?"

Mr. Singer: But you just made a statement that there were Liberal members who objected to public housing.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, all right—

Mr. Singer: Tell me one Liberal member who did.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do you want the public housing in your riding? Are you—

Mr. Singer: I certainly do.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, I will put—

Mr. Singer: I wish you would read my—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will put your name on the top of the list.

Mr. Singer: I wish you would read my press clippings in 1954 when Gardiner and I were instrumental in putting in Lawrence Heights.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will put your name on the top of the list.

Mr. Singer: Would you like to read that? I will bring them to you.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will put your name on the top of the list.

Mr. Singer: But tell me one Liberal member who has objected to the erection of public housing.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, we will look them up and I will see if I can get—

Mr. Singer: Tell me one Liberal member.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know one at the moment. We will see.

Mr. Singer: Of course you do not. It is typical of your statements.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh, not necessarily, not necessarily, not necessarily.

Mr. Chairman: Let us get on with the—

Mr. Singer: If you are going to make these blanket charges—

Hon. Mr. Randall: All right, you are making a lot of blanket charges, my friend.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): How about you guys going outside and—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are making a lot of blanket charges, and you are not prepared to listen to anybody's viewpoint but your own. This is your problem; you have got a one-track mind and you will never listen to anybody—

Mr. Singer: I may have that problem but you have many others.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, maybe I do. I told you I have got a lot of problems.

Mr. Chairman: I do not think that this comes under vote 2209 or 2210.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me just finish Chapel Glen. So Chapel Glen Village will now get under way. There are no further objections as far as we know. It will get under way and I just wanted to assure you, my hon. friend, that anything I start I finish. You can look at all the projects that I have said will get under way and they are under way—either engineering, site-wise, planning-wise, or production-wise, they are under way.

Mr. Singer: The minister has set great store on the odd occasion he has been backed into a corner—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I have never been backed into a corner.

Mr. Singer: Oh, no, I know that. This minister is perfect beyond anyone's belief. There is a difference between the signing of an offer to purchase and the consummation of a deal, quite apart from the niceties of the legal phraseology. The minister announced in no uncertain terms in 1967 on the eve of an election that this great development was going to take place immediately. Would it be fair to say, in view of what the minister has now said, that his announcement on the eve of the election was at least three years premature?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, it would not be fair.

Mr. Singer: No, it would not be fair. Could you explain why?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, certainly. Because the price we paid when we did get the deal signed after all the rejections was exactly what we agreed on in 1967.

Mr. Singer: I see. But your announcement in 1967 said it was going to start immediately and it is not starting until maybe tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I just pointed out why, it did not start. If you will not accept that, there is nothing I can do about it.

Mr. Singer: No, no. But your announcement was not correct.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Why was it not correct?

Mr. Singer: Because it starts three years plus later.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I had no reason to believe it would not start when sun-up came.

Mr. Singer: Oh, I see, okay, all right.

Let us leave Flemingdon for a moment. Let me talk about the fire problems that we have in Lawrence Heights.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh, I would love to hear about these fire problems.

Mr. Singer: Yes. Can the minister tell me what he has done since the two or three incendiary incidents took place that I talked about in the House a few months ago? Has he done anything to—

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have done quite a bit. Would Mr. Riggs like to report on the fire incident up there? Did you catch the people who set the fires and who you said were causing the problem?

Mr. Singer: I think the police did.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Have you got the names and addresses?

Mr. Singer: I am not a policeman.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Have you got their names and addresses? Whose side are you appearing on? Are you the prosecuting attorney?

Mr. J. W. Snow (Halton East): He is probably going to defend them under legal aid.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): That is a brilliant remark, you know. Worthy of a member of the House.

Mr. Chairman: Let us have a little order here. You asked a question; you are going to get the answer now.

Mr. R. W. Riggs (Ontario Housing Corporation): The corporation received from The Department of Justice a letter on April 27—

Mr. Singer: Federal or provincial department?

Mr. Riggs: It was the Ontario Department of Justice.

Mr. Singer: Thank you.

Mr. Riggs: —dated April 27, to the corporation outlining the results of its investigations into the fire at 4 Replin Road which occurred at 10.55 p.m., March 26, 1970.

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Mr. Riggs: There are certain parts in this report, if I may read from them?

Mr. Singer: Please do.

Mr. Riggs: The report outlines the physical structure of the buildings.

Mr. Singer: Yes. I am familiar with that.

Mr. Riggs: There is one statement here which concern the incendiary origin of the fire. It reads as follows:

The Metropolitan Toronto Police Department were notified on April 1, 1970, that the fire was of "incendiary origin"—

Mr. Singer: Oh, that is interesting. That was described as alarmist when I said that in the House.

Mr. Riggs: Quoting:

—and while the investigation is still in progress, we have as yet been unable to identify the person or persons responsible.

This was dated a few days ago.

Mr. Singer: I see.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You were not up there that night were you, Vern?

Mr. Singer: No, I was up a few hours after the fire; maybe six or eight hours.

Mr. Riggs: There was another statement contained in this report which I shall read:

One of the tenants of 4 Replin Road was quoted in the press as saying that he checked the standpipe hose in the cabinet on the fourth floor and could not budge the valve. He stated that he turned it both ways and that the firemen also tried to turn the valve but could not. District Chief Bolingbroke and Captain Wettlanfer were interviewed, and Bolingbroke—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Riggs: Sorry, these are the words in the report.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Good Irish fellows.

Mr. Riggs: To continue:

Bolingbroke stated that when the tenant complained of the standpipe valve, he asked the tenant to show him and observed that that he was trying to turn the valve clockwise, thereby tightening it. Captain Wettlanfer immediately opened the valve with very little effort, stating that it opened so easily he could have done it with one hand.

Mr. Singer: I see.

Mr. Riggs: Reading further:

The plans for this building were examined and approved by the North York building department in 1954—

Mr. Singer: There is no question—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Singer was the reeve up there.

Mr. Riggs: Continuing:

—and construction commenced in October, 1956. The alarm system and standpipes—

Mr. Singer: This was after the fight of mine for public housing in North York.

Mr. Chairman: Will the hon. member for Downsview keep quiet for a moment until he gets all the answers?

Mr. Singer: I just cannot resist.

Hon. Mr. Randall: He is having fun. Leave him alone, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Riggs: The report goes on:

The alarm system and standpipes complied with the township of North York bylaw No. 6110, dated April 15, 1949; however, the basement storage area was not sprinklered and it would appear that it should have been in order to comply with the North York bylaw.

But the director of maintenance engineering for the corporation does not entirely agree with this opinion.

Mr. Singer: Which corporation?

Mr. Riggs: The Ontario Housing Corporation. This basement is not a basement in the true sense. It is partially out-of-grade, and there would be an interpretation here as to whether it would be basement area or partial basement area, and I would assume that the officials of the township of that time would have properly interpreted the plans and it would call for non-sprinkling of this area as not being basement.

It goes on, and there are certain conclusions:

1. The fire resistance of the exterior walls complies with the 1953 edition of the NBC.

2. The fire resistance of the floors is somewhat less than the three-quarters of an hour required by the NBC. It is not felt that the floors should be brought up to the requirements of the NBC for the following reasons.

They indicate that they are so close to the requirements—and they are concrete floors over metal pans—that any additional would not be required.

They also go into the two stairwells, which are fully enclosed and meet all fire regulations. However, there are recommendations that the present gong system—

Mr. Singer: Recommendations from whom? From The Department of Justice?

Mr. Riggs: Yes. The department recommends that the present gong system should be upgraded to an automatic fire alarm system; that there should be, in the building, instructions to all tenants regarding the evacuation of the building—which I believe the minister, when questioned on this matter before, indicated that he would bring to the attention of the corporation which would implement this; and that certain partitions, particularly in the basement, and doors of certain locker rooms should have one-hour fire rating.

Other than those recommendations—the main ones being the upgrading of the fire alarm system from a manual one to an automatic one; the changing of certain doors from the present three-quarters of an hour fire rating to an hour fire rating; the changing of the control panel which should be placed in a secure area in the new automatic fire alarm system—there were no other major recommendations from the—

Mr. Singer: And the instructions to tenants. That is a pretty major one, is it not?

Mr. Riggs: I had covered that particular area.

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Mr. Riggs: But these were the areas that were found to be immediately upgraded, and certainly the corporation has been upgrading its older buildings which did comply with regulations previously. We have similar problems at Lawrence Heights, at Regent Park, which have similar systems, and in our modification programme we will be upgrading these systems to the new levels that are required today.

Mr. Singer: That is fine.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I ask how much we are spending in Regent Park to upgrade this whole programme there, Mr. Riggs? Have you got a figure on that?

Mr. Riggs: I would not like to guess at it.

Mr. Singer: Quite apart from whether the minister has thought that my talk about incendiarism was alarmist or not, the report from The Department of Justice indicates it was an incendiary fire. I told you what the police said to me and they had a pretty good idea who did it. My suspicion is, and it is not an unfounded suspicion, that the police scared away the persons who were doing it when they knew that they did not have the evidence. That was one good thing. The minister downgrading the thought that it could possibly be incendiarism did not do anyone any favours.

Could you tell me what you have done about updating the alarm system? Let me explain what the alarm system is; the alarm system may well, as the gentleman said, have complied with the provisions of bylaw, whatever it was—14600—when the building was erected. But if you look at the alarm system, it is a hand-activated system. To keep the alarm going, whoever wanted to activate the alarm and keep it going would have to stand under the alarm system and keep on pulling the chain which would bang the gong, whether or not the flames were licking around his ankles.

It is highly unlikely that the alarm system would be at all effective in a building where a fire was taking place, where smoke and flames and fumes were spreading through the building. You could not reasonably expect that some highly motivated citizen was going to stand there in the middle of all that and keep on ringing the alarm. Whether or not the bylaw was right in that day, it was certainly obvious to me when I made my remarks in the House, as it is obvious to The Department of Justice now, that the hand-activated system is just no darned good.

Could you tell me what you have done since March 26 to replace the hand-activated alarm system with an automatic system which will reasonably warn the people when a fire is taking place?

Mr. Riggs: First of all, to clarify about people standing on the burning decks—

Mr. Singer: Yes, I wish you would.

Mr. Riggs: These gongs, once they are pulled, are spring-loaded and they do continue ringing without someone—

Mr. Singer: No, they do not. I have stood there and pulled them, and to get them to ring a second time, you have to pull them again.

Mr. Riggs: Secondly—

Mr. Singer: They do not continue to ring.

Mr. Riggs: Secondly, the maintenance engineering branch of the corporation has engaged a consultant to undertake a scope of work to install automatic systems, with the approval of the federal-provincial partnership, as this project is a federal-provincial project.

Mr. Singer: I see. Would you tell me for the comfort of the 5,000 plus people who live in Lawrence Heights, when we are going to have an automatic fire alarm system there?

Mr. Riggs: Subject to the approval of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, sir, in the year 1970.

Mr. Singer: In the year 1970. In what month in the year 1970?

Mr. Riggs: I do not know, sir.

Mr. Singer: You do not know.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Between now and the end of the year.

Mr. Singer: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Between now and the end of the year.

Mr. Singer: Between now and the end of the year. That is another firm statement of government policy, is it? Fine; we will watch for that.

Insofar as the standpipes are concerned and your remarks about a certain tenant, I gather he was the one you were going to send to jail, not me; the minister explained that later. I may say that I tried a number of valves on the standpipes; I went through 12 buildings that same day I was there and there were at least three valves on the standpipes that I could not turn. I was turning them in the anti-clockwise direction.

I might say as well, Mr. Chairman, that inspection tickets on the standpipe boxes—which contain standpipes and hoses and hand fire extinguishers—in some cases had not been inspected for over six months. It may be that that is the standard procedure.

However, I have had occasion to examine standpipe boxes in several public institutions such as hospitals. Our hospitals downtown have their standpipe boxes examined every month. If the standard procedure is to examine the feasibility and the workability of these boxes only once every six months, I suggest to you that that is not enough. Even though you may save a few pennies on the basis of examining them once every six months, it would be my suggestion that you update them and you examine them at least once every month. Because there were at least two valves that I could not turn, quite apart from your opinion of the gentleman who was complaining.

I would think that is something you should get at very quickly, because there are a lot of youngsters in there who are mischievous by nature and would get into things they should not. I am quite certain that it has occurred to various of your maintenance personnel that they could save themselves trouble by tightening those valves—on occasion too tightly—to avoid having the youngsters turn the valves on and having the water spread through the halls. That is a better risk, I would say, than not having those valves available to fight fires, when a fire might unfortunately occur. That is my second suggestion.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I ask the hon. member one question? I am always mystified when I hear about the story up there. I think the gentleman you referred to weighs about 240 pounds and he is a part-time bouncer.

Mr. Singer: I do not know what he does. He is a big man.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The fire occurred in the basement and this guy was turning a hose on to the fourth floor. What did he intend to put out, do you know?

Mr. Singer: Well, I will tell you. I am glad you asked that question. It happened that at the time the fire occurred, one of the so-called self-contained fire columns—fire doors; fire control systems which are controlled by a series of fire doors—was just not working, because the door was propped open and the smoke spread. The intense smoke and fumes spread throughout the floors of that building.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Was he—

Mr. Singer: All the people coming out of the fourth floor apartments could see was the smoke and feel the fumes—breathe the fumes. They had no idea whether the fire was on the fourth floor or the third floor or the second floor or the basement floor.

Hon. Mr. Randall: What would the hose do?

Mr. Singer: The natural reaction of a publicly-motivated citizen—as I suggest this gentleman was—notwithstanding the minister's dislike of him—would be to run to a firebox to try to turn on the hose, because he saw smoke and he felt fumes. That same fellow knocked on the doors of half a dozen apartments on his same level and got out sick people and elderly people, and got them outside.

In fact, the whole matter was so serious that when the fire department arrived—and the North York fire department is a good one—they could not evacuate those people out of the normal fire exits. They had to break a fourth-floor window and take them out by aerial ladder. That is how bad it was.

So do not poke fun at this fellow: “240 pounds, who might be a bouncer,” were your words. He tried to help save people. I think you should commend him rather than criticize him.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I ask one question, too? You recognize that he broke the chains on two doors leading to the roof, which immediately caused an up-draft bringing the smoke up to the top floor.

Mr. Singer: That may well be, and I am certain that he has had no great fire training. That is right. That may well be.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Okay, I will settle.

Mr. Singer: On the other hand. The fourth recommendation that your colleague there, as you describe him, put forward was that you have an instruction system for the tenants. This again was a recommendation of The Department of Justice. Could I ask you, finally, have you initiated the instruction system, and how is it being carried out, because had you bothered to instruct this gentleman, whom you want to criticize as to what he might do when a fire takes place, perhaps he would not have broken the chains up at the top? Perhaps you would not have discouraged him from getting other sick people out of the apartments and into safety. You are lucky that nobody died in there, because I do not think your fire precautions were good. Now can you tell me what your programme of public instruction is for the apartments?

Mr. Riggs: We have requested the assistance of the fire marshal's office to draw up and print sheets for every floor in every building of the Ontario Housing Corporation. These are now in process, and I would say they will be installed this summer in every multiple structure under administration by this corporation.

Mr. Singer: I see.

Mr. Riggs: The instructions will essentially be communicated to us by the fire marshal, as they are for other buildings.

Mr. Singer: I see. The fire that we talked about was on March 26. There was another one two days later. You neglected to mention that, or the investigations into that. We have got by March and we have got by April. This is May, two months later, and a very simple recommendaion—it would seem to me to involve nothing more than the printing of one or two sheets of instructions—has not, as yet, been implemented. Can you tell me why you have waited one minute longer than that recommendation to implement it?

Mr. Riggs: In dealing with the fire marshal's office—

Mr. Singer: Yes. It is a provincial agency. You have not got that horrible federal group that will not act. Surely they can instruct, or prepare two sheets of instructions, even one sheet of instructions.

Mr. Chairman: Surely the member for Downsview will allow Mr. Riggs to answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Randall: He would never allow him to do that.

Mr. Riggs: I am trying to indicate that we have the concern of all our buildings, which are quite diverse. The Lawrence Heights building is basically a walk-up low-rise building, and we had instructed the administrative person on the property, and the resident caretaker on every one of our projects, to follow all safety instructions and fire instructions. We have also engaged a preventive and fire safety officer. We are attempting, in this particular case, in which we have high-rise buildings, low-rise buildings, town housing, clustered housing, to obtain a series of instructions for each one of our projects, and I notice in some 60 days they will be covered simultaneously. This is in the final stages of preparation. We do have a number of projects; they are all quite diverse. Now the time may seem to be long, but we are moving as quickly as we can.

Mr. Singer: Fine. The next thing I wanted to discuss with the minister, Mr. Chairman, was the question of the sale of these units—some 1,500-odd in Lawrence Heights and other places—to the tenant. When I questioned him in the House a few days ago, the minister said—and I think he repeated it again this afternoon—plans are under way, hopefully, to sell 1,000 units in various parts of the province. Could you tell me how the location—I was not clear on this at all, Mr. Minister—of these 1,000 units is being determined?

Hon. Mr. Randall: First of all, we will be selling primarily housing that is in the single family housing category. Then we are looking at the semis, and the condominiums or row housing, and I would imagine the last on the list will be high-rise, which will create some kind of a problem, as the hon. member can appreciate. But I would think single family housing will be the first in priority, and the full recovery units, as my—

Mr. Singer: The what?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The full recovery units; the units that were built many years ago with federal-provincial-municipal co-operation in what they called full recovery units, where there are people living today who are earning a great deal more than they were earning when they moved in. But as there is nowhere for them to go and possession is nine points of the law, they are still there, and we have suggested to Ottawa that those units should be the first offered for sale, because in many cases the people have doubled or tripled their income since they moved in.

Municipalities have been reluctant to ask them to move and make room for lower-income families, so we felt that the first thing we should do is to offer those for sale and get them off our hands. If the people do not want to move, if they want to stay there, we agree with the municipality that perhaps we should offer those units for sale. And I would say that those units, plus the single family units we have under the housing corporation, are the first ones we have offered for sale out of the first 1,000.

Mr. Singer: Can you tell me, in this series of priorities that you have just outlined, whether Lawrence Heights figures at all? Because Lawrence Heights, as I say, is the largest public housing conglomeration in Canada—

Hon. Mr. Randall: At the moment.

Mr. Singer: —and it has a mix of, well, not high-rise, but medium-rise apartments. It has single-family publicly-owned buildings; it has semi-detached; it has row housing; it has everything. There are many people in there who just cannot see any way out of their housing dilemma, because their income has not even come close to being able to afford a house on today's market. They are paying rent, and they would like to believe that they are buying something that they own. Is there any way that something could be done for some of these people at least, based on the time they have been able to live there—12, 14, 16 years, some of them have been there, and they just never seem to be getting ahead—that they would be able to begin to purchase their own homes and take some pride in their own ownership and to improve their own dwelling?

This is a place where the need is so desperate and where the minister could, if he could do anything, allow purchase of housing units by individuals in that area, whatever the terms be, to give those people some encouragement, and they need it desperately.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me say to the hon. member that as far as I am concerned, I would like to sell the units as of yesterday, but it is not that simple, as I am sure you understand, because of the number of units we have. We must give priority where it is easy to make a move and move in quickly single families such as we have talked about. I would hope that in the next number of units to be approved by Central Mortgage and Housing that we could move into semis, into row housing. We have asked for 5,000, as you know, from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation; they have said to go ahead with the first 1,000 and see how we make out and then let us go to work on the second phase of the programme, which could be another 1,000 and another 4,000.

We are quite prepared, with the Ontario Housing Corporation, just as quickly as we get approval from Ottawa, to go ahead and put these other units on the market. But in view of the conglomeration of housing that we have in Lawrence Heights, I think the hon. member, being in the legal profession, would recognize that we would have a number of difficulties putting those on the market without ascertaining who in the housing development was able to take advantage of a mortgage programme. There may be one here and one there, and then they missed two or three on one other; and I think we would have to make sure that we could make a deal for the people in a block of houses in their interests, as well as our own, in trying to get the project under way. I would say that perhaps they will be in the next phase, but they are not in the first phase.

Mr. Singer: I am sorry the minister says they are not in the first phase. I recognize it is not the simplest thing in the world to programme in detail the kind of programme that would be necessary, and I can appreciate that. But this is a conglomerate of a variety of different types of public housing. There are single family units; there are duplexes and double duplexes; there is row housing.

The minister pioneered in Ontario in the field of the condominium. Surely it would be no great trick to turn a few lawyers loose and create condominiums out of these things. All it requires—it may be a little tough and it may be a little tedious—but all it requires is people with the proper training, whether legal or clerical or in title searching, to get down to this thing.

This is the place to do it. To my mind, those in Ontario should be among the first to be considered, because we have the largest concentration of people living in publicly-owned housing anywhere in Canada. This is a place that has a series of problems, the extent of which I am not going to go into tonight. But something has to be done to give them some encouragement. If the decision has already been made not to include them in the first thousand, I regret it. But certainly I am sure that if you put your people to work you can get them into the second thousand.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think so too. Let me say to the hon. member that we asked, as I said earlier, for 5,000 units which would have included some form of row housing, such as you are referring to. Also a number of people in Regent Park are interested in buying their own homes and—

Mr. Singer: That may well be, and I do not exclude Regent Park from this argument at all; the argument applies there equally.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I know you do not, and I just suggested to you that these are the people we would like to see immediately become home-owners. But, at the moment, we have approval through our senior partner to sell the first 1,000. I am hoping that, as soon as that can be done, they will come forward with approval for the next 4,000, which would give us a chance to get into Regent Park and areas like Lawrence Heights.

Mr. Singer: Let me make this commitment to the minister. If he is prepared to tell us, and I would hope that he can tell us within the next day or two, I will be glad to go with him to Ottawa and use whatever persuasive abilities I have to try to convince the people in Ottawa that they should go along with an extension of this, because I think it is very urgent and I think it is a positive step that both levels of government should take just as quickly as possible to provide some real encouragement for the people who live in public housing. It could solve a great deal of problems. I think the minister has bought the idea. My substantial criticism is that both he and Ottawa are moving far too slowly. I would like to see you get going on this thing.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I know the hon. member will take this in the spirit in which it is offered. I think I was the first one to suggest that people should buy public housing, and I have been suggesting it ever since I took over the housing corporation, so there is no delay on my part. As I said, as far as I am concerned, I would move, as of yesterday, if I can get the approvals from my partner and my partners in the municipalities involved. As far as we are concerned, I do not think we need the hon. member to worry about going to Ottawa. Just as soon as we get the 1,000 approved sold, and we can prove to them that it will work, I do not think Ottawa is going to be too difficult to deal with. As I said this afternoon, when one of the members was talking here, we are already moving on the basis of selling most public housing to tenants in Ottawa on a similar basis, only this is housing they moved into today at $16,000, as you recognize. So I do not think there is any difficulty in getting the job done; it is a matter of having approval from our friends in Ottawa to go ahead and proceed with the other 4,000. If they do that, then I think we can move very quickly.

Mr. Singer: All right, I will accept that. I do not want to quarrel with the minister about whether he was the first one to suggest it or not.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well I—

Mr. Singer: If you want to go back and read some of my speeches, you can go back as far as 1959.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am glad to hear that I have got company. I did not read your speeches but I—

Mr. Singer: I wish you would. I think you would find them somewhat helpful.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Send me a copy. I would appreciate having—

Mr. Singer: They are all there in the library.

The final point I want to deal with is this, Mr. Chairman: I am sure the minister is familiar with the speech delivered by the Hon. Robert K. Andras in the House of Commons on April 21, 1970. This was referred to by me in question period, and the minister indicated that he was quite familiar with it and that he has adopted most of the ideas. I would like specifically to get his answer and—I have been on quite a bit of time—I would like just to review these positive recommendations that he makes and get the minister's reaction.

Mr. Andras says in his speech:

We are proposing that (1) family size should be taken into account in arriving at rents. Taking a family with two children as a base, we are proposing to make a reduction in the rent for each child over that number, for instance, a reduction of $2 per month for each child after the second.

Is that proposition agreeable to the Ontario government? And are you supporting that? The second one:

Working wives should be allowed to make substantially more than $250 a year.

We got into a little discussion about that yesterday and someone suggested it was now $900. It is not as yet. It might be on July 1, that is what the minister said.

Before it is considered as income for the purpose of calculating rent, we are proposing a level of $900.

That is agreeable to the minister? Arising out of that, are you still going to set your detectives on the trail of whether or not the youngsters might work as parcel boys in the local shopping centre, or have a paper route and add a little to the family income, and readjust the rents, as a result of that? That happens now, as you know. Teenage kids go out and work, and what they earn is added to the rent and the rent goes up. It is a horrible sin, if they do not report that the kids have a paper route and earn a few extra bucks.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If they are working full time, the answer is yes. If they are just youngsters selling newspapers as you suggest and not adults—

Mr. Singer: On Saturday parcel boys or whatever they are doing.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If they are adults and they are working, then their income would be considered as family income. If they are youngsters going to public school—

Mr. Singer: Or high school?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Or high school.

Mr. Singer: Or even university?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I think if they are out of university and they are working that their incomes will be considered, according to the rent geared-to-income programme, as income. As long as they are going to school, I understand they are exempt. If they are not going to school and they are adults, then their income is regarded as part of the family income.

Mr. Singer: But this is something new.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No.

Mr. Singer: Are you prepared to enshrine this in your regulations.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, it is not new; it has always been this way. There is nothing changed there.

Mr. Singer: Well, I know that—

Hon. Mr. Randall: We used to exempt the first $75.

Mr. Singer: Yes. It does not take a youngster with a paper route much more than a month and a half to earn more than $75.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We are not talking about a youngster. We are talking about adult children who are out of school and who are working and become like a boarder in the home.

Mr. Singer: What I am specifically asking you is: Are you prepared to say in writing, so that it can be read that the earnings of youngsters who are going to school, whether they be by paper routes or by working Saturdays in the local supermarket or whatever else they are doing, while they are going to school, will not be considered as part of the family income?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me suggest that the article you are reading was in the press, and that is—

Mr. Singer: No. This is the text of his speech. That is the one I mean.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, that is the text of his speech, but there are no particular details in there. The details of the Act, I believe, are in our hands right now, and we will follow the details of the Act. If that is what they suggest, that is what we will live by.

Mr. Singer: I did not ask you that. I am asking you that, since I can see no mention of the casual earnings of youngsters who are living at home, whether you are prepared to insist that it is part of Ontario policy that, if a youngster who lives at home has casual earnings, they will not be included as part of the family income which will govern the amount of rent.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If they are of school age and going to school, you are absolutely right.

Mr. Singer: All right. And that includes public, high school and university students?

Hon. Mr. Randall: If they are going to school.

Mr. Singer: Okay. And that is Ontario government policy?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. It is CMHC policy, which the Ontario government confirmed.

Mr. Singer: All right. And if Central Mortgage and Housing policy has not gone that far, you will urge it nevertheless; am I correct in that?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh, I think it has gone that far; that is right. It has gone that far.

Mr. Singer: Now, supposing it has not—and I cannot find it here in their statement.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Okay, you have—

Mr. Singer: Will you urge that nevertheless?

Hon. Mr. Randall: You have our assurance it has.

Mr. Singer: Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: Are you all—

Mr. Singer: Third:

Income of one-parent families, for the purpose of calculating rents, would be reduced by up to $900.

Do you accept that one?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Singer: Fourth:

The portion of income required as rents from families in higher-income ranges would be reduced from 30 per cent to 25 per cent. This is very important to avoid imposing undue hardship on tenants, particularly large families who cannot find alternative accommodation on the present market.

Are you prepared to accept that one?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Singer: Fifth:

The final revision which we are proposing in the matter of rents is a method of adjusting rents as income changes. At the present time, tenants must notify the housing authorities as soon as their income increases. They propose a term of two years, and you had some concern about whether or not that was too long.

Could you explain that one to us?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, we think that a one-year term as a moratorium on their income is sufficient, and Central Mortgage and Housing, as I understand, are having a second look at that themselves.

Mr. Singer: I see. Now, those are the five substantial recommendations; there are another four that I will refer to very briefly in a moment, as I quickly read this text of Mr. Andras' speech. Is it clear that, however they are amended—the discussion of two years and one year—these will be implemented on July 1, as you said a few days ago?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. We are endeavouring to get the amendment in by July 1. I think a week ago—you will be glad to know—we sent out notices that a security deposit will already be applied to their rent. The other two items were a new tenant and landlord lease, the new lease—

Mr. Singer: Those are in the next four, yes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, the new lease is to go out, and we will make this changeover, we anticipate, by July 1.

Mr. Singer: All right. The other four, the minister has dealt with.

Social and recreational facilities in both new and existing public housing will be eligible for federal assistance; the precise nature of these facilities will be negotiated with the agencies concerned.

I do not know if the minister is familiar with the co-operative grocery store that has been set up in the church basement by the people in Lawrence Heights. Would this provision or this idea encourage Ontario Housing to try and provide some facilities for this co-operative venture in Lawrence Heights?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know. What is the store there? Do you know—

Mr. Singer: They could not get accommodation in Lawrence Heights and they went to a church basement a few blocks away. They tell me it is operating very successfully. They were very disappointed that they could not get within the boundaries of the development.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Are you suggesting now if they are paying rent in the church basement that the housing corporation—Central Mortgage and Housing would support it? Are you suggesting—

Mr. Singer: I am asking whether or not, under this heading of amenities that Mr. Andras refers to, whether it could not be reasonably conceived that this is the sort of thing, encouragement of initiative by the tenants, that could not be done within the boundaries of the development, rather than forcing them away to a church where they have something less than good facilities and something less than full ability to operate.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will ask Mr. Riggs if he will comment on it; he has been dealing with it. If you will, Mr. Riggs.

Mr. Riggs: Perhaps, in replying, there are two ways.

In regard to the co-operative, we have always dealt with tenants' associations as closely as we can. In that particular co-operative, the tenants' association was not unanimous on it being put in the project. There was one group that did go for it. There was a larger group, I am advised, that opposed it. This was brought to our attention.

We have assisted similar situations in other projects, such as Edgeley, where we put in commercial space and it could have been a co-operative, as well as commercial, if we had been approached on it.

We have helped persons—by the CNIB tuck shops, and items of that nature.

In reply to the second part, the guidelines established by the federal government are numerous. They propose grants to tenant associations if they are duly constituted associations representing six per cent of the tenants in any development. And this is what the federal government is laying down as a guideline.

Secondly, any projects—social programmes, recreational facilities—are to be submitted to Central Mortgage upon receipt by this corporation of a specific programme from a tenants' association.

So it is an ad hoc arrangement, to the best of my knowledge, that is every case that a programme comes forward from a tenants' association to the corporation, we have the option of recommending it, or recommending on a shared basis with the federal government, and these are the guidelines that we have been advised to proceed under.

Mr. Singer: Well, your remarks are very illuminating, because I say if you can make those remarks in all seriousness, you do not really understand what goes on in Lawrence Heights.

Whatever project comes forward, whether it be baseball, or cribbage, or skating, or hockey, or co-operatives, the bulk of the people there are disinterested. I do not think they oppose, but they are disinterested. The initiative that comes, comes from a series of small groups.

The reason there is baseball for kids is because enough concerned people set out and form a baseball league and put their hands in their own pockets to support it. You are never going to get half of the 5,000 people to say they are in favour of a co-operative, or that they are in favour of the tenants' association.

Unfortunately, because these are economically deprived people, there is very little local leadership that has time to arise from among their midst. They are so busy worrying about their own family problems and their ability to pay their bills, that it is unusual to get someone with the time or the training or the ability to really provide tenant leadership.

If you are going to look for the majority to be in favour of a co-operative, or a cribbage club, or a baseball scheme, or tenants' association, you are never going to find it in as large a development as Lawrence Heights.

My suggestion is—and I say this in as kindly a fashion as I can—if the gentleman's opinion is an expression of government policy, you had better inform yourselves about the problems that exist in Lawrence Heights. Where you can find a group of people, however small, who are desirous of advancing some kind of scheme which, even by the remotest chance, might allow some of those tenants to live in a better way, then you should encourage it.

Do not look for arbitrary guidelines, like 50 per cent. Look for what will benefit those people. And please go in and see; do not just write it down on a piece of paper and say, "These are the guidelines and this is the way it works," because it does not work that way in Lawrence Heights.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Chairman, may I just point out to the hon. member that I have a lot more faith in my friend Mr. Andras than perhaps he does. He laid down the regulations, we did not lay them down. We made the recommendations; he laid down the regulations that we just read out here.

As far as I am concerned, they have already stated that they want to help tenants' associations, they want to advance some moneys. They have done that down in Regent Park and, while they may have said they have 50 per cent of the people participate, I am quite sure if a tenants' association came to us and it was a legitimate, legal tenants' association, Whether they had 50 per cent or not, I am sure my friends at Central Mortgage and Housing would not be so hard and fast that they would not permit the kind of operation you are talking about. And on our recommendation—I think they are going to leave it to us to make these recommendations, and we certainly intend to make them.

Mr. Singer: All right, let me say this finally in conclusion, Mr. Chairman. You are the people on the spot—

Hon. Mr. Randall: We are always on the spot.

Mr. Singer: All right, you are on the spot and you are close to it. It is much easier to say in Ottawa if you are going to support a tenants' association, you must have 50 per cent, but I suggest if you get your people in there who have a little human feeling, you can feel what is going on in there, that you will make the most urgent recommendations to Ottawa that their guidelines might be wrong on certain occasions and that if you discover a scheme that has some merit, that you will encourage it, even if only one per cent of the people think it is worthwhile. Anything you can do to improve that situation will be a plus.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You have our assurance.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Sarnia.

Mr. Bullbrook: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will try to be brief, because I am going to refer to only one situation and request, after I have made my remarks, some answers to some questions by the minister.

First of all, I would like to say in connection with the total housing problem throughout the province, I think all of us, as members of this Legislature, have to be guided to a certain extent by those situations that arise in our area, and look at the efficacy of involvement by the housing corporation in relation to what we see locally.

I took the position in the last two years that the housing corporation knew what it was doing. I am now confused in that connection.

I am wondering whether they are guilty of non-feasance, or malfeasance, or misfeasance—by that I mean are they negligent, do they know what they are doing, or are they motivated by some situation that has not been brought to the attention of the member of this House?

I would like, with your permission, to read a letter dated August 6, 1968, that was directed to the mayor of the city of Sarnia by one R. E. Rowcliffe, a director of a company called Brockfield Investments Limited and it reads:

Dear Mayor Blundy:

I understand you are interested in finding and making available vacant lots at a reasonable price for low-cost housing in Sarnia and its environs.

Our company is the owner of part of lots 2 and 3 and 4 in block C according to registered plan 13 of the township of Sarnia, part of which fronts and lies east of Murphy Road, as yet unopened. The parcel owned by us and available for purchase is shown outlined in red on the survey attached, which we are advised could provide about 400 lots of standard size.

Our company is prepared to sell to the city, or its nominee, all or part, if all is not required, of such land at a price of $1,000 per lot of standard size.

In any such sale, the purchaser would be responsible for:

1. Preparing and registering an appropriate plan;

2. Obtaining any change which may be required in the zoning and use of such land; and

3. Obtaining any necessary consent to severance of the part purchased and making payment of any amount or donation of any part of such land as may be required by the township of Sarnia.

Our company is prepared to leave this offer open for two months, and if desired our company will give an option to purchase the same upon such terms.

May I interject by saying that concludes the letter and it is signed by Mr. Rowcliffe.

An additional letter that I will read will make it amply clear that I hold no brief for Brockfield Investments Limited. I know Mr. Rowcliffe is a solicitor in our city; I do not know who the principals of that company are. I believe there are some negotiations at the present time that might involve this company, but I am not certain of that.

I read that letter because it initiates a response by the city manager of the corporation of the city of Sarnia under date August 14, 1968, to Mr. G. Wayne Murchison, director, land development, Ontario Housing Corporation, at the appropriate address, and reads:

Dear Mr. Murchison:

I enclose a copy of a letter from Brockfield Investments Limited dated August 6, 1968, together with a plan showing part of lots 2, 3 and 4, block C, RP 13.

City council, in dealing with this letter, passed the following resolution:

That the city of Sarnia council urge the Ontario Housing Corporation to consider the purchase of the land set forth in the offer dated August 6, 1968, from the director of Brockfield Investments Limited for housing under the HOME plan, and indicating that city council is willing to supply available services at the expense of the developer and also that a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the township of Sarnia and Mr. J. E. Bullbrook, MPP.

They just go on then and suggest that they might get in touch with Mr. Rowcliffe, director.

Laterally to that, it had been brought to my attention by several constituents that in connection with a proposed plan by the corporation in conjunction with some expropriation proceedings by the city of Sarnia that some of my constituents were concerned with rear yards. The minister might recall that I had written to him in this connection and he was kind enough to write to me on August 14, as follows. He said:

In connection with the proposed land assembly project containing some 100 fully serviced lots—

And I make it amply clear, if I make, in case I confuse, that we are referring to a different project entirely.

—the municipality has proposed expropriation for certain rear yards in that community. In regard to your concern, I have asked my officials in the Ontario Housing Corporation to consult fully with the residents concerned, should the municipality proceed with the above-mentioned land.

The city of Sarnia, as you well know, is currently faced—

And I invite your consideration of these words, Mr. Chairman—

The city of Sarnia, as you well know, is currently faced with an acute shortage of land. Our survey indicated that the city requires some 250 fully serviced lots and our investigation indicates the city does not have sufficient available serviced land within its boundaries to satisfy the present need.

A report of our survey was presented to council on May 17, 1968, and the city passed a resolution on May 14 with respect to the proposed expropriation. In the meantime, the Ontario Housing Corporation has been looking at land located outside the municipal boundaries, but which would be acceptable to the municipality for the land assembly project development of the HOME programme.

Negotiations have taken place with several owners and a report is to be submitted to the board of directors of the Ontario Housing Corporation on August 20, 1968. As soon as a firm decision has been reached, I will advise you.

Now, Mr. Chairman, during the interval between the response by me to the minister and that letter from the minister to me, it came to my attention that the Ontario Housing Corporation was considering the acquisition of certain lots owned by St. Clair Woods development; these lots are in the township of Moore.

I then wrote a letter to the minister, and I will read it in its entirety if you wish, but I want primarily to bring to your attention the last paragraph of it. There is nothing in the letter that I do not want you to hear at all. I do not want to burden you unduly. I thank the minister for expressing his concern in connection with the rear yard problem I refer to the proposed purchase in the township of Moore, and I say:

I must also be frank in stating that I was under the impression that there is some liaison or part ownership of some nature by Bramalea corporation in the St. Clair Woods development. Is this not the same company or interest with whom the corporation dealt last year in the acquisition of lands in the Toronto area?

Now, I digress again by bringing to the attention of the members of this committee that the minister tonight had called this corporation very efficient. That is why he is prepared to deal with them, and I am not sure whether he said to the tune of $44 million, but they are a very efficient corporation.

May I say also that you just have to hearken back to the discussion that took place with the previous speaker, the hon. member for Downsview, in connection with the dealings that took place between the housing corporation and Bramalea previously.

I continue, and this is the essential aspect of the letter, and I invite your attention too, Mr. Chairman:

However, Mr. Minister, I consider the most important feature to be the location of the St. Clair Woods land. As you mentioned in your letter of August 14, the corporation survey indicated that the city requires some 250 fully-serviced lots. I ask you to consider that the St. Clair Woods lots are not sufficiently close to the urban area to constitute satisfaction of that need. I hold no brief for the price requested by Brockfield Investments as I am not knowledgeable in connection with the land value. I do ask you to consider support of the city's position.

May I say, in fairness to the minister, if I had a reply to that—and the minister might well have replied—I could not find it in my file, and it might well be my fault. There might well have been a reply. But what has caused me concern—and I did not bring this matter up last year during the course of the estimates—was I thought perhaps that the Ontario Housing Corporation, and this minister, were more knowledgeable than I in this connection; they knew how to serve the needs of the people in the area.

What they did, in effect, was go forward in March, 1969, and purchase 50 lots from St. Clair Woods for $210,000, or $4,200 per lot. I want to bring to the attention of you, Mr. Chairman, and the members of this committee, that in September, 1969, St. Clair Woods Limited conveyed to Bramalea Consolidated Developments Limited and St. Clair Developments Limited, and they formed a joint venture carrying on business as Sarnia-St. Clair Construction Company. This was in 1966. I bring this to your attention because there comes forward Bramalea Consolidated Developments Limited. I, as a solicitor dealing on behalf of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, as I then did prior to my election to this House, had occasion to deal on behalf of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation at that time involving St. Clair Woods, and all material was forwarded to the offices of Bramalea Consolidated for execution of the mortgages.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): You will have that information forwarded to Central Mortgage and Housing?

Mr. Bullbrook: That is right. And I bring it to the attention of this committee. I am saying it affected Bramalea, which was involved in the original acquisition, or subsequently with the management of this total development. This is substantiated, Mr. Chairman, by the conveyance that was subsequently made. What causes me concern as a member of this House—and I wish to attempt to substantiate the comments that I made previously—is that since March, 1969, when those 50 lots were purchased, one lot has been sold.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): One lot.

Mr. Bullbrook: As of 10 o'clock this morning in the registry office, one of those lots has been sold. I have no knowledge of any offers to purchase concurrent with any other lot and it might be that the minister or his colleagues, as he calls them, might well satisfy us, but the reason I bring this to the committee's attention is that we have a minister of the Crown pointing out to a member that an urban area requires immediately, with urgent need, 275 lots. Subsequently, we have the member writing to the minister saying: "Please reconsider the proposed or rumoured acquisition from St. Clair Woods of 50 lots"—in a development, gentlemen, that was not a financially feasible development, and that today is not a financially feasible development. The fact of the matter is that they incorporated their own construction company in 1966 and acquired, for $3,000 a lot, 25 lots from the original owner and they have been able to build only 14 houses in four years.

We have, three years later, the corporation coming and paying $4,200 a lot for them. This is one of the questions I want to ask, because you cannot say in all fairness that there has been an acceleration of land values there. I would think that the people who guide the decisions of this corporation must have been unnoticing. They had to be unnoticing, gentlemen, that this was not a feasible proposition, that the people obviously either did not want to live there or could not afford to live there, or for some reason were not accepting this particular development.

I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, through you to the minister, that this, of course, is exemplified and fortified completely by the fact that in 14 months since the corporation has acquired these fully-serviced lots, they sold one lot, and that is by agreement of sale. May I suggest to you—

Mr. Singer: Has it been consummated?

Mr. Bullbrook: May I suggest to you that if it is by agreement of sale there has not been a deed given. Usually in those circumstances, therefore, a house has not been built, so that one might legitimately conclude, and this is purley an inference on my part, that there is not one house built on those 50 lots. But the fact of the matter is, whether or not there is a house built, there is only one lot sold.

I have heard many discussions in connection with an inferred liaison between Bramalea and Ontario Housing Corporation. I invite your consideration of this and I invite the response of the minister in this connection.

Why? In my first question, I would like to have an explanation as to the total investigation made by the corporation as to the feasibility of the lots purchased for resale purposes. That is the first thing I would like to know. When you see a corporation that has developed this type of development and they themselves in a period of three years are able to sell through their own construction company only 14 out of 25 lots, one must be put on guard. Certainly one must be put on notice.

There were 40 lots sold to a company called Sarnia Lumber and Builder's Supply. They are sorry, I am led to believe, that they ever bought those 40 lots. But of course, when they received $210,000 from the Ontario Housing Corporation, it enabled them to exhaust major financial obligations concurrent with that development. In addition to the first question, I would like to have knowledge as to why the minister did not seem to give any consideration to the last paragraph of my letter. I think this is important. He might have valid reasons as to why he did not.

But one has to consider that the land purchased was, I believe, and I hope I am subject to correction, about nine miles from downtown Sarnia. I would say about six miles from the limits of our community. It caused me concern as I expressed in the letter, Mr. Chairman, that if you are going to satisfy an urgent urban need, that urgent urban need could not be satisfied by going down and doing business with Bramalea Consolidated, at least peripherally, nine miles from the heart of the urban area.

The next question I have is: I would like to know whether the shortage referred to in the minister's letter of August 14 has been taken care of. I would like to know what representations were made by St. Clair Woods or by any associated company, including Bramalea Consolidated Developments Limited to the corporation. I would like to know how the corporation arrived at the propriety of $4,200 a lot, and the companies themselves conveyed to a joint venture company the loss of $3,000. I will not accept the answer that there was a natural accretion in value. Quite the contrary, I think the values in connection with those lots have actually lessened, rather than increased.

I want to know who—if they were secured by the housing corporation on independent appraisals—did the appraisals. I want to know whether the people who did the appraisals had anything to do with the real estate company that worked out the transaction? This is most important in connection with my particular satisfaction and, Mr. Chairman, I want to say this to you quite forthrightly. I would love to walk out of here tonight or perhaps tomorrow afternoon knowing that there was a total, full, effectual and satisfactory answer to my inquiries, removing from my mind any suspicion that lies there.

I ask the minister if he would table the correspondence, either with his department or with the corporation, involving the acquisition of the lots from St. Clair Woods? I would like to read all the correspondence. I would like to read correspondence involving any political influence that might have been brought to bear in connection with the acquisition of these lots. I would like to read the correspondence from the solicitor who might have acted for St. Clair Woods or Bramalea. I would like to know the total involvement of the housing corporation in connection with this land deal.

Mr. Trotter: Those Bramalea boys sure get around.

Mr. Bullbrook: Now if I might I want to, if you will permit me—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Chairman, might I interrupt a minute? I notice the comment of my hon. friend from Parkdale here. I think it is wrong to infer that the Bramalea Corporation is run by a bunch of crooks.

Mr. Bullbrook: I am not inferring that, sir, you realize that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You keep talking about Bramalea and I tell you—

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Chairman, if I might. Mr. Minister, I never said anything about crookedness.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I know you did not. Your friend here said that the Bramalea Corporation sure gets around. Let me assure you that any corporation does, that is on its toes, and Bramalea is one of them, in my estimation, whether you like the way it operates or not. They are dealing all over Toronto. I understand they have a lot of holdings in St. Catharines. They are liable to deal anywhere, but because they are dealing outside of Bramalea does not necessarily mean to say that they are not running a corporation on an honest and sincere basis, to render a service to the public in order to make a profit. Now, let me finish.

Mr. Bullbrook: Why should he interrupt like this now? I just do not understand this.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think I have a right to interrupt—

Mr. Chairman: You should answer the questions of the member for Sarnia. The member for Parkdale has already had his opportunity.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The member for Parkdale's comments are going in Hansard and they should not be—

Mr. Bullbrook: You are going to have every opportunity, and this is the point I have tried to make before—we are dealing with this on a fully parliamentary basis. I am very appreciative of it but the fact of the matter is, Mr. Minister, that you are going to have every opportunity to answer me either this evening or tomorrow. I am sure you will do more than an adequate job in answering. I am sure you will. But if I might be permitted to respond to you—

Hon. Mr. Randall: All right, ask your friend from Parkdale, then, to let you finish.

Mr. Bullbrook: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Ask your friend there in front of you to let you finish.

Mr. Bullbrook: Will the minister comment on this, since he is knowledgeable as to Bramalea's operation—although not necessarily the internal management of Bramalea, but obviously it is a very efficient corporation. He is prepared to advise my colleague for Parkdale, if I might, Mr. Chairman, that they do good work. Since the minister wishes to take that tack, I would like to know the entire involvement of Bramalea in this total St. Clair Woods development. I would like to know if the minister could tell me, for example, who the principals are of Bramalea? Who are the principals of St. Clair Woods? What liaison do they have, one with the other?

You see the problem here is that we are subject to so many rumours. I get rumours all the time. I hear who the principals are and I cannot, I do not want to, vest those rumours with any credence by mentioning the names because I have no proof, if you follow me. But will you tell us who these people are?

I am not going to get into this, but I want to mention that this is the problem we have. I am going to tell you that a constituent of mine told me that somebody high up in the corporation had a direct liaison with the construction company that you all talk about. What is the name of it?

An hon. member: Headway!

Mr. Bullbrook: Headway. And this is the thing. We, as members of this House, can go forth and resist this type of thing, if you tell us, "This is Headway. They started in the Lakehead but there is nobody in this corporation—principal, servant, agent, employee—who has any direct or indirect liaison with Headway Corporation, other than in the performance of their bounden duty to this corporation." That is all we want. We can take the cudgel up for you, Mr. Minister. That is all we want.

I am going to close, if I might, by making a couple of general comments. I appreciate the time you have taken and it is in connection with things I have heard here today that I want to record this.

First of all, a comment made by the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) this afternoon in connection with the utilization of trailers.

It seems to me that the answer given by the minister was not adequate. This government is prepared, on many occasions, to say to municipalities, "It is in the public interest that you do this." As a matter of fact, the government has given to the Minister of Municipal Affairs the power to say to a municipal corporation, "You do not exist any more; you are out of business." So when we talk about the need for provision of adequate trailer court facilities throughout this province, the answer cannot lie in the response by the minister—that it must be up to the local municipality to make the decision.

I believe, as sincerely as any of us do, Mr. Chairman, in the autonomy of local municipalities. But the fact of the matter is, if there is a total provincial problem and if because of the, not selfish, but the understandably protection attitude of municipalities toward their citizens in specific neighbourhoods, they do not want trailer courts, then the province of Ontario must intervene. They must. We have no alternative.

We have got to provide this type of housing availability to the people of Ontario because, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, there are so many people in the province of Ontario who can only afford that type of housing. We can no longer leave it to the individual council. If they will not see their bounden duty to provide that type of accommodation within their geographic bounds, then we, as a provincial body, must see that it is done.

I want to mention also, if I might, in closing, that I am not prepared to accept the attitude of the minister in connection with the portfolio arrangements of life insurance companies and trust companies. The answer to their problems—or the reason for their abdication of their social responsibility and their retrenchment in connection with lending in the field of real property mortgages and concurrent securities—was not the budget attitude taken by the federal government two years ago. That added to it, I agree entirely, Mr. Minister. But we all know, who have anything to do with business, that it was many years ago that the trust corporations and the life insurance companies made up their minds that they were going to get into the equity field. That is when this government had to move in and, frankly, that is when the federal government had to move in at the same time. Both governments deserve a great deal of chastisement, and this is not new.

We discussed this, Mr. Minister, at length during the estimates of your colleague, the then Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. Rowntree), last year. The time has got to come when the profit motivation—as much as I admire it and as much as I hope selfishly to be a part of it—cannot be the essential equation between corporations of that nature and the public need.

We have a bounden moral obligation to say to these companies, "The profit motivation is not everything; you have to put your money where the need is."

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bullbrook: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Chairman, let me say to the hon. member for Sarnia that we will document the information he asks for tomorrow. He has asked a number of questions. I think he appreciates that we would have to dig up the correspondence he has before him. There is some correspondence that he claimed is missing. I am not too sure whether we have it or not but I will look for it tomorrow.

Mr. Bullbrook: No, no. I did not say it was missing.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think you said there was a letter that I did not reply to.

Mr. Bullbrook: No. Let us have the record straight there. I was not claiming there was any correspondence missing. I apologize to you for not having read your reply to my letter of August 21, because I do not know whether there was one. My file does not disclose it, so in fairness to you I wanted to say that you might well have replied several times to me. I just cannot find it. I think that is a result of moving files back and forth from Sarnia.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I just assumed that there was a letter of mine that was missing.

Mr. Bullbrook: No.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will look for it tomorrow and see if I can find the rest of the file. Any correspondence we have with regard to St. Clair Woods Development Corporation we will be glad to put on record and we will be glad to discuss this entire programme with the hon. member. I think perhaps if we are on tomorrow afternoon or Thursday afternoon or Thursday night, that we will have all that information.

Mr. Bullbrook: I am genuinely interested. I close again in saying, what I am interested in is why the corporation made that decision? How did they rationalize that decision, after one lot is sold from 50? That is it.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Peterborough.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Thank you, Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few, very terse comments on the problem of housing and then turn to a series of questions of the minister.

First, I think that one cannot help but be impressed by the amount of interest shown by members of the Legislature in this problem of housing as well as the level of participation which has followed upon this particular estimate.

It is rather interesting that a number of experts were brought together in the United States just a few weeks ago. They were asked what they saw as the major problems facing the North American continent between now and 1980, and they selected two problems. One was unemployment, and the other was housing. One would perhaps have expected them to be the Negro problem or a number of other social problems, such as the problem of poverty.

As they saw it, the shortfall in housing would be so serious within the next five or six or seven years that this would cause a major dislocation in regard to society. As well as that, the technological problems of dealing with unemployment were becoming so massive that they saw this as the other major dislocation.

I do not think that one can say that it is very far different in Ontario, in Canada, than it is in the United States. That is just exactly the reason why we in the New Democratic Party suggest the need for a full department of housing in urban affairs at the provincial level, and that we think it deserves its own department, its own minister, its own estimates, its own rationale. We have The Department of Labour to look after employment but certainly not a department of housing and urban affairs.

I have a number of questions I would like to ask the minister. Over the past number of weeks we have seen, as we have said on other occasions, perhaps the first phase, if not a particularly detailed plan, of the development for the province of Ontario, particularly the Toronto area, what is regarded as the Toronto-centred plan. As soon as that plan was projected, describing in a very general way plans for the area, the price of land rose in certain areas and the price of land went down in other areas.

What I would like to know is how much land was acquired by the Ontario Housing Corporation? To what extent before that plan was brought forward, before it became quite obvious that there were going to be great housing needs in many of these centres which were now projected as having considerable growth, to what extent did the Ontario Housing Corporation react in advance to that kind of a need, or to what extent is the Ontario Housing Corporation going to pay now the higher prices which are being created simply by the projection of that plan? Could the minister indicate if there were any reactions, previous reactions, by the Ontario Housing Corporation?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me say this, and I do not speak from any facts before me, we have always looked around for land deals in the areas you are talking about.

Mr. Pitman: Along the lakeshore?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Along east of here, along the lakeshore, Markham, Vaughan and other areas, and looked at it with reference to how much land could we pick up now at the lowest possible price. Up until the time that that release was made, the facts were presented to us by the Ontario Water Resources Commission that there would be no water up there. For instance, let me give you an example. The jail farm on Yonge Street has 600 acres owned by the city of Toronto. I think we offered them $3.5 million for it and I think one of their new aldermen said they could get $12 million, so it is still sitting there. Whether they will ever get $12 million or not, I do not know. If they sit there long enough, I am sure they will but that 600 acres—there were water facilities in Thornhill to handle about 65 acres on the Yonge Street end of it and when that water facility was used up for sewer facility, the rest became dormant. I mean, it could not be sold unless new sewers and water were put through there.

These are many of the areas we have looked at. We tried to get an option on some of that land if there was a possibility of that going forward, insofar as production is concerned. Some of the criticism we have had from the members in the opposition has been because we have bought into Bramalea; that we could get land there, that we could produce houses on tomorrow or yesterday or the day before.

In other words, we were looking at land that we could put into production and build housing. We also made the deal in Chapel Glen Village. We have got Malvern started. There are many of those areas where we felt we could get production going on housing; where we used our own money, as I said this afternoon, to go and buy the land. Insofar as other parcels of land are concerned, at one time we were offered the 6,000 acres assembled by Century City and as you know that was in the revenue properties programme.

I am quite sure if we had gone in and made a deal on Century City we would be sitting here today defending ourselves about another developer who has gone bankrupt. These are some of the things that we have to look at with reference to future buying of land in the area you just mentioned. What land has been optioned, or is purchased in the areas, I cannot tell you. I do not have a record of that here tonight and I do not think we have one with us.

If we had options, I do not think we would want to disclose that, as you can appreciate because we may be closing any options we have. We would have to close them because now the land has been, as you suggested, either approved for building or approved for farm land or approved for green belt. We can exercise an option if we can use it. If we cannot use it, we do not have to exercise the option but one of the major problems we face—

Mr. Pitman: But surely you are paying much more for that land now than you have—

Hon. Mr. Randall: If we have optioned it, we will not be paying much more, but you have got to option it before you get a security, as you can appreciate.

Mr. Pitman: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If we have not optioned it, we are going to have to pay the same price as any other developer if the land comes up for sale. This is one of the major difficulties we have faced in the metropolitan area. Where can you buy land even in what you call cow pasture stage at a price that will allow us to put in services and build housing?

Mr. Pitman: But surely it is going to cost you more in the future? Approximately how much land do you have under option right now?

Hon. Mr. Randall: At the present time we have 45 acres in Oshawa that is included in the area. We have the 1,663 in Malvern which you know about. We have got 761 acres in Oakville, and Thistle town—what have we got in Thistle town? Have you got that figure handy?

Mr. Goyette: Only those serviced lots there—about 300 lots.

Hon. Mr. Randall: About 300 lots in Thistle town. At the moment that is what we have closed. There are 50 acres in Niagara Falls. We have picked up land wherever we could get it and closed it prior to the announcement of the Toronto-centred plan.

Mr. Pitman: Fine. What per cent exactly is this of your needs of land in the next 10 years?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think a very minute percentage the way the city is going to grow. I must be honest with you. I think it is peanuts.

Mr. Pitman: It is peanuts. But that is the point I am trying to make, though. Do you not have a responsibility, as the minister of housing in this government, to gather very large amounts of land, particularly when this government is creating the price of that land? This government is deciding the direction which both housing and industry and development is going to go. Do you not have a responsibility to take some action to gather land beforehand, so that you do have this bank—this land bank—that you can work with once the development starts moving?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me just point out, we have 11,000 acres that we own right now in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Pitman: They are peanuts, as you said.

Hon. Mr. Randall: But 11,000 acres is not peanuts. What we have in Metro is peanuts as compared to what is going to be developed. Let me just go back—and I am not trying to be facetious here. You remember when I picked up the 3,000 acres in Waterloo, the first guy who squawked was your federal member, Mr. Saltsman. He went on television and said we were buying it in the wrong area, the wrong place and we paid too much and a lot of other things—

Mr. Pitman: That had to do with the planning of that area. The way it was done.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, there was no plan at the time. Saltsman just sounded off that we bought land in the wrong place. Since that time there has been a report by Dr. Fyfe, and Dr. Fyfe is one individual who has decided that is an area that should not be developed. On the other hand, we recognized the Toronto-centred plan and what is going to move into that area and perhaps it is not a wrong place.

However, I am not going to argue with Dr. Fyfe tonight. All I am going to say is that I have got 3,000 acres for the housing corporation for the price that they bought it from the Indians, if we want to be basic about it; a low price. If I cannot use that 3,000 acres there, I am in the poker game. I can trade that 3,000 acres for somewhere else in the Kitchener-Waterloo area, but at least I have got, as you are suggesting, the 3,000 acres.

The biggest difficulty in acquiring land has been, first of all, where do you acquire it and for how long? Secondly, as I pointed out this afternoon, the federal government has been very reluctant to advance us money for land accumulation because its funds have been limited.

I am not faulting them. I just simply say they have been in the public housing, senior citizens, student housing. They have other provinces now coming in, asking for similar sums of money and it is obvious they are not going to give us everything we ask for. Our big difficulty in acquiring land is no matter where we acquire it, we find ourselves embroiled in a hell of a fight as to whether we are acquiring cow pasture, how much we pay for it, why we bought it, and I can just suggest to you now—

Mr. Sargent: How can you justify Bramalea, then?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I can just suggest to you now that if the acreage, the 6,000 acres in Century City, is made available to us—I am sure that if we had picked that up tonight—we would have been in a hell of a fight about bailing out another defunct company.

Mr. Pitman: Yes, I can see that, Mr. Minister. When you went into Waterloo—and I am not going to get into the Waterloo question—but at that time, it became involved in what came to be called the Orillia planning hassle that was going on in that area. There was no clear direction of where the urban development should take place. There was no clear direction. But when you, as a minister of the government of Ontario, sit in the cabinet and in interdepartmental committees that decide there should be a certain development in Metropolitan Toronto, along the lakeshore, and decide there should be green belts, that there should be other areas of medium development—once you have made those kind of decisions in cabinet, it would appear clear to me that you should be moving very quickly to ensure that you have the housing land bank in those areas that you know where you are going.

That is very different from Waterloo, where you were dealing with a very fluid situation, and you had to second-guess and play at poker games in which you did not have all the cards and in some cases you were sure of drawing some of the wrong ones. That is a very different game than the one you were playing in relation to a planning development in the Toronto-centred region, where indeed the whole force of the entire government of Ontario—The Department of Municipal Affairs, The Department of Trade and Development, The Department of Lands and Forests, every department—is agreeing and accepting a plan of development. You are a part of that government, and I think you have the responsibility under those conditions to step in and say, “All right, this province has decided to go in this direction; we will need so much housing there, so we will take this land.” I think it is a negation of your responsibility not to move in on that situation.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I just point out that the housing corporation, in acquiring land, meets with an advisory committee of members from Treasury Board, Municipal Affairs, Department of Education, Department of Energy and Resources Management, and the Prime Minister’s Department, as well as our own. And when we have gone out and acquired land, we have done it with the knowledge of that the advisory committee, and that advisory committee, using its best judgement, says go ahead and buy the land, and that judgement was used up in Waterloo. It was not just a judgement on the part of the housing corporation.

It was recognized that Dr. Fyfe was getting a report together, but it does not necessarily follow that, because a report is handed down, the government has to follow. The government asks for that report to make some decision but it does not necessarily follow that if you pay a guy to make a report that you are going to follow his instructions and that is the bible.

Mr. Pitman: You intend to follow the Toronto-centred region report?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The Toronto-centred region report now has been published—

Mr. Pitman: It is government policy.

Hon. Mr. Randall: —and undoubtedly it is government policy. I can also point out to you that as far back as two years ago we were talking about picking up a great deal of land in Pickering, because we recognized that housing could not go ahead in Pickering without industrial development. If the member is here, we designated Pickering for so many industries in order to help them get over their housing problem, but the only land we were offered in Pickering was at $7,000 an acre for cow pasture, and it is obvious that $7,000 an acre two years ago was too much money. Today, you will probably say foresight is better than hindsight; maybe we should have taken it at $7,000 an acre. But that means when you have serviced it, you would be back up in Metro at another $20,000 an acre for services.

So the mathematics of some of these things just does not work out. If we could go out and buy from the original owner in many cases, we could save the taxpayer a hell of a lot of money. If we could have gone up and said to the town council in Waterloo, or if we had said to Dr. Fyfe for instance, “Here comes the Ontario Housing Corporation; we are going to buy land in here,” and Dr. Fyfe said, “You cannot buy it in here, because I am getting a report and I am going to sterilize that,” you know what happens to the price of land: we would never have got our hands on 3,000 acres.

So there are many problems that we face in trying to pick up land, and particularly in an urban area like Toronto or Kitchener. You have to look at the mathematics and say, how far can a government go on acquiring land? As I say, we have 11,000 acres all over Ontario. I admit some of it is no good. There are 1,500 acres at Atikokan. I wish I had them down here in Metro Toronto, but they were bought long before my time, when they were going to have a town of 6,000 or 7,000 people and it just did not develop. But maybe it will one of these days.

On the other hand, that is part of the 11,000 acres. It is not all the land but, as we say, we have picked up land in any area we can pick it up where mathematically it seems the proper thing to do.

Mr. Pitman: I recognize what the minister is saying, but one shudders to think what is going to happen to housing in this area over the next 10 years on the basis of the minister’s projections that he has just made. What are the mathematics of realism if the mathematics of my idealism are irrational?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me tell you what I think is going to happen. We had a chap in the other day and I do not know how much land he has but he has hundreds of acres. He said, “With this new regional plan, I need mortgage money and mortgage money is not available. If I build housing on those lots to the HOME guidelines, can I get mortgage money?” I said, “Come on down here, there are people who would be glad to talk to you.”

It is quite possible, the way the economy is going at the present time, that many of these fellows we have spoken of earlier today may be land poor in the next year or two. This is where the housing corporation, using its mortgage funds, can acquire a good many lots to build houses on. We do not acquire the lots. We say to the man, "If you build according to the HOME programme, we will get you mortgage money." This is going on.

I think there are people—I know there are people—coming to me every day of the week and phoning me. I say, "You must go down to the housing corporation. I do not buy any land. I do not make any decision. It is made down there by the people who are knowledgeable. I do not know how many we have; I guess we have three or four a week, at least.

Mr. Pitman: What is the pattern in Ontario? I notice, for example that 50 per cent of housing in Scotland is public housing; in the United States, eight per cent, and I saw somewhere that Canada was two per cent. What is Ontario's now?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We are building 11.1 per 1,000 population. We have been. That is our record to date. But I want to go back again and say, when the task force got started—and I hope I am not accused of blaming the federal government again but I think the story of Mr. Hellyer is familiar to everybody. When it got started in 1968, we never dug a hole, we never got an approval until the end of April, 1969. Then there was a holdup in Metro while they found out whether or not people wanted to live in high-rise buildings, so there were very few contracts approved in Metro.

We will no doubt be talking about the number of units we produced and this is one of the reasons. We lost almost a year's production in Metro because, first of all, of the task force holdup and second, when Mr. Andras came to power, he said, "I am not going to approve any Metro contracts until I find out what is the best way to build public housing. People must have a front and a back door."

I said, if they are going to have a back door at the corner of King and Yonge they are going to have a hell of a long drop. I am not trying to be facetious. I am just saying you are not going to build in an urban area and house people unless you go to high-rises.

Mr. Deans: You have missed your calling.

Mr. Pitman: Yes. Incidentally, you speak of the Hellyer task force, and so on. Where do we stand on urban renewal now? Are we back on the tracks?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Urban renewal is not in my department. It is in The Department of Municipal Affairs. I think that urban renewal outside of one area in Toronto—it seems to me it is the Trefann Court area—has been given the go-ahead.

Mr. Pitman: Should your department not be involved in urban renewal? It seems to me that this is one of the hangups, one of the distortions, that housing should be somehow apart from urban renewal, because housing should be tied in with urban renewal.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not disagree with you. We have suggested we would not object to handling it but up to the present time, remember, whatever urban renewal means, the municipality, the province and the federal government buy X number of acres in downtown. When they flatten it out, they say go and build the housing which we did over in Don Mount. We can move in and we can can build housing as fast as they can flatten the area.

I do not think that we have to get involved in that except, if we were going to get involved we would take a look at it, maybe, on a different basis. Because we know in the Don Mount area—I think I am talking about the right area; off Parliament Street; behind Parliament Street and Queen—in that area they knocked down housing and took out 1,200 people and put back 900. I do not think you solve the housing problem that way. You may clean up a neighbourhood.

On the other hand, if you do not knock down the stores on the east side of Parliament Street and the north side of Queen Street, I do not think you have rehabilitated the area. My feeling on urban renewal is you must get into the commercial aspects, because if the commercial aspects were not knocked down there could be living accommodation over those stores and you could put a lot more people into the area. Those are my thoughts on urban renewal.

I do not disagree with you that urban renewal could be very well put into the housing corporation programme but as of the moment, it has not been.

Mr. Pitman: I think you might very well begin working on it. It seems to me that you are not going to create a viable core in the city unless there is that balance of housing and commercial development and green space and so on which makes the core of the city livable.

I would like to turn to another subject—the rent supplement as indicative of noise and hornblowing; at one point it appeared that this might be one of the solutions to the housing problem. What has happened in the last six to eight months, probably, is that rents have gone up, and probably have gone up more as a result of policies of this government. For example, in spite of the fact that one cannot scold the government for having done something about security deposits, the funny thing that happened was that landlords decided they would get their money in advance by putting the rents up.

Of course, the fact that the Attorney General's office has been totally unable to get the various municipalities to put in any kind of a rent review board, really meant there has not been any control over them at all. The rents have gone up disastrously, and this is the reason you have so much pressure on Ontario Housing Corporation in some parts of Ontario.

I can say—if I might use my own area—when I came to this Legislature, there were 27 units in Peterborough but I think there is something like 300 to 400 now. Yet the line-up is still massive. One of the main reasons is not because the total amount of housing accommodation has gone down, and it sure is not because the number of people has gone up sharply, but simply because the rent structure has deteriorated to such an extent that people who have accommodation find that they cannot continue to live in that accommodation and pay their bills. A lot of this results from the facts I have just mentioned.

The first thing I would like to ask is, have you found any pattern which will allow you to consider rent supplements, or mortgage supplements, as a means of providing more housing for lower-income people? Have you found any way of holding the lid down? You are not supplementing the landlord rather than helping the tenant. Where are you in this area?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Are you suggesting—I am just trying to clarify in my own mind—that the people who are living with a private landlord should be subsidized by the province? Is this what you are suggesting?

Mr. Pitman: What I am saying is that there has been this suggestion that, if you cannot raise the number of units of accommodations as well as build new units, one of the ways is to find some method by which people with lower incomes can live in the units in which they already live but cannot afford to continue to live, simply because they cannot pay the rents.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That goes back to our rent supplement plan, when the former minister, Bob Macaulay, was here. As you know, we had 250 houses in the city of Toronto on which we guaranteed the rent and people moved in. Once the lease ran out, the landlords raised the rent, and finally the Ontario Housing Corporation was paying the rent with no limit to it.

Mr. Pitman: That is the point I want to find out.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have not gone back into that programme because we feel the only way we can control the cost of the subsidy and give people the kind of housing they want is to build the housing ourselves, which we are doing as rapidly as we can.

Let me just comment on this rent supplement, this programme, for a minute. Sure, there are some landlords who are not playing ball with the tenant, but these are not the majority of landlords. There is a minority in any class, whether it be doctors, lawyers, dentists, school teachers, politicians, washing machine salesmen, who give the industry a bad reputation.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): You are in two categories.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am out twice. What we have to look at is, for every one per cent increase in the interest rate, the landlord has to raise the price per suite $12 per month. That is what is happening. Now, look at the interest rates, look at the bank rate. It went from 6.5 per cent to 11 per cent, if you can get it.

The big difficulty is that most of these apartment houses you are looking at have been sold; the original fellows who built it have sold it to somebody else. The fellow who bought it went out and bought money at a higher price perhaps than the guy who had it. We have a lot of people—some are friends of mine—say, "This place was built 10 years ago. Why should they raise the rent?" But your help is getting more money. The man's taxes have gone up.

Mr. Pitman: I realize that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The man's taxes have gone up but, on the other hand, the new owners who have come in have had to borrow money at today's rates, so I do not think we can fault the landlord entirely.

Mr. Pitman: I am not saying that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I know you are not, but I recognize that there are some difficulties in trying to maintain rents. But the fault is not entirely of the guy who owns the building or who owns the house, because his costs have gone up.

Mr. Deans: It is the system's fault.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It may be, but I have been in areas where they have other systems, and I can assure you that you would not settle for it. Our people are better off on welfare than they are in some systems, believe me.

Mr. Pitman: Okay. I suggest that the minister might just continue to take a look at longer leases, or find other rent control or rent accommodations which will at least make it possible to use the existing accommodation before you continue to buy it.

One thing that always bothers me is that we are always behind. We never catch up. I think you have a crew that moved into Peterborough just a couple of days ago; I heard it on the radio as I drove out of town. You have had so many people suffering before you begin your next survey, and then you go through the long process of accumulating land. Months and months go by until actually there are buildings there and, in the meantime, while the people wait, they suffer. I think this is an unacceptable degree of suffering which goes on.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might just ask one or two questions on student housing. Would this be permissible?

Mr. Chairman: No. Student housing is the next two votes.

Mr. Pitman: Next two votes? I did not know whether you were covering that at the same time.

One more question on housing. What is this department doing about the whole business of developing systems of building houses? I realize that the National Research Council and various other bodies are doing a great job in this area, but we talked in the last two hours about a number of reasons why the cost of housing goes up and up and up. The main reason, as I say, I think the minister has the responsibility to gather a land bank. Certainly the minister himself has mentioned the cost of money. Certainly one of these reasons and perhaps one of the lesser reasons, is the cost of construction, and I wonder what the minister has done.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me say this. I think I mentioned yesterday that we were building homes, I think we mentioned a figure of $12,500, $12,900 that should have been $13,000, up to $15,500 including land. I do not believe that construction costs are the reasons for high-cost housing today.

Mr. Piman: I am glad to hear you say that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You show me a good builder who can buy doorknobs and bathtubs and doorframes and build with them as General Motors assembles a Buick car and I will show you a guy, if he has mortgage money, who can build a house more efficiently than any systems builder in Europe.

The systems builder in Europe, first of all, must start with a very heavy overhead and a plant costing a million or two dollars and he has to take the product to the site and erect it. He may be able to build faster in high-rise buildings and perhaps even in condominiums, such as we are going to build in Chapel Glen if he can get a long run.

The big trouble with systems building is they must have a long run or it is uneconomical. I think you recognize that systems first of all started in Europe where they could build apartment houses and high-rises in great scale. The British government gave them an order for 5,000 or 10,000 units for a new town and they could go ahead with these big developments on a mass basis.

I have found here that the small builder, if given mortgage money and 50 lots, he can dig 50 holes for 50 basements and build 50 houses faster than any systems building I know of and keep the cost down so that people can afford it. We have proved under the HOME programme that that can be done.

You ask me what are we going to do about systems. The first thing we are going to do—Chapel Glen will be the first systems building village in Canada, to my knowledge. There are five major developers using a systems building technique. When we are finished with that, I can tell you then whether it will be faster and cheaper for a project like that. I think in the long run, they will put up buildings like that much faster than maybe an independent builder.

On the other hand, if you give me 50 small builders in there and let them have 50 units, or 100 units, I think they can do just as good a job. But if the weather is against them, they may not be able to perform.

However, this is where we are trying out systems building and I might point out, some of these people have put as much a $2 million into a shop. Now the overhead is there and their big problem is, if you go along and give an order for half a dozen houses, they would starve to death. They cannot make a quarter. They cannot make a dozen of this sort and make any money. I think you recognize this. There is no difference in building a few washing machines, or a few refrigerators, you have to have a long run.

I think when Chapel Glen is built I can answer your question a little more intelligently. But we are going to try it out.

Mr. Chairman: Can we break off on that point? Will you be here tomorrow, Mr. Pitman?

Mr. Pitman: No, I have to go to a conference.

Mr. Chairman: Then the first speakers tomorrow will be the member for Hamilton East (Mr. Gisborn), the member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Apps), and the member for Wentworth (Mr. Deans). We will adjourn until 3.15 tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If you cannot come will you send your money?

The committee adjourned at 10.30 o'clock, p.m.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 27, 1970

The committee met at 3:20 o'clock, p.m., in committee room one; Mr. D. A. Evans in the Chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT (continued)

On votes 2209 and 2210:

Mr. Chairman: We will call the meeting to order. Votes 2209 and 2210. The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands.

Mr. S. Apps (Kingston and the Islands): Thank you, Mr. Chairman; I thought I was going to be second but I will start off.

First of all, we have heard a great deal about housing and the Ontario Housing Corporation, and I would like to say that among the things that make Ontario Housing Corporation work are the various housing authorities of the municipalities around the country. I have not heard anyone here in the last couple of days say anything about that; I would like to put on the record a word of commendation for those dedicated people who work so hard under very difficult conditions administering the various elderly citizens and low-rental units in their various municipalities.

I would like particularly to point out to the committee the work of Mrs. Marion Earle in Kingston, who retired from the authority about a year ago, after serving as chairman of the Kingston housing authority for about nine years and who to my mind, and also the minds of the people of Kingston and the Islands, did an outstanding job in administering the Kingston housing authority. I would like to have her name recorded in the minutes of Hansard to show that we appreciate her work and through her the work of many other members of various housing authorities throughout the province. If we did not have those people, you would have a lot of difficulty in making the Ontario Housing Corporation as successful as it has been.

Now second, I would like to discuss the elderly citizens projects, particularly under

Hon. S. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): As far as I know, yes.

Mr. Apps: When was that grant originally started, how long ago?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Ten years, anyway.

Mr. Apps: About ten years ago. Well do you not think, Mr. Chairman, through you to the minister, that it is time this grant might be increased to provide additional incentives to these organizations, to give them more help to provide more of these units?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Perhaps the hon. member is right. I think in those days the Ontario Housing Corporation was not in existence and there was very little being done at the government level to provide senior citizens housing, so it was left to some of these service organizations to do that job. But since the housing corporation assumed the responsibility of building for senior citizens outside of Metro, as you recognize there have been many hundreds of units put up.

Mr. Apps: Yes, I realize that, Mr. Minister, but just the same you do not want to discourage the initiative of people within a community to do something on behalf of elderly citizens. Although the Ontario Housing Corporation is doing a tremendous amount along this line, still I think there are many organizations in many municipalities which would like to continue doing what they have been doing.

As a matter of fact, as I mentioned earlier, the Kinsmen's Club in Kingston has built three of these, all of which are fully occupied.

Everybody is happy with them, and they have been of tremendous help. I feel there are church organizations, there are many other organizations in many municipalities, that would be delighted to have the opportunity or would want to take the opportunity of providing elderly citizens with accommodation over and above what can be done by the Ontario Housing Corporation.

I would suggest that the OHC take a look at that and see if they cannot raise that per unit grant, say from $500 to $1,000; taking into consideration the increase in cost that has taken place over the last ten years which I think would warrant such an increase. In that regard, I think $1,000 may not be quite as much as is required, because I do feel we should try and help those people who are trying to do something on their own; and this is one way in which it can be done.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, Mr. Apps, let me say I think the suggestion is a good one. We can take a look at it. There are some in the mill right now. We have not turned any down and we have not too many complaints about the $500 unit grant. However, as you say, perhaps it should be reviewed in the light of today's conditions, and we are prepared to take a look at it.

Mr. Apps: One of the things that always impresses me is that I do not think the government can duplicate the desire of people in a municipality who want to do something, you might say, for their fellow man. I do not think you can duplicate that service. If we can do anything to help and encourage these people to carry on this type of work, I think it would be a good idea. Not only would it solve some of your problems, but it would certainly solve many of the problems of some of the elderly citizens who are not able to find accommodation at the present time.

I would ask that you take that into consideration and see what you can do to increase those particular grants to those people who want to go ahead and build some of these things on their own.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Take a note of that please, Peter!

Mr. Apps: Second, one of the problems in the city of Kingston as far as low rental units and building under the HOME plan are concerned is the fact that there is very little serviced land in the city in order to do this. I would also like to make a suggestion about the Mowat division near the Kingston Psychiatric Hospital, which is now completely closed down for all practical purposes.

I guess there are 10 acres at least of land there that is now lying idle. I am not quite sure of the acreage, this is right in the western part of the city, right beside the St. Lawrence College of Applied Arts and Technology. I am not sure what The Department of Health has in mind for that particular area. I would like to suggest to you that you discuss with The Department of Health whether that land could not be made available to your department.

You could put HOME lots on it, or the condominium housing that you are starting. It is an ideal location. The services run right by the door, and I think it would be a tremendous area to make lots available for HOME building—whether it is single family units or whether it is condominium units—to make houses available for, you might say, the lower middle income group who cannot pay the price of the lots. These are there; it would not cost you anything, you could get it transferred over to you for $1. You would have the land and you could make those lots available at a very reasonable cost. Something on the lines that you did with the dominion provincial land assembly in Calvin park. Four years ago those lots were sold for around $2,000. There was no conflict with the private builders over the prices the people paid for those lots in Calvin park and the private builders who had to pay more outside.

The way they did that was, of course, they lined up and it was first come, first served. The builders benefited by that because they were able to build the houses. There was only one lot to one person, so no builder could go in and grab seven or eight, 10, 20 or 30 lots.

I would think that this particular area, Mr. Minister, is an ideal location for you to go in and get that land to build single family units or condominiums for the lower middle income group.

Hon. Mr. Randall: What do you call that location again?

Mr. Apps: This is the Mowat division of the Kingston Psychiatric Hospital. It is at the north-east corner of King and Portsmouth. All those buildings have been condemned; you cannot use them; they are just sitting there. I do not think The Department of Health has any real plans for that particular area, and I cannot think of anything better, as far as we are concerned, than to make that land available for homes in the city of Kingston.

Hon. Mr. Randall: All right, we will look at it.

Mr. Apps: All right. Now, third, I would like to get a little information about the system of proposals that the OHC has in awarding contracts to various builders to build these low rental units and elderly citizens units throughout the country. I am concerned about the fact it takes so long from the time the proposal is accepted until the actual time comes when the ground is broken and the building is started.

I know this is the result of many factors, some of which you have no control over, like changes in official plans, changes in bylaws and so on in the city. But the first question I would like to ask is are proposals examined as to whether the land on which these buildings are going to be built, and the proposals, conform to the official plan of the city?

In other words, you get a proposal and you say "This looks like a good one"; and you say you are going to build this. Do you check to find out whether the land on which the builder is going to build these units conforms to the official plan or bylaws of the municipality?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will ask Mr. Goyette to answer that question for you.

Mr. P. R. Goyette (Ontario Housing Corporation): When we receive the proposals we do check the land. It is quite possible that the land on which the project will be built may not at that time conform particularly with the zoning in the municipality or the official plan. This, Mr. Chairman, applies particularly to senior citizens, where proponents look forward to having a higher density and possibly less than 100 per cent parking.

It has been our procedure, in having private enterprise come forward with their projects for the individual developer to be responsible for obtaining the appropriate zoning change.

Having said that, we have not really found it entirely satisfactory. As I mentioned, I think a couple of days ago, we are doing what we can now to step up the possibility of acquiring the land ourselves. We hope it would be properly zoned, or would be zoned before a proposal call would go out to avoid the issues that usually take place in a municipality, to have some assurance that it would receive the support of the local council.

In summary then, the proposals that do come in may not all conform to the local zoning.

Mr. Apps: I think this would be very advantageous because you might get a couple of proposals, one of which is all clear and straightforward, the other which has to have some kind of change in the zoning made. You know what that entails. That can hold up a project for a year, easily. Before you get the change approved and the notices go out, and so on, and so on, by the time OMB gets through with it, it may be a year before that fellow can go ahead and work; and I do not think that is quite fair.

I would suggest this too. In those areas where you have to have OMB approval of zone change, is there any way in which you can get priority? In other words, the OMB have lists maybe two, three months long, and so you come in with another one, and on this they make a very special effort. It will take two, three or four months before you can even get that heard.

Now if you could work out some arrangement with the OMB, particularly on senior citizen, low-rental units, where you can get priority and get these processed right away so that you can get the thing cleared out and go ahead, I think that would be a tremendous help to you.

Mr. Goyette: I would say that it has not been our experience that the Ontario Housing Corporation has had any priority over private developers in having their turn at any OMB hearing.

Mr. Apps: Then maybe priority is the wrong word. Maybe the OMB should hire another man who specializes in low-rental and elderly citizens units, so that he is there ready for you. I know that they are hard pressed to look after the work that they have to do and it could be unfair to other people if you were to get priority. But I think it is important, because sometimes by the time these units are built, it is often two and a half years after the original proposal has been accepted, and by that time you need another one. So it is just a continual circle.

Anything that you could do to facilitate the hearings, or to make sure that the land is clear when you accept the proposal, I think would help you get these buildings built a lot faster than they are being built today.

Mind you, once they are built they are great. There is no problem there. The only thing that concerns me is the length of time it takes from the time the proposal is accepted until the actual turnip of the sod begins.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think—just adding to that, Mr. Apps—one of the things we have found is, of course, with the Ontario Housing Corporation we get no special privileges with the municipality or any other government department or semi-government department such as OMB. We have to get in line the same as anybody else. In fact, I think they scrutinize us a little harder than they do anybody else, as you recognize.

In some instances, particularly where we have said the brief is holding up big developments, they have put it ahead and have had a look at it, and it has either been turned down, or those who put in the protest won it, and that is the end of it; we get about doing something else, like looking for a new site.

But, as Mr. Goyette said, they give us no special privileges at OMB or the municipal councils.

Mr. Apps: You can imagine that the problem that you have when you start to rezone land, particularly for low-rental units. For elderly citizens it is not quite so hard, but for low-rental units, people take the attitude, "Fine, we want them as long as you do not build them here." I guess that is sort of a natural reaction, whether it is right or not, maybe I am not qualified to say. But almost invariably when you have to rezone land for low-rentals, you run into problems and it takes a long time to get things sorted out. I think you would be well advised to try and work out some kind of an arrangement where you did not run into these delays.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I can assure you that if we could move as quickly as we should, we would do so. I often wonder how we get them through. I think all these fellows here should have long grey beards with some of the problems we have with the municipalities in getting public housing or senior citizens approval to go ahead.

Mr. Apps: As I say—I want to point out that I am not criticizing you in this regard, because I realize some of these things are really beyond your control—I think if you could somehow work some better liaison with the OMB to get these hearings heard quicker, that would be one way.

Another way would be to try and make sure that when the proposals come in the land that they are going to use is already cleared for that type of building that you would want to have put up there. That would be another great step forward.

Now, third, are you convinced that the proposal type of bidding that you are doing is the best? In other words, are you convinced its proposals are better than if you were to work out, say, the plans and send them out to public tender, as they do when a normal building is being built?

Mr. Goyette: At the present time the evidence seems to be overwhelmingly in favour of the proposal call, particularly as we must relate to the volume we have to do. If we had only two or three projects in the province, then I think the typical tender call of having the plans prepared ahead of time and put out to tender on which calls would be made might have some advantages, but we have found that would probably necessitate a very large staff and we just would not have the staff, nor would our staff be able to prepare these things even if we had outside consultants. These would have to be checked.

Another thing that concerned us was the procedure which had been taking place under the federal-provincial arrangement in which there had developed something of a stereotyped kind of plan. I think you know in your own community there was a plan being established, and virtually all the public housing in the province of Ontario was starting to look very much the same, it had an institutionalized look about it.

There was the view that if we invited proposals from builders who themselves were building within their own concept and their own plans and what was generally accepted in that community, having the materials that were accepted in that community, that there might be an advantage.

It allows, furthermore, a little more—I do not want to use the word co-operation—but a little more of a management-team approach between the architect and the other technical people and the developer. It has been our experience that up to now, probably, the plans that went out for tender may have been influenced somewhat more by the architect, and may not necessarily have been in conformity with the manner in which the builders in that community were best trained or capable of building. Therefore we have found that when we went to the builder's proposal, our costs went down by several thousand dollars per unit.

The other advantages—and I am enumerating them on the plus side; I realize there are some on both sides—it has allowed all kinds of developers to come forward with the materials they may have had some advantages in purchasing. It may well be that they would have a certain joist size and are used to handling a certain window frame size, and they may have had a volume, and this might have been an advantage over that which might have been designed.

I think the last point I was going to come to was the question of time. I think that we then can invite, in the early stages, sketch plans only, at which point you then decide on the proponent you are going to go ahead with on the basis of what the developer offers, on the basis of price and on the basis of location, and the time it has taken from that proposal call to the time building starts is indeed much shorter than it has been our experience in the past.

The very fact that the proponent was the fellow that had to get the building permit, the very fact that he had to get the zoning done, and all these kind of things, was probably faster than we had found before.

We have one project now in Metropolitan Toronto, not completed yet, which was started under this approach before the Ontario Housing Corporation went into the building proposal technique, so really there are advantages on both sides. It might well be there is a little more control of what we want in the actual design when you put it out to tender, but on the balance it has been a very successful thing for us and that is the way our reasoning is going.

I think the thing we have had to do, sir, to improve it, has been to probably be more specific in the proposal call document on those kind of things which we have wanted. In other words, in the early projects it was pretty much to the building proposal which the developer offered to us and it was pretty well on price alone.

We have now found, after living with some of these projects, that they need some of the amenities that may not have been in the first projects; so we are adding many things to it and we think it is better.

Mr. Apps: I am glad to hear you feel the proposal way of doing it is the best. I doubted that personally because, and I go back to Kingston again in the elderly citizens units, the Kinsmen's Club put up a building in eight months. It took two and a half years to get a similar building through the Ontario Housing Corporation. Now there may have been extenuating circumstances as far as the land is concerned that held these things up, or mortgages, but I will take your word that proposals are the best way of doing it. I still think it takes too long.

Now as far as the buildings themselves are concerned—and this may have been changed—but when they built the students' residence in Kingston they provided recreational facilities for them there. In other words, children's playrooms and so on. In the low rental units in many cases you do not have these. I think that some consideration should be given in the planning to provide some kind of recreational facilities within the buildings of the low rental units, because in many cases they have a lot of children. I think it is important that this be done.

Now how often do you have your board of directors' meetings to decide on your proposals?

Mr. Goyette: The board of directors of the Ontario Housing Corporation meets once a month as a full board and some designated members meet the day before as a committee of the board, and for the sake of proposals it is known as the development committee of the board.

Mr. Apps: Do you find this adequate?

Mr. Goyette: It has been generally adequate. I might add that where there is a pressing need in a community, the board has been very good about having extra meetings. The directors of the Ontario Housing Corporation are essentially the same directors as the Ontario Student Housing Corporation, and that meets once a month, at a two-week interval as far as the board session is concerned, and so if there are some proposals that are somewhat urgent, the board has met after the Ontario Student Housing Corporation and reviewed the recommendations made to them.

Mr. Apps: Fine. All right now, getting back to the municipal housing authorities, has there been any change in their status over the past few years?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The housing authorities?

Mr. Apps: The municipal housing authorities. Like the Kingston housing authority or those authorities that administer the OHA projects.

Hon. Mr. Randall: There has been no change. We have not appointed any boards since 1965, and as I announced the other day—there was a press release—we are appointing housing area authorities in order to take—for instance, the Kingston housing authority now will take in towns in that area so that we will have an area board with a paid manager who will be able to do a lot more work, we believe, in the towns around Kingston if that is going to be an area headquarters. Those boards will then merge with some of the other boards that may be available. Say we had a board in Gananoque and a board in Napanee, those three boards—including the Kingston board—would be possibly merged.

We have set up an area board system now. We expect five or six of them will be operating in the province before the end of the year. The first one is up in the Thunder Bay area, as I said the other day, where because the two towns amalgamated and we had two boards there it was necessary to make one board out of the two. They are going to serve that area up there and have a paid travelling representative to look after all projects in the area, whereas today most of them are trying to do it on a part-time basis.

Mr. Apps: Well I might say they are doing pretty well for the most part.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I might say they are all in agreement. When we had them together here in a meeting two weeks ago the chairman of the housing authorities group himself endorsed it. In fact it is one of the recommendations they say that the housing corporation should take a good look at it. We have had a good look at the study and we feel that it meets the recommendations of the housing authority chairman himself and those of his members. I was at the meeting myself. I can assure you they endorsed the programme.

Mr. Apps: All right then. What has been your experience as far as the overall cost to the province is concerned? In other words, any deficit you divide. You put half and half with the federal government and 7.5 per cent by the municipality.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Is that the way?

Mr. Apps: How much does it cost you?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right. We are 50 per cent, 42.5 per cent and 7.5 per cent.

Mr. Apps: Well how much does that cost you, say over 1969? How much have you had to endorse?

Mr. Goyette: It cost $6 million.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, no. We are just talking about the housing authorities, just the housing authorities. You are talking about the housing authority only?

Mr. Apps: Yes, the various housing authorities, how much is it?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The 41 housing authorities.

Mr. Apps: Yes, how much does it cost you for your share of the loss?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not have that figure here. We can probably get it for you.

Mr. Apps: All right then. In the money that is made available for mortgages, like through CMHC, how much are they getting back each year now? Have you any idea on that? In other words, they are going to make available $1.5 billion, for mortgages for CMHC, say in 1970. How much money are they getting back in rent? Are they getting back more than they are making available or less, or have you any idea?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well I do not think we really know. It depends, I suppose, on the activity in the housing area, as to what has gone on the year before, what they cancelled. You are talking about what mortgages are paid out, what payments are made on mortgages already out.

Mr. Apps: No. What I am trying to find out is: These tenants are paying rents and that rent is calculated, with maybe minor exceptions, to carry the building. So CMHC is getting back from all these things that have been built over the last four or five years, they are getting back rents. Now what I am trying to find out: Are they making available each year more money than they are getting back in rents from the ones that already have been built?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know how we can answer that. All I can say is that this year they established $118 million as the amount of money available for public housing, I think, and senior citizens.

Mr. Goyette: $118 million!

Hon. Mr. Randall: $118 million for Ontario. Now if somebody aside from Ontario Housing Corporation, say some metropolitan corporation, decided to build, it would have to come out of that $118 million, which is a point I made some time ago in the House. We are not sure whether we have $118 million now because somebody else can put their hands in the till. Now what you are asking is what are they getting back in returns on their investment—

Mr. Apps: Their previous investment.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Is it more than $118 million? I could not tell you. We do not have CMHC figures.

Mr. Apps: Well, do you have the total rents that you are getting from low-rental units?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We know what our subsidies are.

Mr. Apps: Well no, you are just paying a percentage of the subsidies.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is 42.5 per cent!

Mr. Apps: You do not know the amount of money that is coming in in rent?

Mr. Goyette: Maybe just to help you. On the amount of money, it is difficult for us to speak about Central Mortgage, but the amount of money which they are receiving in rent does not equal the amount of money that it costs to run the project, so they are in a deficit position to start with, and that difference is known as the subsidy. We, as partners with the federal government, contribute to the subsidy and that is why we did not have that figure for you. We know the subsidy for the old federal-provincial projects in which the housing authorities are involved, plus our OHC subsidies, are in the order of about $6 million a year. But the federal government's subsidy would be something more. The amount of their subsidy to be deducted from the revenue of which you speak would likely be something in the order of $13 million to $14 million. They are making available to us, as the minister said, $118 million for new construction, as capital on new projects.

Mr. Apps: Yes, but what I am trying to get at is how much new money are they pumping in every year?

Hon. Mr. Randall: As I said, $118 million is what they set as a figure this year. If we can use $118 million that is our quota.

Mr. Apps: And they might be getting back $140 million in rents.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, I doubt whether they will get back that much, but nonetheless that is supposition. I would not have those figures.

Mr. Apps: Is there any way we could determine this?

Mr. Goyette: Sir, they just do not get any money back. There are rents that are collected, but before that money can go to Ottawa there are expenses, and so the net of it is a deficit position. That is why it is called subsidized housing. The rent money they get is an operating expense and does not go against their capital account.

They do not receive more rent than they have expenses, if I can use that term. In other words, they get a deficit bill at the end of the year, the same way we do now that we are dealing with folks on rent-gear-to-income.

Mr. Apps: No. I am not quite clear really and maybe I am going in the wrong direction on this.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let us take it this way. If we put $118 million into subsidizing public housing and the money is returned, the money returned is not sufficient to carry $118 million of public housing. There is a shortfall in our return.

Mr. Apps: What is your contribution?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Our shortfall, for us, is $6 million. The federal authorities would be more than happy if they could match that, because they pay 50 per cent of the subsidy. Do you follow me?

Mr. Apps: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Does that answer your question?

Mr. Apps: In other words it costs the Ontario government $6 million?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Apps: For the low-rental units in the province.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well it is going up every year. In fact we estimate that when the adjustment is made on the new rent scale, we are talking about another $800,000 minimum this year to adjust to the 25 per cent as against that rent scale going up to 30 per cent, despite the fact there were not many people at 30 per cent. Nonetheless the rent scale will mean that the province's share, it is 42.5 per cent, will be increased by about another $800,000 if I am correct on that.

Mr. Apps: Well as I say, what I was trying to correlate was the amount of money expended to the amount of money they get back in.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well it is really not like a mortgage company that puts it out at a profit and gets back their interest and a profit on a mortgage on your house. It is social capital that goes into providing housing for people who cannot pay the economic rent. If they cannot pay the economic rent, it simply means that they are being subsidized for the amount of their shortfall, plus ours, plus that of the municipality which is 7.5 per cent.

Mr. Apps: Fair enough. Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the opportunity of raising a few questions. I would again appreciate it if you would particularly look into the possibility of an increase in the per unit grant to organizations other than Ontario Housing Corporation to build accommodations, particularly senior citizens; and also to the Mowatt subdivision in Kingston, which I feel would be an ideal situation to assess just what you could do in the Kingston area in your home lots.

Hon. Mr. Randall: All right, Mr. Apps, we certainly will.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

I want, first of all, to pause for a moment and reflect on what the member for Kingston and the Islands was talking about. Now when you talk about this subsidy of course, surely you have got to take into consideration, assuming that we did no more building, that in a certain period of time the obligations in regard to mortgages would eventually be paid off and that the subsidy would then be recovered from the rent derived at that point.

Hon. Mr. Randall: After the mortgage is completed?

Mr. Deans: Yes. So the subsidy is, you know, in the terms of the future of the province, a short term item.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think maybe we pointed out here today—how long does a house last—if the mortgage is to run for 50 years?

Mr. Deans: It depends who builds them.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes I know, but at the end of 50 years there is not much left, by the time the moss and the worms get at the bricks and mortar there is not much left. You probably will have to tear it down and start over again, which means you may be into another housing programme.

Mr. Deans: Well you may, this is true.

The other point, too, is that of course you are going to derive a certain amount of money back from the sale of some of these homes, and assuming that you sell them, as you indicated you were, at the market value, and assuming that they were not built within the last five years, there will be a considerable amount of money realized in terms of out-and-out profit.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would not call it profit, what I would call it is recovery of subsidies the taxpayers have already paid, which should go back into housing.

Mr. Deans: The unfortunate part, I think, is that in most instances the subsidy will be recovered, but it will not be recovered from the people who got it. But that is neither here nor there.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Deans: I want to talk about something entirely different anyway, but I just wanted to make sure that I was right in my understanding of that.

I want to ask you first of all what efforts have been made by the Ontario Housing Corporation in the city of Hamilton to acquire what I recall is called the Martinique Apartments. I may be wrong, that may not be the name, but I seem to think it is.

It is a shell sitting on Main Street West between Caroline and Hess. It has been sitting there for five, six, seven years—who knows the number of years—and it appears it is not likely ever to be completed. Now we have in that period of time developed a number of senior citizen apartments in the area and it would appear to me that if the legal entanglements were not sufficiently severe to inhibit us we should have gone after that particular building, if only from the point of view of trying to beautify the core of the city and provide senior citizens with accommodation that is readily available to the downtown area for shopping and so forth.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will ask Mr. Goyette to speak to you on that.

Mr. Goyette: Mr. Chairman, first of all, the building we may be talking about is not the Martinique.

Mr. Deans: What is it?

Mr. Goyette: The Martinique is the very large one behind city hall which did get into difficulties some years ago, and that is now finished and very successful.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is the one we took over, is it not?

Mr. Goyette: Right. We did take that one over. I think the one you are speaking about is at the corner of Main and is it, Hess? That is about a 10, 11, or 12-storey building that is still there; as you say, it is kind of a derelict building. The involvement of the Ontario Housing Corporation has been to the extent of looking at the building, inspecting the building—at the request unofficially of the city—to see if there was something we could do about it to help Main Street along in the very manner you have suggested.

There are, as I understand it, two problems. One is that the very physical nature of the building is somewhat doubtful. It is not whether, in the physical sense, it will stand up or not; nobody is very sure, and there are no real engineering reports to substantiate that. As a matter of fact, the reports give indications the other way.

Mr. Deans: It was a poured concrete building.

Mr. Goyette: Right. And the bearing, particularly of the floors and the centre walls, you know, just is not there. There was some arithmetic done as to what the cost—one proponent, rather, came in, and I do not know if he was representing the owners or whether it was his intention to deal with the owners, but he came in with the possibility of tearing it down and having a much higher density on that existing land and asked us if there was some way we could help out.

We indicated our interest, but I gather the problem is that the present owners are not too anxious to dispose of it at the price that would make it economically feasible. And it has been pretty well left in abeyance that way. If something useful came forward, I think we would be very anxious to help out, as it turned out to be a very successful thing on the Martinique Apartments.

Mr. Deans: Fine.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think you will recall the Martinique was a dead duck for many years, and we got in with city council and got that thing cleaned up, because we felt we could utilize it.

Mr. Deans: I could not recall; the name Martinique stuck in my mind. I just could not recall the actual name of this one; it is next to the Almonte Hotel, but that is of no consequence.

Now I want to talk about something entirely different that has struck me as needing to be asked. I asked the minister in the House about two weeks ago whether or not he had received a brief from the tenants' association in Hamilton. The brief was very suitably entitled, "A brief to the Ontario Housing Corporation to prevent the creation of a slum in Mohawk Gardens" in the city of Hamilton.

In order that we understand what we are talking about: First of all, I am not trying to level any criticism at the administrator of Mohawk Gardens. I know him well; I think he does an excellent job within his scope. I do not want to leave any implication or any doubt in anyone's mind about that.

Mohawk Gardens is a wartime housing subdivision. The mayor of Hamilton, some 16 or 18 years ago, decided it would be a good idea to move the little pill-box type wartime houses that were built and were located down in the Barton Street and Gage Avenue area and other areas of the city onto one piece of ground and establish a low-rental accommodation area. I think he was wrong, but he did it in good conscience and in good faith; perhaps he did not have the opportunity to view what had happened in other areas.

The houses are almost all identical, almost all starting to fall apart. And the brief that was submitted by the people who live there pretty clearly outlines the problems that they see, and they have asked for some assistance from the Ontario Housing Corporation in clearing up this area before it becomes an out-and-out slum. At this particular point in time, it is still salvageable: much of it, anyway. And I want to refer to some of it, because I think it is very valuable.

The tenants, together with the social planning and research council of Hamilton and district, drew up a questionnaire which they sent or delivered to everyone in the subdivision. There is a total of 515 units; 209 of them responded, which is 41 per cent, which is a very high level of response. They have pointed out in their brief that one of the reasons only 41 per cent responded was because there was a feeling among some of the people that if they did not respond to the questionnaire there might be some retribution extracted and they felt rather badly about it. I think this was wrong, but by the same token many of these people have been socially deprived for so many years that even a hint, even the vague possibility that something might happen to them, is enough to discourage them. I think, as I say, it was not likely to happen but they were afraid it would.

Anyway, they were asked a number of questions on the questionnaire and the 41 per cent has indicated pretty clearly some rather significant problems of the area. These are problems that I think a little bit of money—and that is what almost every problem requires these days—but a little bit of money might be able to solve.

They were asked what they thought of the idea of home ownership, they were asked whether or not they would prefer home ownership or have the units replaced. Of those who answered, 34 per cent indicated that they figured it would be better to have them replaced, and I think they were right. Then 73 per cent, which takes it over 100 per cent, suggested that they thought the houses could be offered for sale; in other words indicating that they would be prepared to purchase the home they live in.

I am always a little worried about that, frankly, because while I want to see people move into homes that they own, I am a little concerned that if we go into the wholesale selling of public housing, we will deplete our stock of public housing to such an extent that when legitimate emergencies arise, we will not have any place to put them. I am hopeful—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I might just stop you here and point out that it is very difficult to get people out of public housing now, so I do not think our situation will be any worse if the people now living there bought their own homes. And I think in that case that they would be probably more socially acceptable in the neighbourhood.

I can assure you I am a defender of the people in public housing, as you well know. I have gone on record. But we think perhaps if they were given an ownership position they would take advantage of it. However, I do not think that selling public housing today means that we will be looking for that housing a few years from now for people who need it very badly. Our experience has been once they are in there, possession is nine points of the law and damned few of them move out.

Mr. Deans: Of course, there is a reason for that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think the answer is just to keep on building the kind of housing that people need in the future.

Mr. Deans: A goodly number of them do not move out because in relation to the cost of living, their incomes do not rise sufficiently to enable them to save any money to enable them to move into other accommodation. The other problem, too, particularly as you go in to geared-to-income housing, is that the ratio of the income to the amount required is high enough that it almost excludes saving the kind of down payment that you require in today's market in order to purchase a home anyway. There are other reasons.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It could be that some of those people are better off financially than when they went in there, as you recognize. We have had the odd case when we know that the income of the—he is a limited dividend setup—we know that the income of the tenant right now is $12,000, plus he has got adult sons working in Toronto. He says "Just try to move me out; you will have a hell of a fight on your hands."

Now here is a fellow who automatically should have moved; he should have made room for somebody else to get the same break he got when he needed it. I would think that some of those people, not all of them, mind you, but I think the percentage you said would like to buy their home, would recognize that perhaps they now have sufficient funds to make a deal. Then they can sell it for, perhaps more than they paid for it and move on somewhere else.

Mr. Deans: Of course there is always the other side of that coin. If those people there were offered the opportunity to purchase, chances are they would not purchase anyway, because if they were making $12,000, the home they would be offered to purchase would likely be priced at market value. And the market value, I am sure, would not encourage them to purchase that particular house.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If, one of these days, all the housing is put on a rent-geared-to-income basis, chances are it may motivate somebody to either buy or move.

Mr. Deans: Of course, I do not agree with the scale. That is one of the biggest problems. Anyway, let me go on with this brief, and then we will talk about the effects of it.

They have asked, in the recommendation, that some kind of negotiation be started with the tenants in Mohawk Gardens who wish to purchase their units. I had heard that there was the possibility of replacing the entire area, that OHC has begun to recognize that the deterioration of the homes in the area was so rapid that they were now considering seriously the replacing of those units with other units that would be more substantial and that would enhance the entire area, which is a residential area to begin with. Is there any truth in this? Is this likely to be?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Could I ask Mr. Riggs to speak on Mohawk?

Mr. Deans: Yes, sure; anybody at all.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think he is familiar with the figures, and he can probably bring you up to date on the situation at the moment.

Mr. R. W. Riggs (Ontario Housing Corporation): Mr. Chairman, talking about Mohawk Gardens; this is a full-recovery project. It is a federal-provincial project, and the rest has been on a full-recovery basis since the project was placed there. This means that persons living at Mohawk Gardens are purportedly at fixed income to a certain level and they pay a fixed rent; it is not rent-geared-to-income. Therefore, any repairs that would be made to that development, over and above the normal maintenance and operating expenses, would lead subsequently to increases in rent, which to some degree have been opposed by tenants at Mohawk Gardens.

Mr. Deans: Can I ask you at this point, then, since you are obviously going to—

Mr. Riggs: This is in previous years I am talking about.

Mr. Deans: In previous years. Okay. Go ahead.

Mr. Riggs: In terms of the repairs, the tenants' association met with members of the Hamilton housing authority, which has worked closely with them. This corporation, at the request of the Hamilton housing authority, has met with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and has submitted to CMHC a request to expend $100,000 to bring about repairs, particularly in two areas. One is safety; in other words front porches that are needing repair or replacement; the second is in hygiene areas, which relate to kitchen and bathroom areas. In addition, there are other areas in the housing which require repairs. I would advise you that the scope of work for these various repairs is presently being prepared by this corporation and will be issued for public tender as soon as possible.

In terms of the entire area, Central Mortgage indicated some time ago that it felt this area, or at least parts of this area, should be redeveloped. This corporation has undertaken to examine a number of, shall I say, average homes in Mohawk Gardens and to attempt to estimate the average cost of putting these houses back into reasonable shape for possible sale. At this time, we do not know how much it would cost on the average to bring these houses up to the standards required for housing in this province. On the other hand, Central Mortgage are also examining the possibility of redevelopment. At the present time, I do not know their objectives in this regard but we are working with them.

Mr. Deans: Can I ask you a question in regard to the last statement you made about estimating the cost of bringing the homes up to the standards required for general acceptance in the province? It is very difficult to understand how we could have allowed these homes to deteriorate to such an extent; that they are—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, may I just—

Mr. Deans: No, you can in a minute. I will only—

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I just say that Mr. Riggs just pointed out that the people themselves objected to increases in their rents by spending money on maintenance, and sometimes this is the difficulty that you run into. Maybe they are not the people who are in there today, or maybe they have had a change of mind on this.

Mr. Deans: Well, I think you would agree with me that there are very few people in the private sector who would accept the proposition that someone renting something from them should determine the condition it should be kept in. I think you would also agree with me that if you owned a house, and you were renting it and you found for some legal reason that you could not raise the rent, you would still expend the necessary money to maintain your investment. And this is what has not been done. Even considering the fact that the people could not or would not pay more money, the very minimum you would have expected from Ontario Housing Corporation, or I would have expected anyway, would be that they would have spent enough money to maintain the premises in order that they would be at least protecting their investment and its value. And this has just not been done, regardless of whether you get it back or not, because at some point, you lose your entire investment if you allow the houses to fall down. And this is assuming the argument put forward is valid, that the people would not pay the cost of maintaining them.

Some day, in the not too distant future, they are going to collapse and then you are going to have lost your investment entirely. And this is where the problem arises and the people have asked and asked over and over so it is not something new.

And what is being done now really ought to have been done years ago, and really ought to have been reported, and I suspect was from time to time. The need to replace such things as bathroom floors, where if you stand too close to the wall, your foot goes through—you know, this kind of thing. It has rotted away. Where basements are just totally lost—the manner in which they are constructed and the ventilation is so bad that they were not suitable for the public to go into and I worked right in that area for a number of years and inspected the homes regularly for fire hazards and found all kinds of them.

Hon. Mr. Randall: From what you tell me I would be inclined to believe without seeing it that we should put a bulldozer to them and start over again.

Mr. Deans: You know, there are some of them where that might be the answer. Although there are others—and I think we have got to be fair about it—there are others that are in a reasonable state of repair.

But let me just tell you about the bathrooms. The unsatisfactory flooring; it was decided by those who looked, that in approximately 50 per cent of all of the homes there the flooring in the bathrooms was dangerous and unsatisfactory, and should be replaced immediately.

You know, this is true. And you of course, will have your own people going, I am sure, and looking at it and you may decide that it should be 45 per cent instead of 48 per cent or something. And people have mentioned something about heating—and I suppose it depends on what you expect from life what you expect in the way of heating—but those homes were impossible to heat. They are impossible to heat. Electrical outlets are completely unsatisfactory.

Let me tell you about canvassing for the board of education some years ago when I ran. You could not knock on the glass on the door because there was not any, you know. It is that bad, I am not kidding. And this was not on one house or two houses, but on houses all the way down the line and you could say to me and I would believe you that you replace the glass every week.

You know this condition prevailed year in and year out and when I was canvassing, it was December and it was cold.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think you must remember—and I do not make any excuses for the situation—they were built 10 years after the war or during the war and when we wanted to tear them down, the city of Hamilton said: "Look, there is such a shortage of housing, do not tear them down, move them up on the mountain." That is how they got used.

Mr. Deans: Oh yes, it should have been a very short term proposal.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It should have been a short term proposal but this is one of the reasons why they were moved. They probably should have been knocked down where they were before they were moved.

Mr. Deans: Could you tell me, just before I go on, what was the term of the mortgage on the homes? How long did it take to amortize the entire project?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Forty years.

Mr. Deans: You can imagine; I do not know what you paid for those houses and I am not going to try to find out; but you can imagine how little it costs, assuming the price of the home, and it could not have been very much, and assuming the value of the land, and it was not very much, you can imagine how little it costs to maintain each of those units in terms of paying the mortgage. It must be a pitifully small amount over 40 years.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, it was, in order to keep the rents down.

Mr. Deans: I mean the rents are fairly low but even at that there must have been money left over, a certain amount of money left over for the general maintenance of each home, and I have always wondered, and I have asked and I have had conflicting reports. But I wonder just how much of the money that was supposedly set aside for the maintenance of these homes on a year-to-year basis, over the last 16 years, has actually been spent. I do not mean actually spent in the last year, in an effort to try and catch up, but was actually spent on the individual home over the last 16 years, in an effort to maintain it in something like reasonable condition.

It would be difficult, I would suspect, for the homes to reach the condition they are in if they were maintained regularly.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will try to give you that figure, if you want it.

Mr. Deans: Thank you. I would appreciate that. You will give it to me another time.

Other things have been raised, and I think that you have got to try to recognize that if you drive into this housing development, there is no question in your mind that it is public housing, no doubt! There is not another development in the city, I suspect perhaps anywhere in southern Ontario, that so clearly spells "public housing" as this particular development does. You know, rows and rows—you have heard that song about rows of little boxes—that is what they are. There were things that could have been done that would probably have been beneficial to improve the general social atmosphere that prevails throughout the area.

People have complained that it is impossible to maintain the home and the grounds in anything like a reasonable condition when everybody and his dog, and most often his dog, uses your backyard as its thoroughfare. People run up and down the backyards. They cut through. You do not walk around into Indian Crescent. You just walk right through. It is ridiculous. How can people possibly have any pride in the thing, and even in their rental aside from the ownership, if there is no clearly defined boundaries to their property and there is no incentive for them to do anything about the upkeep of it?

I was told some time ago the reason fences were not put up was; first of all, if they permitted the tenant to put up his own they would get all different kinds of fences. Well that happens in every subdivision. Secondly, the reason the Ontario Housing Corporation did not spend the money was that it was so expensive and they were not raising that kind of money from that project.

Neither of the arguments is particularly good. The one argument, in regard to whether or not the people should be entitled to put up their own fences is a pretty elementary thing. If you owned the house you would be able to put up your own fence. You could put up any old fence you want to keep people out, as long as you kept them up. We do not have any particular regulations governing that in the street next to that one, or on the houses across the street. I do not see why those people could not have been entitled to the same kind of privileges or rights.

The other thing is that if only to safeguard your property and to cut down the maintenance required because of breakage and vandalism, you would have thought you would be interested in subdividing it, at least to some extent. Maybe every second house could have a fence, maybe covering two backyards, rather than one so that people could not just come in, break a window, run away and disappear before you get a chance to catch them.

You cannot hang out your clothing. You cannot put your child out in the backyard because there is no backyard. If you have a small child, you do not take it out and sit with it, which you maybe ought to do anyway, but none of us do. If you do not take your small child out and sit on the step while your child is outside, your child does not get out until it is old enough to be aware of the traffic and not to wander.

It happens that in a community like that there are a great number of people with a great number of children. It would seem to me, if only to provide some kind of privacy and some kind of safety for the children involved, that the thought of erecting some fences in the area would have been sensible and should have been done some time ago.

The people did complain that there was a certain amount of inconsistency in the maintenance. It is hard to tell what exactly was meant by that. I read the brief and spoke to the people. They say that the inconsistency was that so and so could get theirs done but somebody else did not get theirs done, and that could well be in the operation of the thing. I do not know how that came about.

There are long waits on repairs. I think that this is valid. I checked it out. There were long waits and still are long waits for repairs because there are a limited number of people on the maintenance staff. One or two, I think, and they are continually kept hopping. Therefore, if you have something go wrong, you cannot expect somebody around within that week to do anything about it unless it is of a major nature, unless the roof has fallen in or something like that. It seems that if you pursue that policy to its extremes, you are going to end up with a repair that could have been done for $5 or $10 costing $50, because of the wait and the damage that is brought about by children; like a hole for instance, with children sticking their finger through it, or stairs falling apart and somebody props them up and somebody else gets injured.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me say that I agree with you. Some day they are going to have to come down. We go back and look at the past; we can talk about the past. Most of those people get single-family homes at $42 a month. They live right across from a park and they were very acceptable homes, of course, when they were put in that area.

Mr. Deans: Of course, there were not very many other homes in the area.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I know there were not too many in there, but I said these people had a good deal and I am not faulting the people. I just simply say that I imagine, if we ever go back and check on the incomes over the last 10 years, even at the 25 per cent level, you will find most of these people can afford to be paying more rent. They could also afford to do a few repairs on their own. There is no reason for a window to be out waiting for the maintenance men to come around.

I appreciate they do not want to spend their money if they can get the taxpayer to do it, but I think they have some responsibilities too.

Mr. Deans: Many of the people have expressed the willingness to do things for themselves. For example, things like cupboard doors—they were told they were not permitted. Whether or not they are permitted is neither here nor there. If you can imagine it, every cupboard in the house—I am talking about the ones above the sinks and in the bathrooms, and in those kinds of places—had no doors.

What do you do with things that you want to put in there? I have a dog and I want to put stuff away so that the dog cannot get at it. There is a limit to how many high places there are in any one house.

People first of all ask if doors will be put on. They are told “no.” They are told that they cannot alter the home in any way from the standard.

So therefore, if they put them on, they are facing some difficulties and if they do not put them on the place looks like hell. This is another problem.

You say to me: “It may be repaired,” but it will not be done in the next five or 10 years I suspect. You are already up to your neck, at least, in projects for building houses.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is not on the priority list to sell. On the other hand it is on the priority list to do something with, I would think—to utilize the land for better purposes. So in view of the brief that has been presented, with your comments, I think that I can assure you, as Mr. Riggs has done here, that we will take a look at it and see if we can put any priority in there as far as the housing corporation is concerned.

Mr. Deans: I am not going to pursue it any more. Let me just ask you if you would please act with haste. It is absolutely necessary. The people there have done an excellent job. There is a pretty good feeling developing among the tenants, because they do feel that maybe this time something is going to happen.

You know, if you could just make a start and show them that the effort they are putting out is worthwhile, it is going to do a lot for the morale in the area. It also is going to do a lot for the general upkeep of the area, because if they see you trying I am convinced that most of them will try, too.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Renfrew South.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few observations on this. I have a great admiration for the presentation just made by the member for Wentworth and my observation is that, after the amount of discussion there has been on housing problems over the past four or five or six sittings, the matter has been covered so well there is really no area where one can get unduly excited. We know there are problems, isolated problems, and that the housing authority or the Ontario Housing Corporation are doing all possible toward solving them.

One thing I might mention, Mr. Chairman, I know it is very difficult to know what is the best approach to dealing with these votes, but it does seem that, when we deal with the kit and kaboodle at one time, it deprives us of that opportunity for exchange on that particular matter. When you have so many members of the Legislature interested in housing and when you have lists of those wanting to speak—perhaps eight, 10 or 12 members—by the time the speaker does get the floor, those people are away maybe for a day and a half.

But regardless of whether they are here today or not, we on this side of the House have our duties too; we cannot sometimes just let members on that side of the House rip and snort and do everything else without having our own comments.

I was interested, Mr. Minister, when you said yesterday that you, or the Ontario Housing Corporation, were using about 93 per cent of all the money that the federal government provided to the provinces for housing. And a little later in the day, I think I saw an article in the Toronto Daily Star where the figure was something like 98 per cent. Which is correct?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, the average up to 1969 was 93 per cent from the time I took over housing, but in 1969 it was roughly 63 per cent. There was one year when we did use 98 per cent; I think it was 1968 that we used 98.5 per cent of all the funds available. As I pointed out to you, it is primarily because the funds are there for housing anywhere in Canada, and no other province came forward with a housing programme, so the federal authorities said first come, first served. We did not take it away from anybody else. I noticed some comments in the press from New Brunswick, but the comments are rather unkind for Ontario, because if they had been asking for their share it would have been there.

As far as we are concerned, as you recognize, we are cut down this year to $118 million, as against $128 million last year. We recognize the difficulties of trying to make the pie go a little further, and we are delighted to see the other provinces get some of that housing money and perhaps to be able to do something with it. But the only reason we have averaged 93 per cent is because we have a housing programme, and most of the provinces have copied the kind of a programme we have here. Perhaps we are victims of our own generosity in helping to set somebody else up, but I think it is good for the other provinces to have housing programmes. We do not fault them in any way, shape or form.

Mr. Yakubuski: It made me wonder, Mr. Chairman, and through you to the minister, about what must be happening in provinces like Quebec or B.C. Are they getting little or nothing for housing?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, the province of Quebec formed the Quebec Housing Corporation, the same as we did here. They approached it a little differently. They asked the federal authorities to grant them so much money; I think last year they granted them $75 million for housing and turned them loose. And while they said the $75 million could be used up and then come back for an extra amount, nonetheless each particular project had to be approved by Central Mortgage and Housing. But they knew they had $75 million.

I think the only difference we had with Ottawa was, as I said a little while ago, that if they gave us $118 million, and some other authority, for instance, a co-op group or a limited-dividend group or even the group that is down here now talking about building the place at Victoria and Main, gets a portion of the money, it has to come out of the $118 million, and we do not have $118 million. All we were discussing with Mr. Andras was if he could tell us for certain how much we could commit ourselves for, because we do not want to commit ourselves for $118 million and find that somebody had lifted $11 million for some other project, which is entirely legal and legitimate, but it leaves us with an $11-million shortfall. I think that what Quebec did was to say, "Give us $75 million for this year and we will make that commitment." They do have a housing programme, and I think they are starting to move on it.

Mr. Yakubuski: I am wondering what the minister would prefer. Does he prefer the present setup with the federal government in Ottawa?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Pardon?

Mr. Yakubuski: I am wondering what you would prefer in the way of approaching or tackling the housing problem in the province of Ontario, insofar as federal moneys are concerned.

Are you in favour of the present policy as it exists with Ottawa, or would you be in favour of a policy such as you just outlined is taking place in the province of Quebec? Or would you rather—as I feel about most federal-provincial programmes, especially cost-sharing—that they should go down the drain and that we get this money, with no strings attached, to use in a manner where we establish our own priorities?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me say that as long as the federal government is prepared to pick up 50 per cent of the subsidy, I think they should have some say as to how they allot the money in any province, and we recognize that.

I come back and say the only thing we would like to know is how much money is available. You will recall Mr. Andras said there is $118 million available and $10 million for student housing. We had already committed ourselves and had plans set for $32 million for student housing—which we will get into later—and $10 million was available, so had we gone ahead with those plans we would have found a $22 million shortfall which we would not have been able to cover.

For instance in 1969 we got 76.7 per cent of the Canadian housing funds from Ottawa, and I think this year, in 1970, in view of the fact they are spending probably more money than the provinces, we will get maybe 50 per cent of the Canadian funds that are available for public housing.

But answering your question, I think we have gone on record as saying whatever it is, just tell us for sure that amount of money is there. We do not believe you can operate a housing programme on an on-and-off basis and not know where you are going once you have made a commitment, because when we have made a commitment with our developers, the developer may spend $25,000 or $30,000 designing, say, a major project for us in housing 450 or 500 people, and then we find we do not have money to go ahead.

Well he is down the drain $25,000 or $30,000. And you add that to the cost of the land he is holding and the time he has had on the project and the lawyers' fees he has, you can see where it is costing the developer who is willing to build public housing a great deal of money. We think that could be avoided, as we said to Mr. Andras, and I think he is sympathetic to us, if they have a fixed sum of money tell us what the fix is and we will be guided accordingly.

So I think in answering your question, the only thing we would like to do is have Ottawa say, "Well, on January 1 you are going to get X number of dollars for the year. You can go ahead and commit it. If you commit beyond that, you had better come and see us."

That is what Quebec does and that is what we ask if we could do with the federal authorities in Ottawa. But we do recognize—and I think my colleagues will bear me out in this—that while the federal government is prepared in its wisdom to pick up 50 per cent of the subsidy, we must recognize it must place some limitations on the amount of money going into any province, including Ontario.

Mr. Yakabuski: Well for my money this is about the only programme that is jointly shared by Ottawa and the province, that we sort of come out on top of.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Pardon?

Mr. Yakabuski: This is the only, or perhaps one of the few programmes, that the province shares in a manner with Ottawa that we come out on top on.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well I think we come out on top in this way, it is a good programme for us. I think in Quebec, for instance, the municipality has to pay five per cent if they want public housing in their area. You will recall we got away from that, we set up the housing corporation because the 7.5 per cent we were asking the municipality for was the reason why many of them said, "Well, we cannot afford public housing in our municipality, we do not have any money." Once we took the need for capital investment away from the municipalities, then we got a good many municipalities who said: "Well, okay, go ahead and build public housing, all we are going to do is ante up 7.5 per cent of any losses," but they did not have to put up 7.5 per cent of the capital. In Quebec, they operate a little differently. The federal authorities put up 90 per cent of the money, the municipality five per cent and the province five per cent. So, we do not find any fault with the programme as it exists at the present time.

Mr. Yakabuski: Well, still on the same programme really, yesterday we had the member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman) talking about the buck passing, you know, and you go to see OHC and they are waiting on Ottawa, and you talk to the federal people and there is some delay at the provincial level, and do you see in that Central Mortgage and Housing and the local or the provincial corporation participating, do you see any red tape there that in some way could be eliminated whereby some of these projects might be speeded along much faster than they are?

Hon. Mr. Randall: There is a duplication in what the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation does in regard to inspection and what we do in regard to inspection. We feel our people are qualified to inspect on behalf of the federal government, as we believe they are qualified to inspect on our behalf.

We think there is a duplication there where both of us have to do an inspection job in order to get a public housing project accepted. If we have set up a corporation here which we are asked to do—and mind you, we were asked to set up the Ontario Housing Corporation as an entity so the federal authorities could lend money to us directly on that 90/10 basis. When we set the corporation up we felt that we had sufficient knowledge that we were not going to pick out sites in the swamp; we were not going to build buildings that fall down. We recognize that the federal authorities have an interest by putting in their 50 per cent subsidy. We suggested to them—and I think it is pretty well accepted that we must, one of these days, recognize the fact that we can speed up the housing programme if we do not have two sets of, say, planners, architects, approvers, inspectors, looking at the housing projects—Ontario Housing Corporation is now prepared to go ahead and do this itself. The very fact that we have gone into the mortgage field now, the same as NHA, and we will provide the money direct—we are doing that job anyway under Ontario Housing Corporation mortgage loans—led us to feel that we could do the same thing for public housing and senior citizens and save perhaps Ottawa and ourselves a great deal of money by having the Ontario Housing Corporation do the work that is now being done for us by both organizations.

Mr. Yakabuski: I think we all realize that Ontario Housing has done a tremendous job in its infancy. Would you say, Mr. Minister, that Ontario Housing Corporation has now really grown up from the way you talk there now?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh I think we are pretty sophisticated in the housing field regardless of the criticism we get. I do not know anybody that is any more sophisticated than we are. We have had people here from many parts of North America to look at our programme, and we have had some pretty knowledgeable people here. I would think that one of the sophisticated housing corporations anywhere in North America is the Ontario Housing Corporation.

Mr. Chairman: Are you finished?

Mr. Yakabuski: No, Mr. Chairman, I am only getting really into it. Getting back to that buck passing bit that the member for Windsor-Walkerville was talking about yesterday, I know from personal experience that on these cost-sharing programmes, Ottawa has always played a cat-and-mouse game with the provinces. I have had some experience on some other programmes such as the ARDA programme. As an example, some five or six years ago we conceived a tourist development project in the Renfrew area. The story we always got was that as soon as the province passed this particular project, Ontario Treasury and cabinet passed it, of course Ottawa would immediately pass it. They told the people they were talking to: "We are just waiting on the province." Back in 1967 our Treasury Board passed the project, and subsequently, a few weeks after, Ottawa turned it down. Again last fall, in 1969, we passed a similar project, and a few weeks later Ottawa again turned it down. Here just a few weeks ago, we passed the same project in another shape and form again and we are still waiting on Ottawa to give its approval to the project. Yet all these years they have been telling my constituents and telling our people: "Well as soon as the province passes it, we will certainly give it the okay."

There is a darned good example of buck passing. I think if the member for Windsor-Walkerville wants to put his finger on who is the past master in buck passing, he would best have to turn to his federal friends in Ottawa.

As I mentioned, Mr. Chairman, you know it is unfortunate that with so many people wishing to participate in these estimates, some time goes by and the people that have been speaking are gone when the subsequent speakers have the floor. The member for, I guess it is Etobicoke, Mr. Lawlor, was talking about—

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Lakeshore!

Mr. Yakabuski: Lakeshore! Well, it is in that area. But anyway, he was talking about the veterans' programme in the United States after the Second World War. It is so unfortunate that he is not here, because I was most anxious to know what had taken place insofar as the veteran is concerned. I am always interested in veterans' affairs because I happen to be a veteran myself, and I am interested in what has taken place in socialist Britain after the war insofar as provision for veterans' housing is concerned or grants under The Veterans' Land Act. But unfortunately, he is not here and I guess that will have to go unanswered.

He also took to task the insurance companies, the mutual funds or whatever they may be, about not making money available for housing purposes, and he went into this in great detail. Now that makes one think, you know, because we know insurance companies collect a lot of money. The mutual funds collect a lot of money from the average person on the street today, the average citizen. But there is another body that collects a tremendous pile of money in this province and right across the country and continent for that matter, and that is the trade unions which I talked about last week. I am wondering what the trade union movement has done with its vast funds to alleviate housing shortages in this province. We will only speak of this province. Have they participated to any degree with the vast sums of money they collect from these workers, month after month and year after year? Has any of this gone in to provide housing and provide roofs for these workers? Could you answer that, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am not familiar with some of their own personal or private plans. There has been no money made available to the Ontario Housing Corporation or to the Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) for this purpose. When the Ontario Federation of Labour met, in this room I believe it was a month or two ago, and presented their brief, the Treasurer suggested to their president, Mr. David Archer, that if there were funds available—pension funds—that we, the housing development corporation, are in the mortgage business and would welcome any funds that the unions would have available.

Since that time, I wrote Mr. Archer a letter asking if funds would be available. He is taking it up with his colleagues. There is an indication that perhaps they may be making some of their pension funds available, through the Treasurer, for the housing development corporation as mortgage money. But at the present time, we do not have those funds.

Mr. Yakabuski: But it is under consideration?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is under consideration at the present time.

Mr. Yakabuski: I think that is very good. I notice here in the latest Labour Review May/June, 1970, that the Ontario Housing Corporation is called America's biggest home owner by this publication. Of course, I guess—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I guess we should all ask for more money.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Yakabuski: I think so. They realize the need and I would think participation will be forthcoming. Of course, the member for Downsview (Mr. Singer), too, was talking about his concern about moneys and slashing red tape with your counterparts in Ottawa. He offered every type of assistance in his capacity and through the many strings he can pull with Ottawa, and the friends he has—

An hon. member: Where is he?

Mr. Yakabuski: I do not know where he is, but I was just wondering why the former mayor of Toronto, Mr. Givens, who has made many speeches on Ottawa's neglect of the Metropolitan and urban areas—he has made many speeches on this and he is terribly frustrated, I would think, by the outbursts that have come forth from him in recent months—why someone who was so close to the problem in his time, so near, and who should be so knowledgeable about it, cannot seem to get through to the people in Ottawa at all.

An hon. member: Why do you not ask him?

Another hon. member: Write him a letter.

Mr. Yakabuski: I am just wondering. I said it was unfortunate your member for Downsview is not here today—

An hon. member: Ask Mr. Randall; he knows everything.

Mr. Yakabuski: —maybe he knows. He is very knowledgeable, you know. Sitting here for the last four or five days, I do not know of anybody in this room more knowledgeable. Of course, we had another one—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Yakabuski: We also had the member for Sarnia (Mr. Bullbrook) here last night. He spoke to us with some knowledge on the problems in the Sarnia area, about a development that was located some nine miles from Sarnia and really never did get off the ground.

He has asked some questions of the minister and I think answers will be forthcoming. But the member for Sarnia had knowledge, I think, that no one else had, including the people in the Ontario Housing Corporation, because he was in the fortunate position of being a staunch supporter of the party in power in Ottawa and he was CMHC solicitor for that area.

Now Ottawa guards these appointments very, very jealously—I know from experience in my riding. Therefore, I know that is the only reason the member for Sarnia would get that appointment, but anyway—

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: Here is the member for Sarnia now.

Mr. Yakabuski: We were just talking about your comments last night on that development in Sarnia in that it was located some nine miles from Sarnia and never really did get off the ground. We mentioned, as you did last night, that you had information from your choice position that perhaps people in OHC and ourselves did not have, in that you were solicitor for Central Mortgage and Housing at the time in the Sarnia area.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Basically, I believe they prepare a list of well-known Liberal lawyers and some Tories stay on the list. They manage to stay on the list by bouncing like a tennis ball back and forth in their partisan affiliation, if you follow me.

When Dief was in, they were Tory to the core and then, when Pearson got in, they kind of waffled toward Liberalism and they managed, Mr. Chairman, to keep up that CMHC—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Bullbrook: I think I did, I do not know. I believe that I did about six CMHC mortgages over those years. They did not like me very much.

Mr. Yakabuski: The thing that bothered me after all was said and done last night, you know—and then you were chastising the federal government, too—

Mr. Bullbrook: I was chastising the government, Mr. Chairman, about the question of the obligation—the total social responsibilities—of financial institutions to convey the funds that they have trust of and that they own themselves, in the housing field. I think I properly chastised the federal government—and more power to me.

Mr. Yakabuski: That disturbed me a little, though, assuming how you got the solicitor's appointment.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Let us get back to the estimates now that we have had our little fun.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I might say to the hon. member if you show me a firm with three lawyers, I will show you three political parties represented.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would hate to be in Quebec, you have got to take a firm of five lawyers or you cannot have a firm.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Yakabuski: That is what we assumed and you confirmed it, so that is just great.

I was wondering, Mr. Minister, if anyone did know about what return the average private apartment owner received on the money he has invested in that venture. Has anyone got any idea of what percentage of return he would get?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I might say I have seen some balance sheets of some of the major apartment owners in the city of Toronto and their return has been two per cent or less. Now you can give them quite an argument about depreciation and write-offs and many other things, but in my estimation, the apartment owner today is getting out of apartment-house building because of the lack of mortgage funds. He has got to give, as the member for Downsview said the other day, an arm and a leg away in order to get funds from some of the financial institutions. They are turning to commercial establishments, so I think you are going to see less apartments built as long as this condition continues in the private field.

This has been one of the major concerns, I believe—that some of these larger developers who have the capacity to house our people find it is just not financially possible to take their funds and tie them up into projects of this kind when they can get a better return on commercial properties. I would hope that once the inflationary fight is either over, or recognized as unsuccessful, that these people can be encouraged to come back in again.

I suppose that the return on investment in apartment houses vary with very many people, but some of the larger statements that I have seen indicate—and certainly I can understand and I think anybody can—that the return after taxes is not going to be suitable and that they are going to put their money into other operations.

I see a statement here before me. They show where the rent dollar goes—1967 is the latest figures: 1,422 suites, 20.3 per cent went in taxes, 21.4 per cent went in maintenance and repairs, 2.9 per cent went in management fees, 33.6 per cent in mortgage interest and bank charges—and I think since 1967 those interest rates have gone from seven or seven and a quarter to almost 10, 10.5 or 11 per cent for apartment house builders—principal payments eight per cent, and the cash flow to the owner before taxes of 13.8 per cent. That may be the average, but I have seen statements that indicate a lot less return. As I point out, I think many of the major developers are having second thoughts about putting money into apartment dwellings.

I know that some of the developers have backed out completely under present circumstances, because they say borrowing money at 10.5 per cent or 11 per cent and having to give away part of their equity means they wind up almost being janitors when the project is finished.

I can recall a chap coming to me not too long ago with 9.5 acres; he wanted to put up, I think it was, 300-and-some-odd suites, and he went down to see one of the finance institutions. They said, "We will give you $4,600 a suite times 350 and then you rent it back; we give you an option back for 99 years." They charge him 10.5 per cent for the money for the bricks and mortar; he could take 42.5 per cent of the rent for expenses and they wanted 20 per cent of the remainder. The guy said, "They reduced me to the point of a janitor before I even got my hat off." So he came to the Ontario Housing Corporation to see if we were interested in the project he had in mind.

These are some of the things that the developers are finding today in the financial market; they are finding it very difficult to build residential housing either in apartments, high-rise or condominiums. So any that are building are certainly going to have to charge a lot more money for their accommodation than I think the average person can afford to pay.

Regardless of what anybody says, the lack of money from the insurance companies certainly has quite an effect on how much housing is going to be built. They were the main source of funds over the years; they no longer are, as far as modest-income families are concerned, or I do not think we would find ourselves as a housing corporation doing the things we are doing in the home field that should be left to private interest to do. But if private interest will not do it, then the government has to fill that void, and that is what we are trying to do.

Mr. Yakabuski: What prompted that question was that New York City, as of July 1, is going into rent law reform and, according to this article—I am going to quote from it—

As of July 1, 1971, new rent ceilings would be set for 1.3 million controlled apartments. Ceilings would be set by the department of rent and housing maintenance instead of by city council as at present. The new rent schedules would be figured by computer to allow a landlord 9.5 per cent annual return on his building's market value.

With 9.5 per cent return he is more or less guaranteed that. I know that is not after a lot of other things. Would that still make the proposition more attractive than it is here at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would be inclined to believe that if anyone is going to be guaranteed a 9.5 per cent return, certainly he would be more encouraged to put his funds into residential building. But that is not the case here, as you recognize.

Mr. Yakabuski: At the same time, this is going to put rents up. They are going to raise rents 10 to 12 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is obvious that whatever the return is, it has to come from the fellow who is renting the apartment in the long run.

Mr. Yakabuski: One last question, Mr. Minister. What would you say is the greatest contributor to apartments and rental space—that is, for housing—degenerating into a slum? What is the greatest contributor? What is the greatest cause of that happening?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I suppose there are many things. Let me say today we are living in the age of vandalism; we might as well recognize it, and not necessarily from the poor people. I have two daughters living in apartment houses. I live in one myself. I have a number of friends living in apartment houses, certainly a long way from public housing. What happens to those buildings and those elevators and the hallways would not happen in a slop shop. I am inclined to believe that people who rent do not have the same respect for it as they do for the property they own. You can talk to some of the best builders and managers, and you will find that their elevators are carved and beaten up, knifed; the chesterfields in their lobbies are either stolen or ripped.

We have had that situation in St. James Town, where we have 1,600 units mixed in with private development, and the vandalism that goes on in those buildings would stagger you. I would think that the parents certainly do not even know what the youngsters are doing, or perhaps are not as conscious as they should be of knowing where the youngsters are.

But in the majority of apartments, whether they be for low-income people or high-rise, most of the damage that is occurring today is primarily vandalism. There just seems to be a destructive attitude on the part of some of the teenagers particularly, who should know better, to destroy property.

You can go to Sutton Place and I think in the elevator to go to Stop 33, they have three railings that are leather covered. I am told by the manager that if they have been replaced once they have been replaced a dozen times. Somebody will go in with a razor blade and just slit them and get off the elevator. Now who would do a thing like that except some guy who must be loose in the dome? You should throw a net over him. But this happens. People just seem to be destructive and I think this is part of the maintenance costs today. The maintenance costs in housing of any kind are one of the major difficulties, I think, in increasing rents.

I think I mentioned in the Legislature last year, that in the public housing sector in Detroit where they turned the housing over to the tenants 18 per cent of the rents went for maintenance prior to turning them over. After tenants had it for a year, 48 per cent of the rent went for maintenance, which indicated—

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Are you talking about Detroit?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, Detroit.

Mr. Peacock: Have you seen it?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I have not seen it, but—

Mr. Peacock: Have you seen the state it was in?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, but I have a report on it from the man who ran it who was over here from Detroit. Forty-eight per cent of the rents was used for maintenance. It is some indication—in some areas, not all—but it is some indication that maintenance is one of the major cost factors that apartment owners have to put up with today.

Of course he has had his taxes increased in most instances. If he has to borrow any money, he has increased interest charges. I think I said yesterday that one of the developers told me that for every one per cent increase in interest charges he has to add $12 a suite in his apartment building. We know that a man does not build an apartment and hang on to it indefinitely; a building may have three or four owners before it is finished.

You get people coming and saying "The apartment was built 12 years ago, why have I an increase in rent?" They probably find it had three owners since the apartment house was built, and each owner has to pay a premium to get the apartment.

These things have happened with some of the older apartments, so they do have their difficulties. But I think one of the major problems is the maintenance cost today in apartments. People expect a lot more for their money, and you cannot blame them. They are expecting sauna baths, swimming pools, gymnasiums and all the things that go with it. It is not just shelter any more; it is really a city.

Mr. Yakabuski: That is one side of the coin. The other is, you will notice—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Yakabuski: You will have the floor.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Yakabuski: The other side of the coin is that sometimes, too, the owner lets the building deteriorate to some extent. Would this be due to his low return on his money?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. I think you can go back to some of the early limited dividend housing, which was built on low interest rates with a five per cent return to the owner. I think in many cases, I know in Scarborough and in North York you will find some of the projects there deteriorated pretty badly because of the return. I mean there just is not the money to go back into the maintenance. I talked to a man the other day who had a holding in limited dividend; I think his taxes have gone from $2,500 when he built them 20 years ago to $128,000. His wage cost has doubled.

These are just some of the things that make it impossible for him to maintain those buildings which are getting older, need a lot of maintenance, and he is thinking in terms that he should probably tear them down and start over again, and build perhaps low-income homes under the HOME programme as a condominium.

I know Metro Chairman Campbell, who was formerly mayor of Scarborough, asked me once why we would not take over the limited dividend in his area—because it was apparent it was becoming almost a slum area due to maintenance cost and there was not sufficient return on the old method of limited dividend to take care of repairs. I think Mr. Andras recognized that the first year when he said they would allow, I believe, a 10 per cent return on limited dividend—is that the new figure?

I believe the new figure is a 10 per cent return on a man's investment, in fact I think the single family units they are talking about out at Victoria and Main—which they are going to build for childless couples or adults, single adults—are supposed to be limited dividend. I think they are going to be allowed a 10 per cent return on those according to CMHC rules and regulations at the present time.

But obviously the five per cent return is suffering due to maintenance costs.

Mr. Yakabuski: One last shot. We know that in New York City where rent controls have been in effect for some 10 years, they have contributed to a growing number of slums. My last question is in two parts. Do you feel that situation would happen here if government were to impose rent controls?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, I think that has been the general feeling, not only here but in many parts of the United States, that if rent controls were imposed then it is obvious that few people would be interested in building residential accommodation.

If they are not in it now they will not get into it and I think this has been one of the difficulties in New York. Some of those places have not been touched for years. They have had rent controls in New York, as you know, for a great number of years. I talked to the governor of Michigan once at a dinner in Detroit and he pointed out that they have a fixed interest rate that can be collected on residential housing and, therefore, there is no housing.

I mean people are putting their money into things they can get a great return on, and I do not know if it has been changed yet or not in Michigan, but that was the understanding I had from him when I talked to him a year ago.

So I think we are reluctant to see controls go on, unless controls go on other things. As far as I am concerned, I do not think you can control one sector of the economy if you do not control the other.

Mr. Bullbrook: Would you permit me to ask one thing along that line? Do you feel that the limited dividend return of 10 per cent is a realistic one, having regard to a general knowledge of the return required on investment opportunity?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think I pointed out before you came in—

Mr. Bullbrook: I am sorry, then, if the—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, it is all right, I think I used the figure when I said the cash flow that apparently was being earned by the average fellow in the residential field was 13.6 and that was average. I know some developers here are getting two per cent return. Here it is—the cash flow to Toronto is 13.8 cents on the dollar invested before taxes.

Mr. Bullbrook: I was just thinking of your limited dividend procedure that is established by CMHC. It would seem to me as a lay person that that in itself is unrealistic, even in the elevation from five to 10 per cent. It is unrealistic in regard to, for example, the mortgage market return available to the investor. I wondered if you really felt that?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me say I think it is better than what most of them are getting today and it is an encouragement over the five per cent. In other words, it is a 100 per cent improvement and I think it is worth a try if somebody wants to put their money into it and it is guaranteed by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

If a guy wants a guaranteed 10 per cent on his investment, I do not think he can get a better guarantee than maybe the government of Ontario or the government of Canada.

I think in that case, perhaps, he is getting a good return at 10 per cent. It is not as nebulous, possibly, as some of the investments you would make in the market today. At least he is assured of it.

But I think one thing that you must remember, when the government takes 52 per cent before taxes, the guy is really left with 48 per cent after taxes and if you boil that down, taking expenses out of it, there is very little that is left for the investor.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Parkdale.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Can I ask one question here? I do not know how much time Mr.

Bullbrook from Sarnia has to spend with us in view of the fact the Attorney General is on, but he asked some questions yesterday and I agreed that if he was out we would not bring it up, but if you—

Mr. Bullbrook: Go ahead and answer them, if you can get the answers.

Hon. Mr. Randall: —want us to answer them while he is here—

Mr. Bullbrook: I would be most appreciative, Mr. Chairman, because we have the Muskoka bill coming up tomorrow afternoon and I am going to be involved with it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, if your colleague from Parkdale does not mind, we can go ahead and answer your questions. Perhaps we can settle that question that you asked about Sarnia yesterday.

Mr. Bullbrook: That is very kind.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think you asked us if we could table some correspondence. We have the correspondence here, which I would be glad to send over to you.

Mr. Bullbrook: I wonder, Mr. Minister, if I could have back the series of questions that I lodged with you for your facility, then I could—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Bullbrook: He should. I had them typed out. I did not read them.

Mr. Yakabuski: Oh, I see.

Mr. Bullbrook: I did not read them out of the New York Times.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You posed a number of questions, and, to make sure that we get the information you wanted, I have asked my colleagues to put them in chronological order. If the Chairman will permit, I will ask Mr. Goyette if he would read off the answers to these questions, and if there is anything further you have, we would be glad to answer them.

Mr. Goyette: Mr. Chairman, I hope I can say this with a little less passion. Somehow I got involved in that which a public servant should not do yesterday. If there are any members who might feel I spoke a little too vigorously, I apologize. I will just enumerate these things as they come up.

Mr. Bullbrook: You certainly did not with me, sir.

Mr. Goyette: Fine. I will just cover for you, on some historical basis, the facts as we have them, as they cover Sarnia, Sarnia township and Moore township.

Just in review: In Sarnia, under the old federal-provincial arrangements that you spoke about, at what is known locally as Coronation Park, there were 477 lots that were sold from 1951 to 1957 and there were 462 lots which were sold from 1957 to some time after 1963-1964. At the present time there are 4.8 acres left which cannot be serviced. This project generally was administered by central mortgage.

Now after we received a request for a survey of land, the Sarnia city council requested, in May 1968, the development of about 250 lots from the Ontario Housing Corporation. Our staff visited Sarnia and discussed it with the local municipal officials and there appeared to be, to both of us, about two possibilities.

First, there was the one that was mentioned yesterday and the suggestion that the city might expropriate a number of rear yard properties that had the potential of putting together, I believe, some 100 lots. But, as the local newspaper well recorded, the objections from those people who were involved were such that it was not considered feasible to go ahead.

We had another possibility and that was that there might be the purchase of some 33 lots, but unfortunately only 20 of those were available because the balance of them were under a conditional offer, and the amount at which they were being offered to us was $6,500 a lot, and it was considered that under the circumstances that would not be very helpful.

Now in early 1968 the township of Moore, by a motion of council, instructed the clerk to request the Ontario Housing Corporation to participate in the construction of homes in that township, and the clerk-treasurer, Mr. E. C. MacDonald, fulfilling these instructions, forwarded to us a plan of a portion of a development of St. Clair Woods Development Limited, in Moore township, which was currently before the Ontario Municipal Board for zone amendments to reduce the minimum square footage from 1,100 to 1,000 per dwelling unit. The purpose of the amendment really was to provide homes within the $15,000 limitation, which was part of the HOME plan.

Mr. Bullbrook: May I interject for the purpose of clarity? Am I correct in assuming from the file that St. Clair Woods had been in touch with the corporation prior to any intervention on the part of the municipality?

Mr. Goyette: Yes, the first person who came was in—

Mr. Bullbrook: Mid-1967.

Mr. Goyette: Yes, mid-1967 approximately, and we were aware of it at the time. It was also indicated that the city of Sarnia—I am really trying to link it here for you—supported the programme for Moore township, as the city did not have a suitable site at that time to engage in a HOME programme.

Now the plan referred to above was part of a planned subdivision of some 550 lots owned by St. Clair Woods Development Limited. The purchase price by the Ontario Housing Corporation was $4,200 per lot for delivery in 1969. Provincial Treasury Board approval, following a recommendation by the board of directors of the Ontario Housing Corporation, was obtained in December, 1968, and the appraisal, signed by a qualified appraiser, C. A. Piggot, and J. B. Gradewell, on August 13, 1968, indicated a value of $4,400 to $4,500 per lot.

Mr. Bullbrook: May I have those names, please?

Mr. Goyette: Yes, Gradewell and Piggot. You will find them, I think, in the file; their statement is on that file that is with you. These, incidentally, are appraisers of the Ontario Housing Corporation. One is our regular appraiser, and the other is the chief appraiser. At the same time, we had the knowledge, through conversation with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, that they had been using other lots in the area on earlier sales and appraisals of about $3,900 to $4,000, and today—at least, the most recent ones they have—they have not had that many at $4,500.

The principals of St. Clair Woods Development Limited of 2180 Steeles Avenue, Brampton, Ontario, at the time, were reported as J. D. McKnight as president, M. J. Morgan as vice-president, and A. C. Burgess as secretary-treasurer. Prior to the Ontario Housing Corporation's purchase of the 50 lots, we understand that St. Clair Woods Development Limited was involved in a joint venture with Bramalea Consolidated to build and merchandise houses on some 30 lots under the name of Sarnia St. Clair Construction Limited.

The venture, which was considered to be unsuccessful because of unsold houses, was terminated. Our contract was with St. Clair Woods Development Limited, who were the sole owners of the land, and no discussions whatsoever, to the knowledge of any of the staff people we have been talking to, were ever undertaken with any of the persons who were involved in Bramalea Consolidated.

Mr. Bullbrook: The address you gave previously in Brampton; is that concurrent with the address of Bramalea?

Mr. Goyette: No, Bramalea is right in Bramalea; they are on Bramalea Road, I believe.

Mr. Bullbrook: I see.

Mr. Goyette: This is in Brampton, and they are in Bramalea. It is in the same general area, but there are two addresses.

Mr. Bullbrook: For the sake of clarity, I had made the statement last night that I was called upon, in my legal duties, to forward documentation to Bramalea's office or its solicitor. Are you familiar, in your dealings with—

Mr. Goyette: It might be presumptuous of me to guess, but I would suspect, that from what I have heard at the table, you may well have acted as the solicitor in the mortgage transaction that took place on those lots, at a time when Bramalea was really the building arm, I believe, in this joint venture with the landowner, St. Clair.

Mr. Bullbrook: It sounds like a logical explanation to me.

Mr. Goyette: It was quite conceivable that the mortgage advances were going to the builder, rather than to the land people, but that would be a presumption.

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes, surely it would be. But I think it sounds, if I might say so, Mr. Chairman, like a logical presumption.

To your knowledge, or the knowledge of any of your colleagues, is there any other liaison of which you are aware between Bramalea and St. Clair Woods?

Mr. Goyette: To the best of our understanding this was a one-shot venture in that area. Bramalea, I understand, would be doing the building of some houses. These people were landowners. The two would get together and away they would go, but as you are, I think, aware yourself, and as I think you reported to us, it was not a very successful deal. There are over 30 houses, you know. There are different figures on whether there are half of them sold or all of them sold.

I think you made some comment of how we were doing and I think that was a significant question. Our first purchases, these 50 lots, were marketed on April 17, 1969. There was a 1,100 square foot restriction through local building bylaw. I had made the point earlier that there was some expectation that the bylaw might be changed to allow a 1,000-square-foot house rather than 1,100 square feet. When this was presented by the municipality to the OMB, the application was not successful.

So builders there have been unable to comply with the price limitations under the HOME plan, which I think you are aware of, for $15,000 for a three-bedroom, $16,000 for a four-bedroom, and $17,000 for a five-bedroom, for the construction of the unit which goes on the land.

To overcome this, we have made some arrangements that we would raise the limits in this area in the same manner as we have done for the high-cost area of Windsor.

Mr. Bullbrook: May I interrupt for a moment? I had made the statement yesterday that according to my information there was one agreement of sale on the 50 lots.

Mr. Goyette: Right. Yes, there is one and so we have 49 left.

Mr. Bullbrook: Are there any offers to purchase in being of which I would not be aware?

Mr. Goyette: Not in being, but maybe I can just finish my comment to keep it in order and then I will be glad to follow it up.

My next point really was that it is not consummated. But we are already aware of one builder who has indicated to us that, under these conditions, he could build and that indeed he has mortgage commitments to back these up if we would make the lots available to him. Now this yet has to be checked out—

Mr. Bullbrook: Under the new financing scheme.

Mr. Goyette: Right. There was some question about the value. The current market value of the lots is estimated to be around $5,100. We lease them at $35.82 per month and we have a book value of $4,525 on it.

Mr. Bullbrook: What is the foundation for the elevation in value? Is that an appraisal or do you use the word "estimate"?

Mr. Goyette: Yes. I would say that is an appraisal, but I do not have it documented.

It is an opinion of those people in the business.

To express it another way, the manager of central mortgage, with whom I was in touch, as you might expect, today, in just checking out my figures, has indicated to me that they would have a lending value of something in the order of about $90 a foot frontage. Our lots here vary from about 55 up to about 65, so the lending value would exceed the amount at which we are leasing them.

Mr. Bullbrook: I want to question you here, sir, as a layman to a non-layman in the housing field. I cannot fathom how you could buy a lot 14 months ago for $4,200 and that the market is so bad that you are able to sell only one out of 50 and it appreciates in value by some $1,300?

Mr. Goyette: I thank you for your courtesy in the use of the words "layman", and "non-layman". I think there is a simple mechanical explanation, and that is, because of that limitation of 1,000 square feet and assuming a building cost of, what would you say, $17 a foot—

Mr. Bullbrook: Your change of policy has elevated the value. It now becomes a more money marketable item because of the change in financing policy.

Mr. Goyette: No, I do not think that it has changed the value, with respect. If there were mortgage funds available and there was a very buoyant market and all the factors were going that way, I do not think we would have much trouble disposing of these lots, probably at that price.

However, the change in policy does not make it feasible and possible for people to build houses on there.

Mr. Bullbrook: Recognizing our respective objectivity in this connection, is there no merit in the position that I take—that one of the criteria, if not the main criteria, in acceleration of values, is the change in your own policy?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Brought about by OMB approving the fact that we could put in, on those lots now, a house of 1,000 square feet. Am I right?

Mr. Bullbrook: No, I do not think so.

Mr. Goyette: I would like to conclude the argument this way. I think the point probably is irrelevant because we are going to lease the lot at our book value, which is something in the order of $4,525. It does not really matter what the value is unless it was considerably below, and then we might as well be responsible for renting at something higher than it should be on a lease basis. I was rather satisfied that the market value would be at least $4,500.

I think that would be the story as far as Moore township is concerned. We might have a comment to make now about the negotiations which we are involved in.

Mr. Bullbrook: No, I do not want to know about that.

Mr. Goyette: I was reading about it in the paper and there was some remark, I do not know, that we are going to pay something like $4,500, $4,700, a lot and we could have bought it for $1,000. I think that would be in the newspaper report that I read this morning.

Mr. Bullbrook: No. Just one moment, if you would, Mr. Chairman, I cannot be responsible—

Mr. Goyette: As long as you are satisfied.

Mr. Bullbrook: No. May I say this and I try to make it amply clear. In my intervention in these debates, I do not want in any way to affect adversely negotiations by any constituents of mine, of which I have no knowledge. Do you follow me? Do you understand what I am saying?

I used that only to introduce to this committee that there was adjacent land available that I wanted to get into that discussion.

Mr. Goyette: As long as I may leave the impression, in case there was any area of doubt, that we do believe we have a very satisfactory arrangement on the border of the city of Sarnia. Both the city and the township are very pleased and have encouraged us. Our purchase has been very attractive and I think that should be to the benefit. We will then need, I think, which was one of your questions here—

Mr. Bullbrook: That is right.

Mr. Goyette: We will then need some of the 500 lots when they ask for 250.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That 108 acres is owned by Brockfield Investments. Lewis Berger is president, I believe.

Mr. Bullbrook: I did not ask. I surmised who might have been president. Would you permit me now to get into discussion with the minister and, I am sorry, sir, I did not get your name?

Mr. Goyette: It is Paul Goyette.

Hon. Mr. Randall: An Irishman.

Mr. Bullbrook: An Irishman? C'est un bon français.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are at home, go ahead.

Mr. Bullbrook: I am glad that the corporation is serving the need that the minister brought to my attention in his letter which I read yesterday. At that time he called it an acute shortage and required 250 fully serviced lots. One has to conjecture, if I might, Mr. Minister, that since you did have the offer, that I had recorded at that time, of lots on the very periphery of the city, why you took this length of time to avail yourself of this opportunity.

My concern, however, and the main burden of my question—

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I ask, were those the lots that were offered to us at $6,500?

Mr. Bullbrook: No. Those are the lots that were offered to you unserviced at $1,000 a lot. Unserved.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Raw acreage?

Mr. Bullbrook: Raw acreage. If you recall in my letter to you, I had said that I know nothing about lot land banks. Do you recall, I read that? I was holding no brief, nor do I hold any brief for any particular company. My main concern in this connection is the expertise put forward by the housing corporation in connection with the needs in our area.

What I have to ask you, of course, is this. Did you make yourself aware of how many of the 550 lots, developed by St. Clair Woods, had been sold prior to your coming into the picture?

As a layman, I would say to myself, if I am going to buy land that I want to make available to the public to serve a need, then one would hope that there had been a public response to the original entrepreneur's offer. I wonder, how many lots, for example, when you bought this 50, had been sold of the 550? Would you know that?

Mr. Goyette: No, we would not because I think if we get the base right, these would really still be under construction, would they not?

Mr. Bullbrook: No, I do not think so.

Mr. Goyette: The sales position really only became evident in the last six months to a year.

Mr. Bullbrook: Oh no. That is far removed, Mr. Goyette—

Mr. Goyette: All right, then the next point—

Mr. Bullbrook: —because in 1966, we know that Bramalea and St. Clair in September of that year put together a joint venture for construction purposes. The purpose of that venture, I am led to believe, was to act as a catalyst toward the very sale of the lots. So that we know that in 1966 they were having difficulty in selling their lots.

Mr. Goyette: As we looked into it, and as we were aware of what other lots were available, there was raw land at $1,000 an acre, just as only this year we picked up this raw land which will be less than $1,000 per lot raw land. It is a question of having lots available which were not part of the programme at that time on a serviced basis, which we could go ahead and operate under the HOME plan.

Mr. Bullbrook: We will get to some essential questions, then.

The first one: Did you regard the purchase of these lots in this area as serving the need exemplified by the minister in his letter to me? That is the acute shortage of lots in Sarnia.

Mr. Goyette: First of all I must, as I give you my answer, record to you that I personally was not here. With respect, I would like to do this—

Mr. Bullbrook: I am sure—

Mr. Goyette: —but in terms of our staff discussion and so on, to be perfectly fair and honest with you, no, I do not think that 50 lots would satisfy the need for 250.

Mr. Bullbrook: Was it toward the need?

Mr. Goyette: It was an attempt toward the need.

Mr. Bullbrook: That is what I want.

Mr. Goyette: It was, let us say, almost the best we could do at the time. There were no other offers. I suggest to you, though, that that seemed to be known to us after the time—the 30 lots and the backyard stuff in our discussions with the local people, Mr. Givens and the others.

Mr. Bullbrook: You had communications—

Mr. Goyette: We had no other serviced lots that we could—

Mr. Bullbrook: You had a resolution on August 14, 1968, from the Sarnia city council saying that if you would entertain liaison with Brockfield at that time, they would project their services forward for you.

Mr. Goyette, let me say this, the problem that strikes me is this: We are a corporation whose duty is—and we hope whose attitude is, and I am sure it is—to service the needs of the people in the housing field. I accept that this is your attempt. I again wonder how you are going about this attempt, because in August you had the offer from Brockfield and the city of Sarnia. Then you have a concurrent resolution of the city saying it would project its services out there as expeditiously as required to develop that land.

Instead of that we go down and buy serviced lots, and I use the phrase “nine miles.” I might be exaggerating. How far is this subdivision from Sarnia? Can somebody help me? Is it six miles or seven miles?

Mr. Goyette: It is at Coronna.

Mr. Bullbrook: We will say seven miles for the safety of not exaggerating. So you go down and buy these 50 lots. Now the things that cause me concern are these:

You go in there and you buy these lots, according to your own information, recognizing that to do the job that you want, you require a bylaw change. And you do not get the bylaw change, which you know is a condition precedent to carrying out the fulfilment of the very obligation you are trying to fulfil. I wonder then, why the corporation—I, as a lawyer, advising a business person in buying lots having regard to the purposes manifest in purchasing them—would not say, “Do not buy these lots until you get that bylaw changed.” That would be the first thing I would think of.

The second thing I would think of is that I would want to look at the history of involvement of the developer who owned the lots. Is he trying to pass something off on me? Has he got a history of sales himself, Mr. Chairman and Mr. Minister? This would be a criterion to me, that this is attractive to the public, and I put it to you that this situation was, that they were having one difficult time in marketing their lots, that they, in effect, have chosen on an ill-founded premise and that the corporation should have looked into this. It was not just a situation for the corporation to go out and say: "We will buy lots in the Sarnia area to serve the need".

First of all I query whether the need was served and I substantiate that query by the fact that only one lot is sold, notwithstanding the other collateral difficulties. This is why I raise the matter, and as you know, Mr. Minister, I did not raise it last year when it was before me. As I said yesterday, I did not raise it last year because the corporation might well have been doing the appropriate thing. But I felt, in conscience, this year, sir, I had to raise it when only one lot was sold. Just where are we going? Where is the corporation going?

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I just make one comment here? When the HOME programme was introduced, many towns wanted a HOME programme as fast as they could get it and in our good judgement we looked over these lots and felt they were worth the kind of money we were paying for them, regardless of who sold them. In most instances we had no—perhaps we should have had—but we had no reason to believe that the 1,000 square foot house would be rejected and that we would have to go to the OMB to get that approved.

Nor did we have any reason to believe that that existed perhaps in the township of Sarnia, or the city of Sarnia.

But as a rule we had no difficulty in getting those changes made once we were going to provide housing, whether it be one house or 50 houses or 500 houses. I think the corporation acted in good faith in trying to provide housing in the area of Sarnia, hoping that through the HOME programme—where we were going to guarantee a $15,000 house on a lot that we paid $4,200 for, I believe, at that time—that we were going to be able to supply a home to the people in Sarnia and indicate to the builders in the town that we would build homes under the HOME programme, under the HOME guidelines.

Mr. Bullbrook: It is easy enough, sir.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We were not able to do it because, as you say, since then the bylaws have been changed and we can do it now. Perhaps we are a year ahead of ourselves.

Mr. Bullbrook: When was the bylaw changed?

Hon. Mr. Randall: As I understand it, you have them changed now?

Mr. Bullbrook: No.

Mr. Goyette: The rule is changed to accommodate—

Mr. Bullbrook: The point is, and we have got to get this clear on the record, the bylaw still is not changed.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The guidelines have changed so that we can meet the bylaw.

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes, but Mr. Minister, those are your guidelines. You changed the rules to suit. This does not answer my problem, if you change the rules on an insular basis, and that is what you have done. You have said: "We are having trouble marketing these lots in that development, so we will change our own rules."

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, let me just point out to you that when we built in Bramalea we stuck to the $15,000 limit for a three-bedroom house and then we were getting calls, from Ottawa particularly, stating that there are larger-sized families up there and a three-bedroom house was absolutely useless to most of the people living in the city of Ottawa.

The same thing, I believe, happened in Windsor and then we changed the rules of the HOME programme to provide four and five bedrooms. When we did that, in all conscience we had to do the same thing for any other town. Now, we looked at Sarnia and said there is a problem there that perhaps we can overcome if we increase the bedroom count, and we did what we thought in our good judgement made the change in order to provide the housing on a lot that called for 1,100 square feet.

I do not think we can be faulted for meeting conditions. I can point out to you that we went up into the town of Arnprior, where we had lots at $5,000 a lot, and it was obvious we were never going to sell those lots. We went to the town council with my hon. friend here, Mr. Yakabuski, and we convinced the town council that nobody in town could afford that kind of lot or a house that went on it, and we had them rezone it for condominium row housing and it has been very successful.

There is one thing about the housing corporation; you will find if you do business with it long enough we are very flexible and I think this is the way we have to be. I think right here we have shown we are flexible. I do not think there is any way you can fault the housing corporation for making the lot match the HOME guidelines if we can possibly make it, particularly when we have bent the rules for other areas of the province.

Mr. Bullbrook: You cloud the issue, perhaps innocently, sir. I am not faulting you for changing the guidelines. The fact of the matter is you are in the happy position of changing the guidelines to suit your purpose.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We achieve the end result.

Mr. Bullbrook: But you do not achieve the end result. You might achieve the end eventually, but that surely cannot placate your conscience on these matters?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh, I tell you, I sleep pretty good at nights. Do not worry about my conscience.

Mr. Bullbrook: That is right, I am sorry. Nothing exists in a vacuum, you are quite right.

The point I make is, sir, that the accretion in value that you speak of must be attributable to a great extent to the very changes in policy that you are the authors of. But what causes me concern is this—and I return to it—that the corporation would see fit to buy these lots, recognizing the bylaws problems they had, because the corporation obviously did not look into the marketability of the lots themselves—and interject if I am wrong, Mr. Goyette.

Mr. Goyette: I think then the main point here is that we were satisfying, in this purchase, the request of the township of Moore, not the city of Sarnia, and therefore where else could one get serviced lots in that township at that time?

Mr. Bullbrook: Have you done a study of the township?

Mr. Goyette: Our people have been through it, but I will have to admit I am not terribly well versed.

Mr. Bullbrook: What was the need in the township of Moore at that time?

Mr. Goyette: Fifty lots.

Mr. Bullbrook: Fifty lots?

Mr. Goyette: Yes.

Mr. Bullbrook: How do you explain the fact there was a need for 50 lots and you have only sold one?

Mr. Goyette: I explained that before.

Mr. Bullbrook: No, no, just hold on, you have not covered that.

Mr. Goyette: It is a question of the size of the house. We have another municipality where we have exactly the same thing. We may not come out of it, you know, as well.

Mr. Bullbrook: Yet you are the ones who bought the lots. Surely to goodness this is the point that must be made? Right? When you are going to serve a need, you have to buy the lots to serve that need. You cannot come back afterwards and say, "Well, we were in trouble because of a bylaw."

The point I make there is, if there is any validity—and there probably is—in the restriction put upon you by the municipal bylaws, who in heaven's name was ever advising you when you bought those lots? Surely they must have told you that the very lots could not meet the criteria then established to serve the need required under the study?

Mr. Goyette: We got some advice from the municipality—

Mr. Bullbrook: That they would change their bylaws?

Mr. Goyette: That they would change their bylaws.

Mr. Bullbrook: Did you get advice from the OMB that they would concur in this?

Mr. Goyette: I made some comments on the municipal board earlier this afternoon, before you came in, and I think it would be most inappropriate for us to do that.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): I am sure Mr. Kennedy would be glad to give you an advanced opinion, too.

Mr. Goyette: So we think we have a good deal, and we will be meeting income groups of under $9,000. We still will be putting houses up on deals better than anybody else in the area. And if there is any harm we may do—we certainly will not be of any help to the adjacent landowners—we may not be in the position to lease lots.

Mr. Bullbrook: Those are, I say respectfully, of course, collateral platitudes.

May I suggest this to you, Mr. Goyette: Does the corporation ever deal in options or conditional offers in situations such as this? You have expended $210,000 from the public purse and, as that money is expended and the lots are not sold, there necessarily are carrying charges, and one wonders whether you have ever entertained the idea of getting an option on these lots to fulfill the requirements, thereby not tying up this amount of money and thereby not adding to the total value of the lot and adversely affecting the people who want to buy them?

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I point out to you that we have had options on many lots that we have acquired, and may I also point out that until we acquire some of this land and, let us say, the people come out of the woodwork and tell us what is wrong with it, we do not know what the bylaws are. For instance, we have just got—

Mr. Bullbrook: You do not know what the bylaws are?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Wait a minute now. We have just gone through since 1967—your friend on your left there—

Mr. Bullbrook: He is not my friend.

Hon. Mr. Randall: —has been chiding me—

Mr. Bullbrook: Oh, I am sorry.

Hon. Mr. Randall: —about Malvern and Chapel Glen and all the other areas, and until we acquire an ownership or an option on those lots, we do not know what people are going to object to. I do not think the corporation is in any position to say it has bought a piece of property and there is nothing wrong with it; we can check it out today, and tomorrow somebody will come forward with an objection. We have to take some risks.

I have said that, as far as I am concerned, you can take all the risks in the world as long as it winds up as a good deal for the guy buying the home and as a good deal for the taxpayer, and I do not think we have anything on our books that has not been a good deal.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Minister, you and I are having a wonderful parliamentary relationship, and I intend to keep it that way. May I say to you, and I invite your consideration of this, I want to talk about this deal here; I do not want to talk about Malvern, because they are entirely different things.

The point is this: I recognize that the corporation in some circumstances, for example Kitchener-Waterloo, must go in with some degree of—I was going to use the word intrigue; I do not mean that—lack of public show, to acquire options, make conditional offers and so on. Let us talk about this subdivision of 550 lots they are just begging to sell. Okay? Because that is what the situation was; they could not market them.

The point I want to put to you is, did you ever consider going in and saying to St. Clair Woods, "We will take an option for a year so that we can settle our difficulties," because what causes me concern is that we spent $210,000 of public money, as I said before, and that in effect has been lying fallow—right?—when in these circumstances I think we could well have gone in and dealt with St. Clair Woods.

I want to ask you if there is anything in this file that shows correspondence with St. Clair Woods suggesting an option or a conditional offer until these things were rectified. And I say to you, sir, that should have been rectified, because this question of the bylaw cannot be sloughed off. You must have available to you talent that says, "We can only build a certain-sized house under their bylaws." That is one of the most fundamental obligations of a lawyer and, I would think, of the corporation. So, is there any correspondence dealing with a conditional offer?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Unless you have got it there, I doubt it.

Mr. Goyette: I do not know if there is any correspondence, but—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am sorry, I thought you—

Mr. Goyette: —certainly there was in the offers, both written and verbal, in which the staff would be dealing with the people in the area. It would always be conditional until we would have our approvals, and this arrangement here has been followed strictly by the staff in our land development group, who took it through all the normal processes in acquiring it.

On your point as to whether we should have got a conditional arrangement subject to OMB approval, I do not know. Personally, I would say to you now, if I was involved in a deal and I had a second chance—and I do not get second chances very often in our 60 municipalities around Ontario, and this is Monday morning—I think I would say, "Let us make sure it goes through." There was some real confidence that it would go through, because we did have a resolution of the council of Moore indicating that they would support the change in bylaw before the OMB, and thus far that kind of support has been fairly useful, and it usually came through.

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes, that was—

Mr. Goyette: No, I am sorry. I do not very often get the opportunity here. There was also the expectation, notwithstanding whether it was $1,000 or $1,100, that there may well have been houses built on it within the $15,000 or $16,000 limitations. That has not turned out because of the high-income area of Sarnia, which you would know more about than I would.

Mr. Bullbrook: And which you should have known about as a result of your survey of the area, of course.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We stand reprimanded then, Mr. Lawyer.

Mr. Bullbrook: No, I am not acting as a lawyer here; I am carrying out my obligations.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are kidding us.

Mr. Bullbrook: I am carrying out my obligation to the people as well as I can.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bullbrook: That is it entirely. The situation is this—and I will encapsulate it in this comment, if I may—I appreciate the co-operation given to me by the minister. I am not at all content that my comments relating to malfeasance, misfeasance or non-feasance on the part of the corporation have not been justified, having regard to what I have heard.

I really feel, Mr. Chairman, that this corporation, in going into this venture, should have looked at these collateral problems they knew existed and they should have protected the public purse concurrent therewith. I feel also that I have not been entirely satisfied that there is not a liaison with other people with whom this corporation has dealt in the past.

In that connection, I do not intend to pursue it any further.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are not suggesting there was criminal offence?

Mr. Bullbrook: No, not at all, for goodness' sake.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I just wanted to make sure. The press is in the back of the room and I just wanted to make sure you are not accusing anybody of a criminal offence.

Mr. Bullbrook: Certainly not.

Hon. Mr. Randall: All right. I just wanted to make sure.

Mr. Bullbrook: Why do you raise—why do you—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You talk about malfeasance and a few other things—

Mr. Bullbrook: All right, all right.

Hon. Mr. Randall: In the legal tangle, I wondered what it meant.

Mr. Bullbrook: Just hold on then and I will tell you.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Bullbrook: You are either negligent—have you got that?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, I have got it.

Mr. Bullbrook: You do not know what you are doing, is the second thing, or you are ulteriorly motivated, that is the third thing. Did you get that? Did you get the explanation there of what that means?

That is what I mean, and if the public was here judging this, I would suggest they would come to the same conclusion.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think the people in Sarnia would pin a medal on us.

Mr. Yakabuski: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

The members of this committee have a right to know some of the other circumstances. In this case I do not know the name of the town in which this development was to take place.

An hon. member: Moore township.

Mr. Yakabuski: Moore township. What I want to get straight in my mind, Mr. Chairman is, at the time this development was conceived, and the survey was taken, was there a housing need in the city of Sarnia?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Yakabuski: And was this development actually geared to take care of that need?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Part of it.

Mr. Yakabuski: It could not have been.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Yakabuski: I am asking the questions now. You had the floor for an hour.

Mr. Singer: He got in on a point of order. What kind of a point of order is this?

Mr. Singer: He got in on a point of order.

Mr. Yakabuski: I want to clear things in my mind.

Mr. Chairman: Just hold on. Points of order, as I understand it, usually deal with misrepresentation.

Mr. Yakabuski: At no time in your remarks did you dwell on the housing need in the city of Sarnia.

Mr. Bullbrook: I rise on the point of order.

An hon. member: Well, he was out of order.

Mr. Bullbrook: Would you please tell me, sir—I do not want to restrict him—what his point of order is?

Mr. Yakabuski: I will tell you what my point of order is. Nowhere during the course of your remarks did you dwell on the need for a housing development in Sarnia. And all the time, in my mind, I am thinking this housing development is proposed for some village, or town, or municipality some seven miles from Sarnia.

I do not know what the problem is. It should be ideal to take care of these—

Mr. Bullbrook: Now, that is completely wrong. That is not an innocent misrepresentation. You know, I read the correspondence from the minister yesterday about the need for a housing—

Mr. Singer: To the minister.

Mr. Bullbrook: From the minister. I read it yesterday. I put it on the record: "The city of Sarnia, as you well know, is currently faced with an acute shortage of land. Our survey indicated that the city requires some 250 fully serviced lots."

Mr. Yakabuski: I did not bring up the question of the need.

Mr. Bullbrook: Now, if you want to take up the question as to whether this acquisition serves the need, I am prepared to join in the debate. But surely the rules are not going to be that, if you put a question to him and if I do not like the answer, I cannot intervene myself in the debate.

Mr. Yakabuski: I did not say that.

Mr. Bullbrook: All right. Okay.

Mr. Yakabuski: But we want to establish in our mind some of the circumstances surrounding this particular case.

Mr. Bullbrook: I thought I came across quite forthrightly in this capacity.

Mr. Yakabuski: No. Maybe I owe you an apology. In the first instance, you did mention the housing need in Sarnia, but nowhere else throughout last night when you talked, and again this afternoon, did we get to that. Actually you have got to get to the core of the matter.

Mr. Bullbrook: We did.

Mr. Chairman: Let us cut it out. Let us go to the next speech.

Mr. Singer: That is a brand new point of order, that one.

Mr. Chairman: Let us just discuss Toronto for a few minutes. We have got the member for Parkdale over here.

Mr. Peacock: Why Toronto?

Mr. Trotter: I do not know. He made an assumption that we would discuss this subject of Toronto. I will leave Moore township to the member for Sarnia, who did a very excellent job.

An hon. member: That is only one man's opinion.

Mr. Trotter: Well he established a certain amount of negligence on the part of Ontario Housing Corporation, in my opinion. Mr. Chairman, I am not as sanguine about the housing situation in Ontario as the member for Renfrew South is. He is very complimentary toward the Ontario Housing Corporation, and, unfortunately, such organizations as the Canadian Welfare Council. I do not think I share this sanguine opinion of the member for Renfrew South, either about the situation in Ontario or, for that matter, all of Canada.

About two years ago, there was a housing conference in Ottawa. Since 1968 the housing situation in Ontario, as well as in the rest of the country, in terms of rent levels, in terms of vacancies, in terms of the demand for housing, be it public housing or otherwise, has become worse despite the fact that the minister may set forth what accomplishments he feels he has made. There is no question that we are falling behind in trying to supply proper housing units for the people of the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You must admit it was not helped by Mr. Hellyer's actions.

Mr. Trotter: You see; here we go back to trying to pass the buck.

Mr. Yakabuski: It is a whole year out of the housing programme. I just want you to know that.

Mr. Trotter: Well, I am aware of various opinions.

Mr. Yakabuski: A whole year. Never dug a hole!

Mr. Trotter: But I want to say this, that the Ontario Housing Corporation is almost completely dependent on the federal government for any progress that has been made, which is, I will admit, the trouble. I will go along with that because I think the Ontario government is in a position to give leadership. If we ever have a proper federal housing programme in this country, it is going to cost Ontario even more money because the truth of it is—in fact, the member for Renfrew South mentioned it—what are these other areas going to do?

The only answer most of these provinces are going to have is that the federal government will eventually come to the rescue. The tax money to pay for that is going to come from three places—British Columbia, Alberta, and the province of Ontario. If we, on our own, do go ahead with a more vigorous housing programme, we can do more for ourselves in many ways than we can in being dependent on what the federal government does.

Certainly, you have got to have the co-operation; it has got to be a partnership. But there is no question in my mind that Ontario could be a far more vigorous partner. The main reason, of course, Mr. Chairman, that 93 per cent of the mortgage money available from Central Mortgage and Housing comes to Ontario is that this province is one of the very few provinces that are able to match up to the federal portion of the money. It is simply because we have money that we are able to get the larger funds.

This is to our advantage and I would hope that our advantage would be used for ourselves.

I bear in mind that in doing so we house, certainly in a metropolitan area like Toronto, a proportion of people who come from outside the province. There is no question that we do this. We do it simply because people are attracted to the prosperity that, by and large, is in the province of Ontario, despite the problems that we do have.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a few specific questions of the minister. First of all, in regard to public housing, what rule of thumb do you use in constructing a public housing complex? Do you attempt to limit yourself to any particular number?

Hon. Mr. Randall: You mean in a given area?

Mr. Trotter: In a given area.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think when we first started out the main thing was to provide, as I said the other day, residential accommodation for people in need as fast as we could get it in any area. But we recognize the problems that are created when we have large housing projects. Again, I must refer to Regent Park and perhaps a few others.

The objective has been, in the last few years, to try to spread these projects around the various municipalities on a much smaller basis with lower concentrations of people. This has also caused some problems and you have already heard about community facilities. I think this year, keeping in mind even the smaller project, you are going to have the same number of problems. You must have the community facilities—which, again, is almost a third phase we are going into—to provide accommodation for people, low-income people, in smaller projects where we can find sufficient land.

Mr. Trotter: I had been under the impression at one time that the Ontario Housing Corporation was going to try to limit public housing complexes to about 200 units. Did they even plan that? Did they ever intend that?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think that was Mr. Hellyer's point of view but not ours. We have had smaller units, of course, fewer numbers than that in smaller communities, as you recognize. Even Mr. Hellyer, I think, when he worked on the deal that we had provided Ottawa with—how many units did we provide up there? There were 250 there, half-rent, half-sale—that is, I think, on the order of what Mr. Hellyer was talking about.

Mr. Trotter: I know recently that there is a project in Metropolitan Toronto, I think out in Scarborough, in the Galway-Kingston Road area. They have 500 units. That includes of course, approximately 180 units for senior citizens. But, when would a project like that have been planned?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Plus some town housing. Oh, I guess it would take over the last two years. Would it not?

Mr. Goyette: We have not bought it.

Mr. Trotter: You have not bought it yet?

Mr. Goyette: It is a proposed—

Mr. Trotter: It is proposed and it is in the area of 500 units?

Mr. Goyette: Four hundred and sixty-one.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Including the—

Mr. Goyette: Townhouses.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The townhouses and the senior citizens.

Mr. Trotter: I was wondering, Mr. Chairman, would it not seem to be more reasonable that the corporation, through building the same number of units, instead could spread them, instead of building just one more complex?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is a good idea, if you can find the land and this has been the major problem in the urban areas. We are able to do that in the smaller towns, but in the urban areas it is almost an impossibility. If you are going to have a project offered to you, as a rule it is a big project.

I might just come back and point out what was happening down here, as I said, on Bain Avenue yesterday. I think there are 400 units in there and there are 1.5 children per unit. You and I know that 1.5 children per unit is not a major problem, but maybe some families have five or six youngsters and these are the ones, maybe, of the 12 or 13 families in the area, that are causing most of the problem. They may have the bigger families and these are the youngsters who may be throwing the garbage over on to the next door neighbour's lot or knocking down his flower beds.

But even in any concentrated area like that, we would not think that 1.5 children per family would be too heavy a concentration. I think we were accused here of having 10,000 kids up in Etobicoke, which is completely unrealistic. We did nothing of the kind.

Most of that development was up before we ever went there and our development was a very minor one, in view of the land we owned compared to the number of children who were going in. But unfortunately, whenever there is a problem with youngsters, they always look to the housing corporation and say that we bring them all the problems.

I know that we bring a number. You cannot put people into an area without creating problems. But, give a dog a bad name; we get blamed for a lot of things we really are not responsible for. I am talking now about the social problems of people.

It is very difficult for us to say, "Well, we are going to build half a dozen houses here and half a dozen houses there," because the land is not available. The cost would be almost prohibitive. Again, some of our friends in the House are saying "Well, we need more social workers for these people, we need more day nurseries, we need more playgrounds—"

Mr. Trotter: Is that not true?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know how you provide them if you take these people and scatter them all over; then, I think, you could do without those facilities and without those social services and turn them over to the Salvation Army or somebody else. I am not trying to be facetious. I am just saying that, if the people are in an area, I think we can probably render them more services than they can get if they are spread.

That is a moot point and we will probably get an argument on it, but we have tried to look at all the difficulties of concentrating people or scattering people. I think we have a scatter programme right now, as much as we think we can get.

Mr. Trotter: Even if you build a low-rental complex, let us say, even 200 units—and they seem to average about 1.5 children per unit—surely you have got enough children there for a day nursery, even a small one. Surely you must have.

Mr. Chairman: Does the member for Parkdale want to go on tomorrow? It is 6 o'clock now.

Mr. Trotter: It is 6?

Mr. Chairman: Yes. Do you want to go on first thing tomorrow at 3.15? We will adjourn until 3.15 tomorrow.

The committee adjourned at 6 o'clock, p.m.

Trade and Development Standing Committee

THURSDAY, MAY 28, 1970

The committee met at 3:15 o'clock, p.m., in committee room one; Mr. D. A. Evans in the Chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT

On votes 2209 and 2210:

Mr. Chairman: The meeting will come to order. The hon. member for Parkdale.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): When we adjourned, Mr. Chairman, late yesterday afternoon, I was asking the minister if there was any way to limit the number of units. I thought at one time that when they put up a public housing complex, they would try to limit it to 200 units. Of course, I know they are much larger than that. Is there any hope that they will be limiting the size of them? For example, the most recent one is the project under way at Galway and Kingston Road, with 500 units. Is there any way to limit the size?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): I do not think there is too much, except what I suggested yesterday. Perhaps you would like me to make a comment. You people are looking to the land in the urban areas where the greatest housing need is, and as I pointed out, we have housing up in Edgeley village here and we had to call six people before we could get somebody to go out there. As I said earlier, we do not fault these people, because they are working in Scarborough and living in Edgeley, and I can understand the cost of transportation, if they have a car or do not have a car.

We are not placing any responsibility on the applicant who turns us down. I just said we are trying to get them a place to live in the area where perhaps they work in order to save transportation costs. The big thing in the city is to find land sufficiently-enough land, I should say—to divide it up into smaller units to take care of these people.

Perhaps you would like to add a comment?

Mr. P. R. Goyette (Ontario Housing Corporation): Yes, Mr. Chairman.

We would prefer, in many ways, to have them smaller. It depends very much on the size of the municipality. In the smaller municipalities, we think in terms of senior citizens at one extreme; we try to get them buildings of 10 and 12 units and that size. If we get one at 100 units in a very small community, it would be by far the biggest building.

As you get to the larger municipalities, I think, as was mentioned by the minister, you then run into the question of land costs and total costs. Indeed, our problem right now is that notwithstanding some of the proposals we have been receiving are large in the number of units they have in them, they are still too expensive to be acceptable in our federal-provincial relationship.

In other words, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, just in the last month or two in our discussions, is becoming somewhat concerned that the price is getting too high, that the subsidy that goes along with it is becoming high; and so, what are you going to do to keep the costs down?

The next point I might add is that, particularly in Metropolitan Toronto—and I think that is your area of concern—one cannot just go out anywhere and say, "We are going to put a project here". As you know, the location of a public housing project is one which must be approved by the Metropolitan housing committee. It has a relationship with the schools; is the density too high; is it acceptable, and this kind of thing.

The other factor, I might add too, is that there are times when having a large project is to our advantage. It allows us a little bit more in having the social amenities and those other recreation facilities that we have been talking about for the last few days, distributed over a much larger number of units if it is feasible to fit in within the project. It is also an advantage in the larger projects that we can probably accommodate within the area—and successfully—units for two bedroom or less.

As you may know, our waiting list has in it a very high percentage of those people whose needs are for two bedrooms, one bedroom or a bachelor; I think the figure is something in the order of 60 per cent. So a small bedroom count unit is not necessarily a bad one for the large projects. This is an area for debate, an area for discussion. People have various views on it.

If indeed the project brings too high a concentration of people, then this is not necessarily a good thing. It depends so much on its location. I do not think the public opinion that is sometimes expressed is necessarily a by-product of the size.

Somebody just handed me a note from the paper last night that up in Winfield Farm, where the housing is of a very high order, very high-priced, even other high-priced housing is of concern to them. We have been asked this in various cities and we have tried to have a distribution.

In the city of Ottawa—on which another member made some comments, and in which I think you participated—our projects vary in size from 10 units up to about 250, and there is one of 420 that is under consideration. The justification of that was the possibility within the cost structure of being able to build a separate community facility outside the building of something in the order of 1,300 to 1,400 square feet. The main reason for the size of the units is essentially the cost per unit.

Mr. Trotter: I want to give a couple of examples why I think the policy is wrong, and I include in my criticism the federal government, because I realize that they came toward large units simply for economy. My argument is that in the long run it is going to be far more costly socially in building these great ghettos.

The argument might be that if we have enough units, we can provide a number of the amenities of life. In the first place, if you have a relatively small unit built into the community, the children can become part of the community. They grow up as part of the community, not as subsidized housing tenants, but they can use the Y, they can use the local churches, they just become part of the community if you have a small unit.

In my own area, I have Pelham Park Gardens, which I think has been highly successful, and I think it is one of the better efforts that Ontario Housing Corporation has been able to carry on. One of the reasons is that in the town houses, there are only about 103 of them. There is a high-rise apartment right nearby which is really part of the community, but for the most part they tend to be mostly senior citizens in the high-rise and also some young couples who are just married. There are also families, of course.

There tends to be a difference between the high-rise and the town houses. The town houses have a certain esprit de corps, one of the best I know of in Ontario Housing. One of the major reasons for it is this: It is relatively small with only 103 units. It started off almost in the very beginning in 1968 with, I think, a pretty good tenants' association. I have been up there on occasion, and I will say something good about Ontario Housing: The area supervisor—I think it is Mr. Black—takes a real interest in the area, and as a result this shows that the type of personnel you have dealing with the tenants makes a tremendous difference.

I know, for example, Mr. Chairman, when the tenants first moved in, they were concerned because whenever there was any trouble the parents thought that their kids got the blame from the police for anything that went wrong in the area. So, I phoned one of the police inspectors and they made arrangements and talked to the parents, but it was all because they had a tenants' association that they contacted the police, the teachers, the principals. They really are a community.

I think a large part is because they are not too large and I have been impressed with the esprit de corps. The tenants will go around themselves making sure that the garbage is placed in the proper way, and that the kids are in off the streets at a certain hour. They do that themselves and they do not need any government looking after them, which is most encouraging. But you do not get that same esprit de corps when you have these great buildings with a tremendous number of people. They just do not get to know each other; they do not have the same friendships, and by and large it ends up in police problems and social problems and very little opportunity for the people to have a community life or even to get into middle-class housing.

Just before I pass off from Pelham Park, Mr. Chairman, I would like to use this again as an example of the errors that can be made in building and improvements that can be made. The vast majority of people I have talked to who are tenants in the Pelham Park project are pleased with it. I think it is an excellent place, and that is why they take an interest in their lawns and the fences they are putting up and everything else. But there is one thing: When that was planned, it is highly ridiculous in that when they go down into the basement, there is no outlet in the basement—no windows, no doors, and of course you would not necessarily expect a door but you would expect windows. As a result, if you go down from the kitchen into the basement and if there is ever a fire in the kitchen, the person is completely cornered down in that basement.

I took an architect up there with me to check the place over, because I did not believe them when they first told me. I said there must be something wrong and that, besides, the building standards just would not allow that. Well, we checked into Central Mortgage and Housing minimum standards and it is within the minimum standards; there is no question about it. But whether or not it is within CMHC standards, I think it is a very serious mistake, not only because of the fire danger that is there if anything went wrong, but secondly, it becomes so hot and humid in the basement with no ventilation. They tell me that as a result of the central heating, sometimes in winter it will reach as much as 100 degrees in those basements and the kids playing down there—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You say it did have windows but no doors?

Mr. Trotter: No doors or windows; nothing. I said I would not expect doors, but I would expect windows for ventilation because if the women are washing down there, it gets very humid. None of these apartments or town houses has any thermostat; they cannot control their heat, and the women I talked to all complained about the basement. They were most disturbed about the danger, in case anything went wrong in the kitchen and there was any kind of fire. The children would either burn or they would suffocate if they were playing downstairs. I admit it is within the standards provided by CMHC.

I had an architect take a quick look over that, and asked him what it would cost per unit to put in a window. He figured it would be in the area of $200. I was hoping that would be one investment the Ontario Housing Corporation would make in Pelham Park. I would do it for two reasons — first, as a matter of safety; and secondly, I think the tenants who have been doing such an excellent job in that area deserve the interest that Ontario Housing Corporation would be showing if it made that effort.

I must say that any town house that I have been in at Pelham Park has been very well kept. They are very good housekeepers, and I think that if you can have this type of development in Ontario Housing Corporation, it is a tremendous example for the general public to see that this system can work.

You get extremely good people in this area. I know that they run a hockey league in winter, they have a baseball league in summertime, and they have a great many activities going. The local churches are interested. We have had good people in the area, and mainly it is because of the impetus from the tenants that I think that the relations have been good with Ontario Housing Corporation.

But I must emphasize that the building really needs to be corrected, and if you have any other buildings on the drawing board, do not make that mistake. I was wondering, Mr. Minister, if you could give me some type of undertaking that maybe one of your officials would look into the possibility of correcting that error.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I cannot think of any reason we should not have a look at it.

Mr. Trotter: As I said, I have had an architect look it over and he said it is not impossible to correct it. He was dumbfounded that they would get away with it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We will have a look at it.

Mr. Trotter: One other thing that also shows up in looking over even a good development, is that when they planned Pelham Park Gardens they must have been fantastically optimistic as to the prosperity of the people in being able to own motor cars. I think including the high-rise apartments, there are only about 100 motor cars among all the tenants, but there is provision for parking space for about 300 cars. In one spot for underground parking, you could park 150 cars, and in another place about 103, as well as the parking on the grounds. When you would walk into the underground parking it is just like being in a vast hall completely empty, because people are using the parking upstairs.

I would hope that an area like that which is simply not being used and is a lot of wasted concrete, could be used for facilities for recreation. For example, the police department offered to set up a boxing ring and that type of thing that can be used particularly in the wintertime.

Again, even the tenants emphasize to me that anything done like that should be supervised, and likely supervised by themselves, because once, without the parents knowing that they could use a certain section of that underground parking, bulbs start to disappear and the kids were fooling around. So anything that is done, I think should be done with the co-operation of the tenants.

I would ask, Mr. Chairman, that the minister draw to the attention of his staff that those facilities in Pelham Park should be used, particularly that unused parking space, and for the planners not to be quite so optimistic as to the prosperity of people in that area. There is enough parking space in there for the people in the town houses if they had three cars per family.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is a municipal requirement and I think your point is well taken. It is a municipal requirement that we have to provide the garages in case people do have cars, otherwise they would have to leave them all over the community. If they do not have cars, I agree with you that we should look at the space and see if it can be used for the things you mentioned.

Mr. Trotter: I have been informed that because of the tenants' excellent association with the police department, the police would be glad to help carry on sporting activities. Again, I use this as an example of what can be done; it is a good example. Everything has its difficulties, but I would hope the minister would look into that particular area.

I would like to ask the minister this question: In his view of public housing, what does he look upon public housing for? Is it a stepping-stone for the temporary poor to find middle-class housing? Or is it an effort to break the poverty cycle for people who may never be middle class but are really in a poverty-cycle? What do you think its primary purpose is?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think primarily when you look at the number of people coming into public housing in any country, it is to give people adequate shelter. I think we just have to look at the lineups in Great Britain and Sweden where they have had a bigger housing programme than we have had per capita, over many years. It never gets less; there are always more and more people coming in.

They are forced in through economic circumstances. The cost of living goes up, the private rents go up, and so they say, "Well, I might as well get my name on the state's list and let the state provide me with some form of housing." If it is good housing—which most of ours is, as I think you recognize—there is no reason why they feel they should not put their name on the list and get a house when their name comes up.

We recognize that perhaps 30 per cent of our people are single-parent-led families, and we would hope that maybe those people also would be able to afford some kind of accommodation they can buy over a period of years. We would hope that for the majority of these people who are on rent-geared-to-income, we can find a way where we can finance them out of public housing into ownership, as we have talked about in the last few days.

But I think you are always going to have a percentage of your people—low-income people, let us say, people on welfare or family allowances—for whom housing must be provided, and if they ever bring in a form of guaranteed annual income, perhaps this is one of the ways to provide them with a home for which they have an ownership certificate. I do not know how you would do it, but this is one way in which, if you did nothing else, to make them realize that they have a place of their own and they should not kick it apart and cause so many maintenance repairs as we talked about the other day.

I think if people have an ownership certificate, then if Willie kicks the plaster in, somebody is going to kick his head in, and think this is the thing that all of us recognize. There would be some sort of control over the youngsters who, because they do not own it, are liable to wreck it. This can happen, of course, in privately owned homes as well as publicly owned homes.

But I think that the pride of ownership would do a number of things. It would make these people feel that they are not second-class citizens, as sometimes they are referred to, as you well know. At the same time, if they have a stake in the community I think they are better citizens, and I think the maintenance cost of keeping their properties up year in and year out would lessen very considerably. We have seen that happen, where people have taken ownership of, say, the homes up in Guelph and things like that.

No, I think it is a stepping stone. I would like to think of it as a stepping stone into something better as our economic circumstances improve. But I think you recognize that today the average fellow's wages, while in some industries they are going up very rapidly, in other industries they are not going up as rapidly, but his cost of living is moving to a point where, when he does get to a position where his economic circumstances permit him to get out of public housing and into private housing, unless there is some form of government assistance along the lines of HOME or along the lines of what we have been talking about here the last few days, there will be no way we can convert them.

Mr. Trotter: What is the average stay of a family in public housing—seven years?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Would you have any idea of that?

Mrs. B. Meredith (Ontario Housing Corporation): Yes, I think you might be very close.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Seven or eight years. This is actually, of course, in the last couple of years, because of the economic circumstances, you realize that.

Mr. Trotter: I think our basic approach to public housing is going to have to change. First of all, I think the expectation was that people would be in public housing for a short period of time in order to buy their own homes. Now the average Canadian family moves every five years. The idea was to have people in public housing move even faster. The truth of it is, they now stay longer in public housing than the average family does in its own home. So our policy and original intentions are obviously failing, for economic reasons and many other reasons.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think you remember that the rent scale was built so that as their economic circumstances improved, they could not afford to live in public housing, and had to get out and live with a private landlord. That was fine as long as there was somewhere for the people to move. When there was nowhere for the people to move, we found ourselves in a position where you were being whacked backward and forward because you were trying to force people out of a house where they had good accommodation, and into something they could not afford.

Our turnover now is averaging 12 per cent, and that is rather low when you look at the number of units we have and we recognize people are not getting out, because let me point out that they are getting damned good housing for the kind of money they are paying, whatever they are paying, and people are not so concerned with living in public housing that they are going to move out just for the sake of moving.

There are some people who say, "I do not want to live in a public housing project, I want to be my own landlord, or I want to live with a private landlord." But the vast majority of people have a look at the economics, and say, "How far will the weekly wage go to permit me to move?"

Mr. Trotter: Because you are now going to have tenants on hand for, it looks to me, many years, the way the situation is, I would suggest that there be some kind of an appeal system set up when tenants are evicted. This has not happened in Pelham Park: they have had very little, if any, evictions, so I do not associate evictions with Pelham Park. But in many units throughout Ontario—the Ontario Housing Corporation may argue that it has very few people who are evicted—there is no real opportunity except if a tenant took a matter to court, which is financially and practically very unfeasible.

There is no appeal system within the corporation itself where a tenant can be heard. I believe that in the event of an eviction, if the tenant has an objection I think that a proper appeal system should be set up with some type of representation for the tenant and within certain rules of evidence. I would not want those rules to be as strict as the court rules, but I think that there should be some system that would give the tenant an opportunity to be heard. Now you are really the landlord for 105,000 people—

Hon. Mr. Randall: One hundred and twelve thousand.

Mr. Trotter: Oh, 112,000 now; it is going up all the time. But it is becoming—and this is a danger in our society, whether we like it or not—a great bureaucracy. There should be built-in protection for the tenant, who in most cases—whether the minister or his assistants may think so or not—feels he is just a pawn, that there is nothing he can do about the system.

I would suggest to the minister that we do set up an appeal system. I know in the United States they have proceeded to do the same thing. At one time the United States, with its housing authorities, had nowhere for the tenant to go. As a result of a number of injustices that took place in the United States, they have finally changed their system in most jurisdictions, because if a tenant is abusing his rights, for the sake of the other tenants he should go.

Again, if you have a tenants' association, you would probably have the majority of tenants expressing the view that an offending tenant should go. If you look at a lease, a person even holding a quiet friendly poker game could be turfed out. You could probably put a nail in the wall and be turfed out. There are many odds and ends.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You know the new lease will be issued before July.

Mr. Trotter: I am told there is a new lease coming, but in any event there can be many interpretations of any lease. Without seeing that lease, I know that you can give four lawyers different sections and they can come out with many interpretations.

I would recommend to the minister that an appeal system be set up, just as in The Department of Social and Family Services a review board is set up. It is now chaired by the former deputy minister, James Band. There, someone who has been refused welfare has a right of appeal and this is what you are going to need because right now, Ontario Housing Corporation is the judge, jury and prosecutor. I feel with government where we become part of bureaucracy, whether we like it or not, there should be some sort of appeal.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I just give you a couple of comments on evictions? I think you would be interested.

During the first eight months of 1969, the board of directors authorized eviction proceedings to be instituted through the courts in 48 cases. This is through the courts, not through the Ontario Housing Corporation. The cases were tried by a judge or a court and in all but one case the cause was rental arrears. In other words, if a guy is on a rent fixed income basis and his neighbours are paying rent and he just refuses to pay rent because he is using his money for some other purposes, you cannot let him stay there regardless of the troubles he causes for his own family. If he refused to pay his rent, why should the guy next door pay, who is an honest citizen and wants to pay his way?

Of the 48 cases, 18 were settled by arrangements between the tenant and the corporation and did not reach the court stage. In other words, we sat down with them and with our tenant relation officer and we said, "Look, get on the ball, pay your rent, look after your family and be a good citizen in the community." So 18 of the 48 were settled that way.

A further four cases were resolved by the tenant vacating the premises prior to the execution of the writ. In other words, he recognized that he was in the wrong and decided he would get out.

In only 26 of the 48 cases did possession have to be attained by the sheriff's action, which meant that they were the ones who said, "I am going to stay here come hell or high water." Then you had to have a sheriff's action.

Between August 31, 1969, and April 30, 1970, 88 eviction proceedings were initiated by the courts. Of these, 26 were settled when the tenant voluntarily vacated—

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): They are not initiated by the courts, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: You will have your opportunity.

Mr. Peacock: Just a moment. Just a moment.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me just finish the statement and then you can—

Mr. Chairman: The only way we can keep order here is to answer the questions from the particular member.

Mr. Peacock: You have had somnabulation, not order, in the last few days.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Between August 31, 1969, and April 30, 1970, 88 eviction proceedings were initiated by—

Mrs. Meredith: The board.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The board, not the courts, I am sorry, the board. Of these, 26 were settled when the tenant voluntarily vacated. In 19 cases, the arrears were paid and in two cases the tenancy was transferred to the wife. In other words if the husband was no damned good we gave the wife the opportunity to take on the obligations and she took them on. Seventeen cases are still pending.

Only 24 of the 88 cases resulted in any eviction. I do not think that with 30,000 units in the province and 112,000 tenants that we are too tough to deal with on evictions.

I appreciate your point of view, but I am just pointing out that you may read of the odd case, but it does not necessarily follow that the housing corporation is callous of the fact that some of these people should not be evicted.

You have to have some form of control, otherwise there are people who will move in and just say, "I am in at the taxpayers' expense and I am going to sit." If he has got sufficient moneys to get in, we intend to see that he pays his bills.

Mr. Trotter: I know they are in at the taxpayers' expense but then, of course, even when they are evicted they still end up with welfare taking care of them, one way or another. This is, of course, one reason why you would have a tendency not to evict because where are they going to go? I think that must be in your mind all along, because the taxpayer will end up footing the bill.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You only have two choices though, Mr. Trotter. You can permit this guy to sit there and say, "Look, I do not give a damn about the rules and regulations and I am not going to pay my rent." He is earning the same money as one man on one side or the same money as this gentleman on the other. What would you do? This is the decision we are faced with.

Mr. Trotter: The odds are I would be for evicting them. There is no question about that, everything taken into consideration. Maybe the odds are that in most of these eviction cases the Ontario Housing Corporation was quite right. I would make that assumption, but I think we find out in the history of the law as we have more or less inherited it from England that it has been the exceptions that have made the cases in order to protect individuals who do not know how to protect themselves or to stop a mis-carriage of justice.

Most of your laws are passed in order either to protect minorities or to stop minorities from gouging the public. I am going in large part by the American experience because the Americans themselves in their housing projects are introducing an appeal procedure without, in many cases, using the courts. First of all, it costs less money. It is speedier, and in many respects is closer to the community in which the tenants are involved.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Perhaps I could ask our legal adviser, Mr. Hermant, to make a comment on that. I think there are some comments he would like to make.

Mr. A. A. Hermant (Ontario Housing Corporation): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As you know, the McRuer report on civil rights suggested somewhat the same type of procedure you are advocating right at this time. As a result of that report, as recently as the last meeting of the board of directors of Ontario Housing Corporation, they approved in principle the creation of a tenancy hearing officer. We will be establishing an internal appeal procedure on tenancy matters which will allow the tenant or anyone acting on his behalf to make a direct appeal to someone who was not involved in the original administrative decision, as the result of which the tenant feels he was aggrieved.

I think that will be put into effect, possibly within the next several months as we provide a frame of reference for him and make an appointment as to who actually will be hearing them. But it has been approved in principle and within the next several months I think it will be instituted.

Mr. Trotter: This system would mean that you would have one officer to which to appeal. He would look after the tenants' interests.

Mr. Hermant: He would be an officer appointed by the board of directors to hear appeals from the tenant himself, or someone acting on his behalf if the tenant feels that he has been unjustly treated. If there has been an administrative decision of some kind, he would have the opportunity of having his case reviewed. The appeal officer would then make a report to the board of directors with or without recommendations and the board would then have an opportunity to act and rectify any inequity that may appear.

Mr. Trotter: You see, the Ontario Housing Corporation, even in that instance, is still the judge, the jury and the prosecutor because your tenant officer is one of their own employees.

Mr. Hermant: That has not been determined yet.

Mr. Trotter: It looks that way, and I admit if I was part of the crew I would have a bias. I would not want to criticize what some of my own people might be doing. This is why I think I would even let your own staff off the hook, if, as well as that tenant officer, you had a representative of the tenants and some third party from some group like a social planning council or from some group in the community that represented the general public. In other words, leave it open. By all means have an employee on there, but I think that if you have a proper case and you are more open with the case, then it helps your own case if you, say, invite the general public and also invite the tenants. At least they have a say.

Mr. Hermant: That might very well be. That is a matter of policy for our directors to decide on, however, and it is out of my scope.

Mr. Trotter: I think it is highly important, Mr. Chairman, that the Ontario Housing Corporation must try to be as open as they can, not only with their tenants but with the general public so that the general public has a greater understanding of what you are trying to do.

It should understand that these people are not just bums and freeloaders; and that the vast majority of them are extremely good people trying to be independent and also that the tenants feel that they are a part of the system.

If you do not do that, you are going to continue to have the trouble that you have had. I just know. The one instance where at the very beginning I called the police inspector who was interested shows this. Since then they have had very little difficulty; they always have somebody to go to talk to within the force. It was simply a matter of personal contact. This, I think, has got to be the rule throughout your whole public housing system or you are going to create ghettos.

Europe, Great Britain or Sweden are often used as examples. As far as I am concerned, this is Canada. I think a lot of us and a lot of our ancestors cleared out of the British Isles because things would be better over here. I know when Mr. Nicholson, the former federal cabinet minister in charge of housing, was making speeches about immigration over in Europe, he was asked two things: "Is it possible to own your own house in Canada?" and secondly, "Do you have medical insurance?"

These are the two things that people wanted to know about and I do not think it speaks very highly of our governments today—I do not care which political party it is, whether it is federal or provincial—we are not solving the housing problem. I do not believe for one moment that we are making nearly the effort we should.

This is in part the fault of the general public because most of them at the moment are settled, and what is now concerning the older ones who have a place to stay is that their children cannot get one. Instead of having a strong middle-class society, which we now have, we are going to destroy it unless we see to it that we can provide good housing for future generations. I think in some respects, Mr. Chairman, I am more of a free enterpriser than the minister because I am more concerned with the opportunity for people as they are coming along now. I do not think it exists today as it existed in the minister's day when he was younger—or even 20 years ago—when I was coming along. And part of the reason is: you do not solve the housing problem; you are so taken up with the cost of land, you do not see what it is costing people and what more particularly it is costing Ontario society.

I am just mentioning a few of these things because I think it is a very major problem we are facing, and despite the minister's speeches to the contrary, and despite these Harbour Cities and the fancy places, I do not think they go to the heart of the problem that we are facing. I would hope to see more action from this department than we have so far seen in facing up to the housing problem.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Jessiman).

Mr. Peacock: On a point of order, sir, I do not believe the committee has discussed its own procedures in conducting this examination of Ontario Housing Corporation's vote in these estimates. However, I understand you have a list, which you have been keeping over the last several days since we first started this vote on Monday. I asked to be put on your list near the outset of yesterday afternoon's proceedings and I understood I followed the member for Parkdale on that list.

Mr. Chairman: This probably was right, but I cannot help it if you are not in here at the start of the meeting. If the hon. member for Parkdale had not been in here to start off the meeting, he would not have been the first speaker either.

Mr. Peacock: He was here and kept his place and I am here now and—

Mr. Chairman: So I am just going to give everybody a fair chance.

Mr. Peacock: I am trying to keep my place.

Mr. Chairman: Just a minute. I am trying to conduct a good meeting, an orderly meeting, and the only way I can do it is take them as I have them down here. You were not here at the time so I am now calling the hon. member for Fort William.

Mr. Peacock: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman. I was here at the conclusion of the remarks of the hon. member for Parkdale and that is where my name is on your list.

Mr. Chairman: As a matter of fact, the hon. member for Scarborough Centre was first on the list and she is not here yet. She will be the last one on the list as far as I am concerned.

Mr. Peacock: I can understand you not calling on a member who is not here.

Mr. Chairman: You will get your opportunity. We have got lots of days left.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Fort William.

Mr. Peacock: Is that the procedure? Let us make it clear? If we can complete this point of order.

Mr. Chairman: I will make it just so clear that if you are not here—

Mr. Peacock: At the beginning of each day's session, are you going to write out your list at 3.15 p.m. each day or at 8 p.m. when we meet again in the evening so that each member who wants to speak has got to be here at that time?

Mr. Chairman: I think that is as it should be. Why not? You are a member of the committee.

Mr. Peacock: Let us be clear about it then. You will recognize speakers from your list which you make up at 3.15 p.m. and at 8 p.m.?

Mr. Chairman: Absolutely. That is the way—

Mr. Peacock: That is not the way you have been doing it so far.

Mr. Chairman: That is the way I have been doing it.

Mr. Peacock: You did not follow that procedure yesterday.

Mr. Chairman: Oh yes, I did.

Mr. Peacock: Yesterday afternoon, Mr. Chairman, you allowed several members to intervene who entered this committee room long after the opening of the meeting at 3.15 p.m.

Mr. Chairman: I allowed them to intervene with a member who was speaking. The member for Parkdale gave up his position yesterday to the hon. member for Sarnia. Right?

An hon. member: Definitely.

Mr. Chairman: Right. Absolutely.

Mr. Peacock: I am not asking anyone to give up his position to me. I am just asking—

Mr. Chairman: You just wait your turn. I have got you on the list. Do not worry about it. We will have to suffer through your —

Mr. S. Apps (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Chairman, do you think it would be a good idea if, after the speaker makes his speech, he be required to stay and listen to the others, too?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. J. Jessiman (Fort William): In the form of a question, regarding the housing in what was Fort William, now Thunder Bay, at a place called LaSalle Place. I am sure that your people are familiar with it, Mr. Minister. Approximately 10 or 11 months ago, I did a tour through LaSalle Place with the chairman of housing, Mr. Clow, and we were invited into various occupied parts of the buildings and the occupants were all ecstatic about them at that time. But, in the intervening period as the houses were progressively completed and occupied, a density of population that was never planned came into this particular area and I am sure that this is a problem that you have in many other areas.

But, I went this past Sunday, around LaSalle Place again at the request of the tenants' association—as I went around three weeks ago—and your department is aware of the situation, especially in the spring, when the mud is deep and the grass has not grown. I found a despicable condition exists there in that no open space has been provided, no recreational area at all. There is no open space around, but there is open space available and these people appealed about it to city council, I believe about seven weeks ago.

The appeal went to Ottawa and to Toronto, and Bob Andras, the federal member for Port Arthur riding, stated, and unequivocally admitted, that they would pay for the adjoining grounds staked out for building. Now the planner, Dave Thompson, in Thunder Bay, stopped or requested the builder to desist for now until something happened. This was five weeks ago. In the intervening five weeks, nothing has happened. The minister responsible for housing, Andras, has said that he will pay for it. This is wonderful. It is our money anyway, but he will pay for this strip of ground that they desperately need for recreation. Now, as I say, nothing has happened.

I am sure that an answer will come from one of your people.

The next thing I am now aware of is on Windsor Street where LaSalle Place is built—just awful—adjoining James Street, running north and south, this portion west of LaSalle Place is James Street. This is where the houses were going to be crammed in and a cement wall is actually being put in front of LaSalle Place. I think there is darned near 300—or maybe it is 384—over 40 per cent of the tenants or occupants are under 20 years of age, so they need this ground. It is there, it is available; Andras says he is going to buy it. All I say is when is OHC going to move a little bit on this? I am informed that within three blocks of LaSalle Place, 80 additional units are going to be provided. Not only are you going to contribute to a ghetto—I do not like the word—but it is the one that is used and it is the modern term, I presume, for housing where facilities have not been provided.

I am really concerned now to learn that 80 more are going to be put just three blocks down the street, and I say, let us have a really good look at this. Let us look at it today—your department must have an answer on this recreational area because you have been aware of it long enough now and I would like to hear on that one before I go on to my second question.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think the member for Parkdale brought that up the other day. Let me just say before you start, I was very heartened today to read in the newspaper that the people up in Winfield Farm in $80,000 houses are screaming like hell because people are going to build $40,000 houses next to them. This is very refreshing to me—to have these other people in a different category, the guy with 80 grand, mad about a guy with 40 grand building next door to him. We have been talking around here today about people objecting to public housing.

Mr. Jessiman: I am not.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I know you are not, but I am just suggesting we get hell from everybody if we build or if we do not build.

I just wanted to make an interjection that was rather amusing to me. It is the first time I have seen millionaires fighting millionaires. I think we are going to have a guy fighting with the fellow next door putting in a swimming pool, and he cannot afford one, so we will have all that to go through. Perhaps, Mr. Goyette, you could make a comment on that area because it was brought up the other day. We would like to hear you—

Mr. Goyette: Yes, Mr. Chairman. You are speaking of a project that has got 102 units. One of the measurements we use is the density of the number of units per acre. The density here is 16 units to the acre which is quite average for row housing.

Mr. Jessiman: Except when you put 87 bodies in that acre.

Mr. Goyette: Right.

Mr. Trotter: Three hundred and sixty-nine children.

Mr. Goyette: I realize that there is a bedroom count here which is 3.3. That is point number one. I am acknowledging the fact that that is the density, that is the number of units. On the point which you brought up and the question on which you asked me to comment, I suspect you know the area better than I, but as I understand it on the three sides there is some open space—

Mr. Jessiman: On one side only.

Mr. Goyette: All right. On one side. I think it would be about 1,117 linear feet of service land which would apparently cost something in the order of $100 a foot.

That is point one. Suppose we had jumped at it even on our own initiative. The question of cost is can you buy fully serviced lots which are adjoining this from a private developer for park purposes. We had some discussion with the municipal people thinking, well this is a project, we pay full taxes on this project, is there any way the city can participate?

Apparently you made the point that the federal minister responsible for housing became interested in it. You informed us on this point that he had this interest so I personally—I think this came through about four or five days ago—got in touch with Ottawa and asked them what they had in mind. They are now taking a look at it and I am waiting for some response from them.

If they wanted to get involved in it and wanted to acquire on some form of—

Mr. Jessiman: There is no point in a sharing basis.

Mr. Goyette: At this point we would do what we could. We are not against that. We are really now waiting and wondering what they have in mind and how would they finance it?

Mr. Jessiman: Mr. Andras made a statement to the press five weeks ago that they would be pleased to pay for it. He made the statement, not me. Andras still is responsible for housing. That is good enough for me. If he has the money, will you please phone him up and say "Okay let us buy it, let us get on with it"?

Mr. Goyette: If he has the money, he should buy it.

Mr. Jessiman: Why do you not call his hand? That is the thing.

Mr. Goyette: As I said to you, we did phone Ottawa and I asked what they had in mind and would they let us know. I have not had a report back, but I will follow it up again.

Mr. Jessiman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Peacock: Could I ask another question on that subject?

Mr. Chairman: I think we will give you a chance to ask it, certainly, but—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: There will be no system at all if we have everybody talk at once. I think it is a lot better if we let each person have his opportunity.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. I might suggest this. When we are in the House, we normally let each critic make one speech and then we throw in questions and there are interjections. In this way there tends to be repetition. I realize there are difficulties because of the setup of the mikes and that sort of thing in the House. But, for example, if the member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) is speaking on Malvern some of us would want to ask a question on that without making a speech. This is the reason why, without going to Thunder Bay again, I just wanted to ask a question.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Chairman, on the point of order. I would like to speak with regard to the same problem. Many of us have sat through quite a bit in the last few days and often we have had only one simple question to ask.

I have discussed it with members of the Liberal Party too because it was their concern as well. We really have no after-play on the subject at all if we simply sit and listen to one person's recitation. It is not really conserving time in my view because what is really happening is that we have to then take the whole committee back to that subject.

Mr. Chairman: At the time this vote was called, my vice-chairman was in the chair. It was decided at that time by you people in the committee to take each vote and have each one put forth his views on housing. This is the way we have tried to carry this out.

If the committee wants interjections from each one of the members as we go along, I have no objection to that. I just want to carry a meeting out in an orderly fashion and to give every member an opportunity. This is really what I am trying to do but I cannot see any order at all if some member gets up and gives his views and then we have interjections all over the place. We just cannot handle that in this particular room. There is no way we can.

Mr. Apps: Mr. Chairman, there may be an occasion when something comes up and someone would like to ask a question in connection with what has been said. I do not see too much wrong with that.

Mr. Chairman: I have no objection to that, when the committees are on. If this is the way you want to carry on, it is fine with me.

Mr. Peacock: On the same point of order, Mr. Chairman. You keep referring to the word "interjections." None of us here seeks to disrupt the proceedings with interjections as we know them in the House. What we have suggested to you and what I discussed with you and with the minister at the outset of this vote is whether or not it might be possible to proceed on the Ontario Housing Corporation votes by a programme of activity within the corporation as we have on all the other votes of The Department of Trade and Development. At that time you thought not and—

Mr. Chairman: I did not think that. It was already started before I filled the Chair.

Mr. Peacock: —we went with the present system that you have been following: one member at a time. You have on occasion tolerated questions on the same subject from other members on your list who did not have the floor. I would suggest that you entertain some of the suggestions we have made to you now that we exhaust one subject for those of us that are here and move on to the next one.

Mr. Chairman: All right. That seems to be the opinion of the committee but I must say this: When some other member is giving his point of view on housing, it is very hard for the Hansard people to decipher the tape when there are three or four people sitting talking at the same time. The microphone picks up practically everything and makes it very difficult for them. I am only asking you to pay strict attention. If you want to do any talking, do it outside in the hall.

Now we have the hon. member for Parkdale.

Mr. Trotter: I have one more question. I was wondering, Mr. Minister, if Ontario Housing Corporation will put a stop to the building of the further 30 units at the LaSalle project in Thunder Bay?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Have they been started yet?

Mr. Goyette: No, that has not been started. We are at the stage now where our people are discussing with the municipality the acquisition of a site. The intention would be to build units. I guess they are all within three blocks and this has been done in consultation with the city. Our people are still out looking at it. It has not really come in to us. We have not had a chance to look at it in detail and there has been no arrangement made yet. Certainly having heard today what is going on, we will take a very close look at it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would just like to say one thing. We have heard a lot of conflicting views the last few days. We recognize the need for housing and if we go all out to build housing, come hell or high water, we will find ourselves in the difficulties we have expressed here with overcrowding: too many units here and there.

It is not easy to get land as you can appreciate. I think we are going to try and use our best judgement to provide housing as quickly as we can. But if we are slowed down in some areas, because we do not want to do as Mr. Jessiman and you have suggested here, then you must recognize that people, perhaps in Fort William or Thunder Bay will have to wait a little longer for those 30 houses. I hope you will not be back in here next year giving us hell because the houses were not there.

This is the only point I want to make, Jim. You have not been here the last couple of days but we have gone around this business of a number of people on the waiting list. I just simply say that I am conscious of the number of people on the waiting list in all areas and I would hope to get the houses built very quickly. But if the houses are going to cause some social problems and we can avoid it we want to avoid it. By the same token, I hope they do not give us hell for not building the houses and then give us hell if we do for the social problems created. We are caught between two fires here.

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): My comment, Mr. Minister, is not on the number of units that you are building. I compliment you on the type. It is just on the open space. The recreational areas have been forgotten and the space is still vacant. I just say, "Take advantage of it today." Do not wait till tomorrow.

Mr. Chairman: Any other questions on this subject?

Mr. Knight: On the same subject, does the Ontario Housing Corporation find that there is a shortage of land available for this purpose in the entire Thunder Bay area?

Mr. Goyette: I do not think that as a general comment one would say that there is a terrific shortage of land in Thunder Bay. There are places where it would be much tighter.

Mr. Knight: You do have an alternative, then. If I could just add a comment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Port Arthur has the floor.

Mr. Knight: I hope to get it again for another subject. But while this subject is up, I want to say that I had supper in one of the homes in LaSalle Place two nights ago. I might say that I quite approve of the type of unit, but I did notice while trying to approach the front door I had some difficulty getting through the courtyard where a big fellow was batting a ball. I do think that if you do not find a recreational area for those people, as the member for Fort William suggests, you are going to have an awful lot of broken windows in a very short while.

I noticed that the attitude of the people is good, except for one thing. They do feel that they are living in a ghetto.

Mr. Chairman, what I am concerned about is the emergency situations that come up where someone is going to be evicted. They do not have any place to go. Maybe there is a father, mother and a couple of kids, and the local housing authority has filled its quota and does not have a place to put these people. I am just wondering what the policy of the Ontario Housing Corporation is in regard to these emergency things.

Is the only answer you have, "Well, go to the local housing authority. If their quota is filled, if they do not have any houses available, we will put you priority one, two, three or four on the list and as soon as a house comes up we will let you know?" Is this the ultimate answer, or is the department looking for other ways to solve that problem?

I have a situation right now in my own riding. Through my information centre I have learned that there is a fellow who has been living on unemployment insurance for quite a while and he has just received his last payment. He has been living with his mother and father and they cannot afford to support him any more, as there is a mother and father and a couple of kids involved. They called the information centre. I said, "Go to the Thunder Bay housing authority". I know they are going to tell them that the quota is filled, and they will put you on the list, but that does not solve the problem.

This brings me around to the other subject that I was going to get to ultimately anyway, and that is mobile homes. I think mobility in homes is a wonderful thing and I have been buzzing around the minister here since I came down to Toronto as an elected member about mobile homes ever since I put my own family in one. I just wonder whether OHC has ever considered the mobile home as a solution. You could put these people in mobile homes temporarily, until you have built your next 30 homes or something. They do not necessarily have to be brand new mobile homes.

Mr. Chairman: That particular subject was discussed here a couple of days ago.

Mr. Knight: This aspect of it has been discussed?

Mr. Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Knight: Using it as an emergency measure?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I can just say to you that we discussed the possibility of a mobile home deal going up in Clarkson, in my hon. friend's riding up here. We are all for it. We are trying to help him get it through OMB. The town wants it, the Municipal Affairs department apparently does not have any objection, but OMB turned them down and I am having the Minister of Municipal Affairs talk to OMB to see if —

Mr. Chairman: Not Clarkson; Cookstown.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Cookstown, I am sorry. — to see what can be done insofar as having units available. If we have any units available empty, we should have people in them. We cannot hold units empty for emergency purposes in any area or we would be in difficulty, as you can appreciate.

In the city of Toronto here, the major problem is that we have some units that builders are going to tear down eventually, but they have allowed the city of Toronto or Metro Toronto to use them temporarily till the people can get into Ontario Housing units. Then, of course, there are the hostel arrangements they have here for people evicted, but I think last year we had a record number of people evicted that we took care of. When they are evicted they are emergency cases and we think we have done a pretty good job of getting—

Mrs. V. Meredith: We have 30 interim housing units.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Thirty interim housing units. How many people were evicted that we had to house? These were emergency cases. I thought I saw a figure on that, did I not? I had that, but I mean how many people got a notice to move immediately that we had to house? At any rate, that is the situation on emergency housing as I have outlined it to you.

Mr. Knight: I know of a family that spent the summer of 1968 on the shores of a lake just out of Windsor, Ontario, and the local Windsor authority knew of the case but they just could not help them out. This was a mother, father and seven children living in a tent on the shore of a lake because the local housing authority was at a loss to find them a place to live.

If you could have moved a three-bedroom mobile home in there, they at least could have lived half-way decently for a temporary period of time until they could have been better accommodated. Ultimately, they found themselves a home but it was not the housing authority that fixed them up. The father just happened to get lucky and he bumped into somebody who knew somebody and this is the way these things usually are resolved. It is just unfortunate that they had to live in that tent for about three months.

I say, look at this mobile home thing. You might be able to find some dealers with whom you could work some really good arrangements.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not think there is any problem with mobile homes. The problem of the mobile home is, where do you place it without municipal approval?

Mr. Knight: Okay, what are you going to do about that problem? That is what I want to know.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I just told you what we are doing about it. As I told you a few years ago, we changed The Municipal Act so they could have mobile homes in the province of Ontario.

The second thing is we have gone through the Ontario municipal affairs branch and they agree with us — in fact we have often offered to finance most of these people through finance companies or banks. We have even offered to use the development corporation for financing, but the major problem right now is getting it through OMB at the present and we will see if we can convince OMB that mobile homes, properly established, are not a detriment to the community and that they pay their way and that it is good housing for people.

We are moving. It may seem slow to you, but I will tell you, we do not have the control in our hands. We are like the developer trying to get a development approved. We have got a lot of people saying that it is just not going to work in this area.

I would be inclined to believe that in the next year this situation will clear itself up. Let me just say here, to finish this comment, that in 1969 we housed 1,155 families who had notices to get out. This is the thing that upsets our priority system or our point system, but when these people are on our hands, they have to be found a place to live. They are in the same category as the chap you talked about with the seven youngsters. So we do have a problem with people who are given notice to get out. We are doing something about it. We wish we had enough housing to take care of everybody, but as I say, we have housed 1,155, and the ones we have not housed are the ones we will hear about, as you recognize.

Mr. Knight: I am glad to hear you say the things you have said because the punchline of my argumentation this afternoon was going to be, "Take leadership", and get after it, because I think last year when we brought it up you said you were still waiting for the Canadian Mobile Housing Association to come back with a brief. Did you ever hear from them? Did they ever come back with a brief with any recommended legislation? Did they conduct any extensive surveys to put across their argument that proper legislation was required?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I cannot recall now, offhand. I am not too sure whether they came back with a brief or whether we changed the legislation. They feel that it is up to them to go ahead and get the communities or the municipalities to accept it.

I think the one that my hon. friend has in his riding, and there is another one up in Ottawa, that to my mind have a very good chance of going through because they are properly laid out. The municipality apparently has no objection, and the town councils have approved it, so it is a matter of going down to my friend, Mr. Kennedy, and convincing him, I guess, and his minister that mobile homes are good accommodation for people in many areas. If they add to the community, if they do not detract from the community, which these people have agreed on, then there is no reason why we should stand in their way and say that they are not good enough. I am sure as far as I am concerned, if we could house these people in mobile homes, I would do it tomorrow.

Mr. Knight: I think something that the entire government has got to take under consideration, Mr. Chairman, through you to the minister, is the fact that there are wide open sales on these mobile homes. They are being sold all over the place. Sometimes you get five dealers lined up, one right next to the other on the same street, and there is only one park. That is happening right here in Cooksville. People are led to buy these things, and I suppose they feel that they are going to have a place to park, and so forth, and maybe they do initially have a place to park. But then they have to move, for a job or something. They wind up in another area, where one or two park operators have a real monopoly. Maybe they only have 12 places to park, as we have up in Thunder Bay; they just have a handful of spaces there, actually. Then the park operator brings down certain bylaws that are just practically impossible, such as no dogs, no fence, no garden, no this, no that or that, and the first—

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): No children.

Mr. Knight: Yes, no children. The first thing you know homes are parked one alongside the other like so many trailer trucks, and people are stuck this way. They have made an investment. They have got the unit, and they just have to go by whatever dictatorial regulations the park operator comes down with. And to whom do they have recourse? What protection do they have?

A lot of these are average people. They do not know. They say, this is a good way to buy a home. It is cheap. The guy is going to give them pretty reasonable payments and so forth, and they get locked into these situations. I think the government, in serving the people of this province, has got to see that people do not get into situations like this. They have got to say to these dealers, "Look, if you are just going to sell the unit and then not worry where these people are parked, or in what conditions they are going to have to live with the unit, then we are just going to have to demand that you have more responsibility in the sale of your unit."

I just cannot be that callous about it. It is nice to see these people make a buck—and I do not say this applies to all of them—but some of them are taking advantage of the needs of people to make a buck, and the people are left in the kind of situation I am talking about.

So I think there has got to be some kind of legislation as to the areas where mobile homes are parked and whatever control the park operator is supposed to have over the tenants. I do not know if there should be some kind of a lease form that is approved by the province, or what. I think the park operator has got to be protected, but I also think the tenant has got to be protected in a reasonable way. This is why I think there is a whole area of legislation here that perhaps is being neglected by the Legislature and by the government.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Actually, I do not think there is provincial legislation dealing with trailer parks. I think the problem is at the municipal level, and I believe there is nothing in The Municipal Act to stop them establishing a trailer park. It is a matter whether the council will vote to have a trailer park in their particular area, and I think we are in the same boat there as we are when we talk about public housing. If we go in and force public housing into a municipality that does not want it, we are in real trouble. They have to ask us for it. And the same legislation, in my estimation—I could be corrected on this—would apply for mobile homes. If a town like Cookstown wants mobile homes, there is no reason why they should not have them.

Now that they have come down to one man here who says he does not think it is a good idea, I would think it is up to us—if we have already started the programme moving—and the Minister for Municipal Affairs to say that he had better take a second look at this, because it is a good way to house people.

If the municipality wants it, what difference does it make whether you build a high-rise apartment or put in mobile homes; it is good accommodation. Certainly in many towns in northern Ontario you get many mobile home areas up there; I think their facilities up there are a lot less than they would be in a town down here, where you can lay out the grounds, put in water, sewers, hydro, television aerials and everything else, and have schools and playground facilities available for the youngsters. So, as far as we are concerned, I do not think any legislation is required. All we need is the will on the part of the municipalities to accept mobile homes as a living standard for people, which we are pushing for.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville wants to speak on this particular point.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): On the mobile home idea, Mr. Chairman, has the minister ever thought of constructing a given number of mobile homes in a community, or adjacent to a community, as emergency housing for those who receive an eviction notice, who cannot find housing? In this way you would be able to accommodate them for, say, 30 days, or for 60 days, up until the time when they are able to obtain some type of housing?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not think we have given that particular consideration much thought, but maybe it is worth thinking about. Again, I suppose if even the Ontario Housing Corporation underwent this and said this is what we are going to do, we would have to sell the idea to the Windsor council that it would be a temporary situation, not a permanent one. If they were against mobile home parks, we would have to convince them that it would be a temporary situation, where people would come in to transfer out again. I would not see anything wrong with our trying it on for size and seeing what would happen.

Mr. B. Newman: I do not mean as a permanent setup. I would like to see permanent mobile parks set up in communities, even in the downtown area of a community, zoned properly and so forth, to accommodate them; but I am looking at the emergency aspect of it, where an individual gets eviction notice, calls the member up the night before the eviction and says, "Get me housing by the morning." And those telephone calls are extremely numerous. Now my—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I was going to say, what do you do about it?

Mr. B. Newman: What do I do about it? I help weep with them.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I was going to say that you are in the same boat as we are. They call us up on the same basis; they call us at night and say, "We have got to have a home by tomorrow."

Mr. B. Newman: At least, Mr. Minister, if you did have a stockpile of a number of mobile units, or if you had purchased substantial old housing in a community, and not rent it out on a long-term basis, you could rent it out as emergency housing to those who happen to be in this unusual situation and allow them to stay in there for a short period. It would be short-term housing only. For humanitarian reasons, I think we have got to look at this aspect of it, and I think the mobile home might be part of an answer to the situation.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Port Arthur. Any more?

Mr. Knight: That was exactly the idea I brought up. But if I could ask, while we are on mobile housing, did the minister or someone from his department get a chance to go out and speak to the picketer here the other day? I asked the question in the House.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I had my executive assistant, Mr. Mason, go out and chat with him.

Mr. Knight: Well, this was a gentleman, I found out later, a Mr. A. Faxioni, who is interested in mobile housing, and that is what he was picketing about. He said he had been looking around, for himself and the people in his family, at the proper housing accommodation, and he finally came to the conclusion that mobile housing was the answer. But he very quickly realized how few parking places there were around Metro Toronto. Here is somebody right here in Toronto who does not live in a mobile home, but who did some investigating of his own. It goes to show that the interest in this type of housing is really picking up right now, and I think I have pointed out to the minister in private conversations, that the dollars seem to be lining up in this direction too. So that I would once again hope that the minister will take the bull by the horns in leadership to get things opened up so that this one answer to our housing problem will be exploited to the nth degree.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Thank you very much.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Welland South has been waiting for a couple of days to—

Mr. Haggerty: Couple of days? I think it is about three or four. Last week—

Interjections from hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Tell us a good Irish joke and then we will all quit.

Mr. Haggerty: Where did that story go that was passed on to me? I brought to the minister's attention here some time late last fall the problem of Ontario Housing in the town of Fort Erie, and the resignation of the local housing authority—and I do not know what happened to the local housing agent, but he is no longer employed, I guess, by the Ontario Housing Commission.

The problem was resolved at that time, but I have another letter here from the past-president of the senior citizens of the town of Fort Erie. She brings to my attention some important facts. One question I would like to ask the Minister is, how long do you have to be a resident of Ontario to take up residence in a senior citizens' housing unit?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do you want to comment on that, Mr. Riggs—on the time limits in the various areas?

Mr. R. W. Riggs (Ontario Housing Corporation): In Fort Erie, it is one year. This was a request from the municipality in this particular case.

Mr. Haggerty: Perhaps I should phrase it again. Residence in Canada—let us put it this way.

Mr. Riggs: Once again, we are working on a one-year residency rule in Fort Erie. As long as they have lived in Fort Erie for one year, they are eligible for Ontario housing.

Mr. Haggerty: I think Mr. Trotter touched on the subject before, when one of the questions raised was on persons coming in from England or Europe, who would say, "Have you got Medicare? Have you got housing accommodation for persons to move in?" She brings to my attention that elderly citizens are coming in from England and taking up residence in the area in Ontario housing units, while there is a list of Canadian residents waiting to get into these homes who just get put on the waiting list for maybe two or three years before they can be admitted.

She also informs me of the fact that there are Americans taking up residence in our Ontario housing senior citizens' units in the town of Port Huron.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Is there any way we can have the names, or can you be a little more specific so we can run it down?

Mr. Haggerty: I have a list of names here but I just cannot pinpoint which ones. There is a whole list of them here that she has given me and I do not want to get into—

Hon. Mr. Randall: All I say is if you have no objections to giving us the names, we will run them down when we get out of here.

Mr. Haggerty: I had better go back—she has asked me to go back and see her, so I will get the names then and I can—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, get us some specific details as to the complaints she has about them being new arrivals here from the old country and getting priority over anybody else. We would like to know about it.

Mr. Haggerty: This is what she advised me in this letter—that they are getting priority over the residents.

Hon. Mr. Randall: She may be right, I do not know. But on the other hand, I want her to be more specific and we will run it down. It is not in our interest to accept that kind of condition—anybody arriving here today and getting into housing tomorrow—when we have got other people in here for years sitting around waiting for housing.

Mr. Haggerty: In fact she has left the impression there is one woman who took off to Europe, to England, and came back with some friends over there and established them in the home. Now I am not going to give you the names.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will tell you what to do. If you can get the names, we will send somebody over to investigate quietly without getting anybody into difficulty. We will find out what the problems are.

Mr. Haggerty: One of the other problems is, the local agent who is looking after the homes in the area is from Welland and this is about 20 some miles away.

Hon. Mr. Randall: As you know, as we said the other night, I do not know if you were here the other day or not, but we said that we were changing the housing authority system to an area system. So it is quite possible that the man from Welland will look after four or five areas around there now with a management staff which will give us better coverage than we have had previously.

Mr. Haggerty: If I can get additional information, but if you have the time to send out this agent and make a complete check into—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You let us have the information, we will follow it up. We will be delighted to.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Windsor West.

Mr. Peacock: Now—

Mr. Chairman: Now is the hour.

Mr. Peacock: Now, Mr. Chairman, you will have to suffer through some long, dull remarks. They are going to be in the form of questions. Perhaps I could remind you, this is the first time my name appears on the record for OHC since Monday afternoon, from the start of this vote.

I will have to go back a bit to some of the early discussions to raise some of these questions. The first one relates to Headway Construction. You did permit me one or two questions at the time we were discussing Headway. However, I did not get to ask a few of the others that I wished to at that time. I recall the information provided to us by Mr. Goyette when he said that Headway, in most of the—or perhaps on balance, I believe, is what he said—on balance for those projects which Headway was the successful proponent, it was the sole proponent and—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think it was in seven cases or something.

Mr. Peacock: No, I believe his words were on balance, or approximately half of the projects, because they tended to be sited in small communities, Headway was the sole proponent. And then followed a discussion about the manner in which OHC verified the cost of land to the proponent in calculating whether that was a proper or realistic cost of land and that where OHC's appraisers felt that the cost of land being offered by the proponent was not within the limits, the proposal would not be accepted. I would like to ask now if for any proposal submitted by Headway, were any rejected because the cost of land was out of line beyond the limits that OHC had set?

Mr. Goyette: Yes there were.

Mr. Peacock: Could you tell us what those were? By number, location—

Mr. Goyette: No, I could not by number. The only other criterion I could give you was that I think they were successful in something like 60 cases out of about 200.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Two hundred and sixteen.

Mr. Goyette: Two hundred and sixteen. In other words, in over two-thirds of the cases they were not successful, and that would be for various reasons, most of which would be the cost, some of which could be land and some of which could be building, and I do not have a tabulation on that basis.

Mr. Peacock: Would it be practicable for us to have that information before the committee rises? Not today, but before it rises at the conclusion of its consideration of the estimates? The 216 were 216 proposals from Headway itself?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me say that we have said here in 18 cases Headway was the only proponent. In 70 cases only two submissions were received. What you are suggesting is that there were 216 proposals by Headway, and you ask how many proposals we turned down. They must have turned down all but 61, because they got 61 jobs. Now you are asking what?

Mr. Peacock: Right. I was not interested in knowing the instances where they were turned down and there were two or more proponents for that project; I was interested in knowing whether they had been turned down in any case where they were the sole proponent.

Mr. Goyette: I think we are going to have to look that up. It is possible, you know, that the site itself may not have been acceptable, but I will look that up for you.

Mr. Peacock: I was thinking primarily of the cost of land as the factor in the rejection. The 400—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me ask you a question, do you want a particular period or do you want to go right back to the first bid that they made? It depends how much work you want us to do. We can go back for 216 cases. We could go back when—

Mr. Peacock: No, no.

Mr. Goyette: You are probably talking really about the 18 cases—

Mr. Peacock: That is right.

Mr. Goyette: There were 18 cases in which they were the sole—

Mr. Peacock: Where they were the sole proponent.

Mr. Goyette: —more than any other cases where we would have turned them down. We will look that up. The expectation is there would not really be very many, because we would probably be very glad to accept—

Mr. Peacock: You pretty well had to accept the proposal.

Mr. Goyette: —them within the criterion of an acceptable price.

Mr. Peacock: I raise it because of the situation in Windsor, where the 400-unit senior citizens' high-rise development on Ouellette Avenue was acquired by option, initially of course, by the proponent, and several transactions took place prior to the acceptance of the proposal by Ontario Housing Corporation which had the result of a fairly substantial increase in the value of the lands in which the proponent proposed to build the 400-unit project.

That is why I think the builder proposal method of developing housing deserves examination in that respect. You may have a situation such as that, where the land changes hands a number of times within a relatively short period of time prior to the OHC issue of the proposal, and OHC comes along and finds that it is buying a piece of land—and in that particular location, in Windsor, of course, it was under development pressure for a year or so before the OHC proposal was initiated and consequently the price was considerably higher than it would have been had some other development gone in there a few years before.

I am not suggesting that OHC had any particular control over that situation, but I was interested to know how OHC could hold down the price of the land component of a project such as that where they have built on prime development property. That is why I raised the question.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The point I think that is worth mentioning here is, let us assume there were three owners of that land prior to the starting of the deal with the Ontario Housing Corporation. We would have no way of going back to the original owner and saying we are going to pay the price that he sold it at. I think you recognize that. In other words, if we have made an option or a deal with a particular guy to buy it, and the deal has been made between developers of buildings, let us say, developers of land, we find ourselves nine times out of 10 buying off the final owner of the land who has legal title to it.

Mr. Peacock: Exactly. Oddly enough, the example you used, three transfers of title, did, I believe, in fact, occur in this instance in a relatively short period of time. So once the interest in the property had developed, by the time OHC came along, it was possibly at its peak. The land was at its peak market value. That project is on land that is probably as costly as any on the street in that particular location.

But you surely are in a position to go to the registry office and look up the earlier transfers within a recent period of time, and I am sure you do this, to obtain information about the price at which the land has been sold in a recent period of time, prior to your acceptance of the builders proposals. You do this do you?

Mr. Goyette: We ask for evidence of the price at which he had bought the land.

A second point which comes in here is that there is a built-in limitation as well on the competitive system. For example, we bought that, I think, at a round figure of $10,800 per unit on Ouellette Ave., which I think you would recognize as one of the very best locations for those senior citizens. So the land has to be kept down in the offer, which is part of the package—land and building. Otherwise the person would not be able to compete and make that project available to us on a project basis. I think that was a pretty good deal.

Mr. Peacock: To fit within the $10,800 per unit price?

Mr. Goyette: Yes.

Mr. Peacock: He has to be able to absorb his cost of land.

Do you also independently check with the registry office on the value, rather, on the sale price of the land, in earlier transactions within a recent period of time, so that you have some leverage in your negotiations with the proponent?

Mr. Goyette: Yes, that exercise is performed by the appraisers—

Mr. Peacock: Right.

Mr. Goyette: —who try to keep themselves informed on what the appropriate market value would be.

Mr. Peacock: May I turn now, Mr. Chairman, on the same matter of land development to one aspect of the HOME programme at Bramalea.

Where a person has entered into a lease arrangement and constructed a house on a Bramalea lot under the HOME programme and has subsequently defaulted on payments and vacated the home, does the house itself, the structure, revert to Bramalea Consolidated? If so, is Bramalea then free to sell it at whatever market price, at whatever a willing buyer is prepared to pay?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, we have options in there.

Mr. Goyette: The answer would be no. The main reason is we own the land, not Bramalea.

Mr. Peacock: I understand that OHC retains title to the land except under the out-right purchase, which you had a number of, initially, and no longer permit. But in this particular instance, I believe, the lot was leased, and the first owner defaulted on payments and vacated. In that situation, I understand, the land remains with Ontario Housing Corporation. However, does Bramalea Consolidated at that point have the right to market the home and offer it for sale?

Mr. Goyette: No, the person involved there would be the mortgagee, who would have the first right against it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think we also placed a $500 appreciation per year on the house.

Mr. Peacock: Appreciation?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. So that when the man moved in there, if he did not have a finished basement or his terrace was not finished, he finished it. We put on a limit of roughly $500 per unit so that he could not gouge the next fellow coming along, or if it came back into our hands we had a saleable unit.

Mr. Peacock: What would the appreciation be now on a three-bedroom home in Bramalea?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, the land has gone from the original price of $9,200 up to $13,500; that was the last price we got in Bramalea on those same 1,666 lots.

Mr. Peacock: That is OHC's own evaluation.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It tells me houses in the same area have a value of about $30,000.

Mr. Peacock: But in the example I am discussing, does OHC then say to a prospective leaseholder applying under the HOME programme, "We now are renting you this same lot, initially valued for leasing purposes at $9,200, in today's market at $13,500"?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, we leased them at an average of $6,600, which was our cost.

Mr. Peacock: $6,600?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right. The sale price would be $9,200 if they bought the lease or had an agreement for sale.

Mr. Peacock: All right. Back in 1968 the monthly carrying charges for leasing were based on an evaluation of $6,600. Are they now based on an evaluation of $13,500?

Mr. Goyette: First of all, we have none—

Mr. Peacock: None which have reverted to you.

Mr. Goyette: Right, and there were only two freehold cases. If there were any that reverted back, they would stay at the $6,600. They would merely carry on the rental on this.

Mr. Peacock: You would offer such a vacated home to a new tenant, the new leaseholder, at the same monthly lease cost?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The objective of the programme under HOME was not to allow anybody to take advantage of assistance in the first five-year period. After five years, of course, if they have bought the land themselves at that time—say they exercise their option to pay $9,200 for it—then I would think in the next month, if they want to go out and sell it for the $13,500, which their appreciation is on the house, they can go ahead and do it. After five years, we think that they are entitled to make their own—

Mr. Peacock: No. I was just speaking of the case where a person had fallen down on his payments and got out of the lease agreement.

Now, in respect to the agreements between Bramalea and Ontario Housing Corporation which were announced last year, under which two blocks of land were acquired by Ontario Housing, referred to in the agreement as schedule A for 1,037 units and another schedule B for 3,565 units. There is a reference in that agreement to the necessary legislative authority for OHC to pay a grant in lieu of taxes on each block of land to the municipality.

Can the minister tell us is he is going to be requesting the Legislature to enact that necessary authority to pay grants in lieu of taxes to the municipality?

Hon. Mr. Randall: If I am correct—perhaps, Mr. Hermant, you could comment—if I am correct the recommendation is to have it amended.

Mr. Hermant: The board of directors of the Ontario Housing Corporation has agreed to pay grants in lieu of taxes on that land as of a date that will be retroactive—I do not have the date at the present time—and legislation is being prepared which will be submitted to the minister for submission to cabinet.

Mr. Peacock: Still on that agreement, Mr. Chairman, I recall that the closing dates were June 30, 1969; or at the option of the vendor, the agreement will be null and void if he could not obtain the necessary approval from the township for zoning and the issuance of building permits. Can the minister tell us whether a closing date has been effective yet on that agreement between OHC and Bramalea?

Mr. Hermant: In March of last year.

Mr. Peacock: So Bramalea has obtained its necessary subdivision approvals from the township.

Mr. Hermant: The plans of the subdivision are registered—

Mr. Peacock: And it has obtained agreement from the municipality for building permits for the construction of town houses.

Mr. Hermant: There are some building permits issued now and there are some presently, on the first 1,037.

Mr. Peacock: The agreement, I believe in respect to either part A or part B, is subject to cancellation by Bramalea if it cannot get the building permits for town houses on either block of land.

Mr. Hermant: Ontario Housing Corporation is the registered owner of all that land at the present time—the 1,037 houses on No. 7 highway, which is phase 1, and the 3,565 units north of No. 7 highway, which is designated as phase 2. I believe building permits have now been issued for at least two blocks of land in the phase 1 area now. I believe servicing is presently under way, as of several days ago, for 400 or 500 units at the present time.

Mr. Peacock: Can we find out, Mr. Chairman, which method of payment of the balance of the purchase price by OHC did Bramalea choose—the non-transferable debenture or the agreement to pay?

Mr. Hermant: The phase 1 portion of that transaction was completed with a cash down payment of one-third and an agreement to pay over 15 years for the balance.

Hon. Mr. Randall: And what were the interest rates?

Mr. Hermant: Seven and one-eighth.

Mr. Peacock: Has the vendor chosen which he wishes for the second part, schedule B?

Mr. Hermant: No, that was paid in cash.

Mr. Peacock: That was all cash?

Mr. Hermant: It closed for an entire cash transaction.

Mr. Peacock: I think, Mr. Chairman, in respect to Bramalea, that is all I wanted to ask at this time. One other question I had was, could the minister tell us why, in the agreement, the company's responsibility for the development costs, for which the township was paid $11 million, was lifted forever in the terms of the agreement? Why was there not some definite period of time, some limit, put on that obligation?

Mr. Hermant: The obligations would normally have been those of Bramalea Consolidated for the provision of industrial assessment to balance the residential assessment in that area. There was an agreement made, between the municipality of the township of Chinguacousy and Bramalea, for a lump sum payment in tax by Bramalea to the township in lieu of those industrial assessments. Upon the closing of that transaction, Bramalea Consolidated paid to the municipality $11 million in tax at that time as consideration for the release of that requirement of the subdivision agreement. That was done simultaneously with the closing.

Mr. Peacock: That was done strictly between—

Mr. Hermant: Between Bramalea Consolidated and the Township of Chinguacousy. I want to make that very clear, because there was an implication several days ago that the province of Ontario, through Ontario Housing Corporation, made that payment to the township of Chinguacousy. That was not the case. That payment of $11 million was made by Bramalea Consolidated directly to the municipality. It probably was out of the balance due on closing of that transaction and was done simultaneously, but I was personally party to that closing. It was a simultaneous transaction.

Mr. Peacock: Did OHC render any assistance in convincing the township to surrender—

Mr. Hermant: None whatsoever to my knowledge.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If you have ever done business with Cyril Clark, you do not render any assistance.

Mr. Hermant: Not to my knowledge.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, on another subject.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If you cannot read writing you can sure make money. I wish I had never learned to read and write!

Mr. Peacock: We know the questions you want to entertain on Bramalea. I wonder if the minister or his officers could tell us in some detail about the consulting contract with Peter Barnard Consultants?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is the consultant we are using now for—

Mr. Goyette: Yes, we have a contract with this consultant, which started last August and carries on until August of this year. It was a contract in the amount in total of, I think, $50,000. The purpose of the study is to assess for the Ontario Housing Corporation the possibility of using in the province of Ontario, and in Canada, the systems building approach which has been so prevalent in several of the east European countries. The board of directors will be expecting a report from this consultant in finality in the month of August this year.

Mr. Peacock: Is this undertaken solely by the consultant or were officers of the corporation involved in the study as well?

Mr. Goyette: In this particular—

Mr. Peacock: Contract with Barnard.

Mr. Goyette: Yes. As part of his contract, he arranged to interview various staff people and some of our records and costing and opinions. There has been consultation, particularly with our professional staff as represented by the architects, the engineers, and the appraisers.

Mr. Peacock: Has the Barnard firm been overseas to make its study?

Mr. Goyette: Individual members of the Barnard firm, to my knowledge, have been going overseas for quite a few years.

Mr. Peacock: But on this particular contract?

Mr. Goyette: Yes, I believe, in one instance the principal himself went, but what they do would be their own arrangements within the overall—

Mr. Peacock: Were they accompanied by officers of the corporation?

Mr. Goyette: No.

Mr. Peacock: You have had considerable work done within the corporation itself on the systems building approach in Ontario. I recall the conference the minister put on at the Inn on the Park last spring.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have been looking at systems, you know, since the housing corporation got under way, but it has only been in the last three years that systems building has come to Canada.

Mr. Peacock: Right. I was in attendance at that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Probably in the United States too. The reason for our major interest right now is because of the Chapel Glen Village which will be a condominium construction worth about $65 million. As I said the other day, this is an area where the information we are getting from people like Barnard will be of invaluable help to us in creating that village.

Mr. Peacock: No representatives of the corporation itself have been over to Europe to look at —

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, our people have been overseas. Some of our people were overseas five or six weeks ago. Mr. Snow, our —

Mr. Goyette: Yes, we have had people going over from time to time. It started probably some 9 months ago. The chief architect of Ontario Housing Corporation was invited to be the speaker in Denmark on housing in Canada. Officers of the corporation have been over on a couple of occasions. A group went over recently for a couple of weeks.

Mr. Peacock: Who were they, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Goyette: The group was made up of the members of the board of directors and three or four staff persons.

Mr. Peacock: Four?

Mr. Goyette: Four.

Mr. Peacock: How long a trip was that?

Mr. Goyette: The trip was for a period of two weeks. It was, I think, about the end of April — the last two weeks in April.

Mr. Peacock: Can you tell us what was learned on that trip? What countries were visited?

Hon. Mr. Randall: From talking to Mr. Snow, the member for Halton East, and some of the directors I do not think they learned a great deal — as most people find when they go to Europe — looking at housing. Everybody seems to think that you have to go to Europe, take a look at what they are doing over there, and come back to do the same thing. What they found out, what I found out, in most of those countries is that they do not build units like we build them here. They build them too small. Our people would not accept them, even welfare people would complain about them being too small.

Mr. Peacock: You referred to them last year as hutches.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I have seen them all over eastern Europe. I recognize that some of those countries lack money and Europe, as you can appreciate, is crowded. But they build a lot of amenities into them that perhaps we are looking at over here. This is really the thing we could probably learn from them — not the squeeze particularly, but the amenities they build in for the people.

I went all through the Swedish housing area, the day nurseries; I have seen what they do there. The cafeterias and what-have-you but, as far as the living conditions are concerned, I saw them long before I came with the government. I saw it when I was in the washing machine business and we had our own coin laundries in stores over there.

I saw them in Holland. In most of those units in Holland you could not swing a cat, they were so small. I think some of them are about 700 square feet or less. I have seen them in Hong Kong — 370 square feet with six people assigned to them.

I just point out that I do not think we can learn a great deal in Europe, but it is obvious that they will say to us "Have you seen what they are doing in Europe, particularly in systems building?"

As I pointed out the other day, systems building is fine if you can get mass building, such as they get in some of the European countries, which we have not been able to arrange here. But insofar as the accommodation is concerned, I do not think it is anywhere near as good as the accommodation here.

In fact, I think Mr. Andras made a statement—he just came back from a three- or four-week trip all over Europe; he phoned me before he went — he has just come back and I think he made a public statement the other day that nowhere are they building housing as fine as they are building right here in the province of Ontario. He said it, I did not say it. I will have to frame that.

I point out that I do not think we have a great deal to learn from going to Europe. Maybe we will learn something about a new material or maybe learn how to put up a building a little faster. But the systems people themselves say those systems have been inherited from Europe and if there is any good in them, they have their plants over here. I think they can be used to speed up, perhaps, some of our construction but I do not think they are going to be any cheaper in the long run.

Mr. Peacock: Just one last question on this subject, Mr. Chairman. Could the minister provide the committee with the names of the board members and staff who went on the most recent visit?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will be glad to.

Mr. Peacock: Could I turn to just one other area?

Hon. Mr. Randall: You could have them now if you want.

Mr. Peacock: All right. All the persons on the corporation staff connected with the architectural or housing development, the construction of housing?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They are the directors of the Ontario Housing Corporation.

Mr. Goyette: And one staff person who organized the trip.

Mr. Peacock: There is one other area, Mr. Chairman. I would just like to ask the minister or one of his officers a few questions about, then I will yield the floor so that you can invite someone else to speak.

Recently, I believe it was November, 1969, the corporation completed a survey at the request of the city of Windsor, on the need for senior citizens' and family housing in the city of Windsor. Mr. Goyette kindly forwarded me a copy of the report, which basically recommended that 400 senior citizens' units be developed as a first phase and 332 be held over for next year.

There was also in the report a recommendation in respect to family housing needs in the city of Windsor, which concluded that the present number of family units under construction—395 I believe—was sufficient to cover what the corporation's survey had held to be a need for 376 family units.

Subsequent to the release of the report, the Windsor housing authority apparently took some initiative and followed up a number of questionnaires sent out by the housing corporation to family applicants on the list, as of November, 1969. Of the 499 questionnaires which had not been returned, the housing authority were able to contact approximately 100 who indicated a genuine need or interest in having family housing with the Windsor housing authority.

I wonder what is going to be done in respect to that finding by the local housing authority, which would appear to indicate the need for additional family units over and above what are already under development?

Mr. Goyette: Yes, you are right. We have discussed it with the city of Windsor and the city of Windsor has suggested that we do not carry on with any additional family units at this time. We have 395 family units under construction. The survey that you have indicated covered about 375 or 380, and by chasing up those people who did not respond another 100 came up.

The city has suggested that as there may be some additional projects for the city of Windsor, which will be financed under the $200 million innovative fund, it might be better to wait, as there may very well be applicants of a little higher income who might apply for that housing.

Our programme now is to go ahead with the senior citizens' and carry on the units under construction for families.

Mr. Peacock: Is that advice from the city since its council meeting of May 19, do you know?

Mr. Goyette: I have to get the date of this thing. We got this information from the housing authority manager. We would support this kind of view.

Mr. Peacock: That independent study which the authority did was relayed to the mayor's committee on housing.

Mr. Goyette: Incidentally, that was not an independent study, it was part of our own.

The method in the survey is to send out a good many forms. Some come back and some do not. The next phase is to try to see if you can seek out those people who did not send their forms back. Because there was urgency about the city of Windsor senior citizens' units, it was decided to send that report, to which you referred, to council and to proceed immediately with units for the senior citizens.

Mr. Peacock: It was certainly the recommendation of the mayor's committee on housing to recommend to city council that the city see what the results of this telephone follow-up of the unreturned questionnaires would be and to recommend that Windsor ask OHC to consider building 150 units of public housing in addition to the 395 under development.

That housing committee recommendation was to go before council on May 19 and I am wondering if OHC has been advised of the adoption of the council's recommendation?

Mr. Goyette: I see. There was a resolution apparently, but apparently there have been some second thoughts about it and they have decided to ask us to hold up that request too. So we really do not have a formal one and we will wait and see what happens.

Mr. Peacock: Are you in a position, though, as a result of your own housing authority's further follow-up, to make a recommendation to city council?

Mr. Goyette: We have discussed it with them. I think, at the present time, on the basis of the discussions that have taken place—and this is my personal observation—we would not likely go ahead with 100 specific family units right now. We have got 395 under construction. We will see how that goes and if a need is established, we will carry on with them next year.

As you know, there are also financial limitations within the budget and, while we do not have definite allocations per city, you have some indication of which way it is going, and this is something we have looked at for next year's budget.

Mr. Peacock: The minister knows how much concern we have expressed over this manner of housing development in the last two sessions of the Legislature. He knows that I just do not have any confidence in the adequacy of the survey method to determine the real extent of the need and demand for housing for those who cannot get into the private housing market themselves.

He has frequently thrown the statistics at us that half the people are just not interested. I see the monthly statistics of the housing authority, Mr. Chairman. I see the number of new applications which come in and I know that the vacancy rate is such. It is so low that there is simply no way for any significant proportion of the persons on the application list to find housing among the existing units. There has not been a new unit of family housing opened in Windsor, as a result of the OHC project, since January, 1967.

I am not sure when the 395 units will be completed, but it is unlikely that they will be ready much before the end of this year. That means a four-year lag behind what is, I think, a steadily building number of family applicants on the list, many of whom simply give up and cannot wait. They lose any hope, any confidence, any expectation of finding a place with Windsor Housing Authority. And it is true in other large centres as well because the vacancy rate and the turnover rate are so low because of the knowledge, perhaps for some of them, that the number of units under development is so small and will take such a long time to reach completion.

Then, in addition to those who keep an application on file but give up hope and do as the minister has said, others neglect to keep the housing authority informed of a change of address or other change of their circumstances, sometimes for the worse, which might well make them more eligible later than at the time they first applied. In addition to those, there are persons who never apply and who reach the waiting list only by accident or because they have got in touch—as the member for Windsor-Walkerville and the minister were discussing a few moments ago—got in touch only at the last extremity, only in the case of absolute emergency. I do not think that this questionnaire method of examining the extensive need is effective. Perhaps the minister has knowledge of some other survey methods that the corporation has undertaken. I hope there are new methods of determining need being developed, because the questionnaire method, in my mind, simply does not accurately estimate the extent of the need. Many families in substandard housing continue to pay far too high rents, continue to live in overcrowded conditions, or have to divide their family because they have no expectation of ever being able to be admitted to a Windsor housing unit.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me suggest this: I think we must be guided by the municipality to some extent and your municipality has, regardless of whether it is right or wrong, recommended this. It remains to be seen, as you have suggested. We talk about another 100 units on which they have seen fit not to pass a resolution or withhold a resolution at the present time. But in addition to that, we have built something like 500 units under the HOME programme down there which could have housed a good many people who would normally drop back into public housing, as you can appreciate. The difference between qualifying for public housing and being able to finance under the HOME programme is not very great. In this instance here we felt that we have about 125 lots on the go in Windsor at all times under the HOME programme. This has provided some pretty good housing in Windsor, as you can appreciate.

Insofar as the survey method is concerned, we are never satisfied with any survey. The survey is no different to anybody else's surveys. I think, like the pollsters—how long were they in Quebec?—these fellows are making surveys too and they do not always get the proper information, so I do not think that anybody has the perfect solution insofar as surveys are concerned. As Mr. Goyette has said, we send the survey out, then we go back and hammer on those we get back and see if we can qualify them. It is pretty difficult if you do not get a reply from these people; you must assume that they are no longer interested.

They could probably have found other accommodation and they say—"Why bother sending another letter back to another government agency?" A lot of that goes on, as you recognize. But if you have got a better method of survey, let us have it. We are quite prepared to look at any survey methods that anybody can put forward, because we recognize there are weaknesses in the surveys.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, would the minister consider using university students for conducting a door-to-door type of survey? Our students are looking for employment. There is a way that you could probably get an actual count as to the need for housing—by visitation method using university students.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The students would still have to have the material on which to solicit the information which would be factual.

Mr. B. Newman: You would provide them with the questions to be answered.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Wait a minute, if a person found a student at his home and the student said, "Are you interested in public housing?" and the man said, "Yes, fine," the student would still have to have a form, which I think the hon. member here is pointing out. He would have to solicit sufficient information from that applicant to give us probably a truer respective of what is required in housing.

Mr. B. Newman: You would set up the type of form, the questions to be asked, and the student would be the go-between yourselves and the individual needing housing.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I appreciate that, but what we are talking about now is what kind of material could go on a form that would give us the information we want.

Mr. Peacock: I was just going to say that this is one of the basic areas of difficulty as I see it from my contacts with applicants and with the housing authority. When a person arrives at the housing authority office to make an application, he is asked to give certain information about his family size, his earnings, his present housing circumstances and so on.

Very often the person at the housing authority desk relies on the applicant to give the pertinent information. The applicant may simply not know what is valid or relevant about his particular circumstances to enter on that application at the time he appears at the housing authority office. Then at some later date the housing authority will draw that application out for consideration if an appropriate unit becomes available. I understand—and I believe this is the practice both in Toronto and in the local housing authorities—that the application goes into suspense, is put to one side, if an appropriate unit is not available at the time the application is made.

When an appropriate unit becomes available, all of the applications for that particular space — three-bedroom, two-bedroom, four bedroom or what have you — are reviewed and then a visit is made to the applicant and the circumstances of the applicant's housing, overcrowding, health or safety factors, are then assessed by the home visitor. And it is only at that point that the housing authority actually obtains a full picture of the person's need and can then rate that application in relation to all the other applications it has on file, for instance for a four-bedroom unit.

Now in Windsor—perhaps because of shortage of staff, I do not know what other reasons—many applications sit on the file for a very long period of time without any visit being made. A visit could well discover the real extent of the emergency and the real extent of the adverse conditions that the family is living in and might well give that application priority over another if the circumstances were known to the housing authority. I believe this is one of the areas where a number of applications fall into suspense. They may never be followed up because an appropriate unit may not become available; the home visit may therefore never be made, the application languishes on the books of the housing authority and the applicant gives up hope and does not keep in touch.

I think that is one of the basic, fundamental problems with the processing of applications and also, therefore, with the measurement of actual need. Ultimately you are going to get a good number of applications where there will be no answer to your questionnaire because there has been a change of address or because there has been a loss of interest. Is that the case in Toronto? I believe it is the case in Windsor.

Hon. Mr. Randall: As a home-town boy from Windsor, you are familiar with it.

Mr. Riggs: Essentially, the outline that has been enunciated is reasonably correct. There is one deviation. When an application is received—

Mr. Peacock: You mean there is one exception.

Mr. Riggs: Pardon me, there is one exception. I stand corrected. When an application is received, under our regulations or procedures, it is pre-pointed. On the basis of this pre-pointing, the need or level of need is established by order of need. Under our procedures and those of all housing authorities, they are to be home-visited on the basis of that point rating as quickly as possible. If, at that time, there is not a unit available in the bedroom size that is required by the family, then of course the application is held pending until the bedroom size becomes available.

Mr. Trotter: How long does "pending" mean?

Mr. Riggs: It depends sometimes upon the number of units under construction.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Riggs says the visit is made whether or not the unit is available, is that correct? As quickly as possible after the pre-pointing of the application?

Mr. Riggs: Depending upon the priorities established by the pre-pointing.

Mr. Peacock: The chief four of those priorities being notice to vacate, writ of possession to vacate, the overcrowding of the family, the splitting up of the family in order to get enough room, health problems and so on. I will just complete this one thought, and then I will yield the floor. From my observation, though, a great number of applicants do not receive a home visit. Perhaps by accident, and the knowledge of the circumstances that the family is living in is brought to the attention of the housing authority by a doctor, by a clergyman, by a member of the Legislature, by a social worker, because no home visit has been made. I think it essential that staff must be provided, and I believe there is a budgeting system in the housing authorities based on the number of units which limits the number of staff available. In this category of home visiting, it is imperative that a number of qualified trained people be available to get out and make that visit as quickly as possible, because it is only at that point, I believe, that you can make your objective assessment as to who gets priority. If the home visit is not made, someone is missing their place in line for the available housing.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Parkdale.

Mr. Trotter: I just want to ask one question. Would it be possible for us to see what is called the tenant placement manual? I believe there is a tenant placement manual.

Mr. Riggs: I am not quite sure. There is a housing authority manual, which is used across the province of Ontario. The member may be referring to that.

Mr. Trotter: I just heard it referred to as the tenant placement manual; it is supposed to contain instructions on how to treat a tenant.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is a housing authority manual.

Mr. Riggs: There is a housing authority manual that is available.

Mr. Trotter: Could I see one when we have a chance? When we come back?

Mr. Riggs: Yes, sir.

Mr. Chairman: Have you any answers to the questions from the hon. member for Windsor West, Mr. Riggs? Any further answers?

Mr. Riggs: I think the only point is that in the 1970 budget of the Windsor housing authority there were additional funds for staff to bring about an increase in home visits and this has been recognized.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to repeat what I have said earlier concerning the use of university students in an attempt not only to provide them with employment but to give them a useful type of experience. I think in any future type of a survey in the community the minister should consider the students at the local university, and I am going to refer to those who are in the school of social work, to whom this could be an educational experience, a rewarding experience and an opportunity likewise to supplement income to enable them to carry on their future education.

May I ask of the minister if they published lists of priorities for various housing projects or simply for housing? In the city of Windsor, is there such a thing as a list of individuals who are next on the line to obtain housing?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, that is the way the list is made up. It is made up on the point system.

Mr. B. Newman: All right. Is that list available to the public?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know.

Mr. Riggs: The point rating system with the pre-pointing of applications is done on the applications received. Since the point rating is based upon the need of the individual, as new applications are received the level of that application may either rise or decrease depending upon new applications coming in, so that today, if you, sir, were the 12th on the application list for a three-bedroom accommodation, and we received 30 new applications from families with a greater need because of frictions or health problems or income problems and so on, you could then become 42nd on that list on that particular day for that accommodation.

Mr. B. Newman: Is that information available and given to the individual who applies for housing?

Mr. Riggs: At any time this information is requested by the applicant, this is explained to him in detail.

Mr. B. Newman: Why should it be requested by him? Why should it not be a right of his, to be provided to him at all times so that he does not come along and sort of be under the understanding or the misunderstanding that well, there is no chance of getting housing in here, so-and-so is going to get it before him? As a member, you get calls from all types of people who will tell you that so-and-so just came in from Nova Scotia and he is in a housing unit within a month. You will have others who say they just came in from overseas and they have obtained housing.

If there was a list published where the individual who comes into the housing authority can see just exactly where he stands on that list, and if he were provided with the terms of reference, the conditions under which the point system is used by the housing authority in the providing of housing, I think it would serve a good public relations need. I think it would probably allay the fears of many of the people. They would know that in six months or eight months they were going to get housing. This way they are very much disturbed. They are afraid that they may not even be able to out-wait the day that housing will be available to them.

May I ask the minister if he would make the details of the point system available to an applicant for housing so that he would know just exactly how he could rate?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Any applicant can come into the housing corporation and find out where he is on the list. We have no intentions of making it public in the daily newspaper or sending him a list with all the people that are on the housing list.

Mr. B. Newman: I do not care for it—

Hon. Mr. Randall: It would not serve any useful purpose. They can come in and find out where they stand on the list. But let me give you an example of what happened. The hon. member for Scarborough Centre's husband called one day and said there was an old man about 85 in the back of a garage down here—on Ontario Street, I think it was. "For God's sake, can we not do something for him?" he asked. The next afternoon I think we had him in a bachelor apartment in St. James Town. He went on the list ahead of somebody else who probably should have had it.

Now, if you had been on that list and you had said: "I wanted that apartment—how come he got it?" I would say he had dire need. That man was almost living in the street and this is what happens. We have cases where these people are desperate and they must go ahead of somebody whose situation is not as desperate.

As for the fellow who is on the list, sure we are going to get an argument—we cannot blame him.

Mr. B. Newman: Yes, but you see under the point system there could be sufficient points allotted to an emergency like that to give that individual priority ratings.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, but he still got ahead of the other fellow on the list no matter how you do it, Bernie. You have removed one unit. This man is one unit further away from his priority position. This is the difficulty.

Mr. B. Newman: Maybe you do have an argument there. It is a good point, Mr. Minister, but I think that you should be providing to the individuals the point system so that they would know—not that they have to ask for it, but as a matter of right. You should provide it so that they could at least figure by themselves just exactly where they stand. May I likewise ask of the minister, how many of the lots in the Fountainebleau subdivision remain to be sold yet?

Mr. Goyette: Two hundred and eighty-nine.

Mr. B. Newman: Why are they not being sold? Are they all serviced, by the way?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They are all serviced. They tell me the builders have had problems getting mortgage funds. Now that we are in the mortgage field I presume somebody is coming in to see us if they want mortgage money.

Mr. B. Newman: Will they be for sale now at the cost price?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, they are for sale.

Mr. B. Newman: And what is the cost price?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They are leased. They are not for sale. They are leased.

Mr. B. Newman: None of these 289 we are talking about is for sale? They are all for the HOME programme?

Hon. Mr. Randall: All on the HOME programme.

Mr. B. Newman: Will they be leased on the HOME programme at your cost price?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, that is right.

Mr. B. Newman: It will be at your cost price. Has the minister approached the municipality with the possibility of using the 30-foot lots that are scattered throughout the city for some type of housing?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I could not tell you. We have not done anything like that.

Mr. B. Newman: The former mayor upon his retirement from public office did put up housing on 30-foot lots. Naturally the home would only be 22 feet in width. But they did serve a need. They were on a concrete slab; I have not heard any complaints that they would have liked more room. But it did serve a specific need.

I am just wondering if the department has looked into the possible use of these 30-foot lots scattered through the community. You could probably provide accommodation without collecting everyone in a given area and you would get away from this "ghetto-izing" of individuals that housing areas tend to develop.

Hon. Mr. Randall: These are 30-foot lots scattered around the city?

Mr. Newman: Yes, scattered around the city.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Is there anybody who would offer them to us? If you think that we could utilize them for housing purposes we would be glad to take a look at them. I might say that in some areas — I think you get some in Windsor — if we are going to build town housing we can build a house on a 30-foot lot or we can build it on a 50-foot lot depending on the size of the family. You can concertina-ize the house if you build it in the condominium style. You recognize this is what some areas are permitting us to do.

Mr. B. Newman: I do not look upon that because I do not think everybody wants a condominium home you know.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I know, but I am just saying that if land was available, you could build different-size houses in that block.

If there are single family lots scattered around the city, nobody has come forward yet and offered us any lots, but if there is anybody who has got them, we would be interested in seeing them.

Mr. B. Newman: The other day I spoke to you on the sale of homes in the Bridgeview subdivision and remember the little hassle we got into over the thing? This does not go back to when you originally said you were going to have the homes for sale. Wednesday, November 27, 1968, you said that Windsor's Bridgeview and Essex Court subdivisions, could be sold without any legislative changes. That was in 1968, but there have been no formal proposals for the sale of the homes submitted to Central Mortgage and Housing by Ontario Housing.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No legislative changes required, but policy changes by Central Mortgage and Housing were required.

Mr. B. Newman: I will let it go. You are playing with words there.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If we have got those policy changes you know —

Mr. B. Newman: But here you are, in 1968 you said that these homes would be for sale.

Hon. Mr. Randall: As far as we are concerned they could be. We had to go to our senior partners and say "are you in agreement?" and they have taken all this time to say yes.

Mr. B. Newman: On February 5, 1969: "Windsor OHC tenants next on purchase plan. Windsor tenants of OHC likely will get a chance to buy their houses before summer." You said that, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. Listen —

Mr. Newman: In 1969 —

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are only reading part of the story. You must —

Mr. B. Newman: Let me finish and then you go ahead and —

Hon. Mr. Randall: You must go on and point out that we said we would have to get in touch with our federal partner and get their approval. Just do not take out what I said, and also what I said about selling. Also point out what I said about getting approval from my federal partner.

Mr. B. Newman: All right. We will take that then. May 30, 1969: "Mr. Randall, responsible in the Legislature for Ontario Housing Corporation, said Ontario now has received agreement in principle from Central Mortgage." What held it up?

Hon. Mr. Randall: What date was that?

Mr. B. Newman: May 30, 1969. It is almost a year now. We will be celebrating the anniversary of that comment.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is a good question all right. As Mr. Goyette says, it is in principle, but they never got around to deciding what the terms are going to be, so let us—

Mr. B. Newman: I know, but Mr. Minister, when you make a statement, why do you not come along and say—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Listen—

Mr. B. Newman: Why do you always condition everything and now come along with, "if we get this," and "if we get that"? All you are trying to do is blame someone else for it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, let me—

Mr. B. Newman: That is all I ask.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If I had not started this pressure two years ago, they would not be up for sale now.

Mr. B. Newman: I will tell you, it is two years ago that I asked this question of you. I happened last night to check back, and found that over two years ago I asked you about this.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We started the pressure going and now we have got approval from Ottawa, right?

Mr. B. Newman: All I want to say is that I would like you to come along and get them up for sale, that is all. I am just trying to point out to you that you talk, but you do not act.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would not say that.

Mr. B. Newman: That is all I have to say, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre.

An hon. member: He is acting all the time.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Careful now. You have got 20 minutes, Margaret; will you be all through?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I am just wondering whether to start at the beginning or start in the middle.

I would like to ask the minister if he would clear up what might appear to be an error in the Hansard of October 9, afternoon session, on page 682. It is printed that in answer to a discussion during the minister's estimates, the minister says that Central Park Estates offered to sell a portion of their holdings in Flemington Park in the borough of North York, but would permit the Ontario Housing Corporation to develop some 3,200 condominium housing units, with an agreement to purchase some 24,667 acres. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the minister probably will find that should be 24 acres, at $5,244,400, and was executed on February 25, 1969. I wonder if I could have that corrected first of all, and then we will know where we are proceeding from there?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We started out in Chapel Glen Village with roughly—

Mrs. M. Renwick: I cannot hear you, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We started out in Chapel Glen Village with, I believe, roughly 69 acres.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Is that 69?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. On taking care of the requirements of North York, the community centre that is now built, and the land that had to be given to religious organizations, we wound up with roughly 59 acres, was it, Mr. Goyette? It is 24 in one package, and what is the other one?

Mr Goyette: There are 36 in the other.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, 24 in one and 36, I guess it is, in the other. Does that clarify that for you?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Now, when we are talking about the $5.5 million, we are talking about the 24 acres, are we? Can I be certain of that?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It was 24.7.

Mrs. M. Renwick: On 24.7 acres that would be $215,000 an acre?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, could be.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Then is that the land the minister is building on with the phase which he expects to have in operation by 1971? Or is the minister building on the other land that we spoke about when he talked on October 30, in answer to a question during the question period? The minister answered that the total number of acres was 64.336; the land cost $10,485,000; the servicing costs $1,422,360; and the number of dwellings to go up was 3,272. Which land are you building on?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We are going to be building on both lands, on both sides of Don Valley Parkway; we got the permit last Friday afternoon to start building. I guess the 24 acres is on this side—is it not the west side? Yes, 24 acres is on the west side near Don Mills Road. The first is in the Don Mills area, 1,470-odd units, and 1,800-odd across the Don Valley Parkway, so they are both starting almost simultaneously.

Mrs. M. Renwick: You are building both east and west of the Don Valley Parkway? Could I ask, Mr. Chairman, does the minister have OMB approval to build on both sides of the parkway at this time?

Hon. Mr. Randall: As far as I know. Yes. We have had, as you know—I will not go over the ground again—we were held up for 15 months by Mr. Bloom, who had the Milton Brick Company; he sued not only us, but also Olympia and York for $12 million to stop us. It took 15 months to get him out of our hair. Then we had Sayvette department stores come in and put in a brief because they did not like the tax structure of North York, and they thought this was an easy way to get before the public. I pointed out to them that I did not know of a department store that needed more customers than they did, and I suggested that if they wanted 3,200 customers, the thing to do was to withdraw that brief to the OMB, which they did. And the last trouble that we had, as you know, was that we made arrangements for the religious organizations to have an ecumenical centre and they got to fighting among themselves to see who was going to be there—whether it was the Presbyterians and the Catholics, leaving out the Anglicans and the Methodists. Finally, last Friday afternoon, we got them all decided to be good Christian brothers and get together, and we got the building permit on Friday afternoon about 5 o'clock.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Is that so? Is it entirely Christian?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think so; I hope so.

Mr. Lewis: My colleague from Windsor was remarking that the man who launched a $12-million suit, you described as a "one-share sweetie" in the Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Randall: He did all right too.

Mr. Lewis: He certainly did.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You bet he did.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the minister, then, we have not established that 24 or 25 acres of the 64,336 acres that we spoke about on October 30 is $215,000-an-acre land, and the balance is the $162,972.50-an-acre land. Right?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, could be.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Okay. Now, the minister can go back very easily to when, as the member for Scarborough West said, a few trips to Japan weighed in the balance, and the minister announced three days prior to the provincial election in 1967 that about 3,500 units were going into Flemingdon Park.

Hon. Mr. Randall: With all good intentions.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Randall: With all good intentions.

Mrs. M. Renwick: With all good intentions?

Mr. Lewis: It did not help Chris Smith, I tell you. But he admits that.

Mrs. M. Renwick: The young architect, of course, was running for the NDP and was a little chagrined to see this letter arrive. I would like to ask the minister, did the letter go out special delivery—the letter to the people who were on the waiting list for condominiums? Because the letter is dated October 17, 1967, and since that was election day and since Ontario Housing Corporation, when it culls out its files, it does send all its mail out special delivery, did it send that particular letter out special delivery by any chance?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would not think so. Of course, by now there is no—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Would somebody in the corporation not know, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, they know; they just told me no.

Mrs. M. Renwick: They just told you no?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, that is right.

Mrs. M. Renwick: So, if it was sent out on October 17, it was not designed to be effective on October 17?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would not think so.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Okay.

Hon. Mr. Randall: In fact, we sent out a news release the other day, and in view of the pending mail strike, we figured it would take maybe a week and a half to get there. It got there the next morning. We were surprised. It looked like a lot of people were afraid to put mail in the boxes in case it was not collected. But there was no election a few days ago so we are all right.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, since the announcement was made three days before and it was carried in not only the Toronto dailies but throughout the province in practically three-inch-high letters, the minister really just had a little housekeeping to do by advising those persons who had enquired about condominium?

Mr. Lewis: When will they be completed, did you say?

Hon. Mr. Randall: 1971.

Mr. Lewis: What month in 1971?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Very important.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not think we said they would be completed. I think we said we would get under way with it. It takes about 18 months to complete one apartment. They are starting the project now. I would hope they would continue—

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): It is just a coincidence that opening day and the election are the same day.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I think the minister's release said July, 1971.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Wait a minute. We expect to have some units in 1971. Let me also point out that this is going to be an unusual type of construction and an unusual type of site planning. I think it will go according to schedule. We think we will have some units in 1971 and 1972 and I think the balance will be completed by 1973 or 1974. There is a phased programme for it.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Now the minister said—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Does the hon. member want to make an application to move in on it?

Mrs. M. Renwick: —the deal was closed; and the fact was the deal was not closed at that time when the minister spoke on October 9. Apparently the papers had not been signed. Is everything closed now? The question that comes to my mind is: has the Olympia and York agreement been signed? Is absolutely everything closed to go ahead on the Chapel Glen project now?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Hermant, can you answer that?

Mr. Hermant: Yes, all the agreements are executed and Olympia and York is under an obligation to develop about 1,800 units over a three-year period.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I remind you that when we said the agreement was closed, to all intents and purposes we had the deal made. In the meantime, as you know, we have gone ahead and put in the services.

Mrs. M. Renwick: The minister said they had an understanding about the deal. An understanding, of course, is a little different from the letter. The letter, Mr. Chairman, that started this particular misunderstanding between the minister and members of the Legislature and the general public, said that,

"We have 70 acres in Flemington Park." It says, and I will quote, Mr. Chairman:

As you are aware from newspaper stories, OHC has purchased 70 acres of land and will begin servicing it in the next few months.

That is the sort of thing which makes someone like myself a little nervous about whether what the minister has put in a letter is really something we can depend on.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do not get nervous. I will send you over some tranquilizers.

Mrs. M. Renwick: The minister said in the House that the prices would not change; that the cost of the units to the general public would not change. The minister outlined the costs for Parkway Forest, his first condominium where they started at a one bedroom for incomes of $6,000, two bedrooms for incomes of $7,000, three bedrooms for incomes of $8,000, four for $9,000 and five for $10,000.

We are now looking at a new project and we are looking at a new letter from the ministry, or from the Ontario Housing Corporation, talking about a project where the prices for the units in one area range from $18,900 to $29,950 and an area where the prices range from $21,800 to $25,500. Town houses, Mr. Chairman, range from $26,600, the four bedroom town houses are $28,200.

I think the minister is really on the line about this particular discrepancy because—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not think I am at all.

Mrs. M. Renwick: —there is no way, Mr. Chairman, that anyone can purchase homes under The Condominium Act in the minister's riding in Chapel Glen project unless their income is at least $10,000 a year, which is where the other incomes in Parkway Forests ended. This is very serious because in Parkway Forest there were 400 units and the waiting list for those units was cut off by the developer by necessity, of the numbers that he was receiving long before the units were built. If you applied, and people I know did, you received a letter cutting you off the waiting list before those units were built.

This is the Home Ownership Made Easy plan going right down the drain unless the minister can foresee some way that these houses are available to persons earning less than $10,000 a year; 50 per cent of the people of the province of Ontario fall in that category. These people have been very patient in waiting a long time for the announcement on Chapel Glen. The announcements have come out. The minister has an explanation to make because there are many other things wrong with Chapel Glen, Mr. Chairman.

The minister has circumvented bylaws so that the buildings are going to be 50 feet from the parkway, which is unbelievable to anybody who has ever lived on that parkway. I have lived on it and I know of what I speak. He has circumvented the distance between the buildings; the North York bylaw calls for 107 feet between the buildings—he has got it down to about half of that. The density there is going to bring a city of 25,000 people and there are no facilities either for 25,000 people to live there or for traffic to and from there.

The cost of the land is bad enough but to create a miserable type of development on top of it is just unbelievable.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I disagree with that “miserable development” tag, because it has been well-planned and approved by the board of North York and approved by OMB, so how can you fault us? If the township agrees on it, how can you fault us? Are you a better authority than the township of North York?

Mrs. M. Renwick: I can fault the minister in this way, Mr. Chairman — that the system we are living under has the borough of North York, in one part of its organization wanting development, and in the planning part being scared to death of the type of project that this is. Finally, that those bylaws are approved by the Ontario Municipal Board, which is a creature of this government and before it comes to the Ontario Housing Corporation for approval. There is something wrong with that system.

First of all, there is no way we can have a good, operating municipal board if, in fact, its own government is going to come before it and seek approval, unless there was some separate arbitration to decide the factors that are at stake here.

I have talked to the people in the schools in that area and they are very concerned about about what is happening around them. The concern goes right down to the individual home purchaser. In the original plan, the minister has said, Mr. Chairman, the new housing will be under the same plan as the HOME plan. In other words, the $15,000 amount will apply to the two-bedroom unit, the $17,000 amount will apply to the four-bedroom units.

There is a discrepancy that I would ask the minister to explain. In Hansard, October 30, the minister said that the land cost per dwelling would be about $3,205; the average servicing about $435, making a total of $3,640. That is $3,000, approximately per lot. Adding the $15,000 to that, you would get the price of the home. If you take $15,000 from the $21,800 figure of the — let us see which developer it is that has the $21,800 — Olympia and York's prices. Take it from the lowest price, Mr. Chairman, $21,800, and you get a difference of $6,800.

How does the minister justify this increase in cost? We all know that the interest rates have grown but there have to be other factors taken into consideration, as to what has made the difference of almost $3,000 in two years. I would like to refer to the article in the Globe and Mail by Tom Claridge where, apparently, other factors cited by OHC (1) inaccuracies in the original estimates, which an official said were really only guesstimates, with a higher than anticipated cost of servicing the land, (2) a last-minute decision by Metro separate school board to build a school in the project, (3) changes in planned densities, and increases in the quality and specifications of the buildings in site, servicing and adding other facilities such as swimming pools and saunas. What really did cause the nearly $3,000 difference is what I think it is important to know.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the hon. member, may I just read these points off. Some of the reasons for the price changes are as follows:

Since we began our planning in 1967, construction costs have increased substantially, with the result that we have made two administrative changes concerning the limits on houses built on home lots. First, to accommodate persons wanting larger dwellings, we set new maximum ceilings of $15,000 for three bedrooms; $16,000 for four and $17,000 for five bedrooms.

As construction costs continued to rise, we exempted certain items in the determination of the ceiling prices such as loan application fees, interest on advances during construction, legal fees, survey charges, lot rentals up to three months and the mortgage insurance fee. These items are now reflected in the increased land costs for Chapel Glen.

Secondly, the Ontario Housing Corporation have to pay carrying costs and taxes for two years and this cost is also reflected in the land cost.

Third, the specifications on buildings, site services and facilities in the final design are at a higher level than originally proposed.

Fourth, some part of the increased land costs are reflected in the disposal of a separate school site and the provision for North York of a community centre which will be developed by and at the cost of modular pre-cast and will be turned over to the borough of North York.

Fifth, the final cost also reflects such items as the purchase share of the seven caretakers' apartments as they are part owners in common.

Sixth, the serviced land in 1967 reflected the cost of servicing to the perimeter of the block on which the condominium was to be developed. The final cost of land includes all internal servicing within the perimeter of this condominium block—roads, sewers and water mains which will be owned by the purchaser—and is reflected in their land prices as site services.

Seven, as an example of additional services for this project, there is underground parking which will cost $1,500 per dwelling unit. To sum up, the cost of construction of the actual dwelling unit falls within the price limitations of the HOME plan.

The bulk of the increase in price is related to the cost of the site services and other facilities outside the unit. We say we are offering excellent dwellings on a convenient site, virtually downtown, with down payments ranging from $945 for one bedroom to $1,497 for five bedroom dwellings. These can be purchased without high interest rate second mortgages, so common today, and at a rate of interest of 9.5 per cent, which is well below any other prime interest rate obtainable in Canada. Prices now are firm and will carry right into 1973.

I think we have achieved, under very difficult circumstances, housing that people can afford right in Metro. When you talk about the people back in 1967, let me also remind you—and your own case is a good one—your own income has gone up since 1967 and so have those of the people who were building those houses then.

Mr. Lewis: Ten thousand dollars a year. Six point four per cent of the families in Metro make less by way of family income than $8,000 a year. Who are you opening it up to?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I know.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, that is exactly the problem. These units were touted for years. This programme began in 1966?

Hon. Mr. Randall: 1967.

Mrs. M. Renwick: It was touted for years as being something low-income families could avail themselves, but it has just gone right out the window, the HOME ownership plan.

How does the minister justify when he said on October 9 in Hansard—

Hon. Mr. Randall: We do not agree that it has gone out the window.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I will not accept an interruption, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Too bad about you.

Mrs. M. Renwick: The minister said, "I might say, also that prices we established in 1967 will remain the same."

Mr. Chairman: This probably would be a good place to recess until 8 p.m.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If the land could have been settled, they would have remained the same.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Is the minister saying that the cost is primarily an increase in the land cost?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The site cost primarily; the building cost is still within the limitation we set at 1967.

Mr. Chairman: We will recess until 8 p.m.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the committee took recess.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT

On votes 2209 and 2210:

Mr. Chairman: We now have a quorum. Mrs. Renwick, if you wish to proceed.

Mrs. M. Renwick: (Scarborough Centre): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Prior to our supper adjournment we were discussing the HOME plan in Chapel Glen—the Home Ownership Made Easy scheme—from which letters went out dated May 20, 1970.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the minister—and I think the minister, when he spoke jovially before supper, knows that he and I do often chat about things in a very amiable fashion. I cannot just slide over Chapel Glen and say, "Well, that is just one of those things." I am sure, that in the broad spectrum of the area that the minister covers with trade and development, and the many areas where he has been very aggressive and very successful and progressive, that this may just be just one of those things.

But to the families who live in Flemingdon Park now, to the advisory board, to the professional people in the community who are giving their time to helping that community to work, to the teachers in the schools, the guidance teachers, all the people who have been drawn into that advisory group; to them what is happening in Chapel Glen is of grave concern.

To those of us who are there rather frequently, to see the limited facilities for recreation that exist there is a separate discussion by itself. The density in that area is a separate discussion. The traffic in that area, as the minister knows from the OMB hearings, Mr. Chairman, is a serious separate discussion. But of course, Mr. Chairman, where you come from housing is housing and it is not all tied up with all these other problems. But this main artery of Don Mills Road and the Don Valley Parkway is a very important problem as it stands right now, never mind any future development.

I would like to say to the minister that I think I caused some heads to shake when I said 50 feet from the parkway. I was, of course, wrong in assuming that the minister was building right on the parkway. I guess I should have said, Mr. Chairman, 50 feet from the edge of the property was the concession that had been made in the change of the bylaw.

But what is the real crux of the problem? I think the real crux is the fact that specifically the HOME plan was geared to meet the needs of people whose incomes were less than $10,000 a year. Now it is geared to people who earn more than that. This is a serious thing, because up until the minister's HOME plan, thousands of people could not buy a home in Canada because they did not qualify for NHA loans.

All of the postmen, for instance, working their lives out with the federal government did not qualify on their incomes for NHA housing. Then along came the miracle man, in the form of the Minister of Trade and Development responsible for housing. He could now provide accommodation for families earning $6,700 a year. The minister has said all salaries have gone up. My salary has gone up and so forth. But in the supper hour, we added just six per cent to the salaries to try to gauge what the increase was. That is a healthy enough increase. The man earning $6,000 when the minister made his announcement in 1967, would now earn $6,360. The man earning $6,742 would now earn $7,144. The man earning $7,146 would now earn $7,572.

It just does not figure that salaries have gone up that much, and I would ask the minister if he can show me the income group that he is catering to, because the only figures that we have to work from are from DBS statistics that are for 1968, published in 1969; and even there it is not conceivable that the minister is catering to the lower third of the income group.

When the minister sends out guidelines to the housing authorities, where he says in his manual to the housing authorities that they are catering in rents to the lower third of the income group, then I would remind the minister, Mr. Chairman, that the original plan of Ontario Housing Corporation was that the tenants would be short-term residents and that they would be able to proceed from Ontario housing into Home Ownership Made Easy.

In fact, in our last year's debates—it seems so recent now, I think it was just October, was it, of last year—the minister, when I talked to him about Chapel Glen said they were even conceivably looking at non-down-payment homes. I had said to the minister that one of the last things that J. F. Kennedy put on the books in Washington was an experiment of 300 no-downpayment homes, and I complimented the minister about the HOME scheme and complimented him about the fact that he was looking at no-down-payments. I may have some other compliments to pass on later, but I think the real issue is who is going to be able to purchase those homes? There are some things, Mr. Minister, which we just have to have down in black and white.

You see we start out at the beginning—and I think it is important, Mr. Chairman, that we do in this particular case, because we are dealing with two letters. We are dealing with a letter dated October 17, 1967, from the corporation. I wonder if the minister would tell me to how many persons the October 17 letter was mailed? We are also dealing with a letter on the same subject dated May 20, 1970—and I would like to ask the minister separately, Mr. Chairman, to how many people was the second letter mailed?

I would like to read the first letter, which is headed Ontario Housing Corporation, October 17, 1967:

Reference A-2-6 (d)

Dear Sir (Madam):

Thank you for your inquiry about the Chapel Glen Village Development land for Flemingdon Park. Enclosed is some background information about condominiums and a pamphlet designed to answer your more general questions.

As you are aware from newspaper stories, OHC has purchased 70 acres of land and will begin servicing it in the next few months. At the same time we will be inviting private builders to submit designs on a builder proposal basis.

We will select the ones from which the design and price point of view are the most acceptable. The developers will be encouraged to incorporate imaginative design principles in their submissions. The average cost of serviced land per unit will range from $3,000 to $4,000 and the cost per unit from $12,000 to $15,000. A range running from two-bedroom apartments to four bedroom townhouses. These costs will enable families earning between $6,000 and $8,000 a year to become home owners.

Mortgage arrangements for the financing of the individual units in each building will be a responsibility of the successful builders to participate in the development. The purchaser will be able to pay for his land under the HOME Plan on an amortized basis over 35 years at 7 and one half per cent, substantially reducing the down payment required.

It is expected that the first units will be ready in the latter half of 1968. We have recorded your name and you will be contacted when marketing arrangements have been established. At that time precise information on downpayment and costs and carrying charges for each size of unit will be available.

Signed,

Yours sincerely,

H. W. Suters,

Managing Director.

Could anyone of the corporation tell me to how many people that letter went, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. S. W. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): That is the letter of October 17; it went to 2,000 people and it was followed up last month by a letter to 1,200—because of the 2,000, some 800 never replied. We never got their reply back, and the number of the waiting list was reduced to 1,200 who showed an interest in the project.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Eight hundred did not reply? Right?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, the 800 probably did. That was the differential—972 I think—between the hon. Minister—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Next time it will be 4,000.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Next election it will be 4,000 majority.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Minister, I would be willing to almost bet that you might not even go through that again.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do not push now, Margaret!

Mrs. M. Renwick: You see what is wrong Mr. Chairman, now we have gone through this a little bit. What is really wrong is that OHC did not have 70 acres. Right?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Did not what?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Did not have 70 acres. They had an understanding to purchase something less than 70 acres.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We had 70 acres to start with. It was nibbled away by the restrictions and the people who came in later on and cut themselves in for, let us say, part of the deal.

Mrs. M. Renwick: You mean to say some acreage had been cut away Mr. Minister, through you, Mr. Chairman, by October 17, 1967?

Hon. Mr. Randall: From October 17, 1967, until to date.

Mrs. M. Renwick: To this date?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Until to date. Right!

Mrs. M. Renwick: When did the 70 acres become 60-odd acres then?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We started negotiating on 70 acres and by the time we got the permits through North York, made the amenities, recreational centre—which is already up; which cost $500,000 of which I think we paid —60 per cent was it?—it provides not only recreational facilities for the people going in here but also for the people now in Flemingdon Park—plus the church affairs that I have talked about this afternoon. That left us with about 60 point something acres; 60.7 acres.

This is not unusual. This is standard procedure in any development. We are running into the same thing at Saltfleet. We are running into the same thing at Waterloo. When we get underway up there, if we get underway, we will run into the same thing in Malvern; all developers run into the same problem. It is not unusual with the housing corporation, I can assure you.

Mrs. M. Renwick: The minister outlined very clearly, did he not before supper, Mr. Chairman, the difference in the cost of the land?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. I told how the cost increased and why it did. The buildings were exactly the same price as we suggested in 1967. The difference in the cost is due to the appreciation, the increased expenses on the land, the shortage of the land, the reduction of the acreage, so that you did not get the same density. When you buy land at those prices for density, you have to reduce it so much per acre. You have to add it on to the acreage left.

Mrs. M. Renwick: What was the density when the minister started?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think in 1967 we said that we were negotiating for 69 point some odd acres, and that has been reduced by nine acres to, roughly, 60.5. So if you take that nine acres out of there and add it into the 60.5, you can see how the density would have to be increased, or the land would become more valuable, which would increase the price per apartment or per house.

Mrs. M. Renwick: When the minister originally got the density increased—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, we decreased it. I think our first hope in there was for about 3,600 units if I am not wrong. Is that the figure we had—3,600 and some odd units? It has been reduced to 3,200 and something?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thirty-five hundred was the first?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Thirty-five hundred and some odd, and we have had it reduced in order to provide the amenities. To provide the acreage for those amenities we have had to reduce the density to around 3,200 and some odd units—1,800 plus 1,400—3,273.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Minister, there is a density in there now of 95.6?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is not a bad density.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Not bad? Mr. Chairman, where do you go from up?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Sixty to the acre. We are down to where the density is 60 to the acre.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Yes, 60 to the acre if you take the two densities into consideration. If you take the 90.5 density of the high-rise and put it with the density of the smaller—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let us talk about Chapel Glen. The Chapel Glen density is 60 to the acre and all the amenities are supplied. If you want to look at Toronto proper, we said Toronto proper was 30 to the acre, if you took all the commercial land, all the parks, all the recreational areas. But if you want to go back to the complete density in the residential areas of Toronto, you are talking about 250, I believe.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Let me, Mr. Chairman, take a look at the hon. minister's second letter.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are not proving very much to me, because the letters as far as I am concerned were written in good faith. I said what we were going to do. We have arrived at a point where we are going to produce housing. We know exactly what we are going to produce and at what prices we are going to produce. Going back in the letters is not proving one iota as far as I am concerned.

Mrs. M. Renwick: We have the one letter, Mr. Chairman, on the record and I would like the other letter on the record and—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Get it on the record.

Mrs. M. Renwick: —and then we will take a look, if we may, Mr. Chairman, at what has happened in between those letters. Because, as the minister very well knows, a great deal has happened in between.

The second letters from the corporation, dated May 20, 1970, says:

Dear Sir (Madam):

Because of the interest you indicated in the past, you will be pleased to know that Ontario Housing Corporation has signed development agreements for the construction of nearly 3,300 condominium dwellings at Chapel Glen, which lies east of Don Mills Road, north of its intersection with the Don Valley Parkway. Modular Pre-cast Developments and Company will build 1,465 condominium homes and high-rise and six-storey "stratawalk" buildings north and east of the Don Mills Road and Gateway Boulevard intersection.

Further to the east, Olympia and York Developments Limited will build 1,794 high-rise and town house condominium dwellings on land lying north and south of the Hydro right-of-way on the east side of the Don Valley Parkway. As the builders are responsible for the marketing of the housing, your name has been forwarded to them and they will be getting in touch with you at a later date. Although neither firm is in a sales position at the present time, you may wish to establish personal contact with them. Modular may be reached at 782-3153; Olympia and York at 429-5544 beginning May 25, 1970. Both firms have started site excavations and the first high-rise buildings at each location are scheduled for completion in July, 1971. Modular will build one-, two- and three-bedroom high-rise dwellings, and three-, four- and five-bedroom Stratawalk homes. A novel housing approach, the Stratawalk homes will be grouped as three tiers of two-storey town houses.

Modular prices range from $18,900 for a one-bedroom apartment to $29,950 for a five-bedroom Stratawalk home. Down payments range from $945 to $1,497. Olympia and York prices range from $21,800 to $25,500 for two- and three-bedroom apartments. Three-bedroom town houses will cost $26,600 and four-bedroom town houses $28,200. Down payments range from $1,090 to $1,410. In addition to mortgage charges, monthly payments will include all management fees and maintenance charges. Municipal taxes will be paid separately.

Yours sincerely,

Paul R. Goyette,

Managing Director, Development.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I called those numbers today, and at the Olympia and York number I was told, "We cannot tell you what size of housing you will be buying; what size of room. We are printing a brochure; it will be ready in a couple of weeks." I could not get through to the other number, and I had someone try for a very long time this morning. I would think that, for a letter to go out from a crown corporation, some description of the property should have been included. No one knows from this what size the bedrooms are. I think we have spoken with the minister about that.

The minister answered the question as to who received these letters. I would like to know if the minister has any facts to back up his remarks prior to the supper break that this housing is not for the higher-income group. If the minister has some figures of families in Metro, even of families in Ontario—the most recent statistics show that only something like 21 per cent of the population in 1967 earned more than $10,000 a year, and we have reason to think that those figures might very well still prevail with only a minor difference.

If the minister has any comments, first of all, about the income group that he figures he is catering too. You see, I asked the minister about Chapel Glen specifically, when he first announced it, and he outlined very carefully that he would be drawing the same income group as Parkway Forest. Well, Parkway Forest started at $6,700, and I do not think it went much above a $10,000 income for the very largest unit. What income does someone have to have to carry these units that are coming into Chapel Glen?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Chairman, may I just finish reading? I read some points this afternoon, and finished before I read the last paragraph. I will just read this to you, to illustrate what can happen in three years. I would point out what happened to the price of new homes in Metropolitan Toronto between the time we first spoke of Chapel Glen, and today. At the end of January, 1967, the average new home price in Metro was $29,666—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Yes, but, Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Wait a minute, now.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, the minister got the floor from me a couple of times and I did not object. I would like to say to the minister that the average home cost—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You asked me a question. I am trying to answer your question.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Before, Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me answer it my way, and I will let you answer your questions your way.

Mrs. M. Renwick: We are not buying homes when we are buying apartments in Chapel Glen.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I know you are not; I am just trying to establish a fact I think you are overlooking. I said that at the end of January, 1967, the average new home price in Metro was $29,666, and at the end of January this year it had risen to $42,805. In the same period, we have seen these changes occur in Metro: In 1967, 23 per cent of all new homes fell in the $16,000 to $22,500 bracket, while today only 0.8 per cent fall into this category. In 1967, 32 per cent of new homes in Metro fell into the $22,500 to $30,000 bracket, while today only 14.8 per cent do. And this means—and keep this in mind—that 85 per cent of all new dwellings cost more than $30,000, and all the Chapel Glen dwellings are beneath this figure. In light of this end price we have achieved in Chapel Glen, we have effected a very good deal for the prospective purchaser.

Let me just point out that Central Mortgage and Housing themselves indicate that the middle-income groups are considered as earning $6,000 to $10,000, and $7,000 to $11,000 in the urban area, and this is over 30,000 people. The policemen alone are getting $10,800; there is an increase going through for postmen and what have you. Everybody has had increases, so it is no mystery as to why the prices of land in Chapel Glen have increased in view of the difficulties outlined earlier.

I make no apologies for these prices today. I think they are the best prices anywhere in Metro, regardless of what anybody says, and I can assure you that when those houses are put up for sale, we can sell five times as many as we have available.

You must keep in mind—and I point out to you—that the same people we were going to house in 1967 are the people we are going to house when Chapel Glen is finished, and their incomes have gone up accordingly. So we are not talking about the same income level for the people in 1967, any more than we are talking about the same prices in 1967. I simply point out, as far as Chapel Glen is concerned, that we are providing housing at the same price as we agreed to supply them at, $15,000, $16,000 and $17,000. We have no control over what happened to the acreage that was taken out of the development by the North York board of control, by the amenities required, by the churches who came in and demanded that they have a certain amount of acreage. If we had not done that, we would have been accused tonight—in fact, you have already made the statement that we do not have enough amenities in there as at the present time. But let me point out to you that the best brains in Metro and North York have looked at this project, have studied it very carefully and, in their judgement, they have made the decision that there is adequate there to house some 3,200-odd families.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Okay. Mr. Chairman, I can only keep five points of what the minister has said in my head at one time. If the minister would permit, I would like to deal with those five points. First, I have never at any time suggested that the minister was not caught in one of the highest spirals of real estate prices that anyone here probably has ever seen. At the peak of 1967, when he made this announcement, the minister had no way perhaps of knowing that he was really in on the ground floor of the big up-swing. I have never questioned that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think we had some idea that prices would continue to rise, believe me.

Mrs. M. Renwick: That is the first thing.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We never figured the ceiling would go as high as it has.

Mrs. M. Renwick: The second thing is that when the minister uses the average price of homes as an example, we have to remember what sort of land a home is on; is it on 50 by 100 feet at least, and how many square feet is that? Whereas the square footage of ground for a unit that we are talking about is, I think—someone wrote me a letter on it, and he referred to 856 square feet. What size of lot are we talking about in Chapel Glen? You cannot compare condominium prices with home prices.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Now listen, you cannot—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Wait a minute—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You cannot compare a 50-foot lot with swimming pools, sauna baths and all the amenities.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I did not say anything about swimming pools and sauna baths. I just said you cannot hold up the price of homes in Toronto, where the family can have the privacy of an individual lot, in comparison to condominium development, such as we are going to see, and is going to be widely written about no doubt, the way it is going in and going up in Chapel Glen.

The third thing is that the minister has said that he is still supplying housing to the same income group that he was before, but that all their incomes—

Hon. Mr. Randall: The same kind of people. The incomes may have changed.

Mrs. M. Renwick: —that all their incomes have risen, now, to meet his new figures.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, not to meet mine. To meet the figures that are available—theirs.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Well, then his figures are the same people, but they have higher incomes now.

I would ask the minister to prove that, Mr. Chairman, because that simply must be proved. The income group that the minister is appealing to has to be shown, without any doubt, before this programme can really be acceptable to the general public, because it is just that the public needs housing so badly.

The minister says that he can sell them all very quickly. I do not doubt that. You need only to look at the fact that there are—what?—at least 10,000 to 12,000 applications for Metropolitan Toronto alone at University Avenue for a place to live, never mind a home to own; or at least 15,000 applications. And the minister, Mr. Chairman, has already housed in Metropolitan Toronto maybe 12,000 families who would like to get out of Ontario Housing on the tenant basis that they have been in for years and get into a home of their own—

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I ask you one question?

Mrs. M. Renwick: —to say nothing of the hundreds of marriage licences that are issued every year—

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I ask you a question?

Mrs. M. Renwick: —to say nothing of the other people—

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I ask you one question? If we do not house these people in this development, who will? Do you think any private developer will do what we are doing here?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I am here to ask the minister questions. I am not a developer and I am not a minister. I simply know that people cannot afford this housing that he is putting into Chapel Glen—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I disagree with you.

Mrs. M. Renwick: —except a select number of people.

Then, Mr. Chairman, let the minister describe Parkway Forest to me, the way he did—and just let me get my copy of Parkway Forest out to make sure that I have got the right understanding of what he said there; and he said Chapel Glen would be the same.

Let me see exactly what he describes—okay. Now, what incomes will it take to qualify for purchase in Chapel Glen as it is now reconstructed since the answer that the minister gave on October 27, 1969, when I asked him the same question and he covered one-bedroom, two-bedroom, three-bedroom, four-bedroom and five-bedroom units? He started at $6,120 and he ended at $10,090.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, may I just point out that in the Chapel Glen Forest project, it was financed by the Royal Bank at 8.5 per cent—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Which one are we speaking about, Mr. Chairman? Parkway Forest?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Parkway Forest. One-bedroom was incomeed at $6,120 to $6,300.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Yes, I have those figures, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Randall: All right. Two-bedroom was $7,500 to $7,570. Three-bedroom, $8,100 to $8,300. Four-bedroom, $9,000 to $9,610. Five-bedroom, $10,000 to $10,090.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Right.

Hon. Mr. Randall: And we are offering in Chapel Glen, even with these increased costs to us, the same kind of a programme; an income of $7,728 for a one-bedroom up to $12,000 for the five-bedroom. Keep in mind that today, because of the changes we have been able to extract from our friends in Ottawa, a man, if he is earning $7,000 a year and his wife is earning $5,000—and most of them are—that 50 per cent of her income qualifies. In Greenwood Parkway, as they call it, only 20 per cent qualified. In fact, only 20 per cent qualifies today almost everywhere.

But, under the housing development corporation we are financing this entire project at 9.5 per cent, whereas it was formerly 7.25 per cent, or 7.5 per cent under bank financing back in 1967. We are financing at 9.5 per cent and the increased incomes will permit those same categories of people to move in there and buy in Chapel Glen, regardless of what anybody says, and 50 per cent of the wife's income will be taken as part of the income.

Mrs. M. Renwick: All right. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like the minister to break down the figures for the two-bedroom, three-bedroom, four-bedroom and the range of the five-bedroom—which he just jumped from $7,728 to $12,000—please.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Pardon? I do not have—

Mrs. M. Renwick: I would like to ask, Mr. Minister—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not have that list with me here, but I would be glad to get it for you.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Minister, you do not have that list with you here?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I have not got the list here with me. We will be glad to work it out for you.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): It is the maximum that has gone from $10,099 to $12,000.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, that is what we figure. You have a jump there of roughly, what was that figure?

Mr. P. R. Goyette (Ontario Housing Corporation): $10,099 to $12,000.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well it has gone up, roughly, you have got to say $2,000—$1,900.

Mrs. M. Renwick: There is a 50-year mortgage, instead of 35.

Hon. Mr. Randall: There are 35-year mortgages.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thirty-five-year mortgages?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Thirty-five-year mortgages and you can buy an agreement for sale on the land for—what have you got, up to 50 years? Thirty-five years, the same as the mortgage.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They can go up to 35 years on the land on an agreement for sale under The Condominium Act, so they have got 35. The Parkway Forest was 25 years; this one is 35 years, for both the land and the building, with the same down payments, or about the same down payments, they had previously in Parkwood Forest. Whatever that name is, I keep forgetting. Parkway Forest, yes.

I can assure you that as far as I am concerned, you can push the mathematics around all you like, but we are going to provide housing at the prices we have said. There is no way we can change it. We recognize that nobody else is going to do it. We are going to do it.

The homes are going to be there and they are going to be financed with the housing development corporation on the basis that I outlined. You can read all the letters you like, you can bring up all the hurdles you like, I am just reassuring you that the deal is going to go through. There is going to be no change. This is the way it is going to happen.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I understood from the minister that the deal had gone through. Is that not true?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, sure. I am just saying that we are going to go ahead and build the project as I have outlined. The deal is going to go through.

Mrs. M. Renwick: All right. Now, if the minister did not have with him the amounts of money that the families will have to—

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have not worked out the schedules. If you asked if we worked them out the same as Parkway, no, I have not worked out the schedules.

Mrs. M. Renwick: No. You see, Mr. Chairman, with all due respect to the minister, part of the problem is that Parkway Forest condominiums, 400 units, Greenwin—was it Greenwin that produced them?—this was a sensational step for people who have no home. And this is what I think ministers of the Crown, if they are working and living and driving on the throughways to their work, and are not seeing hundreds of thousands of people who are looking for places to live, can lose sight of. The minister, with all due respect, just said, “I can never remember the name of that development.” Now, that development is so important to people that they would never forget the name of it.

This is why we asked and asked, Mr. Chairman, for a housing minister. Because, to a housing minister, his first condominiums would be so important he could not forget the name. Rammed in with Trade and Development world-wide, this whole operation is just simply not good enough.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We are working on 15,000 condominium units right now, so stop the nitpicking and let us get down to brass tacks. You have got more intelligence than that, Mrs. Renwick; let us forget the nitpicking and get down to business.

If I could remember every development I have got under me, I would be a miracle man. I could leave here—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would say to the minister, he may or may not be right. I may, or may not, fall in the minister's category of intelligence, but it is irrelevant.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No. I think you are very intelligent—very intelligent.

Mrs. M. Renwick: It is not important. The important thing is that the people who thought they could get in on the ground floor—the people who are in OHC now in Flemingdon, the people who are in OHC who have watched the newspapers every day for an announcement of the Chapel Glen development—cannot afford it.

They do not all have wives who are working. The minister said most of them do. That one in three women work, is the last statistical figure we have, and they work for an average of $2,000 a year, Mr. Chairman. The minister is using $5,000.

If the family income, as the minister puts it, is $7,000 from the man and $5,000 from the woman working, is the minister saying that the national average income is $12,000 a year, because if it is—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No.

Mrs. M. Renwick: —this whole Senate hearing on poverty is, you know—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am not saying that at all. But your own party, my dear, has been screaming at the government to put up day-care centres, because you say that there are two people working in the family.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Right. One in three women works. That is all we have got to go on.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Now, we have listened to you about the day-care centres, so we assumed there must be two incomes coming in the home.

Mrs. M. Renwick: For a day-care centre in Chapel Glen, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, all right, not necessarily.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Is there a day-care centre in this project in Chapel Glen?

Hon. Mr. Randall: For how many children?

Mr. Peacock: Do you know why we screamed? Because half your applicants for family housing are mother led families.

Hon. Mr. Randall: About 30 per cent, 30 per cent.

An hon. member: Maybe if they go to church we will all go to church.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Do you mean to tell me that the ladies in Chapel Glen are only making $2,000 a year—the national average. I am sure they are making a hell of a lot more than that.

Mrs. M. Renwick: The national average, Mr. Chairman, the last statistics available—

Mr. Yakabuski: Do you lead us to believe that is the national average in Chapel Glen. You know better than that.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order! Now, let us have a little order. Mrs. Renwick.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, this afternoon the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) and Windsor West and myself discussed with the Chairman the fact that we found that the system of each member speaking and each one saying his piece and nobody even able to ask a question at that time or make a comment at that time very inflexible. We got unanimous agreement from the Chairman that we would have the freedom of other members coming into the debate, the way we do in the House, that we were not operating here as we do in the House. The one agreement we did come to, though, was that we would not attack personally because of the difficulty that the Hansard people have in recording.

Mr. Chairman: That is the reason that I lowered the gavel. I do not want any vituperation.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I would like to say to the minister that my two letters carry a great deal of importance because there were 1,000 families waiting for those letters. As the minister says, "There are 800 that are not participating even in replying to their request".

Hon. Mr. Randall: They have probably bought homes somewhere else.

Mrs. M. Renwick: The minister has said there will be a day-care centre in there. How many children will it look after?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is designed with North York requirements to take care of the 3,400 families on the bedroom count that are going in there. I would assume there would be sufficient day-care centres in there to take care of the people that are moving into that particular project.

An hon. member: Recreation centres?

Hon. Mr. Randall: There will be two centres on the east, I am told, and one on the west.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I am sorry, Mr. Minister, I could not hear that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: There will be two centres on the east and one on the west.

Mrs. M. Renwick: There will be three day-care centres in there all together?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, that is in our agreement. That is the least we will have in there. There may be more before we get through. Of course, they will be restricted to the owners of the condominiums because it is a sale project.

Mrs. M. Renwick: The minister has said he is going to offer these units for sale at exactly the same price. How did the minister achieve that when he could not achieve it anywhere else? How did he hold the price on those units?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The building costs were established with the consortium that is going to build the buildings. The over-all 3,200 units average out at the prices I have outlined here. They are within the HOME guidelines that we point out—$15,000, $16,000 and $17,000. But the land values because of the reduction in the acreage, as I pointed out, and the other amenities—the increased cost of financing the land—have made an increased cost per unit. There is nothing I can do about changing that. It is there. We are going to have to live with it and as far as I am concerned it is still housing the same kind of income people we were talking about in 1967. Regardless of what anybody says, as far as I am concerned, we are doing the job that we said we would do.

Unfortunately, because of delays, we are two and a half years late but we are doing the job we said we would do regardless of what anybody wants to criticize.

I could not care less. I have made my comments on it. There is nothing I can do about it. The cost is in there. The acreage is reduced to 60.5 acres by the township by-laws, by everybody encroaching, including a religious organization so that—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Fine, but Mr. Chairman, when the $7,000 family goes to purchase these units, what are they going to have to pay a month? I read from Tom Claridge's article in the Globe and Mail that just the principal and interest charges have grown $74.83 in three years.

He has an article in the Saturday, May 23, Globe and Mail telling how the $92.47 Chapel home cost grew to $167.30 in three years. And that is not any payment off the home. What does the $7,000-a-year man end up with clear from taxes—about $5,000?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am sorry I—

Mrs. M. Renwick: In the Globe and Mail, of May 23, a reporter called Tom Claridge reported that the Chapel Glen home cost has grown from $92.47 to $167.30 in three years and that that cost is just principal and interest.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know where he got the figures. Anybody can play with figures. Let me tell you what I think our figures are.

We are talking about a one-bedroom unit and the average cost is 9.5 per cent for 35 years which would be $145; the tax is roughly $30, so $175 would take care of an income of $7,728. That will range anywhere up to the five-bedroom, Stratawalk homes for the large families—anywhere from $230 plus taxes to $275.

In between, there will be the two-, three- and 4-bedrooms so within the range of $175 to $275 we will house the same number of people. And if you want to check the kind of rents they are paying now for that accommodation in Toronto, you will find they are paying $375, $400 or $450 and maybe even higher than that.

I still say we are catering to the modest-income families, even though the incomes are not what they were in 1967 and the prices are not what they were in 1967. There is nobody in Metro building units at those prices to house the people at that range.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Well, referring to the two top figures that the minister used, $230 and $275 a month. How much does the minister figure a family would have to earn in order to be able to pay that much money for rent? They would have to earn $1,000 a month; the rent would be 25 per cent of their income. For housing, it is a good chunk of their income. The families you will cater to with the four- and five-bedroom homes at $275—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Can I ask you one question? What are they paying now in rent, over which they have no control? All they get for the money they are paying out, like you in your apartment and me in my apartment, is a bedroom full of rent receipts. We have no equity position. I simply suggest to you that nowhere are they going to get the kind of living conditions and the kind of value we have got here for this kind of money and have an equity position.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, that is the point I was trying to make with the minister. These units are for people who pay $275 a month, as we do, and they are not for people who are already housed in OHC on rent-geared-to-income and cannot now get out of OHC into a house.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Just a minute. We have a public housing programme for people on rent-geared-to-income.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Right. But it was a transitional place, the minister said, for them to go until they got housing.

Hon. Mr. Randall: In some areas. Perhaps you are never going to find that in the city of Toronto, if you recognize the cost of land here. But in the city of Toronto, also, many of these people are going to be dropping into public housing or rent-geared-to-income if you do not provide accommodation which they are renting from private landlords at prices they perhaps cannot afford. If they are paying these prices today, at least they have an equity position.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Well, Mr. Minister, there are still many questions to be answered about Chapel Glen. I think the member for Windsor West has a question about the subject that we are on.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I suggest to you that there may be many questions that you would like to ask about Chapel Glen. It is going to go. We have made up our minds how we are going to do it. I am sure that in the House you can ask as many questions as you like. We will have a schedule made out when the builders get organized, and I am sure—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I will not be put off that easily by the minister. We have quite a bit of difficulty getting answers from the Ontario Housing Corporation.

Do you know that I have got some questions here that we placed to the corporation that never got answered? We placed written questions to the corporation, and we have a letter attached to them from the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick) to the chairman of the commission, Mr. Evans, dated May 23, 1969. Do you know we do not have those questions answered yet, and this is 1970?

And the minister says, "You just ask all those questions in the House". No, Mr. Minister, I think we will have to ask you how you held the price on those units. Did you hold them by having smaller units?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, certainly. We did everything we could to maintain the price on the units and to provide housing for people.

Mrs. M. Renwick: What the letter did not say is how small those units are. The letter says—

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I ask you a question? Do you want the units to be built or do you not? Are you against Chapel Glen?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I am not objecting to the units being built.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mrs. M. Renwick: My gosh, I am trying to pretend they are not here.

Mr. Chairman, I would say to the minister that this letter of May 20, if it were coming to me waiting for a house to buy in Chapel Glen, would give me no idea what I could buy for $18,000 except that it is a one-bedroom, or for $30,000 except that it is a five-bedroom. I would ask the minister, what size are the bedrooms?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think we started off with NHA standards, which is what?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Which is what?

Hon. Mr. Randall: What is the square footage? I understand the first one would be 120 square feet; the second 100 and the third 90, right? That is according to NHA standards for a three-bedroom apartment.

Mrs. M. Renwick: That is a bedroom 10 x 12; 10 x 10, and what is the 90? How does 90 work out?

Mr. Yakabuski: Try 9 x 10.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They would have been the same size back in 1967 had we built them. The only change is the price.

Mrs. M. Renwick: They would have been the same size? How much does the minister buy this space for a square foot?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know. I have not worked it out.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I was told by some of the largest developers in the city of Toronto this morning that the minute a developer looks at a project, or he is involved with purchasing a project, or he is planning a project, he takes the cost of the building and the land and his pencil and he tells you the square footage like that. I am not to be put off in any means by the minister telling me that he does not know what the square footage costs are in his housing. Not only here, but what does it cost in some other—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will be glad to find out for you.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Would the minister list, then, the square footage that the minister has paid for all of his housing developments? Would the minister also table the cost of all his land that he has purchased and when it was purchased and from whom it was purchased?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do you mean in all Ontario?

Mrs. M. Renwick: In all Ontario, I think so.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think we filed that with Mr. Sargent, was it two years ago. There is no secret on that. It has been filed, I guess, three or four times.

Mrs. M. Renwick: What is the secret about the square footage, then, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We just have not worked it out. We have got the—

Mrs. M. Renwick: When you are going to pay millions of dollars for land and millions of dollars—$60 million for Chapel Glen, $60 million for the buildings and—

Hon. Mr. Randall: But do not forget all the amenities, the sidewalks, the roads, the parks and the—

Mrs. M. Renwick: But what you end up with—

Hon. Mr. Randall: —the verandahs. Take all this into consideration.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Yes, but what you end up with and are able to sell are a few square feet that make up a unit or a home.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We are not selling it. The builder is producing it and selling it to people on the terms that we established under the HOME programme.

Mrs. M. Renwick: What is he selling it for per square foot?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I cannot tell you. We would have to work it out for you.

Mrs. M. Renwick: You do not know?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I have never been asked the question. Nobody has asked that question yet; I have not worked it out per square foot. But I say when you work out the square footage you will have to take into consideration all these other things. For instance, I said this afternoon, there are going to be garages down there. What is it $1,500 per suite for a garage? We did not expect it—well, we expected it but we did not know what the cost would be in view of the bylaws of North York. However—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Did you fix the right-angle turn?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It could be right- or left-angle turns or straight up, I would not know.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I think it is very important to know if the borough of North York do not want the right-angle turns!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Would the minister, when he is coming through with the square foot cost for—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Really, I do not think this means anything to you. I will get it for you, but there is no use hounding away. I do not have it with me tonight.

Mrs. M. Renwick: When the minister comes through, would he come through with one other square foot cost?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Sure, you give me the—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Just for a comparison.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Tell me what you want, I will be glad to get it.

Mrs. M. Renwick: The first purchase in Flemingdom Park; the first purchase of the garden home units.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You mean the ones that are on the public housing?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Right.

Hon. Mr. Randall: What would that have to do with this one?

Mrs. M. Renwick: I think it is a very—

Hon. Mr. Randall: How can you compare apples and oranges?

Mrs. M. Renwick: I want to compare the figure for the square footage of the first ones with the current market at that time. I think the minister paid, maybe, what—$14 a square foot?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I cannot remember.

Mrs. M. Renwick: When the current rate was, maybe, $11. I do not know. I have to go back, in my head, three years. But that is something how it went. I would like to know what the minister's square footage was then and what it is now.

Hon. Mr. Randall: All right. I will be—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Because the minister knows that while we are talking about this land that the government bought for $215,000 an acre and $150,000 an acre in 1967, we all know up there that it sold for $14,000 an acre in the latter part of 1959 or 1960. Talk about inflation, anybody who wants to write a story on inflation could just take a look at the land in Flemingdon Park.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would have to check those figures. I said earlier that if you are going to put density on acreage in the urban areas, it does not matter how much you pay for the land if you can get the density. You go down here to the Toronto Dominion Bank; with the size of the building they have got and the kind of money they would pay for the land down there, as long as they get the density, the acreage does not cost them very much. I can show you an insurance building in Chicago, 105 stories on three-quarters of an acre. They probably bought that land for about $10 million but on the three-quarters of an acre they have put up a 105-story building. You have to relate it to the number of people who live on that acreage.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Okay. Would the minister tell me when NHA made these standards; have they changed at all since the project was planned in 1967?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I do not think there have been any major changes.

Mrs. M. Renwick: They have not changed?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I doubt it.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Before we leave the size of those bedrooms—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Trudeau said "Stay out of the bedrooms of the nation", so I am paying very careful attention to Mr. Trudeau.

Mrs. M. Renwick: There is one thing about dealing with the Minister of Trade and Development, Mr. Chairman. You can be sure that it will be jovial. Except for one day when he read me a five-page tirade. It is usually a very convivial conversation that goes on.

We have to look at these bedrooms, Mr. Chairman, because I had a case recently in my riding. I went out to look at it and I went, as a matter of fact, Mr. Minister, at nine o'clock yesterday morning. I went into your management office on Kennedy Road, in my riding. I found, a man sitting at his desk eager and ready for work; in fact, dispatching it—Mr. Renault. A handyman came in, appropriately called Mr. Friend; he was very concerned about a door with a broken bar on it, that it might be unsafe and he wanted clips to replace on the bar on the door. I found Mr. Renault saying to him, "Yes, get them as quickly as possible, the hardware across the street". This was before either one of them knew who I was because I was just sitting on a chair waiting.

I was not coming to spy on them but they were talking when I walked in. I was impressed no end. The next thing, much to my delight, was through the door came the gentleman who is out picking up the orders for work and from this large project, of how many units—400? From this project was a pile of work orders—15, 20, 40—and they were being dispatched to University Avenue by the dispatcher, not even by mail. I sat back in absolute wonderment and I asked who is responsible for this, this is so refreshing to come in and see this.

Mr. Yakabuski: Hon. Mr. Randall, of course.

Mrs. M. Renwick: The man said "Mr. Cattermole is my director." I think, Mr. Chairman, the minister can go home and sleep peacefully about broken accoutrements that occur when you rent suites, even when you live in them. This was being handled in such a proficient way that it was really something to watch.

I asked about a family that had been housed there. We get a lot of applications,

Mr. Chairman, about housing, but this one particularly hit through to me because it was a family which had adopted four children. The father had two jobs to make an income for the family. The children ranged in age from two little girls of 6 or 7 to an adult boy of maybe 14 and an adult boy, I think of 18 or 19.

When the father had two jobs they paid $195 a month for a garden home. Once that was gone they had to apply to OHC. They were accommodated, fortunately, because they had fallen behind in rent since the father's gall-bladder operation. The mother is a frail woman who weighs 89 pounds and is not the sort of woman of whom you can say, "Mother can go out to work," although I gather father and mother, when things got tough, worked doing offices in the evening.

I phoned the Ontario Housing Corporation, and I got very good service in looking at this family and assessing their problem and assessing their needs, and they were placed in one of these units—not in a garden home but not in a high-rise either, Mr. Chairman, which was a bit of help. There are doctors' letters on file at the corporation on this particular family.

I would just like to point out to the minister that when the corporation is placing a family, of necessity, they have to deal with each individual case. The minister will say, yes they do, and he will stand behind his corporation, but I would like to ask him to look into this one particular problem and to look into it well. When I went round to see the family they did not fit very well into the unit.

The first unit offered this family was in Regent Park, and because one of the children had come from Sumach Street at a tender age, they did not want to go back into that area. Mr. Minister, I think you would understand that as quickly as anybody; that with a child from that area, and friends of the family and so on in that area, they did not want to go back into that area. They will have on their record that they refused the first opening that was given to them. But they did take the one at Kennedy Road in my riding and when I went to see them in it, they had these three bedrooms, very close, I guess, to the size that the minister has said.

One of the children is emotionally disturbed. This is the eldest boy who came from that area. They tried to give him a little privacy because of his age, so they gave him a room to himself. That room was 10 by 12. Then they gave a room to the 14-year-old boy and I measured that room off as being 8 x 8, Mr. Chairman. I said that must be wrong; I had better phone back, because that room I believe, if the minister will check, would be 8 x 9.

I do not know how you arrange this sort of arrangement. No two children, unless they were of a very young age, in bunk beds, could fit into an 8 x 9 bedroom. In the third bedroom, which is 10½ x 7, they put bunk beds and put the 6- and 4-year-old there! The mother is on a couch and the father has a cot, a saran chair, that he puts a mattress on and sleeps on in the living room in order to give the older boy a little privacy, because of his emotional disturbance.

This is something that could occur, and I would think that with all the requests for transfers and so on that come into the corporation, this family would have been considered a family suitable to transfer. You can see that family did not fit into those spaces; I do not know how people are going to fit into bedrooms this size in Chapel Glen. The sort of problem that I think is unbelievable occurred in the case of this family already housed in one of these small units. There are on file now letters from doctors about chronic anxiety that is developing in the father because of the operation now causing financial difficulty for them. Also, this letter states that one of the four adopted children has had psychiatric attention.

The letter from Dr. Robert Volpe says:

It is certainly, therefore, in their best medical interests to be in an apartment which is not cramped for space, as crowding will aggravate the disorder noted above.

I do not think that doctors like Dr. Robert Volpe, MD, FRC, (CFACP) put themselves on the line except for a case with which they are really familiar. The doctor has written this particular letter about Mr. McArthur and family, saying:

Dear Mrs. Meredith:

The above-mentioned family has asked me to write you on their behalf. Both Mr. and Mrs. McArthur have been patients of mine for several years. Mrs. McArthur suffers from malabsorption syndrome and spastic colon. As a result of these illnesses and her basic temperament, she has become an extremely anxious person. Similarly, Mr. McArthur suffers from severe chronic anxiety state, largely related to his own financial and domestic problems. Furthermore, one of their four adopted children has had psychiatric attention. It is certainly, therefore, in their best medical interests to be in an apartment which is not cramped for space, as crowding will certainly aggravate the disorders already noted above.

That letter had to go to the corporation, Mr. Chairman and Mr. Minister, because it just did not seem possible for Mrs. McArthur to communicate to Mrs. Meredith in placement that the family merited consideration for a transfer.

This I would say to the minister, after going in the front door of that operation on Kennedy Road and seeing it run so well, and to go out to the back and talk to this family once more—the minister will recall that three years ago, or two years ago, I had the unpleasant experience of having to read into the record the difficulties I had had personally with Mrs. Meredith of stating that a woman was emotionally disturbed; of stating to a press reporter that a woman was emotionally disturbed; of stating to a tenant who was going to be moved near the woman, that the woman was emotionally disturbed, when the woman was not at all, Mr. Chairman.

After all this time, to come back and hear what I have heard from Mrs. McArthur distresses me. Mrs. McArthur went to Mr. Renault. Mr. Renault, being the fine worker that he is, telephoned the corporation and relayed the full story of this family over the phone to Mrs. Meredith at the corporation. Mrs. McArthur tells me that when Mrs. Meredith spoke to her she said, "What is the problem?" The problem had already been placed very clearly, Mr. Chairman, according to Mrs. McArthur, and I just do not understand the attitude. If it is the attitude that is going to permeate placement, I would be really worried, but I want to make it quite clear to the minister that in placing this family, I found good co-operation in placement.

It was dealing with somebody else, and I found excellent co-operation and understanding for a family with four adopted children. If they have no place to live, we end up with four adopted children back in children's aid and that message got through. But Mrs. Meredith, back from her trip to Europe, should have been the essence of diplomacy and helpfulness to a woman who weighed 89 pounds and is sick.

The conversation I am told went along the lines of, "As far as I am concerned, you are already placed." The woman made the foolish statement of, "Politics got me in here and politics will get me out," which I, of course, would not approve of, because we do not want people placed this way. But what do you do when you see four adopted children in a family? You pressure and pressure until you get them accommodation. In spite of any faulty remarks, if Mrs. McArthur would like to say to the minister that those were pretty faulty remarks of Mrs. Meredith's: You just have the advantage and I pointed this out to the head placement person three years ago, that she and I would not make the mistakes of taking a unit and backing down; we would not make the mistakes that these women make when they are calling OHC in desperation. It behooves both her and me to bend over backward to understand the problem and to deal with it the very best way we can.

This lady tells me that she said, as a last approach, "Well, would you do me one favour, Mrs. Meredith?" and she says, Mrs. Meredith replied, "I will if I can." And she breathed a sigh of relief and said, "Would you consider me for a town house?" and she says she was told, "I would not even think of giving you a town house." I am told, Mr. Minister, that she argued with the woman that she was not an eviction case.

Well, they were so far behind in their rent, and I got full co-operation from Mr. Hutchison, the property manager of A. E. LePage. I wrote him the following letter on May 9:

Dear Mr. Hutchison:

Thank you for the courtesy extended to me regarding the need for Mr. McArthur to leave unit 134 at 550 Brimorton Drive in Scarborough. I am sure it was the sincere efforts of yourself in allowing the eviction to be put off for another week, and Mr. McArthur's own remarkable efforts of trying to keep a family together in this day and age of spiralling costs, and of the Ontario Housing Corporation to give a unit to the family that this situation has turned out so well.

That is the first paragraph of the letter, and the rest deals with the man's financial position and so on, which I do not really think is important at this particular time.

Mr. Yakabuski: Come on; get it all in Hansard.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Can I say to the minister that there is no good in having work—well, the corporation is very concerned about its public relations. If we ask, Mr. Minister, how many dollars you have spent this year on public relations, it would be astronomical, and the public relations is going down the drain if people are being talked to in that fashion. I can only go by the fact that when I talked to the lady—she has had one conversation with the corporation; the corporation has several in a day—she seemed to remember very clearly the statements that were made.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You have just said the lady was in bad health.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Her husband is in bad health too—

Mrs. M. Renwick: It is nice to stand by them, Mr. Minister, but they cannot—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Just let me finish. And her youngsters are in trouble. I want to say to you—and I do not say it facetiously—there are always three stories: yours, mine and the truth.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Okay.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Now, you are getting your story from a lady who has got a neurotic problem and she is going to tell you things that perhaps may or may not have taken place. I just suggest to you that since you have given us her name, I will have it investigated by my housing authorities, and we will look into the McArthur family and see just what their circumstances are. I cannot completely buy the fact that Mrs. McArthur is 100 per cent right and everybody at the housing corporation is wrong, because we are not there to do the kind of things that Mrs. McArthur suggests that we have done. There may be other circumstances, and I would like to look at the other circumstances before I pass judgement on it, and I quite prefer to look into it.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister, do you have cassette tape recorders from the corporation when you go out to interview people?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No. Mr. Lorimer, who is a member of the NDP party, uses tape recorders every time he comes here.

Mr. Peacock: Who, Ken Lorimer?

Hon. Mr. Randall: He sure does. I think he goes to bed with one.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Well, Mr. Chairman, it is a pretty serious problem, and it is a difficult one for me to deal with. I have gone through so many of these problems concerning the same placement officer, that I just isolated one.

If you want to go on doing business this way and keep reaping the cost, while it is distasteful, it certainly is something that you ought to be concerned with. I would think that phone calls should be monitored of people handling the public, and I just do not think they should be handled by somebody who speaks the way Mrs. Meredith spoke to me one day. You want to take on somebody who is not emotionally disturbed. I will say uncategorically, Mr. Chairman, that I have been spoken to in a fashion that I would certainly not put up with ordinarily.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me say, also, that you have spoken to some of my civil servants in a way that I would not permit you to speak to them, if I was around.

Mr. Yakabuski: Oh, no!

Mrs. M. Renwick: Name one, Mr. Minister. Name one. Will you name one civil servant to whom I have been rude, because I depend on civil servants a great deal, and I can only have the highest respect for them.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am not naming any one civil servant; I am saying that I have had reported to me some of the conversations on the telephone with you and some of your business to some of our areas, and I am suggesting to you that there are two sides to every story. For me to sit here and point the finger at you, I do not have the evidence; neither do you.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, when I first complained about Mrs. Meredith dealing with me over the telephone about a Mrs. Benedetto, Mr. Suters asked me to put it in writing, and I said I would not ordinarily have thought of doing so right away. This was one of my very first calls to the Ontario Housing Corporation. But if Mr. Suters wanted it in writing, I would put it in writing. Finally, when we finished our conversation, Mr. Suters had pretty well said, "Do not worry about this any further; I realize that there are problems. Will you come down and see me?" Fine.

Now, I would say to the minister, if you have any complaint about any conversation that I have had with any person whatsoever concerning his work, that he put up, because I have worked with people in the public for most of my life, especially on telephones, and I simply have never left myself open to the sort of remark that the minister has just made. The minister can substantiate the remark or withdraw the remark—one or the other.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me say this. I said earlier there are always three sides to the story. I get other sides too. I will take your word for it that you have not made these remarks. But I simply suggest to you that you are not showing too much consideration for people who are browbeaten and bullied and cried to and pushed around and pressured in the Ontario Housing Corporation, day in and day out, by people whose circumstances perhaps cause them to be somewhat neurotic.

We have had, as I said in the House some time ago, people walk in and break glass bottles on the counter and chase people around the office. We have had to put a policeman in there to protect the staff. You do not realize these things. Let me suggest we recognize that when people are in desperate circumstances, they will say and do things that possibly they would not do under normal circumstances.

We recognize that; we try to take that into consideration. But if at any time you find any person on my staff who is discourteous to you or to the staff, I hope you would complain to me and let me correct it or do something about it. Because I can tell you right now that the most difficult job the housing corporation has is to maintain good public relations with people, who are egged on and they come in and dump garbage in our offices. I had a group walk in today at 1 o'clock. I met a Globe and Mail reporter, and he said, "What time are you meeting the delegation today?" I said, "What delegation?" "Oh," he said, "do you not know there is a delegation coming to your office between 1 and 2?" I said, "I do not." And the delegation was there when I came out for my lunch. I did not make an appointment with them, but if I had not seen them, I would have been accused of brushing them off, so I took the time to see them.

I do not appreciate these confrontations. I do not believe that, as some of the members in your party say—and I have heard one of them say it—"If you want to get in with the politicians, you take a physical presence there and scare them." And I just want to tell you that nobody scares me; I do not give a damn how many people come. If we are wrong any time, I would ask you call me personally and I will check into it, but I will not stand for anybody abusing my staff unless they have got absolute proof, and that is my responsibility to the housing corporation or to anybody else in my department.

If they are wrong, I will chastise them. I have done this all my life in industry, and I will do it in my own way. But I have to have the facts. I am not going to take some woman's word for it, who says over the phone she was abused, and you tell me she is 89 pounds, her husband has got ulcers or something or other and she has youngsters she is having problems with.

I think you can recognize that we get many of those people on the phone every day of the week, and they are going to let themselves go, because they are upset and they are distraught. We can understand that and we try to deal with it. But sometimes the only way you can stop those people is to be very brutal with them, and I have some people come in my office that I have to be brutal with.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Well, Mr. Chairman, I might say to the minister that it is not worth very much time to be spent on it. I think it behooves the minister to take a look around and talk to some other people—I am not saying people at the Ontario Housing Corporation; I am saying Mrs. Meredith, as I believe, chief placement officer, just simply lets her emotions and her way of dealing with people come to the surface. I think the minister realizes that I cannot prove this, unless I can sit in and listen on telephone conversations, which maybe I will have to do. Because I am surprised that it is still going on after all this time. The minister knows we are in a position where we find it very difficult to prove several things about the corporation that really come up as a question mark.

For instance, there are 50 empty units at Birchmount and Finch, or there were last week when I was there, and 200 empty apartment units, while Mr. Wells, the minister for that area, and his assistant Larry Kent, were having to tell a family of five sleeping in a basement with pipes and furnace right beside their five beds that there is no accommodation for them, and we go up and look at the units and we find them sitting there empty.

Of course, the corporation can say to me, "We have offers out on every one of those 53 garden garden homes." I have no way of knowing whether they have or not. I am simply saying they are empty now; they were finished at the end of December, they were opened in the spring and it was no courtesy to the minister responsible for constituents in that area to have the same people who were on the waiting list for housing go by all these empty units.

I know there will be explanations of checking and so on, but we cannot prove these things, I cannot prove that Mrs. MacArthur's conversation was as it was; it simply sounds awfully logical to me.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me just go back. I think that Mr. Clow, the chairman of the board, went on television the same night you did—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Oh yes, he got up there the same morning, Mr. Minister, because the CBC fellows started phoning and asking about the empty units. I got out there and found the director of the corporation on the site. A most unusual experience.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, because you would get hold of the radio and television people and have them out there ahead of us. Any time you—

Mrs. M. Renwick: It would not do much good to have them out there after—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Whenever you go there, you make sure that the television stations are well notified. The press are notified before we are that there is going to be a confrontation. We are wise to the political pressures applied to us by your party, and I am quite prepared to meet them on your ground. And whenever I find that you have pulled that kind of a stunt, I am quite prepared to have the right kind of people there to answer the questions, and under no circumstances would we leave buildings sit unoccupied if we could put people in them and take the pressures off our neck. With your knowledge of housing you should know we would not let those sit from December until the end of May without putting people in there, if we could put them in.

You recognize that those apartments were not finished. It was only a few months ago that your party again organized a group of people to track after a private landlord and give him hell because they had moved in before the apartment was finished and they were charged full rents, and the guy said, "Well, look, I am not going to pay my rent unless you get the elevators running and fix the sidewalks outside." They were marching around here at Queen's Park screaming about the landlord taking their money and not giving them proper accommodation.

We are not going to move them into our housing developments until the elevators are running, the water in the taps is turned on, and people can move in and they have not got a flock of complaints in the first 24 hours. We get enough complaints with a new building as you recognize, without putting them in when the building is halfway finished.

I have checked into that situation you referred to and I say that our people were right in not letting those people move into the building until it was finished. If I am wrong, I hope you prove I am wrong, but we would be delighted to get the people in as of yesterday. We do not want to see those buildings empty. Why would I have 250 families on my hands, screaming like hell for housing, when I have 250 vacancies? It does not make sense to me.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, it does not make sense to anybody. This is nothing to do with my party. I doubt very much if my party has ever spent much time trying to assess how many empty Ontario Housing Corporation units there are between the time they are constructed and the time they are rented. You know what sort of staff we have—half a secretary each. You know that we do not really have the time to do that.

Mr. Chairman, I raised this with the minister as the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), said to me, "who put you up to this sort of thing?" I would like to tell the minister just exactly who. I do not want to get away from Chapel Glen, but this is the sort of thing that is so hard to prove when you are a legislator and you want to see those units filled.

The minister has to take into consideration that I have been preconditioned about empty OHC units by the 60 units in my riding in October, 1967, which had been sitting there then for nearly three months, with grass, with trees, with water, with heat. Six units were inspected and six were released. Six more were inspected the next week, and when I phoned the corporation they had nothing on the agenda for the balance of the 60 units—of the first units—at McCowan Road and Eglinton.

Mr. Chairman, I am preconditioned in this fashion. As a candidate in that election, just like the minister, I was looking at what was what. I did not want to be caught in that election, seeing George Peck, then member for that area, cutting a red ribbon on those 60 units a month later and me sitting back saying, "Well, at last they are going." So I made it my business one rainy night to find out if they really were empty; if they really were heated, they really were operative.

When I called the corporation, Mr. Chairman, with all due respect to the minister—and he would do the same thing if he were in my shoes—those units were on the market.

They were on the market, because they could not be filled with people till two months later, maybe, by the time the people give a month's notice, but they were on the OHC agenda, and they were renting them. All right.

How did they do it? They called on a group of women from a nearby church. They picked up the pieces of wood, the little shavings and so on. They had a little cardboard box outside each unit with this junk in and those units were ready to rent. To me it is the same thing if they have a drain plug missing, or a curtain rod missing.

When I went to the next empty units that I was asked to look at out in Martingrove, there were 35 large family units empty. There was a pile of dirt at the back patio and a square of cement broken which needed to be replaced.

Now I raise this with the minister, because it seems like an embarrassment, surely, to him, to have empty housing units sitting anywhere in the city of Toronto. The minister, Mr. Chairman, may be able to rationalize with me that there are all sorts of reasons why these units are empty, but try rationalizing it to the man in W. J. Realty who manages the high-rises in Flemingdon Park. Try rationalizing it with him, who raised it with me about the Birchmount and Finch units. He raised it about Kennedy Road units, Mr. Minister. He said that, good God, if he had a building like Kennedy Road on his hands with anything higher than a 10 per cent vacancy, he would be in trouble.

The minister can try rationalizing it with the public health workers in the neighbourhood; with the school teachers in the neighbourhood; with the bylaw man who had to go and look at the house where this family had to move in with their brother, and five children. These are all the people who have raised the issue of the empty units at Birchmount and Finch, and Mr. Chairman, I might just have got through to the minister on this empty unit problem, if he stops to think about all these people.

Somebody, unsolicited, phoned my office and gave me the exact units that were sitting there vacant, Mr. Chairman. I did not even have to go out on the project. That is how concerned the general public is now.

I was this concerned two years ago when I raised it with the minister. It is how I happened to end up in that same development that Mrs. Grey moved herself into. I could not get the TV people out there to shoot those empty units, if the minister will recall, because the Trudeau election had just been called, but boy, when I saw Mrs. Grey was in there I got them out very quickly, because they had a reason to come.

I think that is all water under the bridge, Mr. Minister, but I would say that we cannot always prove—we do not always know, but we are in a position to know where the flak comes to us: "Why have you got those empty units?" The minister is nodding his head affirmatively. I hope he will say to himself: "My God, get CMHC and OHC through those buildings!"

Where is Mr. Else? Is he here? Mr. Else was out there and Mr. Clow was out there. My goodness, I felt I had got the corporation working that morning when I got out there. And what little they needed, Mr. Chairman—Mr. Clow said: "We need grass, we have no landscaping out in front." I think that we know that these are things that some people would be glad to be accommodated without.

Mr. Minister, when you had Chapel Glen before North York board, you got the first amendment to increase the density, to shorten the distance to the edge of the property and to shorten the distance between the buildings.

Then the Metropolitan Toronto planning board, land use division, made a report on the official plan amendment of North York. I think their comments in that report are very relative to the problems that will no doubt be forthcoming at Flemington Park.

Their comments are as follows, Mr. Chairman:

The proposals presently before the board would increase the permitted number of dwelling units from 5,000 to 6,800 units and, while no specific information is available concerning the bedroom composition of the units, it is quite likely that, as a result of Ontario Housing Corporation participation in this project, the ultimate population might be in the order of 25,000 persons, as against the 15,500 population on the original plan.

What would the minister's comments be on that—25,000 persons is what, Mr. Minister? One little brief on the subject says that it is larger than the city of North Bay. How does the minister feel that he can put an extra 10,000 people in there above the original plan?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am sorry. We were talking about population density.

Mrs. M. Renwick: We were talking about the fact that the metropolitan planning board figures that the ultimate population in Flemington Park might be 25,000 persons, as against the 15,500 that were originally planned for that area.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I say this, I think if you are talking about 3,200 units you are talking about a family unit of about four. If you took an average of about four, this is what you are talking about in the new area with the 3,200 families. As I said, this has been carefully considered by the North York council.

Mrs. M. Renwick: How many thousand are in there?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Did you not say there were 25,000 in there now? I will take your word for it.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Well, how many are in there now? There are not 25,000 in there now. There will be 25,000 in there when you put up your Chapel Glen development.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We will be adding four times 3,200.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Twelve thousand people.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is about half of what you have got in Flemington Park, in the old section. If I remember the figures correctly, that is the population,

I think in that area, that is according to North York, taking into consideration the traffic count, Mr. Cass and everybody else involved figures that the density is all right or they would not give us a permit.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I would like to go further on the comment. Bennett says:

In the report submitted to the board in 1959 concern was expressed for potential traffic problems and recreation space. Now that the population is to be substantially increased, these matters are considered to be of utmost importance in the evaluation of the new proposals.

Traffic: In 1959, when Flemington Park was originally evaluated from the point of view of traffic generation, it was proposed to provide 5,000 dwelling units and a 35-acre industrial area which it was estimated would contain about one million square feet, 70 per cent of which would be industrial plants, and 30 per cent in offices.

Since that time, about 700,000 square feet of offices have been built on about a third of the industrial site and it is understood that similarly intensive development is being contemplated for the balance. The current proposal would increase the number of residential units by 36 per cent to 6,800 units and, as previously indicated, the population may be increased by a substantially greater percentage.

At the same time, changes have taken place in the anticipated development of the surrounding areas. The lands west of Don Mills Road are being developed for the Ontario Museum of Science and Technology instead of the park development originally contemplated. The IBM company to the northwest of Don Mills Road and Eglinton has completed a substantial expansion and is likely to undertake further expansion.

The industrial area to the northeast of Don Mills Road and Eglinton has been developed largely with offices producing far greater employment in the area than was originally projected.

This intensification of development has taken place in an area already subject to great traffic pressures owing to the shortage of arterial road capacity resulting from the breaking up of the regular grid pattern by the Don Valley, Victoria Park Avenue, the first arterial road to the east, is two miles away and Bayview Avenue, two miles to the west, is the first arterial through road since Leslie Street terminates at Eglinton Avenue.

The same problem exists with east-west facilities between Eglinton Avenue and Bloor Street, a distance of 2.5 miles. The only through roads consist of devious routes to the Leaside Bridge and through the valley by Pottery Road. A degree of congestion was anticipated in this area in the metropolitan transportation study, but development trends indicate that the problem will be even more critical.

Increased development in the general area of Eglinton and Don Mills Road has required construction of a grade separation east of the parkway with ramps to Eglinton Avenue linking Flemingdon Park with the Wynford Drive area north of Eglinton. This improvement may help to relieve the existing heavy turning movement at Don Mills Road and Eglinton, but it is questionable whether it will provide any substantial relief to Don Mills Road south of Eglinton. From a traffic aspect it would be undesirable for the additional development, above the 5,000 dwelling units already approved, to take place in the Flemingdon area, one of the most congested areas within Metropolitan Toronto.

It is suggested, therefore, that consideration of the additional residential development now proposed east of the parkway, 1,800 units, be deferred pending a reappraisal of the traffic problems in the general area between Eglinton and Bloor and between Bayview and Victoria Park. This study should have regard for the possibility of connecting Bayview Avenue to Leslie Street and of crossing the Don Valley in the vicinity of St. Clair, as has been requested by the borough of East York. In this connection, the East York council has forwarded the following resolution to the community planning Branch.

Now, what does the minister say about traffic? In this assessment, it is suggested that consideration of the additional residential development now proposed east of the parkway be deferred. The minister had said he is now going ahead both east and west of the parkway. Was there a reappraisal of the traffic problems?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me say that regardless of the report that you have read, it has all been gone over before. We have gone over it with a fine-tooth comb and talked to the traffic people, and talked to North York. The traffic report you have been reading was approved by Metro before OHC purchased the property, and as you know that Overlea Bridge is going across.

Mrs. M. Renwick: This report was approved before OHC purchased the property?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, if that is the report I think you are reading, it was approved before we bought the property. Overlea Road is going across the valley, as I understand it, so that it will affect only 1,400 and some units which are going on the Don Mills side, if we want to refer to the west side. So that is 1,400 times four we are talking about there, as far as population goes. The people in the 1,800 units that are going adjacent to the Don Valley expressway are going to use a different access. They will not be using that same area and we—

Mrs. M. Renwick: The people on the west side will not be.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The east side will be using a different type of access, because Overlea Road, as we understand it through Mr. Cass of Metro, is going right across the valley and does not affect or touch the people in the 1,800 units across the Don Valley.

So we are only talking about 1,400 families added to that. Insofar as all the other properties built up around there are concerned—the commercial properties, the IBM, the centre—all that has been carefully studied by the North York people.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Is the minister saying that the 1,800 units should be 1,400?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, no!

I am saying the 1,400 are on this side of the Don roadway, on the west side; and the 1,800 are on the other side of the Don Valley. So the 1,800 will not be in the same traffic area that you are talking about here. That was discussed with the Metro road people and their officials and nobody appeared before OMB to tell us that the project could not go ahead on account of traffic.

They looked it over, they went to Imperial Oil, Bata Shoe Company, Olympia and York; all the institutions up there, the federation of labour—

Mr. Peacock: You always quote the federation at us when you can.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think they went in after we made the deal. Everybody in there had the opportunity to come to OMB and put in their objections. It was carefully studied, I know, by OMB before we got the approval. While it is nice to have it on the record, nonetheless we feel that we have complied with all the regulations. We have met all the conditions required of us and we fully intend to build the units.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to the minister that this report on the North York official plan, amendment 239, zoning bylaw 22255 in subdivision T18152; that is the bylaw which the minister, or which the developer I guess, had before North York. I have it here too. He had it before North York for approval of the increased density, and the smaller amount of space around the building. So this is a current report. This is not anything before your purchase.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That was before we bought it. Mr. Goyette tells me that was before we bought it and the density situation, as I told you earlier, was considered to be about 3,600 or 3,700. It was reduced to 3,200 some odd.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Before you bought it? All these things had to be ironed out before you bought it!

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, some of them did. They could not all be ironed out, as I have said—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Okay, I think the minister would agree with me that the Don Valley Parkway is already over-travelled, and that—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): That is why we want to push the Spadina Road expressway.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think Spadina should go ahead. I do not know what anybody else thinks.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister what are his answers specifically then in light of these comments about recreation space, because this is the major concern of the people who are trying to assist those people who live in Flemingdon Park to obtain a decent sort of opportunity to enjoy all facets of living; not just of working and coming home and children out on grass where they are not really allowed to play ball games because of windows and so on.

From the report: "The parkland or public open space"—this is Metropolitan Toronto Planning Board's land-use division report:

The parkland or public open space proposed for the ultimate development of Flemingdon Park comprises about 13.4 acres, some of which is ravine land and part of which is the site of an arena presently under construction. Land for playing-field purposes will be provided either on school sites or on Hydro right-of-way. The acreage is not generous, particularly now that a potential population of up to 25,000 persons is likely.

It is appreciated that in conjunction with the various rental developments in the project, various private open spaces are available for passive recreational use and children's playgrounds, and that the Hydro right-of-way may be available for playing fields for a fairly long period of time. It is also true, however, that when the original project was considered, the possibility existed of using parkland west of Don Mills Road and the two pieces of table land east of the parkway.

The land west of Don Mills Road, however, is no longer available, and the effect of the present proposal is to develop the table lands east of the parkway which would make access to the valley more difficult. The valley lands east of the parkway are used at the present time by a private golf course associated with Flemingdon Park, the Hydro right-of-way, and to the south land owned by the city of Toronto, and the Metropolitan Toronto and Region Conservation Authority.

It is suggested that the proposed Flemingdon Park community of up to 25,000 persons is of sufficient size to justify further studies as to the need for use of the valley for public park purposes. This matter should be resolved before development is initiated.

One proposal which has been made involves the filling of the land owned by the city, both to serve as parkland and to provide for a link road between the two pieces of table land east of the parkway. While the need for the road link is appreciated, the Metropolitan Toronto parks and conservations technical advisory committee is opposed to the filling of this attractive natural area and suggests that the road link be provided, if required, by a minimal fill programme, or the use of a structure. The MTRCA has already requested that the city lands be transferred to the authority for conservation purposes.

It is suggested that the future use of the city lands which has not as yet been resolved, together with the general question of park development in the valley to serve Flemingdon Park, could usefully be resolved at the time as traffic studies determine the future viability of additional residential development east of the parkway.

Now what happened, Mr. Minister, to that recommendation? Did you resolve the need of the use of the valley lands for public purposes? Did you come to an agreement with the MTRCA? Could I ask the minister, did the developer, in fact, originally plan to build down those slopes in a way that no developer has built in the city of Toronto since Hurricane Hazel?

Hon. Mr. Randall: If you will draw a breath—you talk faster than I do, and I did not think anybody could talk faster than I.

Mrs. M. Renwick: We are both salesmen.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me just read off something:

In addition to swimming pools and other recreational facilities, which will serve each of the three phases, Modular Precasts will build a 10,000 square foot community centre on Grenoble Drive and contribute $25,000 toward purchase of equipment for the centre which will be operated by the North York Parks and Recreational Department.

That is in addition to the community centre already there, which is used as a community centre by the people. There are 10,000 square feet there; roughly, you are talking about 10 bundles of 1,000 square feet apiece. So it is no mean achievement. Across on the east side, there will be two community centres built to handle the people in that 1,800-unit development. I think there is adequate recreational space. This is all worked out with North York with reference to moving in and moving out as far as the traffic is concerned.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Are you saying there will be three community centres?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, for the 3,200 people. It has already been established.

Mrs. M. Renwick: For the 3,200 units.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, 3,200 units.

Mrs. M. Renwick: How many people? How many children?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I said an average of four per family, but they are not all children as you can appreciate. Maybe you get half and half, I do not know.

Mr. Peacock: Are any of the buildings going to be on valley land or are they all on the table land?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, they are on the table land. The valley land is owned by Metro; and what do they have, a golf course down there, or a park?

Mrs. M. Renwick: The Metro conservation authorities—

Hon. Mr. Randall: The Metro conservation authority has it.

Mrs. M. Renwick: The Metro conservation authority tell me they think they have got to stop there with the developer, or get the developer to stop building down the side. I am very glad to see that because if no developer has built down the side since Hurricane Hazel, I am sure that the government should be the last people to have to explain why buildings have taken a landslide.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will tell you what I would do if I had my way. I would build houses on Scarborough Bluffs and stop the erosion that has taken place. I know exactly how to do it.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I do not. I would not challenge the minister.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The erosion takes place when you do not engineer to make sure that it is not washed away.

Mr. Peacock: Have you thought of helping Governor Rhodes of Ohio in his campaign for re-election by helping him to build that causeway across from—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I have not done. No, he has not called for my services.

Mr. Peacock: He has to know about you.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I might tell you, the last thing he did—I am sorry I did not have the figures when we were talking about EIO—he came up here and got 10 prospective factories out of Toronto to go to Ohio. We are not the only ones trying to get industry to come from other jurisdictions.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I gather from what the minister said there are going to be about 12,000 more people go into the community.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, 10,000 to 12,000. I do not know how big the families will be. We said an average of four per cent.

Mrs. M. Renwick: He says there will be three community centres. My understanding is that the developers put up $100,000 toward a community centre, but how far does that go in this day? Could the minister or his staff elaborate on the size of the community centres, when they will be completed? Are they going—

Hon. Mr. Randall: As I have said, the first one we know about is the one in phase 1, which is 10,000 square feet. I would imagine the others would not be any less than that, perhaps a little larger. We do not have the exact figures on the two on the east side of the Donway in the 1,800 development.

Mrs. M. Renwick: So there will be one community centre of 10,000 square feet for these 11,000 additional people.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Phase 1 would be 1,400 units.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is 1,400 by 4, right?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Is there an indoor pool there at all, Mr. Chairman? Could I ask the minister?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, there will be a swimming pool. I presume some will have sauna baths in them.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Is a library going in there at all?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Both indoor and outdoor pools, I am told, in the buildings.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Is a library going in there at all?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know about the library. I said day care centres this afternoon.

Mrs. M. Renwick: You said an ecumenical church? An ecumenical centre?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, if we can get the sky pilot to agree.

Mrs. M. Renwick: What kind of stores are going in there, Mr. Chairman? Could I ask the minister?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not think there are any major commercial establishments there. They will use the Don Mills shopping centre or go to Leaside.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Or the Flemingdon Park shopping centre?

Hon. Mr. Randall: If there is a possibility of putting in local shops I understand that they are going to give it some consideration.

Mr. Peacock: Has the planning board not denied you commercial space right in the development? I thought you were up there in March before the planning board to ask for commercial space.

Mr. A. A. Hermant (Ontario Housing Corporation): The question of commercial space, I think, was deleted.

Mrs. M. Renwick: In their summary of their report, Mr. Chairman, they said:

It is suggested that the proposal which involves a substantial increase in the population for Flemingdon Park should be accepted for that portion west of the parkway, which is in conformity with the original scheme; the remainder of the proposal, involving 1,800 units, should, however, be deferred for further study of the traffic implications for the land east of the parkway. This study should have regard for the changes which have taken place in the general area, including the Ontario Museum of Science and Technology and for the development potential of the balance of Flemington Park industrial area.

The proposal would call for a material alteration of the population distribution anticipated in the Metropolitan plan and might also materially affect the transportation aspects of that plan.

No particular justification has been advanced for the increase in population for this specific area as against any other part of the Don Valley, or for that matter of the metropolitan area. At the same time it must be recognized that other parts of the metropolitan area, having regard for current transportation proposals, could more easily absorb the additional population.

Well, Mr. Chairman, it is obvious that you could not very well take that project out to some other part of Metropolitan Toronto, but would the minister say whether this traffic study has actually taken place? I see that these are the 1,800 units which the minister says will go ahead, in addition to the 1,400; but has the study taken place?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mrs. M. Renwick: And it has received approval?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It has all received approval. What you are doing is flogging a dead horse as far as I am concerned, because we have gone over it very carefully. This is one of the problems we thought might stop the development. We have had that report, we have gone over it and talked about it, talked to everybody involved; and as I said this afternoon, it is now clear for us to go ahead and I see no reason why it should not.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would say to the minister that it may be a dead horse—

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I ask the date of that report?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Yes, it is the 1968 report, when the first proposals were—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, that is a long time ago.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Yes, but the situation has not bettered, it has worsened, if anything, in that area, Mr. Chairman—the density of traffic in that area I mean. There was no FL building there in those days.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Maybe the traffic was not being handled efficiently in those days, maybe they counted on a more efficient traffic flow back in 1968 and they are just now getting up to their limit.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would say to the minister, as he would say to me, the people who are going to live in this area are going to need helicopters to get downtown, even if it is what the minister calls a downtown location. I would like the minister to agree with me that while this report is not yesterday's report, it is a report showing exactly what had to be considered before the minister could go ahead. It is very difficult for me, I am not a planner, it is very hard to understand; except that politically I understand.

Someone at the planning board says: "When you see our report you will see we were very critical and scathing all through it, and they finally approved it." They tell me they approved it because North York wanted it. Well the planning board people do not seem to want it!

It depends on who wants this sort of thing. Then it finally ends up in the hands of the Ontario Municipal Board, which is an instrument of the very people who want the project in there.

But it just does not add up that these things are not important!

These are the things, Mr. Chairman, that are very important to people who are looking for homes under the HOME plan; and hoping that they would be homes that would be something really worth having, in an area that was free of this kind of problem; and in an area that was planned with recreation, and was planned as far as traffic is concerned.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will bet the hon. member will be one of our first customers.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I think I will probably be heading east.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me just say this. You know and I know there is a great deal of difference between the council and the planners. It is very difficult to get them to agree. The planners have their ideas of what they would like to see and the council have to deal with basic economics and say what can be provided. Between those two positions is a compromise.

I think what we have arrived at here, with North York and the officials involved—including the planning board and the board of education, the traffic people, the religious denominations, you name them—I think we have arrived at a position where we have compromised as far as we can compromise. They have agreed we have gone overboard to make it a viable community, a good community to live in at prices we say people can afford. We are prepared to start digging holes and get the project up.

Now we can go back over the traffic reports and throw a lot of ties on the railway tracks, but it is not going to stop the development because it is already in the works and it is moving.

Mrs. M. Renwick: When was the new traffic report, the report that would be more recent than my Metropolitan Toronto Planning Board report, completed? And what did it say?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know if we have that here or not. All we know is we presented it to the OMB and OMB—did they not approve it? It was the developer's job to get the site approved and he was able to do that, apparently, by satisfying the planning board and North York.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Well what is the access road then? Is the access road absolutely settled and is it absolutely cleared? I think that the metropolitan conservation people were involved in having to consider that access road. Is that approved?

Hon. Mr. Randall: As far as I know, yes.

Mrs. M. Renwick: And would anybody else have any other view of whether that road is actually approved or not? I was talking to them today and they said they were considering that road.

Hon. Mr. Randall: As far as I know it is fully approved.

Mr. Hermant: I believe the developers agreed to pay the price to the Metro conservation authority for the road to link it up to Eglinton Avenue.

Mrs. M. Renwick: And they have relinquished the land, the link road to Eglinton Avenue?

Mr. Hermant: I think so, yes.

Mrs. M. Renwick: What about the schools, Mr. Chairman? The schools have all said that they will enlarge their schools.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well the boards of education up there have had their innings as far as the Chapel Glen is concerned, we came to an agreement with them some time ago.

Mrs. M. Renwick: They say they will construct future additions? They are not talking about portables I hope? I hope they do not back down on that!

Is a road going to be constructed on the east side of the Don Valley Parkway connecting Grenoble Drive and the Don Valley Parkway bridge with St. Dennis Drive; or has that been done?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Hermant: We have a requirement for approval.

Mrs. M. Renwick: And you are meeting that requirement?

Mr. Hermant: The developer is.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Are you meeting the requirement that no buildings be erected closer to Gateway Boulevard and Grenoble Drive, between Don Mills Road and the road mentioned in condition one, and the line shown in red on the map attached hereto? "Part registered plan M834, and further set back therefrom as may be prescribed by the borough of North York."

Mr. Hermant: I believe those requirements are met.

Mrs. M. Renwick: And the third one: "That a right of way of not less than 86 feet be provided within parcel 5 of schedule A to Bylaw 22,255, to permit the extension of Grenoble Drive across the Don River Valley."

Mr. Hermant: The developer, Olympia and York, was required to meet all of those requirements as a condition of site approval for that contract.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Could I ask if we are dealing with any other parcels, other than 1, 3 and 4, in the future development here? I have not seen any mention until now of parcel 5. Is parcel 5 going to be housing?

Mr. Hermant: I am not sure of your numbering designations. Is that the plan attached to the bylaw?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Yes. Parcel 4 is the one where you were going to do away with the 60 units of housing, and you got those squeezed into the higher density—

Mr. Hermant: Parcel 4 is going to be the ecumenical facility, I believe.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I see.

Mr. Hermant: It is 1.4 acres I think.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The community centre.

Mr. Hermant: That is the community centre. I do not have the plans in front of me, it is very difficult to speak on it without the plans.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well they are going up high so they get their religion, like a duet.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, how could the minister justify cutting down the space between the high-rises when the borough in its plan, I think, called for the distance between buildings to be equal to their height? Is that a rule of thumb? How could the minister cut that—what, in half; was that not cut in half?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not think so. I think it was fully discussed between the developers and the North York building permit division. We were satisfied they were going to deliver the kind of accommodation we required.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I think you know Mr. Minister—Mr. Chairman, to the minister through you—the minister says: “We are going to be satisfied.” Sure, you are going to be satisfied! But what about the families whose buildings are what—may I ask someone to clarify it for me? Is it 50-some-odd-feet between the buildings now?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We do not have the figures. We do not have the plan for this, but then—

Mrs. M. Renwick: I will just find my figures here and I will have it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It has been agreed by North York planning board on the distances between buildings. We meet all the requirements of the North York planning board.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Tell me, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Minister, perhaps your staff would be able to tell you that parcel 4, the 60 units that are out because of some sort of building, be it ecumenical or be it recreation, that what you in fact did there was you got a bylaw passed to increase parcel 1 from 600 units to 609, and parcel 3 from 812 units to 864. The distance between those high rises was cut down. How many 27-floor buildings are there going to be? How many?

Mr. Hermant: I might say that the plan I have for the numbering does not conform to what you have and it is very difficult for me to follow.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Well how many high-rises are there and how far apart are they? That is a simple enough question, I hope.

Mr. Hermant: In phase 1, there are three high-rise buildings, two buildings at 22 stories and one at 26 stories.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Two at 22 and one at 26?

Mr. Hermant: There is also a six-story building on parcel B.

Mrs. M. Renwick: And how about the distance between those high-rises? I think the borough bylaw required 107.5 feet. Do I understand that that has been cut to 50 feet?

Mr. Hermant: I do not have the site plans here.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I must continue to say that it meets all the standards of North York building requirements and I do not think you are gaining anything by—

Mrs. M. Renwick: No.

Hon. Mr. Randall: —by asking if they are 50 feet or 75 feet. We do not give a damn. As far as I am concerned we have met the on-site requirements of North York. They say it is good living accommodation for the people and these questions are purely academic—we are not solving a thing.

So you can keep on asking the questions; I cannot give you any more information than we have got. I do not think you are reading from the same report we have.

We have told you what the facts are and we are not changing. We are just going right ahead where we are. Any comments you have to make are okay with us, but we are going to build the building exactly the way North York says we can build it, and approved by OMB.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, then the minister has lost the point completely because—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I have not lost anything.

Mrs. Renwick: I realize that the minister is going to build the units exactly the way they are.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They are well planned.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I am asking the minister how he justifies the developer getting a change in the bylaw from having to have 107.5 feet between buildings to just 50 feet between buildings? I mean 50 feet between two high-rise buildings is just unbelievable.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Perhaps the developer gave something else away. There have been a number of changes in the site to build this condominium village and perhaps the builder made other concessions which met with the North York bylaws. They made concessions, we made concessions.

All I can suggest to you is that it is approved, it is ready for building and it is going to go ahead.

Mrs. M. Renwick: The minister did not like it when Mr. Hellyer said that he was—

Hon. Mr. Randall: If you want it changed around—

Mrs. M. Renwick: —building inferior accommodation in Toronto and Metropolitan Toronto, and if those high-rise buildings are as this borough of North York information says they are, 50 feet apart, and they have reduced the distance between the property line to just 50 feet also, I do not think that this development is going to be anything that the minister or anybody else can be proud of. It is going to be so—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I can tell you right now, I have seen the plans. I am very proud of them right at this moment. In fact, I would be the first one to move in, if I had the opportunity. Make me an offer.

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): You probably could not get a placement.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Would the minister tell me something about how he is operating the housing authorities? I think the minister listed quite a number of them and I have a manual, but it is an old manual—I do not suppose it is up to date, it is July, 1963. It refers to the No. 3 agreement in the manual, which is the agreement between the housing authority and the province; it refers to specific amounts of money that the housing authority will get per unit for the numbers of units that it looks after.

It refers also to something that I would like someone in the corporation to explain in detail. It refers to a set subsidy for that project. In other words, a subsidy amount below which they shall not fall when they are placing people.

Now we have always assumed from where I sit that people were placed in the Ontario Housing Corporation units on some system that we knew nothing about, but we did not dream that it was being set on a certain subsidy, that the subsidy is being set and the units are being filled to meet that subsidy. Would the minister explain that system?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do you want me to answer that question now?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I think the best thing to do is to answer the questions as they go along. I realize this is probably aggravating for the minister, because obviously if he were a minister of housing he would be spending his time in the Ontario Housing Corporation, and being the Minister of Trade and Development it is quite a different thing. He is not; he is relying on other people and has to. I think it must be tedious, but I would appreciate answers. Is it Mr. Goyette who is sitting beside the minister? I would like his explanation.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me tell you, you can give me the needle all you like about the housing minister. It is not tedious for me. As I said, I do not mind sitting here until Christmas. It does not make a particle of difference, one session, 10 sessions, 50 sessions, I could not care less.

About the questions you ask here, reading from a report I think dated 1963, there has been a number of changes. Perhaps—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Perhaps you could bring me up to date.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Perhaps Mr. Whaley will bring you up to date. We would be glad to.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Okay, would Mr. Whaley bring me up to date on exactly what is paid for each group? I think there were three groups in development that were under 175 units and developments that were above. And would Mr. Whaley explain how the housing authorities are paid for their care and maintenance and so on? What is the formula?

Mr. E. J. Whaley (Ontario Housing Corporation): Mr. Chairman, I think the question is changed. The original question, as I understood it, referred to a target subsidy.

Mrs. M. Renwick: That was the second question, Mr. Whaley, but go ahead. If you would like to give me the second answer first, that is fine.

Mr. Whaley: The No. 3 agreement to which you are referring was an agreement in the days when rental housing was developed on a federal-provincial partnership basis. In accordance with that agreement the housing authorities were required to be subject to certain financial restraints. Their budgets, for example, were subject to the approval of the federal-provincial partnership, and in determining the budgetary requirements the partnership did set a target subsidy, which I would stress was a target.

If my memory serves me, in that particular agreement you will find that there is a reference made to a statement that the target subsidy is X number of dollars, or such amount as the federal-provincial partnership may determine from time to time. In other words, there was provision for the federal-provincial partnership to determine, in the light of a change in economic circumstances, that the subsidy should be increased or decreased.

Mrs. M. Renwick: And is that still in effect now?

Mr. Whaley: We do not develop rental housing under federal-provincial partnership arrangements.

Mrs. M. Renwick: No, but do you still have a subsidy that you take into consideration when you are filling a development, either through OHC directly or through the housing authorities?

Mr. Whaley: There is still a financial constraint on the part of housing authorities that each project, and the subsidy applicable to that particular project, is dealt with on an individual basis. In other words, there is no target subsidy as such.

Mrs. M. Renwick: How is it assessed? Is it a lump subsidy for the project?

Mr. Whaley: Yes, it is dealt with on a project basis, and then the total amount of subsidy is divided by the number of units in order to arrive at a per-unit target subsidy. In other words, depending upon the level of income of a family in a unit, the subsidy to one family, because they are in a lower-income category, would be higher than a family in a higher-income category.

Mrs. M. Renwick: We got a list, Mr. Chairman, from the corporation last year of all the subsidies per development, and they varied from $10, or $11 a month, to as high, in one Barrie development I remember, as $30. There was a development where the subsidy, the final subsidized amount, was as high as, I believe $50 or $60 in Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. Whaley: Oh sure, it could vary from municipality to municipality, depending upon the average of the project of course.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I assumed, Mr. Chairman, that this was a subsidy that just evolved after you have filled a building, taking into consideration anything you do. I always thought they should be filled, like any apartment building is filled, Mr. Minister, willy-nilly, and cull it out afterward if you have problems—that we should be that open as a public supplier of housing. Then you deal with what you have filled it with.

What I would like to get answered very clearly is are we filling those units, keeping in mind what the average subsidy is to that area? In other words, if a family in their income class falls in the $140-a-month bracket and your breakeven point in that development is $150, you know you have a $10 subsidy for that family. Right? And you have another family where you have a $25 subsidy, and one where you have $5; so you end up with a $40 subsidy on three families; or maybe that is the average you want. Are we actually filling buildings that way?

Mr. Whaley: The question of the income of the family, which of course relates to the subsidy that is payable, has no relationship whatsoever to the selection of families when they are being allocated to units, none whatsoever.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Is there a subsidy set prior to your filling the units?

Mr. Whaley: No, there is no fixed subsidy at all. In other words, when a family is selected to be allocated to a vacant unit the amount of rent that we charge that family in accordance with this income has no bearing at all on what effect it might have on the subsidy.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Do you know what the subsidy is, for instance, in a given project, such as the one on Kennedy Road?

Mr. Whaley: I do not have the figure in my head, no.

Mrs. M. Renwick: But you do set—

Hon. Mr. Randall: We do not set. I think this is a mistake. If there are 100 suites in the apartment and, let us say, 30 per cent are on welfare and say they would pay $70 a month apiece and maybe the suite cost $150; we would have to pay the difference between $70 and $150. Let us say $100 to make it even; we would have to pay the extra $30.

Mr. Singer: Well the federal government pays too!

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well all right.

Mrs. M. Renwick: And the municipality; does the municipality not pay seven per cent?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The breakdown is 50, 42.5 and 7.5 per cent. So there is no specific subsidy set for a project. If you had all families in there who had fairly good incomes that met the economic rent, it might be almost subsidy-free.

Mrs. M. Renwick: But you are saying that the corporation takes nothing like that into consideration when it is filling units?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, no.

Mrs. M. Renwick: All right. Does it take into consideration how many families might be headed by women? I am looking at an article from the Telegram, Monday, May 25, which says:

The Ontario branch of the Canadian Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs decided Saturday to conduct a study of the Ontario Housing Corporation's 10 per cent limit on available accommodation, which may be assigned to families headed by women.

Delegates to the Ontario branch's 24th annual conference approved a resolution by Sudbury members who expressed concern that mother-led families are not getting their fair share of housing. The OHC limits welfare cases to 20 per cent of total accommodation and then the 10 per cent limit for mother-led families is included in the allotment for welfare cases.

Should the study show a need for change in the allotment system, the organization will submit a brief to the provincial government.

Several delegates attending the three-day conference expressed concern—

Well, that is about their own affairs.

Now I have heard the 20 per cent figure before; I think it should be established very clearly if that is the way we are making up the tenancy of buildings. I had not heard about mother-led families before. Is there some rule of thumb about mother-led families?

Mr. Whaley: There are certain guidelines which we endeavour to operate to in the interest of good management practices and in our opinion, in the interest of the families living in the development. We do say that the optimum number of single families, as a guideline, should be 20 per cent, with an upper limit of 25 per cent.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Single-parent!

Mr. Whaley: Single-parent families. But we do find that the practicality of the situation is such that, in many instances, we have to exceed that particular percentage. One figure that comes to mind refers to the LaSalle project in Thunder Bay; of 102 families there, 41 of them are single-parent families. But we do have guidelines, and I think that it is only practical for us to have guidelines.

Mr. Singer: What would your figure be in Lawrence Heights?

Mr. Whaley: I believe it is around 27 or 29 per cent. It is under 30 per cent.

Mr. Singer: Yes, that is what I thought. I think it is very high, probably as it should be.

Mrs. M. Renwick: What would it be in Flemingdon Park?

Mr. Whaley: We have the figure here; I am told it is close to 22 per cent.

Mrs. M. Renwick: How about 3181 Eglinton? Is it 3181 or 3131?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They are all over 20 per cent.

Mrs. M. Renwick: All pretty well over 20?

Mr. Whaley: They range between 20 and 30 per cent.

Mrs. M. Renwick: There was an article in the Star in August, 1969, called "How They Decide If You Will Live in Public Housing", and it published the point system, starting with overcrowding, five points; and so on. It failed to list something that I have on an Ontario housing investigation report. It listed overcrowding, disrepair, inadequate kitchen facilities, inadequate bathroom facilities and so on. But it failed to list in the newspaper "suitability — maximum points A to E," and a place for the score. I was wondering what suitability covers?

Mr. Whaley: If I may, Mr. Chairman, suitability has no reference whatsoever to the point system as such. In other words, there are no points allocated for a category called suitability.

Mrs. M. Renwick: No points, Mr. Whaley? Mr. Chairman, through you to Mr. Whaley, there are no points, but there are categories A to E. I think what I would really like to know is where do you fall if you are in a category A or B or C or D or E. Who falls in A?

Mr. Whaley: I would say about 95 per cent of the applicants.

Mrs. M. Renwick: What do you have to have to fall in A?

Mr. Whaley: It is a question of the judgment of the person who is processing the application, as to the rating of the applicant for accommodations. I might add —

Mrs. M. Renwick: That is quite a range — five categories of being worse than 95 per cent of the people —

Mr. Whaley: Well, I was going to ask you there —

Mrs. M. Renwick: — and less eligible.

Mr. Whaley: I think you mentioned A to E.

Mrs. M. Renwick: A to E yes.

Mr. Whaley: It is A and B.

Mrs. M. Renwick: All right. I could send this over to you, Mr. Whaley; it looks to me as though it is A to E, but it is just A and B is it?

Mr. Whaley: It is A and B.

Mrs. M. Renwick: So you either fall in with the 95 per cent of A or you have a B-type category which covers everybody else?

Mr. Whaley: It covers the balance of the applications.

Mrs. M. Renwick: And they can tell this over the telephone?

Mr. Whaley: No, we do not give that information —

Mrs. M. Renwick: This is from the interview that is placed? This is from the home visitor?

Mr. Whaley: That is made at the time of the visit to the home of the applicant.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Okay. If the member for Parkdale has a question?

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): I have one question on the investigation report. I believe the investigation report is based on one that the Toronto housing had originally. Is it not very similar? It was drawn up about 15 years ago. I was wondering had they given any consideration to changing that report because some people think it is out of style; it does not meet modern times. I believe it is, basically, about 15 years old. You just adopted it from the Toronto housing authority. Would that not be correct?

Mr. Whaley: I am not sure if the housing authority of Toronto adopted ours or we adopted theirs. Since the days of the housing authority, back in 1947, when they were constituted, we have made a number of changes to it. One that does come readily to mind is that at the time the housing registry was introduced in Metropolitan Toronto, the investigation report and the application form were changed quite radically.

Mr. Trotter: Your point system and all that is pretty well the same, is it not?

Mr. Whaley: There have been some changes from time to time in the point rating system since it was first introduced.

Mr. Chairman: Do you have a question, Mr. Singer?

Mr. Singer: Yes I do, Mr. Chairman. I wanted to find out about the fixing of rents. It was my understanding that a year or so ago you fixed — or the rents were frozen.

Mr. Whaley: In May, 1968.

Mr. Singer: And they were to remain frozen until you and the federal people worked out a new formula. Your latest pronouncements, I understood, related that new formula to July 1. You were going to adopt most of them.

I have something that was given to me today by a tenant. You can have her name; it is not important. She is in Lawrence Heights and received a notice from you people, dated May 11, 1970, raising her rent from $70 to $85. I just do not understand how this works.

Apparently what has happened is that this lady is one of those single-parent family heads. She is on the family benefit allowance and her allowances went up about the time she got the new notice, and about the same time her rent jumped from $70 to $85.

First of all, if the rent freeze applies, I do not see how her rent can be increased.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Was she in there before May, 1968?

Mr. Singer: I do not know when she was in. Perhaps I will give you her name. Her name is Mrs. Beryl Bennie, I am not sure. You have typewritten it as Bonnie at the top of your notice, and she signs it Bonnes, and her address is 4 Replin Road, Apartment 103.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I can give you an answer on that.

Mrs. B. Meredith (Ontario Housing Corporation): Mr. Singer, through the Chair, are you addressing a family that is in receipt of family benefits?

Mr. Singer: Yes. Her total income is shown on this form as $193 family benefit, $8 baby bonus.

Mrs. Meredith: Well, if I may explain, Ontario Housing Corporation does not set rent at any time for families under the family benefits or general welfare assistance system. We charge only that shelter amount that the family benefits or the general welfare groups charge. If we were to lower her rent, the welfare or the family benefits would then in turn lower the amount that she receives. Therefore that particular rent was not set by Ontario Housing Corporation nor is it being collected, other than that amount already indicated by the family benefits branch to Ontario Housing Corporation that we should collect.

Mr. Singer: Can I follow that up? As I understand it, the announcement by the Minister of Social and Family Services (Mr. Yaremko) about the increase in the amount of family benefits was designed to place more dollars in the hands of those people who are in the greatest need. So one arm of the province comes along and says, "Mrs. Bonnes, we are going to increase your family benefits from—" something; I do not know what the previous figure was—"up to $193. Out of that figure we calculate—" we, the family benefits branch, not housing—"we calculate that your shelter allowance would be so much."

Accordingly, OHC is the vehicle. In any event, OHC says, "Fine, your rent therefore now goes up another $15 a month." It seems to me that one arm of government is apparently defeating the intentions as announced by Mr. Yaremko.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Not only that, but the minister said that the rents were not going to be changed in the Ontario Housing Corporation for the $10 a month increase that was allowed to family benefits and general welfare assistance.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, what I said is that we would not be increasing the rents for people in the welfare category. We had nothing to do with it. The rents were established by Social and Family Services.

Mrs. M. Renwick: In other words, the minister would be taking the benefit and that is what we were asking—

Mr. Singer: Could I finish this one, Margaret, thank you.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The minister is here himself. Perhaps Mr. Yaremko could add something to this. This is what I thought with the two of them here. Can we ask Fred Douglas, as mayor of the city here?

Mrs. Meredith: Mr. Chairman, before we decide on the reasons for this particular case, that is one of our rent review forms, I assume, because we receive notification from the family benefits branch and we then would make out one of those forms. However, there may have been a change in the family composition in that family which also changed the amount of money, so that I would be very happy on behalf of this particular tenant, to take it up with the family benefits and the parents, and inform them of this particular situation.

Mr. Singer: I am willing to wait until Monday, until you can look it up. This seems to be a notification that the rent is increased because it says at the bottom:

Please be advised that pursuant to the terms of your lease, your monthly rental rate is to be $85.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Ten dollars?

Mr. Singer: Fifteen dollars. Listed on April 7, old rent $70; listed on May 11, $85. Now this lady, if the particulars in the form are correct, has the sole source of income as, family benefits $193, and $8 from baby bonus. She apparently has one child named Donald who was born on June 21, 1950, who is getting $8 in baby bonus. It may be that there is an explanation, as I say.

It is 10:30 now, so having given you those facts, let us pursue it the next time we meet because I think there is something here that bears—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I shall lie awake all weekend thinking about it.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I relinquished the floor to the member for Downsview, and certainly I am glad that he raised the point he did. I think there is a good question in here too for the minister to come back with an answer.

When the $10 a month increase in shelter allowance went to general welfare assistance recipients and family benefit recipients, I issued a release saying that the greatest benefit of that rental increase went to Ontario Housing Corporation. I said, if it did in fact house in 25 per cent of its units these people in need, the corporation was picking up at least $50,000 a month and upward of that with the Minister of Social and Family Services' $10 a month grant increase.

You do not have to be particularly bright to see what a nice situation this is for the Minister of Trade and Development in his subsidy position. But I think it is important to ask you, Mr. Minister—and you are the one who could answer this best—when the rent freeze went on for tenants paying rent who earn incomes, was there a rent freeze applicable to those persons in receipt of benefits from the government under FBA and GWA? Or did the corporation, in fact, if a family size changed during that time—and a family size change in some cases, if it is over two dependents, can mean $5 a month increase in shelter allowance—while the other peoples' rents were frozen, were the peoples' rents under FBA and GWA in fact allowed to rise that $5 increase or not? That is a very good question, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will tell you, we will get the information over the weekend; I will have it for you on Monday. I am a little confused myself as to how some of these things operate except that all I know is, if they can afford to pay us $150 a month for rental accommodation, Mr. Yaremko's department will send us $150. But that has nothing to do with the rest of the money that will go to that family.

Hon. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Just a minute now. All I am saying is that if they reduce the amount to us, there would be no more money in the hands of the welfare recipient. That is my understanding. I will be glad to look into it over the weekend and have an answer for you Monday.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, that is a typical paternalistic, Tory government attitude, that it will not be in other people's pockets.

Mr. Chairman: Order! We have passed the hour of 10:30, and we will adjourn until 3:15 p.m. on Monday afternoon. I thank you.

The committee adjourned at 10:30 o'clock, p.m.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT

On votes 2209, 2210:

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Chairman, the other evening I was asking the minister and his staff if they could explain to me the basis on which Mrs. Bonnes got her rent raised by $15 and the officials were going to look into that and perhaps have an answer for me this afternoon.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker or Mr. Chairman, first of all let me say, when I assured the member for Scarborough Centre (Mrs. M. Renwick) in the House the other day that we did not get any part of the $18 million given to welfare recipients, that statement is exactly as I stated it. Any amounts we got that were given to us were over and above that. Of course, we are unaware what we are going to get; Social and Family Services decides what they are going to pay for shelter for people. They decide it and send us the rent, but they do not send us enough to take care of the economic rent. We make it up with our subsidies on the 50, 42½, and 7½.

The Beryl Bonnes family, 4 Replin Road, Apt. 103, submitted the tenant copy of the report of change in family income to Mr. V. Singer, MPP, and the question was raised that, as Mrs. Bonnes had been paying an old rent of $70, why as of April 7, 1970, had her rent been raised to $85?

The information is as follows: Mrs. Bonnes and 3 children were originally housed at 51 Blossomfield, Apt. 106 and then transferred to 30 Meadowlane, Apt. 402. She was transferred again to 4 Replin Road, Apt. 103, and has lived at that address since 1967. According to our file, shortly after Mrs. Bonnes moved to her present address, Joan and Sandra moved out, and son Donald has remained.

According to Mr. J. McKnight, director of the family services benefits branch, the file reads as follows: During 1967 and 1968 the rent was $70 based on a shelter allowance for family benefit. On March 1, 1968, the shelter allowance was raised to $85 to bring it in line with family benefit policies with regard to shelter allowances. It stayed at $85 until August, 1968. On September 1, 1968, family benefits lowered the rent back to $70 and it was set up in their books as an overpayment. Family benefits then arranged to collect $5 a month from Mrs. Bonnes to collect the overpayment.

I might mention here that our understanding is that the $85 is a shelter allowance for the first two persons in a family and a further additional $5 for each extra member. Therefore, Mrs. Bonnes and son Donald, under The Family Benefits Act, are assessed at a rental rate for shelter of $85.

On April 7, 1970, the Ontario Housing Corporation received their monthly list from The Department of Social and Family Services stating that as of April 1, 1970, Mrs. Bonnes was to pay a rental of $85. Mr. McKnight confirmed the following —

Mr. Singer: As of April 1 or May 1?

Hon. Mr. Randall: April 7 — no, April 1, 1970. The old pre-added budget was $97 for utilities, personal requirements, food, clothing and so on, and a shelter allowance of $70, making a total payment of $167. The new pre-added budget for extra food, clothing, and utilities, personal requirements and so on, is now $108, with an additional shelter allowance of $85, making a total payment to Mrs. Bonnes of $193. However, because of an arrears in rent with the Ontario Housing Corporation and overpayment by The Department of Social and Family Services, Mrs.

Bonnes was advanced an extra $15 for the month of May as an emergency fund.

For your information, Mrs. Bonnes paid no rent whatsoever to this corporation in January. In February she paid the $70, in March she paid $70 plus $5 to be paid against her arrears. In April, she paid $70, and the May payment has not yet been received; however, it may have been paid within the last four days. As of May 30, the arrears were $154.37. However, a credit of security deposit to her account of $25.63 leaves the arrears at $67.37, if the rental for May has been paid in the interim.

I understand The Department of Social and Family Services will discuss Mrs. Bonnes' financial situation with her direct. This was a rather unusual case, it is not a normal case, and I think to understand it as I —

Mr. Singer: I do not understand that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am a little confused myself, but let me just say this. When it comes to welfare shelter benefits, we have no idea what we are going to get for a family that moves into one of the Ontario Housing Corporation's houses. We have nothing to do with the amount of money paid to a welfare beneficiary — I guess you would call it. So what happens is, it has always been felt that if the welfare recipient receives all the money and then decides that we have got to pay X number of dollars for rent, that gives him the dignity of paying his own bills.

I have suggested, and so has Mr. Suters, that perhaps to avoid the difficulties we find in some of these cases, the money should be transferred from Social and Family Services direct to the housing corporation, and then the money that the person gets in his clammy little hand would be his and he would not be accusing the housing corporation of raising his rent, because we have nothing to do with raising the rent. We have nothing whatsoever to do with any increases they have to pay.

As far as I am concerned, if they moved in for $10 a month and that is all that the welfare would pay, that is all we would get. The rest would have to be taken up by the three levels of government on that 50, 42½ and 7½. In this case here, we got the $15. It did not lower the amount of money going to Mrs. Bonnes and her family one iota. In fact, you see she went from $97 to $108.

So that is the story that I get from Social and Family Services. I think it is an unusual case; it is certainly not a general situation with welfare recipients. There has been some confusion, I think, on bookkeeping insofar as Mrs. Bonnes is concerned, and we suggested to Family Services that they should straighten it out, which they are going to do.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, it still does not make too much sense to me. I tried to tie in what this form says—the one that I gave you the other evening—with what Mr. Yaremko said on April 8 and with a notice that I have here sent out by Mr. Whaley at the time of the rent freeze. Generally, he explains the rent freeze, and one paragraph in that I think is applicable here. He says that:

The rental rates for tenants in receipt of allowances under general welfare assistance and family benefits will not be affected, as the rates are determined by regulation and this same principle will continue to apply.

That, substantially, I gather, is what you have been saying to me.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right.

Mr. Singer: Right. Now, whose regulations are they? Can we start at that point?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would assume that they are regulations of family and service benefits under The Welfare Act.

Mr. Singer: All right. This whole thing is very confusing. I am referring now to what Mr. Yaremko said to the Legislature on April 8, and it is reported at page 1257 of Hansard. He is announcing the increased family benefit allowances and under number 3, he says:

Increased shelter provision: The shelter provision and an allowance is based on the actual cost to the recipient up to a stipulated maximum which varies with the size of the family. The maximum has been increased by $10 monthly. Since shelter costs have risen more in urban areas than in rural, we expect the impact of this provision will probably be greater in the cities where a house is owned and occupied by a recipient who is receiving the maximum shelter allowance possible. The director may approve an amount to assist the recipient with repairs.

If Mr. Yaremko is correct, and if her raise —and maybe we cannot count the raise in here, again I am confused—if her raise was $10 for shelter, why should the rent go up $15?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I pointed out here that the lady was in arrears and when Social and Family Services looked at that arrears situation, I think in order to help her out in her rent arrears they gave her the $15 instead of the $10 that they said they normally put through under family benefits, which would not go to them in any case, and tried to get her out of her difficulties. That is the point I think we have been trying to make, and I think this is what the family benefit service is trying to do for her.

Mr. Singer: How did she get into arrears—by reason of her not paying or by reason of bad bookkeeping?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know, that is what I am trying to figure out myself. As far as I can see here, she got it both ways apparently. She was in there and so was—maybe she just did not understand the arrangement, and it looks like—

Mr. Singer: It is very easy to understand why she could not understand it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I know, I appreciate her difficulty, but I am suggesting that between Social and Family Services and her rent programme, she got in arrears. What they are trying to do is adjust her arrears, that is why she got the $15 a month. It was given to the Ontario Housing Corporation to perhaps take up some of her arrears along with the other things I mentioned here, where she got the security deposit back of $25.63 and so forth and so on, so that I think what they were trying to do was help the woman. If you get the complete story, I think you will find what they are trying to do is help the woman out of a difficult situation; they are not trying to hurt her.

Mr. Singer: The minister may be right, but certainly there is no indication in any of the pieces of paper I have seen that they were trying to help her. I could not understand, and I am quite sure she has not been able to understand. Put that in context with what the minister said—the other minister, of Social and Family Services (Mr. Yaremko)—“We are increasing the allowances up to $10 a month,” so that one would think the maximum raise in rent would only be $10, but here you are raising it $15.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, but I think there are special circumstances here the hon. member would be wise to look at before getting into it any deeper. I think the Minister of Social and Family Services was right when he said none of the $18 million went to the Ontario Housing Corporation and we confirmed that today. Anything we get was over and above the $18 million that he allotted to these people on welfare, and again I point out that we have no way of knowing what we are going to get for a family in the way of shelter when they move into one of our homes under public housing.

We get a certain amount of money allotted to them for food, clothing and services, a certain amount is set for rent, for shelter, and then the money is given to them. I think in many instances, while it may be good on their part to be able to handle the money themselves and be able to pay their own rent, in the long run instead of the misconceptions I have heard time and time again on the housing corporation—that they get a raise and the housing corporation takes it away from them—I think we would be far better off if the social and family benefits shelter amount was sent directly to the housing corporation for Mrs. X. Then the money she has is hers, and she need never worry about her rent because she has a place to live and we get the economic rent from family benefits, fine; if we do not, we will have to make it up through the subsidies.

Mr. Singer: All right. There are two things that emerge out of that that still puzzle me. The minister made some reference to special circumstances. It may be that there is something in front of him that he does not want to discuss publicly?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, there is not, but my people advise me that this is the information, family services are going up to check this particular case. I just suggest to the hon. member that when we get further details, I will be glad to give him a written report on this Mrs. Bonnes because I am like the member, I am interested in finding out what happened to Mrs. Bonnes in the meantime.

Mr. Singer: All right. Let me continue with what the minister said in his announcement. He said: “An estimated 60,000 cases will benefit from the increase in the family benefits programme.” I do not know if Mrs. Bonnes was one of the estimated 60,000 or not.

Hon. Mr. Randall: She went from $97 to $108, so I think she benefited.

Mr. Singer: From $97 to $108; that is $11 increase in benefits but $15 increase in rent.

Hon. Mr. Randall: She got more money for food and she got it in line with the point system they gave to every other recipient. As I said, the $15 should be treated on an entirely different basis. It did not affect the amount of money she got for food and clothing.

Mr. Singer: It would have, because we have lost a month there. These things Mr. Yaremko was talking about did not take effect until May 1. You just told us that her $15 rent increase took place April 1.

Hon. Mr. Randall: She got it at the same time as everybody else. Her family benefits came at the same time as everybody else's, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. Singer: May 1.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Singer: But you raised the rent on April 1. Why?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not think we said that, did we?

Mr. Singer: That is what your memo said.

Hon. Mr. Randall: On April 7, 1970, the Ontario Housing Corporation received its monthly list from The Department of Social and Family Services stating that as of April 1, 1970, Mrs. Bonnes would pay a rental of $85.

Mr. Singer: Yes. As of April 1?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. This is where they say they miscalculated her rent in the first place. This is where I pointed out there is—

Mr. Singer: If they miscalculated, why should she be penalized?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, I do not know—

Mr. Singer: Because someone in this situation is living up to the last dollar she has available. Now you are trying to collect back arrears because of a miscalculation.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, but there were two reasons. There was not only miscalculation, but also she had missed some rent payments on her own prior to that date. So I think the hon. member should get a full explanation. I will see that he gets it, but I do not have all the details as to what happened to the bookkeeping on Mrs. Bonnes' account.

Mr. Singer: All right, could the minister try to get me a full report while these estimates are still on, because I am concerned about it. I do not understand it yet.

The other question that follows sort of automatically from this is, what is the purpose of the Minister of Social and Family Services standing up and saying, "What a good boy am I, I am going to give away more money," when in fact all he does is take it out of one pocket and put it into the other, into your pocket?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, now wait a minute, that is not quite true. You are just confusing the issue again. The $18 million that the minister stood up and talked about went directly to the welfare recipients for food, clothing and what-have-you. Any extra money that was paid to the Ontario Housing Corporation, including Mrs. Bonnes' $15, was given to her over and above, as I understand it, the money she got for food and services. So they increased her rental allowance to the housing corporation. There is no change in the rate for the shelter.

Mr. Singer: That does not seem to follow from anything Mr. Yaremko said. Are you sure that his $18 million figure does not include the $10 increase in shelter allowance as part of it?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They confirmed that to us today. You would have to check it with them. I would be glad to check it with them before the estimates are through and see if we can get clarification.

Mr. Singer: All right, I would like some clarification on that. But there is one other aspect of that that still bothers me. Let us leave Lawrence Heights alone for the moment because it is a joint federal-provincial-municipal partnership. Where you have an Ontario Housing solely owned development and you get this increase, 50 per cent of the increase comes from the federal government, so what in fact happens is that where Mr. Yaremko has given out an extra $10, $5 is federal money, but all of the $10 goes back into the other provincial pocket, is that reasonable?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Are you referring to the people who are not welfare?

Mr. Singer: No. Where someone is living in an Ontario Housing development, solely owned, leaving Lawrence Heights alone, one of the other—

Hon. Mr. Randall: What other ones we have that are solely owned—

Mr. Singer: The ones you have been buying, lots of them.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You mean all the projects?

Mr. Singer: Yes. Consider some welfare person, someone on family benefits. Yaremko gives them an extra $10 for shelter allowance. You take it. But Yaremko's $10 is not really Yaremko's $10; $5 of it is Ottawa's and $5 of it is Ontario's. So what occurs to me is you have figured out a good scheme to further make viable your Ontario Housing developments at the expense of Ottawa and you are saying, "Look at what good fellows we are."

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I do not think so, because if there is a rent subsidy involved, Ottawa pays 50 per cent of the rent subsidy or it pays 50 per cent of the welfare subsidy, one way or the other. It does not pay both unless the recipient is getting both.

Mr. Singer: That is not what I mean. Where the landlord, Ontario Housing solely, gets an extra $10 that Mr. Yaremko has just given, that $10 comes half from federal and half from provincial funds. Right?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes

Mr. Singer: Okay. Where it goes solely back to Ontario, then you are gaining at the federal government's expense. The whole purpose of this thing, where you give them more money with one hand and take it away with the other, is to get more money out of Ottawa to pay for your solely owned—

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is a little confusing to me. If Ottawa is paying 40 per cent of the subsidy now, and it is reduced by $10 as it comes from Social and Family Services, I cannot see where—

Mr. Singer: It is increased.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, it is increased.

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It means that that increase that is still paid 50 per cent by Ottawa is reducing the $10 subsidy they are getting on the housing now, so it does not make a hell of a lot of difference.

Mr. Singer: No, but supposing you are getting pretty close to the breakeven point.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If they are a beneficiary, they get 50 per cent paid for by Ottawa, either as subsidized housing or a welfare benefit.

Mr. Singer: Yes, when you are giving it back to a partnership property, Lawrence Heights, then the division seems to be more equitable. But when you are giving it back to an Ontario Housing project, you are taking half Ottawa dollars back to subsidize your Ontario Housing.

Mr. P. R. Goyette (Ontario Housing Corporation): I suppose that on the federal-provincial Lawrence Heights, then, they would be getting back, would they not, 75 per cent of it, to an extent, so that what they are going in for, is going back to them, in effect.

Mr. Singer: Yes, but on the bulk of the new structures that you have got, which are solely Ontario Housing, in fact you are getting an extra $5 a month subsidy per tenant from Ottawa, which you really have not acknowledged at all.

Mr. Goyette: Yes. I might add one more thing: By reason of their suggestion, we have signed an agreement with them that says:

The amount of rent that shall go into the project shall be the greater of either the rent computed by geared-to-income scale or that component which is paid by the province.

In some provinces, particularly in the Maritimes, the welfare payment is lower than the geared-to-income, and so they have had this. In our agreement with CMHC, they require that we put into the account that which is normally paid on the private or non-OHC market.

Mr. Singer: I suppose the message that comes out of this whole thing, quite apart from Mrs. Bonnes—and we will follow that up at a later time—is that if you, as one arm of this government in Ontario—are going to make great announcements and say, "Look what great benefits we are giving, and we are going to help these people who are unfortunate enough to have to be on family benefits allowance," why do you not tell the whole story instead of saying that we are going to give them more shelter allowance, which they are never going to see?

I think this is a sad, sad illusion you are perpetrating; you are making yourself sound better to some segments of the society, but not the people who are—

Mr. J. N. Allan (Haldimand-Norfolk): This is entirely out of order, Mr. Chairman.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Quite apart from the nattering over there, Mr. Chairman, I would think that if you are going to tell the frank story of this thing, that you have got to make yourself abundantly clear.

Mr. Allan: What the Minister of Social and Family Services says has nothing to do with this committee. It has—

Mr. Singer: Well, it has to do with government, and the handling of housing is part and parcel of the same thing. The former Treasurer is somewhat embarrassed by being caught up with this—

Mr. Allan: I am not embarrassed at all, but I am sick and tired of listening to all this claptrap.

Mr. Singer: Well, it is too bad that you are sick and tired, that is just too bad.

Mr. Chairman: A little order. Let us come back to the estimates. I think the hon. member for Downsview is getting a little off the point. I think that we should get back to the estimates, which deal strictly with housing. I think you are a little of the point.

Mr. Singer: I have made my point, Mr. Chairman. We will follow it up and I can get—

Mr. W. Hodgson (North York): Well, let us go on to something else.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me just suggest that the agreements with the federal authorities suggest we carry out our programme on this basis. I would like to see, as I said earlier, that the amount of money required for shelter given to us by Social and Family Services come directly from one department to another. Perhaps that will lower the dignity of people who want to pay their own bills but, on the other hand, I think that a great deal of criticism directed at the housing corporation is unwarranted, and perhaps this is one way we can overcome it.

In the case of Mrs. Bonnes, if the $15 had come directly to us, her account could have been corrected, she would have thought she had a letter from Santa Claus and that would have been the end of it. Instead of that, we find ourselves involved in a discussion because of the difficulties Mrs. Bonnes had. As I say, too often the housing corporation is placed in a position of having to defend itself on something we have no control over, because it involves contracts between another department of the government and the federal authorities.

Mr. Singer: If the left hand knew what the right hand was doing, maybe we would not get into this stuff.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You know the old story about hindsight and foresight.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, the minister and I have had a number of private discussions following his general statement in the House with regard to the reconstitution of the committee to investigate the situation in the Porter Avenue complex. I thought I understood that situation clearly; I am now wondering whether I do.

I think we should remind ourselves of the so-called charges that were drawn to the attention of the minister by the tenants' association, back in the early weeks of this year. The original committee got going in the latter part of February and the early part of March; it blew up in the third week of March, when two members of the committee came to the conclusion—I think they were correct—that their position had the appearance, if not the reality, of a conflict of interest because they were directors of Ontario Housing Corporation.

So they asked you to reconstitute it, and you gave the matter some 10 weeks of consideration before you came to a conclusion and agreed on a citizens' committee rather than a judicial committee. I was under the impression that what you wanted done was presumably the same kind of approach as before, but dealing specifically with the tenants in terms of their problems.

I am now told by some of the tenants in the building that they have visited OHC and that people in OHC, namely, Mr. Riggs and Mr. Cattermole, have indicated that there cannot be and will not be public meetings; secondly, that there will be no representations permitted from tenants' associations. I want to find out whether that is the situation.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I think the situation you and I discussed was that, as the charges were levelled at us as a landlord, and we were trying to get to the bottom of some of these charges—you remember what they were as well as I do—by a former president who is still making strong attempts periodically to get into the tenants' association, you and Mr. Riggs and one of the members from the human rights committee would call on each tenant in that building, sit down and have a personal chat with them and find out what their views were with regard to the problems they were experiencing, with regard to the building and with regard to the tenants' association as it existed.

When you had made your calls on these people, your recommendations would come to the housing corporation board of directors and myself, as minister, to decide how best we could set up a tenants' association in that particular building that would work in the interest of all the tenants, not just a few, and perhaps this would be a guideline for tenants' associations in the rest of Ontario.

My understanding was, when you and I spoke the other day, that as soon as these committee hearings are over, my people would be available to go with you, and with whoever is appointed from the human rights commission, to visit this project and figure out what can be done and how best it can be done to solve the problems of that particular project.

Mr. MacDonald: Let me sort it out. I affirm that we agreed that there were certain elements in the original "charges" that there was no point in pursuing now, but what we wanted to do was to get down and talk to the tenants. Do I interpret correctly your reply to say that there will be no public meetings, and no tenants' association within the establishment will have the right to make representation?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would not say so, in the long run. But I think first of all what we are trying to do is, say, if you have a public meeting and you have the same people show up who were running the tenants' association previously, you know what will happen at the public meeting. There just will not be a public meeting.

I mean, let us just face facts alike here. We had some difficulty there with two or three people who had criminal charges, or assault charges, against them. If they come in and take over our meeting, the people in the meeting are afraid to speak up—which, I am sure, has been the case in the past.

That is the reason why we suggested that you have a personal meeting with the people in the building to find out if they are intimidated, if they are having problems.

Mr. MacDonald: Look, Mr. Minister, let us not beat around the bush. You are saying that there will not be public meetings?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am saying that the first thing we should do is have a personal meeting with the tenants, and then, if your recommendations come out that there should be public meetings, then we should have public meetings.

I think, first of all, this is a special case. I think that you agree that perhaps we should sit down as a landlord with the tenants and find out were they intimidated—not only by our superintendent, whom Mr. Carson made a lot of charges against, but maybe Mr. Carson was intimidating, too, to some extent.

So what you three were going to do was to find out whether there was any intimidation in the whole project, what the people really think about a tenants' association, and what are their major problems. When you come forward with your report, then I think that is the time to have public meetings.

We are not against public meetings. In fact, we think they are necessary, but this is a case where we were charged with letting an old lady die of starvation because we would not give her a ticket downtown. She had nothing to eat. We had drug addicts running in and out of the place. Hell, there were more charges than Carter's got liver pills, as you recognize.

All we want to do is to get at the truth. We tried it through the committee we formerly had set up, but this did not work when you had public meetings. Some of the people there were scared to speak up, in our estimation. They were scared to speak up.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I am sorry, I was at those meetings and it was not a case of people being scared, it was a case of the rules and the feeling on the part of two members of the committee that they were in a position which really had the appearance, as well as the reality, of a conflict of interest. So let us not drag in the red herring: "People were afraid to speak."

Hon. Mr. Randall: There is no red herring, but as you know, we have had many calls from the building; from people who today have placed assault charges against some of the people who were attending that meeting. I say that the charges may be unfair. Maybe the people who are facing these charges could be innocent of these charges. I do not know.

All I am saying is that you three people decided that you would take a three-man committee and go and find out what was wrong with that building, particularly. Perhaps this will set a tenor for all buildings.

There are some of these problems — perhaps you can appreciate it — in many of the buildings. I should say, not in many of them but in every project of any size you get some people who are anti-social. It may be the quiet guy on the 15th floor and it may be the guy who wants to be the president of the tenants' association.

All I am saying is that if you do as we intend to do — if you, as a member for that area, carry out your investigation of these three people and your recommendations come out that this is what we should do, we are quite prepared to abide by them. We are quite prepared to have public meetings.

Mr. MacDonald: You see, Mr. Minister, I think this is important enough to pursue for a bit. We got ourselves into a peck of trouble in the earlier instance because not only did there appear to be a conflict of interest in having a committee dominated — or at least with a healthy representation — by the group that presumably was being investigated, namely the OHC, but also because there was no tenants' association representative on the committee. This criticism was not just from tenants, as those who were at the meeting will recall.

In the meeting over at the Macdonald Block, social workers from various agencies from the city of Toronto got up and asked the chairman why it was that tenants — since one of the major terms of reference of this committee was to look into the appropriate kind of tenants' association and how it should operate — were not represented on it, so that you did not have a balanced sort of inquiry.

If you think that we are going to avoid news stories and articles in the Toronto papers, whose interest has been aroused, as well as that of the tenants' associations, by holding closed meetings you are wrong. I never dreamed that you were considering closed meetings. If there is somebody who does not want to have an open meeting, fine. If he thinks he is going to be intimidated that is another matter. You simply cannot get away with the proposition that it now is going to become a closed inquiry. You are kidding yourself. Anybody who becomes involved in a closed inquiry is asking for another debacle because everybody who is interested in this field is not alerted to this and they have been waiting with bated breath. They must have strangled for want of air — for the last 10 weeks while you made up your mind what sort of a committee you would have.

All I want to suggest to you is this kind of proposition, now that I understand it fully, is simply not going to operate. Let me go one step further —

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I ask if it is not going to operate. I spoke to you about this two or three weeks ago and you said, "Well, I think we should get at it as soon as we can." I said, "Yes, as soon as the meeting is over and Mr. Edge is free, you would get at it."

You have had a change of heart since then.

Mr. MacDonald: No! No! I have not had a change of heart. I assumed that we were going to hold an open inquiry and that it was not going to be a closed meeting to which no one was going to be permitted to come.

Look, the minister is a pretty astute and sophisticated individual. Does he suppose for one moment that this committee, and everybody involved, is not going to get clobbered into the ground if you now go into completely closed meetings in this sort of an investigation?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We did not ask for a meeting. We asked for an interview with each tenant.

Mr. MacDonald: Look. This is a reconstituted committee that is going to follow through on the inquiry. You can call it what you will, but in terms of all the people in the press who are aware of it and who were following it, and all of the tenants' associations who are aware of it because one of its major terms of reference was to clarify the whole role of a tenants' association — you simply are not going to get away with it. They are going to say, "What sort of a deal are you pulling?"

Let me go one step further if I may. You said that the former president of the tenants' association who is not now the head of the tenants' association — I will be the first to say that the situation is going from bad to worse in terms of relationships within that building. Now you have a tenants' association with roughly 20 members. You have a so-called York community association with Mike Carson as the president with over 100 members. The OHC people are saying that they are going to deal with the tenants' association, they are not going to have anything to do with the York community association.

Here we are into the great vagaries of what a tenants' association is. If you were an employer and you tried to say, "I am going to deal with this body within my ranks, but not with that body," you would be in some good healthy trouble very quickly with The Labour Relations Act.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me ask you a question, Mr. MacDonald. You are a pretty intelligent fellow. How did Mike Carson get 100 people in his committee against the tenants' association in his own building? On what basis did he go out and get 100 memberships.

Mr. MacDonald: Look, Mr. Minister, let me make this statement very emphatically. I have not been involved, and let me assure you I am not going to get involved in either of the tenants' associations in that building. That is their right and they are going to have to sort it out. All I know at the moment is that Carson has 100 signed-up members and the tenants' association has 20.

The point that I want to get to is something else. From what little experience I had on that committee, I was increasingly puzzled as to the role and function of tenant relations officers, because we, as members of the committee—and I do not know to what extent these documents are privileged documents and I am not going to violate any excessive detail in them—were given a full account of the reports that were made by the tenant relations officer in that particular building.

Let me, in my view, describe them. They were at best superficial and gossipy. There were reports, for example, that Mike Carson and people with him had been involved in the municipal election. Let me put it bluntly: "It is none of the tenant relations officer's damn business whether Mike Carson was involved in the municipal election." He happened to be involved in support of the man who is now mayor of the borough of York. Why the tenants' officer was preoccupied in reporting back to her superiors that Mike Carson and some other people were involved in the exercise of their rights as citizens just has me absolutely buffaloeed.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Listen. Let us not kid ourselves about Mike Carson. As far as I am concerned, Mike Carson now has three assault charges pending against him. Clatterbrook, his right hand man who came to that meeting that you and I attended has got one or two charges pending. He tried to beat up a couple of old guards. If these guys have taken over that project in your riding, I think there must be some way to find out how they got—I do not think that they got 100 members.

Mr. MacDonald: I cannot vouch for it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I cannot either, but I am just suggesting that the only way you are ever going to find out, Mr. MacDonald, is to walk up to those 227 tenants and say, "Mrs. Johnson, anything you say between these four walls will not go to the president. I will not go to Mike Carson or anybody else. Tell us what is on your mind. How can we help you? How can we make this a better place to live?"

Mr. MacDonald: Okay, you are trying to get me back into your—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I am just asking a question. You say we should have tenant participation. Who do we have? Mike Carson on the board again to investigate these people.

Mr. MacDonald: I would say, under the circumstances, no. But I would say that somebody who is active in tenants' associations, of which there are many, across the city of Toronto, would be a highly appropriate person. You are really posing the question: "What do you—or OHC—do as the landlord when you have got two organizations who have some conflict?" You may lament this. We may deplore it and ask how imperfect can the human animal get. But, by God, this happened rather frequently.

You can have two unions competing against management. All the more reason why we have got to work out what is the legal status of a tenants' association. How are we going to work out the legal status of the tenants' associations? Why should you presume that you are going to do the best job in working out the legal status of a tenants' association. You have asked for the recommendations but you do not have a tenant representative on that committee.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think you are putting the cart before the horse. We said we wanted a tenants' association after the specific charges and the actions that have gone on in that building by the former president have been investigated.

You did not want it when we had a committee. We talked about it at a judicial inquiry and you said, "Well, I think you are making a mistake there." I agreed with you. We said, "We will go to the three men" and you said you would go ahead with us and investigate. You would talk to about 227 tenants in that building and out of that would come recommendations for, we hoped, better tenant relations all the way through the province of Ontario. I still think, Mr. MacDonald, that we are not trying to avoid the issue. I would like to see a good strong tenant relationship but I say to you, the intimidation in that building alone does not leave me much confidence in what has happened to date.

I think a lot of those people up there—many of them are elderly people, and we have already seen that charges are pending against two persons. Where there is smoke, there is fire. You cannot just say that I have 100 people who voluntarily walked up and signed their names on the list agreeing to be under the former president. I do not believe it is that simple.

Mr. MacDonald: You see, Mr. Minister, if you were really disturbed about resolving this thing, we would not be dealing with it on June 1 or June 2 when it originally came up in January.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I appreciate that, but as you know, the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) had to look at it and make his decision as to whether we should. I have to take my advice from the legal officer of the Crown. I am not disagreeing with you this afternoon and perhaps you are right and we are wrong but what I would like to say to you is: When this meeting is over here, when the committee hearings are finished, we will sit down again with you and see if we can find a workable solution.

Mr. MacDonald: I have got a suggestion for you.

Hon. Mr. Randall: But I frankly feel that I want to make sure that the 227 people there have not been nor will they be in the future, intimidated.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, okay.

Hon. Mr. Randall: And I have sufficient evidence in my files through the phone calls I have received. I think it is only fair to Mr. Carson and his lieutenants that we check this situation out.

Mr. MacDonald: You can be assured that they are not going to be intimidated. I mean, it is not beyond our powers to assure that. Heavens, if you are that fearful, get a police officer to be around and see that they are not intimidated. I mean, I think you are being absurd and you are forcing me into absurdities in reaction to it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No.

Mr. MacDonald: All I am saying is, we have got a situation which is getting worse because the tenant relations officer in that building worked as an active agent against the tenants' association, counselling people and soliciting people until now you have achieved what happens to many managements. You have a split. You have got two tenants' associations and your problems are compounded.

I want to say to you now, Mr. Minister, that I do not think I am going to sit on this committee. I am not going to sit on it because (a) I suggest to you that you cannot operate a committee in camera that has had the glare of publicity and interest from people who write articles; from people who write editorials; from all the tenants' associations in this city. If you think you are going to go off in the corner now and hold a secret inquiry, you are just not going to get away with it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not like the secret inquiry accusation. We are not going to do that. I would hope when we get through with the inquiry that it be made public. Let me suggest to you—can we pick a member of a tenants' association of Toronto to replace you? Would you be happy with that?

Mr. MacDonald: That, in fact, was what I was going to say.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We pick a neutral?

Mr. MacDonald: Right. Because, quite frankly, nobody has any illusions as to where my interest lies—pardon?

Mr. O. F. Villeneuve (Glengarry): Is the oven getting too hot?

Mr. MacDonald: The minister is making it so hot. The problem is that he does not realize it is even hotter for him than it is for me. I am just trying to warn him, alert him, to the kind of situation he is getting himself into.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You know the old saying, "If you don't like the heat, get out of the kitchen." I do not mind the heat sometimes if I can straighten out a situation.

Mr. MacDonald: If you get somebody who represents the tenants' point of view to assess what has happened in the Porter Avenue complex and, secondly, to give you advice on tenants' associations, I think you will have the kind of committee that is going to command confidence in the public mind.

I add that I hope that committee is not going to operate in secret, because, I may be wrong, but I am willing to bet my bottom dollar—and I have not solicited this and I have not advised this—you will have a blast of articles from at least two if not three of the Toronto dailies within 24 hours with regard to that kind of operation.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me just say this. In an endeavour to be fair to some of the people involved, sometimes the press is given the wrong impression because we do not stand up and defend ourselves. On the other hand, I think if you look the facts in the face, there is some reason for concern on the part of the Ontario Housing Corporation about the leadership qualities they were receiving from the former president of the tenants' association.

Mr. MacDonald: I have never yet gone into a plant in which I do not find, I would say, five managements out of 10, saying: "The problem with this union is that they have got leadership that we cannot trust."

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, sir.

Mr. MacDonald: It is not yours to judge.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, listen—

Mr. MacDonald: What you have got to do is to work out a legal framework for tenants' associations and if the rank and file in that area choose leaders that you think are wrong, that is their bad luck. They are going to learn the hard way. But you cannot be "big daddy" and exercise paternalism.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, if it is a democratic election, I do not disagree with you. But if it is not a democratic election and there was lots of reason to believe it was not—people had their arms twisted, an old guy got beaten all to hell, as you know.

Mr. MacDonald: No!

Hon. Mr. Randall: I know, you brush those things off —

Mr. MacDonald: That is not true —

Hon. Mr. Randall: You brush these things off —

Mr. MacDonald: Let us not throw in these inflammatory comments. I am not throwing in a lot of inflammatory comments with regard to the alleged actions of people in OHC.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They are not inflammatory. I know you can. They are not inflammatory. I am simply saying that if we want to get to the truth of the matter, I think the way we propose is a good way. I am prepared to compromise and do as you suggest here — put a neutral tenants' representative on. When they make the recommendations, I can assure you they will be made public if you think so. You are the member in the riding; I will turn them over to you. You take a look at it; if you think that we should make these public, it is okay with me. I am just suggesting that the 227 people in there deserve from you the kind of attention that you would like to give them, if their situation was reversed.

Mr. MacDonald: Make no mistake about it, Mr. Minister, it is going to get my undivided attention.

Hon. Mr. Randall: All right.

Mr. MacDonald: The only reason I do not want to be on this committee any more is that I have become part of your establishment so I cannot say what I want to say.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is a pretty good establishment.

Mr. MacDonald: It is pretty good tactics on your part. That brings me, Mr. Chairman, to the next point. When this committee was first considered last January/February, I talked with Mr. Suters on the phone, and he agreed and you agreed, in a conversation I had with you, that there would be no delay in proceeding with maintenance and the kind of changes that need to be made around Porter Avenue.

They are still waiting for changes which I think are obvious, vital requirements in a community with 700 children. They are still waiting and I do not propose to be involved in a committee that may go on for God knows how many more months. I am going to raise my voice on what has not happened in that housing unit. In fact, let me proceed because that is the more important thing for the moment. May I ask —

Hon. Mr. Randall: Can I ask Mr. Riggs to make a comment on those maintenance charges — whoever has got the comments there?

Mr. R. W. Riggs: (Ontario Housing Corporation): I think, in terms of maintenance per se, there was a series of complaints concerning the level of maintenance. In the last month, in terms of repairs, items of maintenance from day to day, this has been kept level. There are four areas remaining in that building where there are problems to be resolved and I will quote them. One: there is a need of ventilation in laundry room. A tender has been awarded on that to a local contractor; repairs are under way.

Mr. MacDonald: We will get back to that one.

Mr. Riggs: We had to do a lot of work and engineering on that to ensure that we were undertaking the proper ventilation system.

The second one is playground equipment which is now being placed on the site as of this day, I believe. The third item which I believe had come up is recreational furniture, and renovation to the various recreation rooms.

I should mention that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation only a few months ago gave its approval to proceed in this area. The tenders for the renovation to the various rooms were issued today and the furniture has been put through to purchasing as of last Tuesday. I think these were the major areas, to the best of my knowledge, that were under discussion with the tenants' association and the corporation.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, Mr. Riggs is correct that my emphasis should have been on basic facilities rather than maintenance. I think there has been some improvement in maintenance. However, I have not checked, in my preoccupation with other things, as to whether there is any serious number of recent complaints.

But I want to go into a few details on this project — not on this project per se, so much as to try to find out how OHC operates — because quite frankly, I am very puzzled, if this project is an illustration of OHC's acquisition of the property. For example, what was the cost of this building?

Hon. Mr. Randall: How much did it cost?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It cost $4,028,000.

Mr. MacDonald: Four million and twenty-eight thousand dollars.

Now, I have here a letter that was sent on April 28, 1966, by the executive secretary of the metropolitan school board to W. L. G. James, the business administrator of the borough of York board of education, in which they are referring to the approval that is being granted for the rezoning to be able to put up this apartment. In the reference to it, the letter refers to the requirement of additional classrooms at Rockcliffe Senior Public School, and approximately six additional classrooms at Cordella Public School to accommodate — and I want you to note these figures — 240 elementary school pupils and 40 secondary school pupils. That is a total of 280.

On May 2, 1966, a letter from the business administrator to the chief planner at the York township planning board — in effect, passed on this information that there had been clearance for 240 elementary school pupils and 40 secondary school pupils.

A year goes by. On July 27, 1967, there is a letter from W. J. McCordic, director and secretary-treasurer of the Metropolitan Toronto school board to A. G. Gillespie, the director of education in the borough of York, in which they now reduce the estimates for the number of children who would be there — kindergarten to grade 6, 162 pupils, and grades 7 and 8, 42 pupils, a total of 204. No reference at all to secondary. So it is 204 instead of 280, a year later.

In 1967, we have a letter to Mr. Wronski, the commissioner of planning, from W. J. McCordic, in which he confirms these figures. These are the figures on which the planning was done and presumably OHC knew about it—240, 280, 204, in that range. There are now 700 kids in that building.

I have here a letter from a Mr.—

Hon. Mr. Randall: In the 227 suites, you say there are 700 kids?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, 700 children in that building now.

I have here on June 21, 1967, a letter from Mr. Courtman, clerk of the borough of York, to Mr. Wronski, and the concluding paragraph said:

Would you also be good enough to let me have a certificate certifying that the proposed density under the bylaw is within the density for this area which is specified in the current schedule of maximum density adopted by the metropolitan planning board.

And we have from Mr. Wronski a reply saying:

As requested, we wish to advise that the density sought by the above bylaw is within the density for the area in question specified in the current schedule of maximum density adopted by the Metropolitan Toronto planning board.

You start out anticipating 240 kids and you end up with over 700. I just do not understand how this kind of planning goes on.

However, let me proceed. I have here the bylaw which was passed by the borough of York. In it, it specifies how many parking lots there are going to be, not only for this building but for the senior citizens—for a total of 278. Here is a document, a memorandum to the provisions of bylaw 128, to permit the use of lands on Hillsdale Road and Humber Boulevard in the borough of York, and this refers to 328 parking spaces. I am curious as to why you have such discrepancies in the planning and end up with—I do not know what number of parking spaces you have at the present time.

Finally, by way of strange goings-on in the early stage in the planning, here is a copy of, a draft of, the plan for the area that was presented to the borough of York. It is taken, as a matter of fact, from the files. This is schedule B to subsection 174 of section 3 of bylaw No. 15955 in the borough of York. In this plan of the whole complex, with which the minister may or may not be familiar, there are three arrows indicating where there are going to be playgrounds. One of them is at the east end of the big apartment building; one of them is over on that little postage stamp of asphalt, where there has been so much argument with the tenants over where they were going to put up some recreation facilities, and one is over in the area within the circle of townhouses.

The fact of the matter is that the area at the east end of the apartment building is a hillside. It is at about a 45-degree angle. Mr. Riggs says they are now getting around to the postage-stamp area, a full year after people have gone into that building. I think it was completely occupied last September. Only at this stage are they setting out equipment in a postage-stamp area of about 20 by 20 feet to meet the needs of 700 children. In third recreational area over in the circle of the townhouses, nothing has ever appeared

What I want to know is why does OHC get into purchasing a building of this nature? I want to get onto other factors in a moment, because I understand your warranty ran out on April 1. After all the splurge of activity in looking at the building, I am curious as to what sort of remedial action was taken by the contractor, or what compensation you got. How would you plan to have 240 kids and end up with a total of 700? How do you plan when the plans have three recreational areas, and even those three are hopelessly inadequate for 700 kids? Only at this stage, one year afterward, are you getting the recreational facilities in one of the three. What is the explanation for that, before I go any further?

Mr. Goyette: Just a general comment, Mr. Chairman, I think the member asked several questions earlier. This is a project which the OHC purchased from the developer. The responsibility for the zoning and the acceptability are matters for the developer and the borough. We would look to the developer to get all the necessary approvals. If some of these figures that you enumerated are not acceptable to the borough, then the borough presumably does not let the project go ahead. In terms of the schoolchildren, I think the figures you are quoting are substantially correct; there is a high content in there. It is offset, however, on a neighbourhood basis by the fact that next door is a senior citizens' building which does not have any children.

Mr. MacDonald: No, no, these figures were for both. These original estimates of 240 were for both complexes.

Mr. Goyette: I see. Now, what does the Ontario Housing Corporation do about this? The Ontario Housing Corporation cannot make the judgements as to whether the school facilities are adequate or not adequate. Therefore, we take our proposals that appear to be reasonable ones to us, to the Metro housing advisory committee. On that committee of Metro is a school board representative. He, along with others, such as Mr. Wronski whom you have quoted, write reports, make a judgement, and then recommend whether, indeed, we should proceed with this project or not.

As they go through this process, we presume, therefore, that those who have that talent make that kind of judgement, that if they agree, then we go ahead and that surely this has been favoured by the municipality.

Mr. MacDonald: Let me make one point. Am I not correct that this was a building that was put up after coming to you when the project was in embryo from—in other words, the developer said, "We are contemplating building a building and will you purchase it?"

Mr. Goyette: Yes, I think the planning of that building had been started and—

Mr. MacDonald: In other words—

Mr. Goyette:—and they came to us about what this project needed.

Mr. MacDonald: In other words, before the thing was built you knew it was going to be your project and your property and, therefore, Mr. Minister, I suggest that you cannot say that you in effect were stuck with this hopelessly inadequate recreational facility and things of this nature, when you bought the property?

Mr. Goyette: I would repeat again, however, that notwithstanding the fact it had started, we would still take the proposal as a proposal to the Metro housing committee because, as you know, Metro participates in the financing of the subsidy to the tune of 7.5 per cent. As a condition of our approval and our arrangement with Central Mortgage, we have gone to Metro—

Mr. MacDonald: But on whom does one fix the responsibility for all of this exchange of letters between the local planners, the local board of education, the Metro board of education, in anticipation that there were going to be 240 kids in the area, and suddenly you end up with 700 kids?

Mr. Goyette: We would look at that relationship by virtue of the way our purchasing was done between the developer and the municipality.

Mr. MacDonald: The municipality was led up the garden path because the developer and you working with the developer, you knew you were going to buy the property. He was building it for you, that was known from the outset. The municipality was led up the garden path thinking it was going to have 240 kids. It ended up with 700. I am not complaining about 700 kids coming into the area—except that if you are planning, surely you would plan for 700 kids. You do not plan for 240 and end up with 700.

Mr. Goyette: You are talking about a project that started in the early days of the great attempt to put things together. I suggest to you that the methods of trying to get the building and our relationship with the school board is probably a little more sophisticated.

You might be interested to know that the other day a proposal was turned down in one of the boroughs because someone made a judgement that there would be 14, I repeat, 14 children too many in the OHC project as opposed to what might have happened within the school facilities of the area. So we are really down that fine. I think this is probably getting under way now.

Mr. MacDonald: I am glad to hear that, but I still find it incomprehensible that at that stage anybody who was involved in it was an accomplice to this kind of planning and this kind of misrepresentation to the local municipality.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me say it is not misrepresentation on our part. We recognized that the building was going to be built; it was offered to us; on the basis of the facts we had before us we bought the building.

I think the federal authorities recognized also that money is now available for community service and playgrounds. If you ask, what are we going to be doing in the future, I can assure you that if we know there are going to be 700 kids there will be more playground facilities than there are today.

On the other hand, you cannot assure me that if the builder had gone ahead on his own he would not have had 700 kids there with no playground facilities.

Mr. MacDonald: Look, Mr. Minister, your case, I hope, is going to be the pattern for the future, but my point is this.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I know, you have got a problem today.

Mr. MacDonald: Even if there was only going to be 240 kids, to have one little piece of playground 20 by 30 feet is ludicrous.

Hon. Mr. Randall: What about the school facilities? Are there any school facilities around there at all?

Mr. MacDonald: Sure there are school facilities. In fact—and now we are getting off into another area, and before Jim Allan says that this is another estimate I am not going to say very much—the irony of this situation is that within literally 100 yards you have got the York stadium, a whole new stadium that is so big and so up to modern standards that the Argonauts come up to practise there, but 700 kids cannot get any accommodation. This is the whole problem of integrating community schools with community facilities.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Are the children not allowed to play on that York stadium?

Mr. MacDonald: No.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Is it privately owned?

Mr. MacDonald: No, it is owned by the public, by the borough of York. In fact, last winter, with 700 kids pouring out there and with nothing but this sloping, so-called, recreational area at the end of the building, which is a 45-degree hill, there was a snow fence at the end of the stadium and anybody who went up onto the stadium presumably was on forbidden territory.

This, I concede to you, is a local problem. I have here a letter from C. G. Dobbin, commissioner of parks and recreation—again back in 1966—to Mr. Harminc, the chief planner of the township of York. He said:

I have considered the application for development of the Porter Avenue senior citizens' and OHC scheme, and it is my opinion—

And this is surely the understatement of the year 1966:

—there is not quite sufficient play area to support this particular development. It may appear on the map that the area has sufficient parkland.

This is three little parks, one of which is 20 by 30; one of which is a hillside, and the third one of which is the centre of the townhouses and has never emerged at all as a play area.

It must be remembered that the Porter Avenue stadium has not been constructed for use as a local play area as it is planned to have its use controlled. Also, some of the property in this area may appear to be parkland, but is considered for use as parking area for the Porter Avenue stadium.

In short, there was no co-ordination; the developer is not interested in co-ordination. He was interested in building a product and pawning it off on OHC—getting rid of it for a fast buck.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I disagree with you.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, okay. Now let us—

Hon. Mr. Randall: We were very anxious to get it.

Mr. MacDonald: You were anxious to get what?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The accommodation for the people in the townhouses.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, I know you were anxious to get the accommodation, but the developer was not anxious to do anything but put up the brick and mortar, pawn it off on you, and walk out.

Now I know you had a warranty, and I want to ask questions on that briefly, if I may. I understand the one-year warranty ran out on April 1.

In view of the fact, for example, that the verandas were beginning to disintegrate and separate from the walls; that the elevator service was very poor—though I understand that CMHC regulations have been met—I find that was staggering that you can have 240-some units and only have two units of elevators in the building so that they burned out and you constantly were lucky if you had one elevator.

Mr. Riggs raised the question of a laundry room. How would OHC buy a building that had a laundry room on the ground floor that had absolutely no ventilation? It was a closed-in room and you put in a battery of washing machines and dryers—I suppose there must have been at least 15, 20, 25 of them. What made it even more ironic was that there was another little room beside it which was the waiting room. I am told today the temperature in that room is about 92.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is as bad as Queen's Park.

Mr. MacDonald: Right. And there is not a single chair in the waiting room. You know, if you were to try to operate a laundromat over on Yonge Street or somewhere on this basis you would not get to first base, and yet this is what they have done.

Mr. Riggs confirms changes now underway after you took this building. But why would it be built in this way unless you were planning to put the laundry somewhere else? Now you are punching holes through the cement wall to put in some sort of ventilation. Mr. Riggs reports, one year after all of the hue and cry that has gone on, they are finally putting in some ventilation, but why do you get stuck with a new building with a laundry room and no ventilation in it?

I do not blame the minister for being silent. There is no answer to that question.

Hon. Mr. Randall: There is no answer to a lot of things that architects do and—

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Did you ever sell a washing machine and dryer without proper ventilation?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is done right outside; we never pump it into the room. There is a difference between a good setup and a poor one, you see.

Mr. Goyette will comment on the guarantee that you talked about. I think he has something to say on that.

Mr. Goyette: Yes, time is up, but—

Mr. MacDonald: I hope—but, but, but.

Mr. Goyette: —but those items which were the deficiencies are still under warranty.

Mr. MacDonald: You mean the verandas and the windows—

Mr. Goyette: The verandas, yes—

Mr. MacDonald: —which they had to put plastic over to keep the winds from blowing in and water pouring in?

Mr. Goyette: Right. Now if you will recall, if the warranty ended—you gave me the date?

Mr. MacDonald: April 1.

Mr. Goyette: April 1, and it seemed to me it was about April 1 when the discussion about that project made the newspapers and we were just—

Mr. MacDonald: The committee blew up on March 17.

Mr. Goyette: Yes, but it started a little before then. At that point, if we had rushed right in and fixed them up it would, frankly, gentlemen, look as if somehow we were just getting in there to whitewash the thing. So to make absolutely sure, for all those concerned, we actually hired an outside firm of architectural consultants to come in and take a look at the thing. We asked, "What do you fellows think is wrong?" so that our staff does not go in and say, "That is all right and that needs to be changed"—

Mr. MacDonald: What is their report?

Mr. Goyette: We have the report.

Mr. MacDonald: For example, on the verandas and windows—

Mr. Goyette: The verandas, particularly, I remember thinking, had to be fixed. That will be done by the developer and by the contractor and we are still remedying that.

At the same time there is more, as you know. The landscaping as we got in there was not adequate; that is going to be done. You have mentioned the ventilation system in a laundry room has to be improved.

Mr. MacDonald: Do you have a performance bond on this?

Mr. Goyette: Yes, but — I am sorry, I should not use the word "but" — yes, we do. The performance bond, however, as you have suggested earlier, requires that it be in accordance with the standards of the national building code which is commonly known as The National Housing Act Standards.

Mr. MacDonald: You see, I am not a builder so forgive me for being awfully sceptical, because all members of the committee went out there and we went up to apartments in which the wind was blowing. You could stand in the middle of the room and feel the wind blowing in and this is a building that was less than a year old.

I do not know what you are going to do by way of rebuilding the window frame so that you can have a window that fits correctly. But what I am puzzled at is why in heaven's name was the building accepted in the first place? Why were the inspectors permitted — why did the inspectors on the job permit that kind of construction? You will have a slum building, let us face it; you will have a potential slum building, before very many years; it is inevitable.

On the 12th and 14th floors you have verandas that were out an inch from the wall so the people were scared to go out. You could shake the veranda railing. This is a building that is less than one year old. It is a bloody scandal — to put it in plain proletarian English. I just do not understand why OHC got caught in that. Sure, you were trying to get accommodation but it is just indefensible; completely indefensible.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The building has been accepted subject to deficiencies, and let me tell you this — there was never a building put up anywhere that does not have some deficiencies. I live in one today. I have been there since 1964, and when the wind blows from the north you can put your long underwear on because you get the breezes through the window; the curtains stand straight out from the wall. That is supposed to be one of the better apartments in Toronto and I venture to say you have got the same thing in Mrs. Renwick's bailiwick in Thornhill.

None of these buildings is going to be perfect. But let me just suggest to you, too, that the pressures we have been under in housing to house people mean that I would buy Uncle Tom's cabin tomorrow if I thought I could house a family. I would take credit for it today and I would get hell for it tomorrow. Let me just say this — we are not buying any pigs in a poke, when we get a building, if there are things wrong with it, we are going to make sure that the maintenance is looked after and the building is corrected. We have not accepted that building completely as yet without these deficiencies being fixed.

We can solve that problem tomorrow. We could move everybody out on the street, and I am not trying to be facetious. I am simply suggesting that it seems to me that when people get into Ontario Housing, the minute that they get in, if there are some things wrong, we get the complaints. We try to fix them up as quickly as we can.

I can remember Alexandra Park. We had lots of difficulties there and it won the National Design Council award for housing, but you would never think so once the tenants got in.

Mr. MacDonald: You are misrepresenting this.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I am not.

Mr. MacDonald: I am not talking about some building in which there may be minor deficiencies. That is another matter.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Minor or major.

Mr. MacDonald: I am talking about a building which is obviously deficient in a very major sense. You cannot deny it. Everybody has seen it and all I am saying is you were not buying a pig in a poke, you conceived this pig. You were part of the people, right from the very outset, who were in at the conception of this project, so it is not as if you got stuck with something after the event, so to speak.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me just suggest that if it is built to National Housing Act standards, and Central Mortgage and Housing and the OHC inspectors went around and found the building was intact and they bought it, and these things developed over the next year — which they could have done — then we have got to go back and repair these things. This is true in any new building. Maybe this one is worse than some of the new ones you will get today.

Mr. MacDonald: I am darn certain it is.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We are not denying we have lots of problems in that particular project, and we have taken steps to correct it, and I am sure we will correct it. I just want to assure you that we do not go out willy-nilly blindfolded and buy from any builder or get a proposal from a builder and shove it up because we want to get people housed, regardless of the pressures we are under to house people.

Mr. MacDonald: I do not want to take any more of the committee's time, Mr. Chairman. Let me say this by way of a footnote.

One of the reasons why you got into an almost impossible, irrational situation among tenants is because the people, whom you now think are irrational, were for five and six months heads of tenants' association and were making legitimate requests for basic facilities and for repairs and things of that nature, some of which had not yet been met one year later.

You created the situation among that tenants' association. I am not saying that it did not go from bad to worse, but the kind of buildings you took, the kind of facilities you put into them — whatever be the reasons for your failure to get in and provide the basic facilities and make some changes — you have created the situation, or at least you are in part the creator of the situation.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is your opinion. We do not buy it, necessarily.

Mr. MacDonald: I have only one final point, then I will hand it to Mrs. Renwick or anybody else who wants it. It is that if you are going to put — as I think it is wise to put — somebody who can be a spokesman for the tenants' association, will you request the Metropolitan Toronto Tenants' Association or some tenants' body to nominate half a dozen people, if you want to have certain control; I am not objecting to that. Make nominations so that you clear the air in terms of this being a rigged kind of investigation, because unfortunately that was the public image that emerged from the first one. If you want to achieve what you set out to achieve as your objectives, you are going to achieve it only if you restore some degree of public confidence. And to do that, I think it is necessary to say to the MTA or some responsible body, "Give us a half dozen names of people who might go on this committee," and you pick the one you want and let them go to work.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Chairman, can I ask one question on the remarks of the member for York South? How would the minister explain — the minister has said that this is an older building, a building bought a year ago and this sort of thing, or at least —

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is not an old building; they did not move in until 1969.

Mrs. M. Renwick: How does the minister justify — well, that is old in comparison to what I am going to speak about — the brand-new building at Finch and Birchmount, where the architect or the builder is supposed to have built the toilets too close to the wash-basins and those units are sitting there empty while this is being changed to the correct dimensions to meet the standards in that area?

I do not understand how the corporation does not have people on the job watching what is being done to catch this sort of thing. So I would ask the minister, how did this happen, how many units did it affect and what state are they in now?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, the very thing that you are asking us to explain is what your hon. friend on your left is asking us not to do: buy a building with known defects in it. When we bought that building apparently this situation, according to my colleagues here, came to our attention; we said, "Okay, correct it before we move anybody in."

Mrs. M. Renwick: You bought this building at Finch and Birchmount. You did not agree to have anybody build it for you.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I understand the building was under way and we bought it. Right. We are correcting defects before we move anybody in, and you brought this up in the House that there are many places that are vacant. We told you there were some changes going on inside, and until they are corrected, we would not move the people in. This is one of the things that we are trying to correct; otherwise, if we had moved them in, we would have had everybody complaining about the problem you just brought up to us.

Mr. MacDonald: If you put the wash-basins over the toilet bowl you will have more space.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If you hang it from sky hooks you will have a playroom.

Mr. MacDonald: I am sorry, it just does not add up. If you have got plans for a building and you buy it, do you not take a look at the plans and discover that the wash-basins are virtually on top of the toilet bowl?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would think that if it was built to The National Housing Act standards, there must have been many architects and designers who looked at that building. I cannot justify every mistake that an architect or inspector will make. All I can say is that if we find the mistake before people move in, before we take possession of the building under the guarantee, we will correct it. This is what we are doing. Nobody has built the perfect building yet. Michelangelo, you know, did not paint the perfect picture.

Mr. MacDonald: We are not talking about perfect buildings. We are far from perfection in this discussion.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, I know if we were not housing these people, we would be getting hell for not housing them.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Windsor West.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, to continue with this for a moment: How many architects does the housing corporation employ?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have a total of five.

Mr. Peacock: Five altogether, and you have something over 20,000 units under development at the moment?

Hon. Mr. Randall: At various stages, yes.

Mr. Peacock: Do these five architects, on your staff, examine every proposal you receive and the one which you finally accept?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would say they do, yes.

Mr. Peacock: And all these matters go before them, for their examination?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They are also examined by Central Mortgage and Housing as their money is going into them.

Mr. Peacock: And your architects follow those standards set by CMHC.

Hon. Mr. Randall: In the main. We say that ours is somewhat higher than has been established by Central Mortgage and Housing.

Mr. Peacock: Are they higher in terms of space? I recall Mr. Goyette—I wanted to come back to this a few days ago—speaking of the CMHC standards for family units, the first bedroom being 120 square feet, the second 100 square feet, the third 90 square feet.

Mr. Goyette: I think the third should be 70 square feet.

Mr. Peacock: And these too are laid down by CMHC?

Mr. Goyette: By the national building code.

Mr. Peacock: The National Building Code which CMHC follows in approving your project applications? Do you ever, particularly in the high density developments, propose higher standards than the space requirements under the National Building Code?

Mr. Goyette: Yes we do. The architects are always being scolded by the property management people that the bedroom is not a fit. There are considerations other than area that apply as well; the location of the window, can one get two beds in where maybe two beds are needed, so we do look at that kind of thing, yes.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, I would like to go back to the subject that the hon. member for Downsview raised at the opening of our meeting.

Some objections were raised by members opposite that the matter of rents paid by families on social assistance was not within the scope of this vote, of the Ontario Housing Corporation. I would like to disagree with that position and point out to you why it is very much within the scope of the vote.

Firstly, the minister, or Mr. Goyette, referred to the federal-provincial agreements for the management of the projects built by OHC under which, I believe, OHC has the obligation to return to CMHC as fully as possible all of the moneys which it is committed to return under the amortization schedules.

That means that the rents of all tenants have to be of such a blend that they come as close as possible, and therefore require as little subsidy as possible in order to meet the commitments OHC has made in those federal-provincial agreements. And is it not the case that in the operating manual for local housing authorities—and presumably this same provision applies to OHC administered units—that the mix of tenants has to be such that their incomes will support rents as close as possible to the full costs of the project and that therefore the subsidization be as small as possible?

Mr. Goyette: The answer would be no. Maybe Mr. Whaley could add a comment.

Mr. E. J. Whaley (Ontario Housing Corporation): Mr. Chairman, I think this is basically the same question that was brought up the other night by another member. In referring to the housing authority manual, you are referring to a manual which is geared specifically to the operation of housing developed under the federal-provincial partnership arrangement.

Mr. Peacock: For full recovery?

Mr. Whaley: Both for full recovery and for geared-to-income housing. And, in the days when there was only that kind of arrangement, there was a management agreement between the federal government, the province of Ontario and the local housing authority known as the Number 3 agreement. This agreement specified that in the operation of the particular project, every endeavour should be made to ensure that the subsidy should not exceed a certain figure per unit, or such other sum as may be determined from time to time by the federal-provincial partnership.

It is true to say that in those days there was an endeavour to achieve a blend of income groupings so that the particular subsidy was the target. These days, we call them guidelines. They used to be called targets. But since the federal-provincial arrangements are no longer applicable, a target subsidy has not been set. An estimate goes to the Central Mortgage at the time a project is conceived on what the subsidy will likely be in the light of the surveys of need and demand we have carried out. This gives an indication of the income ranges which we can reasonably anticipate for the tenants when the project is completed.

Mr. Peacock: Is it not correct to say, though, that OHC is still under some constraint to select a blend of tenants that will result in as low a subsidization as possible?

Mr. Whaley: There are no constraints whatsoever in the selection of tenants based on income consideration. The sole criterion is the degree of housing need, regardless of the level of income of any one particular family.

Mr. Peacock: Right. May I ask, Mr. Chairman, why OHC continues the practice that the hon. member for Downsview referred to, of taking the full shelter allowance which is available to a tenant on family benefits, or disability assistance, or general welfare assistance, even where they may not initially on their admission to Ontario Housing be in receipt of that full shelter allowance?

Mr. Whaley: That is the substance of the operating agreement between ourselves and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in respect of the rental rates to be determined for families in receipt of public assistance allowances. That it shall be the greater of the amount of rent in accordance with the rent scale related to the income or the shelter portion of the allowance payable under the welfare act regulations, either The General Welfare Assistance Act or The Family Benefits Act.

Mr. MacDonald: The greater of?

Mr. Whaley: The greater of, right.

Mr. Peacock: That is what Mr. Goyette quoted to us earlier. So this, in effect, results in many tenants on public assistance paying a higher rent than those who are employed, or receiving some other kind of income, other than employment earnings or family benefits?

Mr. Whaley: Yes, it can do, but this is not a figure which is established by Ontario Housing Corporation. When a person who is in receipt of assistance first makes up tenancy, the amount of rent which he is charged is quoted to us by either The Department of Social and Family Services, or the local municipal welfare administrator.

Mr. Peacock: Quoted to you only because, on application, the tenants' circumstances are investigated by the housing authority to determine what level of income he has, the source of that income and the rest of it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think if you are on welfare, the municipal authorities already have that information.

Mr. Peacock: That is a matter of course. Right. But it is in no respect any different from the same kind of background information you get on a person who is employed in industry. You want to know how much his income is and where he receives it from. Why does the agreement between CMHC and OHC call for this? Apparently that is where the requirement lies—in the agreement between the two housing authorities, the federal and the provincial. It is not in any agreement between OHC and The Department of Social and Family Services.

Mr. Goyette: One would assume that families in that category on the private market were getting it from the province in the public housing sector, they should share 50 per cent of the return of the rental. I think this is their rationale—

Mr. Peacock: That is CMHC rationale.

Mr. Goyette: —as I would understand it, without being presumptuous.

Mr. Goyette: It is, then, a case of your saying that CMHC has pressed for this requirement in your agreement with it for the rents to be paid. This is one means of maximizing the rents in a project, so I think the statement I made earlier still remains true—that you, by this maximization, ensure as small an amount of subsidization as possible, in respect to those tenants on public assistance.

The reason I raise it, Mr. Chairman, is that it does create, as has been admitted, a number of anomalous situations. You have the situation in which an Ontario Housing tenant who has been, say, actively employed, is laid off, files a claim for unemployment insurance, and has the rent adjusted according to the level of unemployment insurance benefit.

I will give you an example without mentioning the name of the tenant. This person received a benefit from unemployment insurance, following lay-off, of approximately $170 per month. There was one child in the family. The rent at that time—

Mr. Singer: A single-parent family?

Mr. Peacock: A single-parent family. The rent at that time, of the same tenant that I am speaking of, reflected the level of income from unemployment insurance under the rent-geared-to-income scale, which was about $36 or $38 a month. When the unemployment insurance benefit ran out, and the person was still unable to find employment and applied for general welfare assistance and then mother's allowance under family benefits, the allowance from the province of Ontario remained approximately the same as the level of benefit from unemployment insurance.

There were a few dollars more a month coming in from the provincial benefits. The rent went from the $36 or $38 a month to $91 a month, all because of that shift of income from unemployment insurance where the rent-geared-to-income scale applied, to the full assessment of rent based on the shelter allowance that this person was afforded—$85 a month—because it was a case of a single-parent family with one child and a $6 add-on for services, to bring the rent with the transition from unemployment insurance to family benefits to $91 a month from a level of $36 or $38 under unemployment insurance. Now, this you can see, Mr. Minister, in the minds of a person such as that, is a grave injustice, because—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Can I stop you here? I have a question. You say under family benefits they got the same amount of money that they were getting under unemployment insurance?

Mr. Peacock: For one adult and one child. It just happened, in this instance, to be roughly the same. In a much larger family, I realize of course, it would be a considerably higher amount under family benefits than under unemployment insurance, where the benefit is not related to family size.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me just follow this. You say $170 a month is what they got under unemployment insurance and $170 is what they got under family benefits. On one, the rent went down to $38 a month, because they were unemployed and their income dropped. On the other one, their rent went up to $91 a month because they were on family benefits. It did not affect the $170 a month?

Mr. Peacock: No, $170 a month is still coming in.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The woman has still got the $170 a month? So what was paid to the housing corporation had no bearing on her income.

Mr. Peacock: Oh, yes, it did indeed, because—

Hon. Mr. Randall: In what way?

Mr. Peacock: Because during her receipt of unemployment insurance, her rent was levied under the rent - geared - to - income formula.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes.

Mr. Peacock: This being at the bottom of the income scale meant a rent of around the minimum amount of $36 or $38 a month.

Hon. Mr. Randall: So she had $170 less $38.

Mr. Peacock: Right. But because the unemployment benefit ran out, and this person then had to apply to GWA, and then was placed on mother's allowance, the shelter component of the new benefit from the province of Ontario was $85 a month and the rent levied by the housing authority became $85 a month and a $6 add-on for some additional services that were provided in the unit—in the fully serviced unit. That is one particular situation. I think if your officials—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Before you go away from that, what I am trying to figure out is what is the point you are making. The woman, who was getting $170 unemployment insurance, now got $170. She is paying $38 of that for rent, so that, in effect, she was getting $170 less $38. Then, when she went on welfare she got $170 and she had no rental component whatsoever. The rent was paid for regardless of—

Mr. Peacock: No, no, no. The rent, once she went on mother's allowance rose from $38 or $36 a month to $91 a month.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Peacock: And it comes directly out of the benefit, you see. Do not be carried away by your earlier suggestion that recipients of the family benefits programme have their rent paid directly to your corporation by The Department of Social and Family Services. They do not, at the moment, except in cases where the shelter allowance is assigned by the tenant in agreement with The Department of Social and Family Services, because of difficulties in handling money and difficulties in budgeting. For most tenants, they continue to pay their rent themselves out of their benefit received from the province of Ontario, the mothers' allowance, the GWA or disability, or what have you. In this instance, the new level of rent of $91 a month was coming out of approximately the same amount of money as she was getting earlier on unemployment insurance.

Hon. Mr. Randall: In other words, you are saying that out of that $170 you took $90 off for rent.

Mr. Peacock: Right. So that all that was left was approximately some $80 for food and personal care. I think if you will check the schedules of The Family Benefits Act for a single-parent family with one child you will find that that amount is approximately correct. That has been raised somewhat since May 1.

Mr. Singer: About the same for one family.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Would Mr. Riggs like to make a comment on this before we get away from it?

Mr. Riggs: The two examples that have been mentioned, unemployment insurance and public assistance, are substantially different. The person who is on unemployment insurance has a gross income. All the benefits under unemployment insurance are considered as gross income and we establish his rent on the rent-geared-to-income scale. That is reasonably straightforward. When he goes on public assistance it completely changes, and the changes in that amount—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Why should it?

Mr. Riggs: I cannot speak to that, it is not within our jurisdiction. It completely changes in that the moneys advanced to the recipient are composed of at least two items. One is established as a shelter allowance or rent. This is established by the agency, it is an arbitrary formula, calculated in terms of the fiscal policy of the respective governments and are advised of this amount and we collect it on a monthly basis. That, in essence, can be viewed as one separate cheque which says "rent" on it.

The second component covers food and clothing and incidentals, and this too is a separate entity and does not relate to gross income. So you are getting two cheques, both established by the agency and both sent to the recipient, one to cover his rent and the second one to be utilized to buy his food, clothing and incidentals. These are the terms of our agreements; we are merely farming them out in terms of those agreements.

Mr. Peacock: I appreciate, Mr. Chairman, that the structuring of the benefit and the amounts of each component of the benefit, whether it is a disability allowance, or mothers' allowance, or GWA, or what have you, has nothing to do with the Ontario Housing Corporation. But what I am saying is that the agreement between CMHC and the Ontario Housing Corporation seems to have a great deal to do with how much rent a recipient of social and family services is going to pay; because there is no other requirement other than that found in the agreement between CMHC and OHC for a tenant who is also a recipient of family benefits or disability benefits to pay the full shelter allowance, the full shelter component of the provincial benefit.

That is the only place that requirement is found, apparently, and I do not see why the Ontario Housing Corporation cannot come up with a means of treating persons on family benefits or disability benefits in exactly the same way as they treat others receiving incomes from earnings or from unemployment insurance or from some other source so that on the face of it, at least, equity is assured to those who have to rely for their income on the programmes of the province or the federal government. Because for many of them it is a grave injustice—even though, in some instances additional to the one I have just cited, and I think they would be the majority of instances—the person is not any less well off for having received a notice for a raise in rent from a housing authority to bring them up to a full shelter allowance paid to them by The Department of Social and Family Services.

But, on the face of it, for them, they are being treated in an inequitable manner, and in a manner that is very different from anyone else actively employed or receiving their income from some other source. You do have a good number of tenant families on public assistance who are paying much more rent than those actively at work and I think that has to be worked out.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think you have to keep in mind too, and this is not any answer to the problem, but a man who is working and has earned himself $170 a month unemployment insurance has made a contribution in taxes and to society because he has been able to work and pay his way. All of a sudden he runs into bad luck and he is laid off and he has to go on welfare. It seems to me you cannot have it both ways at the moment.

I think there are some inequities there. I agree with you it should be looked at, but I think you must remember that if you have families on welfare—continuous welfare which we have in this province, and there are a great many of them—they are making no contribution to the economic benefit of this society except that they are on a welfare benefit day in and day out. I think this also should be looked at.

It is not an easy solution, but as far as we are concerned in the housing corporation, if the federal authorities, along with Social and Family Services, decide what they are going to pay us in rent, we are not going to argue about it. But there is no fixed figure in our minds as to what economic benefit we want to get out of a project in order to take care of our commitments to Central Mortgage and Housing, because if people cannot pay their rent we make up the difference in subsidy and we pay it.

Mr. Peacock: Right. Now, let me say to the minister that many of his tenants are persons who are disabled or for some reason unable to participate in the job market. Do not let him think for a moment that some of them are not making a great contribution; they may not be making it economically by working, but some of the families I have seen through their contacts with me, who are trying to get into public housing, are doing a monumental job of raising a family. It is incredible how they can raise a family in such awful housing circumstances as I have seen them living in, and have children who are intelligent and happy and bright; in that regard, they are certainly making a contribution that no one should play down or put in second place to the kind of contribution of someone —

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am not downgrading them. I simply say that there are some —

Mr. Peacock: Right, but do not overlook that kind of contribution.

Hon. Mr. Randall: — inequities between the fellow who is making a contribution through the sweat of his brow. There are a number of people, as you recognize, who continue to be on welfare year in and year out; these are the hard-core families who, I think, society is going to look at one of these days and say, "Can these people work or can they not work?"

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, when you have some of the families that I know, whose former principal wage earners suffer a very severe limitation on their vision, loss of hearing, or are crippled severely in some manner, there simply is no way they will ever be able to make a contribution economically by going out to work for a living — and they are the majority. There may be a hard core of families who are chronically on welfare, but they are not the ones I am speaking to the minister about.

I am speaking of those who have suffered a disability which legitimately renders them unable to go out and work and make that kind of contribution. Given the right environment in Ontario Housing, they will continue to make the same kind of contribution I just spoke of in terms of raising a family in a healthful and enjoyable way, and they have got to see that the housing corporation is treating them fairly and equitably in the same manner as it is treating anyone who is able to go out and work for a living and pay his rent under the present geared-to-income scale.

I just want to make the plea to the minister that he adjust his programme in that manner so that we end this apparent double standard for those families.

Mr. Chairman, I want to turn to one other matter, if there are no comments or questions on that subject.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I would like a question if I might, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Does the question refer to the same point?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Exactly. Does the minister know, when CMHC made this agreement with the Ontario government to pay all that is allowed under the Act for shelter rather than rent-geared-to-income, was it at the request of the Ontario government that CMHC agreed that this will be included in the—

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, I think they set up their rules and regulations themselves and we inherit their regulations. They make most of the regulations with reference to the way in which the housing will be paid for, and we abide by those regulations. In the recent one on rent-geared-to-income, naturally we make recommendations and if Central Mortgage and Housing are in line, which they are in most cases, they will agree with some of these recommendations they had made themselves. They were the first people to set up a housing project and we inherited that housing project from them, and there have been a lot of changes and amendments ever since.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the minister, who provides the corporation with service, and who receives payment for, the work on land titles in respect to a project which OHC is developing under the builder-proposal method, or under outright purchase of an existing building?

Mr. A. A. Hermant (Ontario Housing Corporation): For the most part, the title work and certification of titles across the province is assigned to local solicitors in the municipality in which the project is being developed. We are involved in so many municipalities that there is no way that it could be done by a central staff located in our head office. It is distributed quite broadly across the province, and we feel that we get better service by having the matter handled by local solicitors who are familiar with local titles.

Mr. Peacock: Is legal work other than title work performed in these communities in respect to the development of a project? In other words, do you have a package deal from those legal firms which you hire to do work in connection with the development of a project?

Mr. Hermant: Basically it is the title work in connection with the acquisition of the land. The contract work is done in Toronto.

Mr. Peacock: May I ask, in respect to the title work, what fee is paid? Is the fee based on the value of the contract?

Mr. Hermant: No, it is a fee based on the acquisition price of the land component of a package. The package is broken up into construction costs, which is represented by a general construction contract, and the land acquisition figure, and the fee is based on the value of the land, which forms part of that package.

Mr. Singer: Unless you buy land and buildings.

Mr. Hermant: Unless we buy land and buildings. That is rather rare in recent years. I can think of only one or two instances where we have bought a total of 15 buildings for public housing.

Mr. Singer: This afternoon alone we have heard of a couple of such cases, including the one Mr. MacDonald talked about.

Mr. Hermant: The Humber Boulevard project was done as a general construction contract—

Mr. Peacock: Could I ask what this particular component of cost adds to a project? Could we have some idea of the amount of the fee for this legal work?

Mr. Hermant: It varies with the value of the land in each particular case.

Mr. Peacock: Is there a fairly constant fee in relation to the acquisition cost?

Mr. Hermant: We apply the same fee structure to all solicitors who act for us across the province.

Mr. Peacock: OHC determines the fee structure? What is that? Is it a proportion?

Mr. Hermant: One and a quarter per cent on the first $20,000, three quarters of one and a quarter on the next $80,000 and one-tenth of one per cent on the balance above that.

Mr. Peacock: I do not think I could figure that out in the next few seconds, Mr. Chairman, but in respect to Chapel Glen for instance, I wonder if the corporation has here with it the legal fee in respect to the titles.

Mr. Hermant: There was no legal fee work involved in that one. We handled that one with our own internal legal staff.

Mr. Peacock: I see.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, I was just going to point out that originally there was a legal fee. I am quoting from the Globe and Mail, hoping that this will be accurate information, and perhaps—

Mr. Hermant: Pardon me. I can correct you. There were two phases—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Just a moment please. Mr. Chairman, I would like to state that the only changes—I am quoting an article in the Globe and Mail, May 23, 1970, by Tom Pryatt—since 1967 have been the deletion of some services such as legal fees from the all-inclusive price. The maximum allowable charge for incidentals has been $700. Could we draw from the $700 figure what the legal fees would have been for the original Chapel Glen project?

Mr. Hermant: The legal fee referred to there represents the developer's legal fees and not Ontario Housing Corporation's legal fees.

Mr. Peacock: I would very much like some information if it is available to us here today, if not perhaps later, about the 400-unit senior citizens' high-rise project on Ouellette Avenue in Windsor. Is the amount of the legal fee on the title available in respect to that project?

Mr. Hermant: Yes, I can get that for you in a very few moments.

Mr. Chairman: Is that all?

Mr. Peacock: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for York North.

Mr. W. Hodgson: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question with regard to senior citizens' housing. When your representatives go out to make a survey of an area of a town for senior citizens' housing, do they make a survey of the surrounding community as well?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would think if it is a small town we would.

Mr. W. Hodgson: Say a town of 10,000.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mostly the municipality, but in some areas, they do look at the surrounding area, which they may draw on as far as future senior citizens are concerned. Perhaps Mr. Riggs here can make comment on that, can you?

Mr. Goyette: Essentially speaking, it is pretty much within the municipality in which the project is likely to be built. The main reason is that the municipality is a contributor toward any subsidy that might take place, and they usually have their own rules as to who will be the eligible people for the project. Then usually it is somebody from that municipality. There are instances, however, in a township near Inco—Bucke township—which, I think, is near New Liskeard up in northern Ontario, where sometimes three or four of the townships will get together and say we will have one senior citizens' project at a central point, and in that fact one would survey what the need might be in the various municipalities. But roughly speaking, the survey is pretty much done in the municipality in which the project will be done.

Mr. W. Hodgson: Then a rural municipality can make application. To get a senior citizens' project, each municipality has to make its own application. Is that it?

Mr. Goyette: Yes, each municipality, whatever the municipal entity is, makes its own application. We have many so-called rural municipalities. The only thing I would caution against, Mr. Chairman, is that there are areas in some of the rural municipalities where there are no piped municipal services and building is a bit of a difficulty.

Mr. W. Hodgson: What happens, though, to the senior citizen in those municipalities where there is the problem of no municipal services?

Mr. Goyette: In one or two places we have gone ahead with a septic tank arrangement. But our main problem here is getting our financing from the federal government where services other than piped services are available.

Mr. W. Hodgson: And in a municipality where these senior citizens' homes are established, they have the right to select and choose? If they cannot fill them themselves they can turn down a resident from a neighbouring municipality?

Mr. Goyette: As far as we are concerned, and as far as—

Mr. W. Hodgson: Oh, I know as far as you are concerned, but I am talking about the rights of the municipality. They can turn down residents from neighbouring municipalities?

Mr. Goyette: They can turn them down, and they can also accept them if they wish. This, of course, as you know, is done by the housing authority in that municipality. I think in Timmins, for example, they took some people in from Schumacher.

Mr. W. Hodgson: Would it not be a better policy when you made a survey in a particular town—I am talking about a rural-urban area—you went out into the other municipalities and tried to get the co-operation of all the municipalities. Then they would all feel part of the project and we could house all our senior citizens who need housing. There is a great need for senior citizens' housing, in addition to that in the municipality in which the senior citizens' residence is established.

Mr. Goyette: I quite agree with you. You might be interested that our production of senior citizen housing in 1965 represented, in terms of units, about five per cent of our starts. I think last year the number of units moved up to 35 per cent. We have also done surveys in I think, something like 160 municipalities in Ontario. This does mean that we have gone out into many of the smaller units. We have been delighted to go into smaller units.

Mr. W. Hodgson: Yes, I think this is one of our problems. At the present time there is a new senior citizens' housing unit going up and people get high hopes that they are going to get into this building. Once it is established they say, "Sorry, you do not live in our municipality," and they feel like they are not part of the whole show or part of the province, when they are turned away.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Now that we have set up area-housing authorities, which are starting to share, your housing authorities will be taking in several municipalities. So that I think the needs of people in the rural areas are probably being given greater consideration than they have been in the past in this new area-housing authority bill.

Mr. J. W. Snow (Halton East): May I say, Mr. Chairman, on this particular point, in one instance I know of in my own area the town of Georgetown and the township of Esquesing—Esquesing surrounds Georgetown—had a joint survey and application made for senior citizens' housing. People will be able to go there from either the township or the town.

Mr. Chairman: Any further questions? The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. J. R. Smith (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Chairman, on the subject of senior citizens' accommodation. I remember in 1967 the minister came to open a number of new units in a complex called the Macassa Park senior citizens' apartments which are adjacent to another senior citizens' development named after the hon. member for Hamilton West. This is quite a large development now of fine senior citizens' accommodation. However, it is noteworthy that in the other senior citizens' high-rise apartments in the downtown areas of Hamilton these new developments all have some form of recreational facilities usually in the form of a lounge-type recreational room. I know at the Ken Soble apartments in particular these facilities are certainly enjoyed by the residents of the project. Near the Macassa Park and Ada Pritchard apartments there is the municipal home for the aged called Macassa Lodge which has a large auditorium.

That home in turn has had several expansions during the past few years and the auditorium there is used extensively for the entertainment and recreational needs of the residents of the home. I would like to see the Ontario Housing Corporation look into the possibility of perhaps providing some form of recreational lounge area for these nearby senior citizens' apartments.

The second thing I would like to bring to the minister's attention is a brief which was submitted by the Mohawk tenants' association to the Ontario Housing Corporation in early May. Mr. Chairman, this was submitted directly to Mr. Sutars of Ontario Housing. I received a brief at the same time. I have not had an opportunity to hear personally from Mr. Sutars about their brief. However, there are some things in this that I would like to share with the minister as they are rather disturbing. This is a brief which, incidentally, was drafted with the help of the Hamilton and District Social Planning and Research Council, and it calls for changes in regulations governing Mohawk Gardens that, if implemented, would create a higher quality of life for the tenants and their families. One of the paragraphs in the summary of their report, "Ontario Housing", reads as follows:

Driving into this project, one can tell almost immediately that it is low-cost housing. Compared to other districts, there are fewer trees, no fences, fewer relatively new paint jobs. Once inside a home, one notices the open closets, the unsafe doors, particularly in the bathrooms and basements, lack of storm windows, screens and cupboard doors, deficient basements not suitable for children to play in.

The project tends to suffer from public inequity. We believe that public housing should be of such quality as to set a good example to the private market and give the tenants a feeling of pride. It is simply incredible that the government be allowed to maintain substandard housing. Our desire for adequate housing conditions is based on more than just an interest in comfort. Conditions under which people live have some impact on determining the level at which they function.

Mr. Chairman, one of the discouraging aspects of the report is the information that the survey which this tenants' association circulated shows there was a high incidence of unsatisfactory maintenance of the units, in particular as mentioned in this report—

Mr. Chairman: I might mention that the hon. member for Hamilton Mountain went into this very thoroughly last week. If there are any specific—

Mr. J. R. Smith: Unfortunately, I had a death in the family and I was away for a few days last week.

Mr. Chairman: If there are any specific questions you would like to ask?

Mr. J. R. Smith: This is a three-level project, three levels of government—I am wondering what Ontario Housing intends to do regarding the brief.

Hon. Mr. Randall: In our discussion last week with one of the members who brought it up, it was said it was wartime housing, as you know, which was moved from its original location. He also pointed out that many of the houses were in good shape, that maintenance had been looked after.

However, what we suggested was that there is a possibility some of them should be knocked down and the area used to rebuild housing there. I think, as Mr. Riggs pointed out, this is one of the areas we are going to look at with Central Mortgage and Housing because we have municipal apartments in there also. As you recall, some of our difficulties there have been that the municipal partners did not want any changes made in Mohawk Gardens some time ago. These changes usually complicate things and with elections coming along they said do not throw people out on the street now; do not knock anything down.

It is one of the areas that we are going to have a look at in view of the changes we have been receiving now from Central Mortgage and Housing about recreational areas, community facilities, and the things that can be done to, perhaps, put new housing in those areas. Not all of them need to be replaced but perhaps some of them should. We are going to have a look at them.

Mr. J. R. Smith: Mr. Chairman, in the fear of generalizing here, many of these units are new. The row housing is of very high standard and is a worthy indication of good public housing. It is in particular about some of the older units that I would like to see Ontario Housing put the pressure on Central Mortgage and Housing to undertake this survey. If I recall correctly, it was announced as long ago as five years ago that Central Mortgage was going to initiate some form of survey. Of course, this all hinges on whether or not these homes will be offered for sale to the tenants.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think there are about 80 units on the fringe of that area you are talking about.

Mr. J. R. Smith: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Randall: About 80 units in that area you are talking about?

Mr. J. R. Smith: About 80 new ones. The remainder of about 420 would be older, what we refer to as wartime housing. I think, by the same token, this undoubtedly will be a long-term project if these units are to be replaced by other forms of housing and redeveloped. There should not be any slow-down or holding back or household repairs and maintenance on the project.

Mr. W. Hodgson: Mr. Chairman, just one quick question in regard to senior citizen housing before we leave it. Would you consider in plans for the future, that senior citizens' housing could be built on a regional basis? I am talking about a region, the same as regional senior citizens homes are built?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I have a note here—we had a joint application of senior citizens from Vaughan and Markham townships—

Mr. W. Hodgson: I am talking about the new region of York. Could this be considered on a regional basis for senior citizens' apartments rather than on individual towns, if the new region so decided?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, the same as Metro; they set up Metro housing.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Nipissing.

Mr. R. S. Smith (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask some questions first with regard to the HOME programmes, specifically in the North Bay area, where they have purchased some property in the last six months or so—five months, I guess. I would like to ask, firstly, how much was paid for that land exactly? For the 80 lots that were purchased?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Just a second. I will get that for you.

Mr. R. S. Smith: And whom they were purchased from, if you could tell me that as well?

Mr. Goyette: Could we look at that. I do not know if you have any other questions, but—

Mr. R. S. Smith: You look that up anyway and then I can point out to you the point I am trying to make. As I understand it, the price was either $397,407 or—I was just trying to figure out the exact cost per lot, but it comes to a little over $5,000 per lot.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Whose properties were they? What was the name of the property, do you remember?

Mr. R. S. Smith: Van Horne Crescent.

Mr. Goyette: That is a street in Ferris?

Mr. R. S. Smith: Down in Ferris, yes. From my understanding from the press release that went out, it was somewhere in the area of $400,000, give or take a few thousand dollars. Perhaps he has it there now.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Gateway Developments, single lots, $4,200, and there were 112 singles at $4,200. Does that add up? One hundred and twelve single lots, fully serviced at $4,200 at lot. Gateway Developments, 30 lots already serviced to be disposed of immediately.

Mr. R. S. Smith: And all the lots purchased are to be serviced?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh, yes.

Mr. R. S. Smith: The point I would like to make is that, during the past year or so, the same developer has been selling lots in the same area. These lots in the same area are in a far better position with regard to the scenic and aesthetic value of the lots. The lots that you have purchased are along the railroad track. They are the poorest lots in the whole subdivision in the whole area. They have been bypassed by developers earlier because they were not salable.

Other lots that he has been selling in that area on a single basis, or two or three at a time, have been selling at $3,750 per lot. These have been purchased by individual builders on the basis of $10 down and the rest as they draw on their mortgage from CMHC or wherever their mortgage money is coming from. So, in effect, they are saying that the HOME market value should be less than $3,750, because of the concessions in the way they are purchasing them and the fact that they are going to be financed for at least eight to ten months.

The question I have is why Ontario Housing Corporation went in there and paid $500 a lot more—almost $500 a lot more—for the poorest land in the subdivision and bought 112 lots for cash money and why the price was so high for those properties when you consider for what other lots were sold. I have a list of 12 other lots that were sold in the adjoining area for $3,750, and they are much superior lots. I content that what OHC is doing in this HOME programme in that area is inflating the price of land for other purchasers.

Rather than providing assistance to people to be able to obtain land that they can afford, they are increasing the price of land to other purchasers and other developers. Based on that sale for the property in that area, the developers in that area are now trying to get more money for their land, because they felt if Ontario Housing Corporation were going to pay $4,200 each in a lump sum for 80 lots, that certainly their single lots should be selling for a lot more than $3,750. So I think from what I found out that OHC has paid $60,000 too much for the lots and has provided an incentive to the developers in the area to obtain more money for other land. So I think OHC is defeating its purpose in the area—rather than creating low-priced or reasonably priced land for the small purchaser—in an attempt to provide homes. I think the opposite is being done there and I cannot see why so much more money was paid for this land than is being paid by people who are buying one, two or three lots. I would like an explanation from the minister.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, let me first say I do not know anything about the people paying $3,750 or the location of their lots. It is difficult to get serviced lots in North Bay. The lots we get are serviced. The funds were borrowed, as you know, through Central Mortgage and Housing and both their people and ourselves priced those lots and figured that at $4,200 they were a good buy for the HOME programme. Now, insofar as the competitive prices up there being paid by one or two or three builders—$10 down and the balance when you catch up with them—I cannot argue with that because I know nothing about it.

We have to check your side of the story to find out whether we got a good buy or a poor buy. All I am saying is there are very few areas in Ontario where you can buy serviced lots for much less than $4,200 and North Bay is one of those areas in our opinion.

Mr. R. S. Smith: The opinion of the local people, who are dealing with this property from day to day—and I am talking about some of the builders who are buying these properties all the time as well as some of the real estate people who are dealing in these properties—is that OHC paid $60,000 too much money and they have inflated the price of land in the area by doing that.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do not forget that they are in competition with us. If we did not buy from them, then they are not going to be very happy with us. We run into this every day of the week. If some fellow does not make a deal he automatically figures out that OHC is paying too much money or bought in the wrong place. I am not trying to be facetious. I am just saying that no matter what we do on land there is always a guy who comes forward and says, "If OHC had come to me—"

Mr. R. S. Smith: I will guarantee to the minister that the people who have come to me are not trying to sell you any property in the area and do not own—

Hon. Mr. Randall: The very fact that we bought there though—I can appreciate their price there had gone up when they went back for a second helping.

Mr. R. S. Smith: In fact you had inflated the prices in the area and you paid too much.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The point is, what do we do, if there are lots around, and there were, and this is the fixed price approved by Central Mortgage and Housing? They have looked at them. We have looked at them. We figure it is a good buy in that area and we buy them. Automatically the follow-up is, unless they have been buying lots for $3,700, that we probably paid too much—we put the value of the land up. But we get accused of that in almost every area in which we buy. I do not know how we can overcome

it. Because if we do not buy we are accused of not putting lots on the market and if we do buy, of providing lots for middle-income families. What kinds of houses are these fellows putting on $3,700 lots? Are they building—

Mr. R. S. Smith: Twenty-two thousand dollars and $23,000.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Are there any lots under the HOME programme?

Mr. R. S. Smith: No. They are building under conventional mortgages and selling them in the neighbourhood of $23,000 whereas yours are going to be around $15,000 maximum. Is that not what you put on these lots?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Depends on whether it is three or four bedrooms.

Mr. R. S. Smith: I will tell you this. You are going to have very great difficulty in getting people to go into that area. Some people have come to me and they have been down to look at it and they said, "We would not put a nickel in a house in that area." This is because of the land situation, it is low, it is wet, and what do they look at? They look at the railway tracks. It is the worst land in the whole subdivision down there. It was passed over for two or three years because they could not sell it to any other developer, but Ontario Housing Corporation comes along and buys it at an inflated price.

I should think you are going to have great difficulty getting people to go in there through your programme. I cannot understand why they were in such a hurry to purchase this land. You say that lots are hard to find in North Bay; well, The Department of Municipal Affairs has just turned down two other subdivisions because it says there are over 600 lots available in the area, and there is no need for more property in the area. They turned down two other subdivisions.

I think either Municipal Affairs is wrong or you people are wrong—one or the other. I should think that there was not a close enough look taken at this. Who were the principals involved from whom you purchased?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Gateway Developments, whoever they are...

Mr. R. S. Smith: Are they connected in any way with Headway builders?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know. I would say not.

Mr. R. S. Smith: You would say not.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Actually, my officials say no.

Let me say this about these other locations you are talking about. Of course, we would have to check them out with Municipal Affairs, and I will check out the information you have given us today to see what the facts are. We will look into it.

Mr. R. S. Smith: Who were you dealing with in regard to the purchase of this land?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Gateway Developments, whoever they are.

Mr. R. S. Smith: Who are the principals involved in Gateway?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I do not know. I will try to get that information for you. I do not have it here.

Mr. R. S. Smith: Was $4,200 the offered price to you or was there any bargaining between you and the principals?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They wanted more. This is the negotiated price.

Mr. R. S. Smith: How much were they asking?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I could not tell you off-hand. We could take a look at it.

Mr. R. S. Smith: Did your people price the sales that went on recently in the area?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would think they looked over the whole area and made up their minds whether it was a good buy or otherwise. When this goes to Central Mortgage and Housing, they also look at it and decide whether it is a good buy or otherwise. If they do not think it is a good buy, 75 per cent of the loan is not there. We are guided in making our decision not only by our own land people, but by Central Mortgage and Housing, as well as by the local conditions.

Mr. R. S. Smith: Did you have any independent appraisers you called or not?

Mr. Goyette: Yes.

Mr. R. S. Smith: Could I have a copy of the appraisal?

Mr. Goyette: We do not have that here, but we could get it for you.

Mr. R. S. Smith: You had correspondence in regard to the bargaining on the price of the lots, from their first offer to what they finally accepted from you?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We will get you anything we have got here. I will see if we can get our hands on it for you.

Mr. R. S. Smith: Along the same lines, the same company, as I understand it, has now put in a proposal for 50 of the geared-to-income homes. Have they been accepted? Is theirs the low tender on these homes?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am sorry. I did not hear the question. Was it on public housing?

Mr. R. S. Smith: Yes. In that regard, they have bid on land that has no services into it at the present time. There is now some argument as to who is going to pay for the services for this land. They were the low bidder, based on the fact that they did not have any services into their property; now there are negotiations between yourselves, the city and the builder as to who is going to pay for the services. I would like to know where the negotiations stand right now.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Does anybody know?

Mr. Goyette: Yes, the negotiations are between the builder and the city. This was the result of publicly advertised proposals, in which there were some up—I am sorry; I have not got this tape for you, but I think you are talking about McKuen Avenue up above the bypass—

Mr. R. S. Smith: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Goyette: —and the end of Thiebold Hill. There was another project down in Ferris and there was something just east of North Bay, and the question of price comes into it. It is a question of dealing with the local municipality and what council wants, and a judgement is made between one project and another. My understanding is that there may be some up there and some in Ferris, and the question of servicing is a matter for the developer and the municipality to work out.

If he had to pay more for servicing—and I gather that is an extension of services along McKuen—that is something for the developer to work out with the city at his expense within the price he offers to them. It is his responsibility as a builder to get his building permit and build a building and to put it together in the manner in which he has offered it to us.

Mr. R. S. Smith: In other words, it was offered to you based on serviced lots ready to go.

Mr. Goyette: That is right. And if he has not serviced it, we do not get involved.

Mr. R. S. Smith: Has there been any commitment on your part to pay anything toward the services at all?

Mr. Goyette: No, no. I think it would be consistent with what I said earlier that we would not do it.

Mr. R. S. Smith: And if he fails to come to agreement with the city on the servicing of the land, you will then go to one of the other bidders, will you? That is what—

Mr. Goyette: Likely when I say yes, provided the board of directors agree to whatever is left on our plate and whatever is the best arrangement. That would be the normal course of events. I personally could not make that comment for you, but if he cannot make out some agreement and if it cannot work out, if it is not a deal, then we would normally go to the other persons who made a proposal to us. Alternatively, if the time is too long, too extended, we might call a new proposal.

Mr. R. S. Smith: The problem is that these homes are required now, you know, and it appears that the negotiations are going to go on for a good lengthy period of time. How long do you people wait when a person makes a bid in this way and then cannot produce the service—

Mr. Goyette: Our contract with the proponent is usually that he will build, for the average sized project, within a year.

Mr. R. S. Smith: In other words, if this does not work out, those homes will not be there for two years?

Mr. Goyette: Oh well, I would not think it was that long. We may well have a chance to negotiate with other proponents to carry on with a larger number of units.

I would not think it would take two years, no.

Hon. Mr. Randall: May I tell you the name of the three proponents of Gateway Development Limited? Charles Popiel, Robert Derwin Popiel and Anthony William Maloney. Are those the three names you wanted?

Mr. Chairman: Does the member for Nipissing have anything further?

Mr. R. S. Smith: No, not that vote.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Hamilton East.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am going to be as brief as possible and try not to be repetitive in dealing with anything in the general field, and will confine my solicitation to an understanding of some of the questions related to housing projects in my riding.

Of course I want to express my pleasure at the co-operation that the newly developed tenants' associations in the Roxborough Park project are having with the authorities. I understand that nothing but good will come out of it in the future. It is going to clear up some of the many problems they face.

I was on the list last Tuesday night and could not get back until today and I left my briefcase at home, which contains some of the correspondence that I would like to refer to. Nevertheless, I do not think it is that important that it has to be quoted.

It is about the minister. I excuse a difference of a few months, but I would think it may be three or four years since the minister introduced his feeling that it might be a good idea to sell some of the existing homes—those that were conducive to sale—to the individuals in the Roxborough Park full recovery programme. Since that time, I have asked five or six times as to what progress was being made and, of course, the minister's answer was almost all the time that they were waiting for agreement from the federal partnership.

During this time, of course, this period seemed to build the aspirations and hopes of many of the people in that full recovery project; and for some, their hopes were squashed, because they thought that the thing was not going to take place.

I was aware of the pilot development in Guelph and the minister's recent answer to my question, in that he was still waiting for agreement with the federal minister on the policy and programme of selling homes to the public. I wrote to my colleague in Ottawa, Mr. Gilbert, and asked him if he would raise the question with Mr. Andras as to why the delay, which has forced yourself, sir, to procrastinate in this programme.

I got an answer, about April 26, explaining at some length that they had entered into an agreement to dispose of some 70 in the Guelph area and I do not know if that all has come to fruition or not. But he went on to show a great reluctance to entertain the idea—the balance of his letter indicated that he was torn betwixt the idea of selling some of the homes, or staying with the idea of a lot more public housing stock for rental to those in need.

Subsequent to that, about three weeks ago, the minister announced—I saw the minister himself on TV, saying that they had got approval. Out of the 5,000 requests they were going to sell 1,000 in Hamilton, or maybe 1,000 in Windsor.

This confused me no end, because I had reported to two of the housing committees that it looked like the reluctance of the federal minister was going to block any consideration. Now I do not know at this point whether I am in favour of this kind of programme, or not. I have not had the time, nor the research, to see if it is feasible. I am certainly concerned about the large backlog of applicants in the Hamilton area.

I had a letter from Mr. Nixon, the administrator in the Roxborough Park project, today, asking to get some consideration for one application that I thought was very deserving and in need as much as anyone could be. He said there were 317 on file in the same circumstances—that is low income, crowded quarters and so on—and that there was the possibility 200-and-some units may be ready in August, but he did not think they would have a chance to get into those units and it might be 1972 before anything would break.

What is the clear position of the government as to the programme? Are they settled on the idea of—I think it was introduced originally as part of the integration programme—integrating some of the public housing in the private field in all areas? Have they settled on a programme of selling some of the homes in the different areas? Have you a firm agreement with the federal minister to go ahead with 1,000 or 2,000? What is the situation in that area?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We now have a letter of commitment from Mr. Andras himself to the housing corporation, through me, to go ahead and put on the auction block as quickly as possible 1,000 units. The first units to be put on the block will be the single-family units in the area you are talking about, as well as those in Windsor.

The second 4,000 will depend how this first 1,000 work out, I am inclined to believe that single-family units are easier for us to transfer ownership far better than town-housing or high-rise apartments, as you recognize, where we would have to put in a condominium sort of approach.

As to the matter of selling; you say you are not too sure whether we should be. Let me show you. First of all, the federal authorities are in agreement to sell the first 1,000. We have sold 38 out of the 70 up in Guelph. They have been sold as people's economic circumstances permit, this gave them something to work for.

We think this is a good objective to have for people on public housing. I think, if you recognize some of the comments in the press, that people themselves are saying that they would like to own their own premises just as soon as they can.

When you look at the number of people waiting for public housing today—and the list grows, as it does in every country where the state is providing housing—it gets bigger every year, not less. Fewer people move out; the turnover is less. And if people are not going to move out, you are not saving anything by keeping them in public housing when you can make owners out of them.

I think in the long run the federal government has come to the same opinion we have here, that if you can provide people with accommodation of their own in which they have an ownership position. They put up the new project in Ottawa to try it out where they had ownership on one side of the street and the rest were on the other. I think Mr. Hellyer, in his wisdom, recognized that no matter how low you got the down payment and how long it took to pay, you would be far better off to let people become owners.

The housing we already have, in my estimation is going to remain occupied. It is difficult to get people out. We have a rent-geared-to-income and you know what happens there. If their income goes up, their economic circumstances are up and they have to pay, say, 25 per cent of every dollar they get over as rent-geared-to-income. Every dollar of increase they get, then the governments are accused of taking the last nickel off the table, and so forth, and so on. Now, that means you do one of two things: either you freeze rent as we did in May, 1968, or you throw people out in the street. And where are they going to go, because private investment, private developers, or not building the kind of homes that the people that you and I are talking about, can readily move into.

If we do not do it under the HOME programme, it is not going to be done anyway, as far as I am concerned. I think the federal authorities recognize as we do that home ownership for people in public housing is not a bad idea, as soon as we can get around to it. I just want to assure you that, as soon as these meetings are over here and we get back on the job, that the first thing we are going to do is get organized on the sale of these properties. I think we are going to be here till Christmas, so I cannot promise anything till after Christmas.

Mr. Gisborn: Might I have from the minister the position as to the land. Surely you are not selling, holus-bolus, property, the house and the land also. Are you not keeping the land under public control?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, we sell the land. If there is a single family house, we give ownership of the land to them. You really must do that on an outright sale. On condominiums we sell on agreement of sale, and that is the way that is handled. Where you sell a public housing unit, we think it is wise to sell the land too. When we get into condominium with town housing and row housing, there may be a different set up there, although we cannot work at the present time under the present Condominium Act. If you sell a condominium, they must have title to the land. Therefore, it is sold under the agreement-of-sale basis, and so I think if we sell the unit we will certainly give the title to the land.

Mr. Gisborn: Just one other area. I had correspondence with your department. I forgot the name now, as I say I left the correspondence and the brief at home, but it was regarding an investigation of properties that were made available at Lawrence Road and Cochrane Road. It is called the old Cope property. Until about three years ago, the Cope plant operated for 100 years, as far as I could go back. The family were in construction and, for at least 50 years, they have had this property here at this site, where they have carried on the construction of sewer pipes. It became quite a nuisance and an obnoxious industry to the residents who built around it. I have to admit that they were working under a non-conforming right, but the citizens petitioned and won their point to have the place closed down. It took them some three years to win their battle but they finally won. The city finally expropriated to put further pressure on them, and when the Cope company agreed to get out a year ago last July, the municipality, for what reason I cannot figure out, lifted their expropriation order. We had a firm promise by the council that they would hold onto their public assent of land and we could co-operatively decide what we could do with it in the best interests of the district.

But, nevertheless, it went into the hands of the Sally Vending Company. I do not know all the directors. I know some of them. Some of them are from Toronto and some from Burlington. Their first plans were to develop high-rise townhouse and single units in that particular area. It was quite disturbing to many, because east of Kenilworth, only in one particular area do we have anything over six-storey high-rise. Their proposition was for seven, and the density was going to be something greater than the density of an area 15 times the size, but nevertheless, the city council has agreed that they will support it. They have not filed their site plans yet. They will have to go before the Ontario Municipal Board, because there will be opposition to it. I am hoping that we can exercise citizens' rights before the board and have them turn down the application. I do not know what the chances are, but it would have been one of the finest spots in an area that needs senior citizens' accommodation.

The biggest impact, and we have done a fairly good job in Hamilton for senior citizens, has been in the west end of the city and in the northwest end. Those people have to move from where they have lived many years up to a strange area. I thought that the idea was to try to keep enough stock in a particular area to accommodate senior citizens. I thought this would have been a terrific site for a senior citizens' unit. One half of it is bisected by the hydro right-of-way, which would have been available for a splendid park area for the kind of park development, I thought, should have gone in there. Now the minister's department's answer, when I asked it to investigate the possibilities of getting this property, is logical enough, that Sally Vending, the developers have it now under option and that may be per se the thing that is going to happen. But I would ask the department—

Hon. Mr. Randall: They refused to sell it to us.

Mr. Gisborn: I would ask the department to watch it closely. If the board turns it down they may be able to move in. I do not know, I am going to do everything I can to get the municipal board to refuse the go-ahead. What disturbed me was that when things like this happened, when there was a hue and cry raised about property development, and it looks like land is going to be available, I felt sure that either the city would hang on to it—they had it—or they would ask the housing corporation to come and have a look at it, to get in on the first step so that we do not lose every square foot of property available for the kind of housing we need in that particular area. And I think we have got to stop this waiting for land to become available in this ad hoc way.

You have to go in and have someone there working with the municipal land acquisition people, the surveyors, the real estate people in the municipality and know what is going on, know what lands are going to be available, what lands are likely to be available in the near future, so you can get your hands on it much sooner than the private developers get hold of it. We need more housing development for senior citizens in the east end of Hamilton or we are going to push people into the high-rise senior citizens' unit that we have to build for uptown.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We are interested in the property if it becomes available. We will keep an eye out. One of the difficult things we face, as you recognize, is that we go in to buy a piece of property either from the municipality or from the private vendor. The minute the Ontario Housing Corporation's name is mentioned we get two strikes against us because they figure we are going to put in too many units and too many people, and maybe the neighbourhood will change its structure. That is why, in some cases, we do not use Ontario Housing Corporation directly; we use somebody else, but the municipality itself also bought it.

The municipality itself would have to make a decision as to what kind of housing that would go in there as you recognize. They would decide whether it be zoned—not zoned necessarily—but whether we could get permission to put public housing in that particular area. We have had a number of discussions on land purchasing here in the last two weeks and I think it points up some of the difficulties we have in trying to get the Ontario Housing Corporation established in many areas, whether they are rural or urban or otherwise. But this one is a good property and we recognize it and we are interested in it if it does become available. We will keep an eye on it, but right now, as I understand it, the vendors have refused to make an offer to us or let us make an offer to them.

Mr. Gisborn: I recognize your problem with the municipality, but I feel that when a municipality like Hamilton has been making requests for more housing for so long, it indicates a social conscience.

Now, I agree that they have been disturbed about the density and the school problem and this sort of thing. But I hope that we will develop a more social conscious approach by the municipality in the next election which will assist your department in knowing what lands are available when talking to the school boards—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will just say this. I think with the new kind of development we are coming up with now where we can provide recreational facilities and day nurseries and a few of those things, perhaps the interest we get from municipalities will be a lot greater than it has been in the past.

Mr. Gisborn: If you could just tell me what kind of requests the municipality of Hamilton has in now for future development?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do you know what we have on hand?

Mr. Goyette: I think they are caught up at the moment.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Is it 400 units you are building over there at the present time?

Mr. Goyette: I think we are caught up now with the resolutions the council has passed. There is one project of 110 units that is going on the mountain, and the council, or at least the board of control, has informally suggested that perhaps that might be duplicated on the same piece of land that happens to be next door. But I think that is the only one now. I think we are pretty much caught up with the resolutions the city of Hamilton has passed.

Mr. Gisborn: Just one final comment and I will quit. I said I did not want to be repetitive on something that has been dealt with, but I do think you should take a real look at that brief about the Mohawk Gardens situation. Some of it is in deplorable condition.

I am not satisfied that the maintenance programme in the Roxborough Park full-recovery units is up to scratch. I think someone has to take a real look at some of the buildings there. The windows are out, screen doors are off and I think that too much attention is given to the environment of the families that are in the house; if they are in a poorer shape, they have a marital problem and this sort of thing. They are not getting the attention that others get where they have not got those kind of problems.

You have to remember that in Mohawk Gardens situation, many of them were moved up from what were wartime houses away back in the 1940s and, of course, they were pretty flimsy, shabby slums at that time; you can imagine what they might be like now. So I would add my weight to that of Mr. Deans and Mr. Smith to take a real look at the need for rehabilitation and repairs in those units.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Scarborough Centre.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, before asking the minister if he has some figures of income which would be required to purchase the next phase of the Home Ownership Made Easy scheme, which will be in Chapel Glen, I would like to state that I must have been sufficiently agitated at 8 o'clock on Thursday last that I read a couple of figures into the record, one of which just does not make any sense, and I can see how the other did not make sense, because I was using the years instead of the actual figures.

So I would like to correct it, where I was speaking to the minister about the fact that salaries had not increased nearly as much, it would appear, as the minister was suggesting they had. The correction would be where I said that a $6,000 income in 1967 was a $6,800 income in 1970. It should be that a $6,000 income, if one adds six per cent per annum to it, becomes an income of $7,146 in 1970.

I believe that the next figure I used incorrectly — they tell me this is how it came out on the tapes, but I do not know — was that a man earning $7,146 a year would now earn $7,000. Now that of course, was completely wrong. A man earning $8,000 in 1967, if he received a six per cent increase annually between 1967 and 1970, would now earn $9,528. I think those are very healthy increases actually.

I realize organized labour has had higher increases in that period of time, but the average income has not increased that much. So I ask the minister if he would bring in some figures substantiating his view that he was still appealing to the same income group he was appealing to when he mentioned in 1967 the $6,000, $7,000, and $8,000 income group. What would their wages be now, in the minister's calculation? I am wondering if the minister brought that information, by any chance.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me see if I can answer you this way. I cannot guarantee what anybody's income was back in 1967 any more than I can today. We can just take averages, as you have taken averages. That as an average of one member in the family working, not taking into consideration the fact that there may be two members in the family working; and if it is a wife, under our housing development scheme, 50 per cent of her income is considered for mortgage purposes. So the figures we have here are that the family income required per annum would start at $7,728; the high would be $8,054.

Looking at the selling prices, $18,900 would be the low price for a one-bedroom. The high price for a one-bedroom, depending on location, would be $19,700, the down payments between $945 and $985, and the income in that group would be $7,728 and $8,054.

In a two-bedroom, the low price possibly would be $21,800 and in the high price $22,700. The down payments in this case, would be $1,090 and $1,135 and the incomes at $8,904 and $9,211.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Eight thousand, nine hundred and four dollars?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, and $9,211.

Mrs. M. Renwick: The $9,211 being modulars.

Hon. Mr. Randall: And then the three-bedroom is $24,725 on the low side, and $26,625 on the high side; the down payments are $1,236.25 and $1,331.25, and the income there would range from $10,035 to $10,683.

The four-bedroom would be a low of $27,250 and a high of $28,250. The down payment would be $1,362.50 and $1,412.50 and the income range there would be $11,074 to $11,415.

The five-bedroom would be a low of $28,950 and a high of $29,950. The down payment would be $1,447.50 and $1,497.50 and the income range there would be $11,654 and $12,000.

Now, as I said earlier, the houses are still within the guidelines we established back in 1968 or 1967 — the $15,000, $16,000 and $17,000; and the difference in the price is strictly in the cost of the land, giving up the land for the amenities that we talked about, the charges that have gone on the land since we started negotiation before we got the deal completed.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, could I ask if the minister would explain how he got the figure $7,728 for the one bedroom apartment and does the same formula apply exactly to the $12,000 income the minister lists for a five bedroom?

Hon. Mr. Randall: On an $18,900 selling price —

Mrs. M. Renwick: Down payment of $945.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We would finance the mortgage of $17,955, that is a first mortgage at 9.5 per cent, no second mortgage is required.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Right, At $145.04 per month.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, no wait a minute. We said $173.90.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Right.

Hon. Mr. Randall: And to take care of those down payments and the monthly payments one would basically have to have an income, a single person working with a family, would have to have an income of $7,728, and, of course, it would help if anybody else was working in the family, and as I say, with 50 per cent of the wife's income.

Going to the other extreme, going to the five-bedroom, the $29,950, we would finance a mortgage of $28,452.50 with $1,497.50 down and the monthly payments would be $270 and that could be carried on an income of $12,000.

This takes in about 15 per cent of the lower income people, does it not?

Mr. Goyette: From the Metro area.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I wonder if I could have that information very clearly. Mr. Goyette is saying in the Metro area but I want to have that very clear.

Mr. Goyette: The prices of these houses are within the bottom 15 per cent of the prices of new housing in Metro, or put in another way, 85 per cent of the houses cost $30,000 or more.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Right. Mr. Chairman, when we left on Thursday we were no longer talking about this housing in comparison to current markets, but we were talking about the families of the lower third of the income strata. Are they able to take advantage of these houses? The formula is based on the housing authority's formula as to whom they will rent to in the lower third of the income bracket?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I think there is confusion there. Central Mortgage and Housing define the middle third family income groups as $6,000 to $10,000 across Canada, and $7,000 to $11,000 in urban areas over 30,000. We are aiming for the middle income group in our HOME programme and the group lower than that, of course, would be provided for in public housing, which is what we are catering to.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, would the minister give a breakdown then of his $173.90 for the one-bedroom apartment. I have it broken down as $145.04 per month on a mortgage of $17,955 and the municipal tax is estimated at $30 per month. When you take that figure, Mr. Chairman, bring it to an annual figure and take 27 per cent of it, which I understand is the NHA mortgage rule, for percentage of income to go for shelter, it comes out somewhat higher than the minister said, but not enough to make an issue of—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You mentioned $45 for taxes. I think we said —

Mrs. M. Renwick: No, Mr. Chairman, I said municipal taxes estimated at $30 a month — Mr. Randall's estimate, I might say, Mr. Chairman. I have not talked to the borough people there, but that was, I think the minister's own estimate at one point. But what I would like to make certain is that the formula that you are using is the 27 per cent of the income that NHA use as a rule.

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is what we are using at the present time.

Mrs. M. Renwick: That is what you are using. Now, what about the cost of condominiums? The condominium costs, the service charges, in the city right now run from $25 a month to $40 a month, so we average those out at $30 a month and the family shelter really comes out then at $205 a month instead of $173.90. And at that rate, Mr. Chairman, if you use 27 per cent as in the NHA formula, the families then have to have an income, if we use the NHA formula, of $9,113 and if we use even the 25 per cent income, we are still talking about a family having to earn $9,000 for just the one-bedroom apartment.

The condominium charges should surely be part of the shelter charges for the mortgage payments. There is no way to get rid of them.

Mr. Goyette: Right. We are prepared, if the family feels it can afford to, to extract the shelter charges. In effect, we are prepared to go up over 30 per cent. In other words, the amount of the monthly condominium charges will not be considered in the calculation of the income, so that is why we say $7,728. If, as a matter of policy you chose to include those in them, as you say, it might be something in excess of $9,000.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, my only question to that is, would it not be only realistic to include those charges since there is no way of shelving them, no way of getting out of them?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Most of those people would be paying those charges now if they had a house of their own or they would be doing their own work which would appreciate?

Mrs. M. Renwick: But they cannot do their own work if they do not want to pay $30 a month. When you are realistically looking at what the families are going to have to pay to live in Chapel Glen—$173.90 a month for a one-bedroom unit is really $205 when you figure that they have to contribute toward the condominium cost. And that is getting pretty high.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If it runs that high—but there is no assurance that it will. For instance, in one section of Ontario it is now running at about between $26 and $28 a month.

Mrs. M. Renwick: What is the difference between $26, $28 and $30.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am not saying there is any difference. There is a management group coming into condominiums today which is striving for contracts, and the more efficient they get the less it costs, as you can appreciate.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Could I ask if the minister would tell me what the condominium costs are in Parkway Forest, the first HOME project, and is that project completed, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is estimated at $26. I think it is all completed now—yes, they are all in there now.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Is that $26 per unit an average, or does it run from $26 to $30?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That would be an average.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Could I ask, Mr. Chairman, the exact breakdown for condominium costs for Parkway Forest—because that is really the closest example we can use to estimate what the condominium costs might be in Chapel Glen.

Mr. Goyette: They are only estimates now because the—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, as Mr. Goyette points out they are estimates now because the first year's costs are not in, and, of course, this is under the private management team as you recognize. We think it is possible that those costs may be lower than $26 when we get organized. So there is no way we can tell you what it is going to be until they have been in for a year, but the averages—

Mrs. M. Renwick: When does the year come around?

Hon. Mr. Randall: When did they first move in?

Mr. Hermant: They are promised a year from now.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They are promised a year from now. The apartment houses, Mr. Hermant says, has not been in operation, has not been fully occupied yet. They are not all in yet.

Mrs. M. Renwick: When the minister said this is going to be, this is privately—how did the minister say, privately operated?

Hon. Mr. Randall: A condition is that the developer has to run the project for five years.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Right, the developer. That is the condition under which you—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, and the same thing applies over in Chapel Glen. The developers over there would have to set up a management team to run it under the terms of the agreement.

Mrs. M. Renwick: So it would be the same kind of private management that Parkway Forest has? There would be no difference in the management, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right.

Mrs. M. Renwick: So unless there is a startling drop in that $26 figure, we could assume that they were being pretty realistic when they put $26 on. Really, then, under the figurings that I have used, we can take off $4 and say that a one-bedroom apartment, by the time you pay the $173.90 a month, plus a $26 condominium charge, is $201 a month—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me also point out to the member that when you are living in an apartment you have no fix on your rent. Any time you go home when the lease is up, the landlord can raise it $30 or $40 a month. These people have moved in at a fix. The only fix they do not have is their taxes and whatever services they demand. If they demand increased services they are going to have to pay for it, but the tenants vote on the kind of service they want. They make up their minds. It is their decision as to what kind of services are provided. That is why I say there is an element of fluctuation here, which we cannot put our finger on as we get under way. But as it looks at the present time, we think that our predictions are pretty accurate. We will know better in a year's time when we get through with the Parkway report.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Who does the minister—

Mr. Chairman: I think we had better recess now until 8 o'clock. It is 6 o'clock now.

It being 6 o'clock p.m., the committee took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, JUNE 1, 1970

The committee resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND DEVELOPMENT (concluded)

On votes 2209 and 2210:

Mr. Chairman: We will come to order now.
The hon. member for Scarborough Centre.

Mrs. M. Renwick (Scarborough Centre): Thank you. When we adjourned for supper, Mr. Chairman, we were discussing the fact that when you add condominium charges per month to the cost of carrying the units that were purchased, per month, in the Chapel Glen project—for a one-bedroom apartment you have been using the figures that Parkway Forest are using now for condominium charges of $26 per month—the cost of the one-bedroom apartment becomes $201.04 per month.

I would like to ask the minister what his thoughts are on the subject. Who does he think are going to be the purchasers of the—is it 384 one-bedroom units? Is that the correct figure, Mr. Minister? I can only see, Mr. Chairman, that it is going to be the very old, or the very young, who require one bedroom. And the very old, certainly, unless they are wealthy, elderly people, cannot afford $200 per month for a one-bedroom apartment.

The minister is constantly referring to the fact that I live near this project, you know. I might say to the minister that I pay $215 for a three-bedroom apartment.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): But you have no assurance that you are not going to pay $315 a month.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, the minister says there is no assurance. But there is, believe it or not, Mr. Chairman, a limit to what the public can pay. It was proved in the last 12 months in the city of Toronto, when there were more apartments in this $200-a-month bracket than there were people to purchase them. We are not in a market where we can go in to more one-bedroom apartments at this amount of money.

I would say to the minister, Mr. Chairman, with all due respect, that we are looking at a project for which we paid $160,000 an acre for land—$215,000 an acre for land. We have got 384 one-bedroom units in that project which we are now going to try to put on the market at $173.90 a month, plus condominium carrying charges, which the minister can only say must be at least $25 a month.

How are we seeing that as a responsible venture of public funds?

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): Are you buying yours, though? This is the difference.

Mrs. M. Renwick: The difference may very well—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are renting, this other you are purchasing.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I try really never to think of anything in the legislative assembly in terms of anything personal. It is just that it dawned on me that the minister does refer to this frequently, and that that was a comparison. I think that it is not necessarily really relative to the fact that that is a private developer in that area, and that we are now looking at a project financed by public funds, which we hope will be a sound investment.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No subsidy required.

Mrs. M. Renwick: We do not buy at that rate, if you really want to know.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No subsidy required.

Mrs. M. Renwick: No subsidy required? Who is going to fill the one-bedroom apartments at $200 per month.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We think there will be a lot of people in that middle income bracket that we talked about this afternoon, the middle third.

Mrs. M. Renwick: In the middle third of the income?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Up to $12,000 income, when you take two working in the family, which usually there are in that particular area you are in. At 27 per cent a month, you can finance a $29,950, five-bedroom townhouse, and I would think you can get all the takers you want at these prices.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, it is, I think pretty poor business to base these units on the fact that two people in a family will be working. Because if someone gets pregnant, they do not work any longer, sometimes, or someone gets sick and—

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are thinking of all the negatives; think of some of the positives.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Sure, look at the positives. You are really building housing for where there are two people working in a family, which is where we started in this—saying that the average family, by the time they have paid their taxes to both levels of government, provincial and federal, have not got enough money left to be interested in these units. Not at $200 to $300 per month.

Mr. Chairman, there is the other thing the minister might comment on—that for $200 a month you can buy a one-bedroom apartment and for $300 you can buy a five-bedroom townhouse.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me tell you what happened in Parkway Forest.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I cannot imagine what happened there.

Hon. Mr. Randall: There were 52 people in Parkway Forest who bought single-bedroom houses, and their incomes ranged all the way from $5,000 to $15,000 and over. The same thing will apply in Chapel Glen village.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, how many were $5,000 and how many were, say, under $10,000, and how many were over?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I will give you the figures we have here. There was $5,000 to $6,000—four; $6,000 to $7,000—15; $7,000 to $8,000—17—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Seventeen?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Seventeen; $8,000 to $9,000—seven; $9,000 to $10,000—five; $10,000 to $11,000—one. Nothing in the $11,000 category. One in the $12,000 category and one in the $15,000 and over. They were the single bedrooms.

You say that there will be nobody to fill them. We do not have any doubt we will fill them. We do not have any doubt we will sell them. I think these people are getting a very good buy, and they are living in the neighbourhood where they want to live. This is not housing for low-income people. We never intended it to be.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Will there be housing for people who could also qualify under NHA?

Hon. Mr. Randall: NHA? We think there will be. Sure.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, that was one of the real selling points of the minister's first approach to the whole scheme.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You are going back two years, and there is no use going back—

Mrs. M. Renwick: It means that we need a new formula then, Mr. Chairman, for the whole scheme if it no longer applies to that income group.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, we do not. What! Would you do nothing with the land?

Mr. Peacock: May I ask a question?

Hon. Mr. Randall: You have two choices. You can go ahead and do nothing—

Mrs. M. Renwick: One second.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Oh, no. I let my colleague interrupt me this afternoon.

Mr. Chairman: Let her finish first. You cannot both talk at once.

Mr. Peacock: I just asked if I could ask a question.

Mr. Chairman: Yes, you can, but wait till she is finished.

Mrs. M. Renwick: At the time that Parkway Forest was rented, Mr. Chairman, I believe it was advertised as Chapel Glen was in 1967 as being available for $5,000- $6,000- and $7,000-a-year incomes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We were able to proceed with it.

Mrs. M. Renwick: And you have 17 families in that category?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Seventeen out of how many?

Hon. Mr. Randall: And this is two years later, and their incomes have gone up.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Seventeen out of 52?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes. Their incomes have gone up within the means in the last two and a half years, too. Do not forget that.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Yes, but you actually only accommodated, Mr. Chairman, under these figures only—wait a minute, it is not 17, Mr. Minister, it is 36.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Fifty-two people—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thirty-six families under $8,000 a year are in Parkway Forest.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Wait a minute now. You asked me could we—

Mrs. M. Renwick: —or the one-bedroom units.

Hon. Mr. Randall: —rent the one-bedroom units, and I just pointed out that we sold 52 of the one-bedroom units to people in these categories right here. Of the 52 people I gave you the price range. The last is $5,000, from $9,000 to $10,000. So within the category of $10,000 or less we have taken care of 49 of those people who wanted single bedrooms. These people have all had increases in the meantime. So I see no reason why we worry about filling them. I have no worry about filling them. I only wish we had twice as many.

Mrs. M. Renwick: What are the incomes of the family units in Parkway Forest? How do they break down?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, let me see. Of the two-bedrooms there were 107, and there were two up to $6,000, 11 up to $7,000, 34 up to $8,000, 25 up to $9,000, 16 up to $10,000, eight up to $11,000, two to $12,000, three to $13,000, three to $14,000, one to $15,000 and one to $15,000 and over for a total of 107. That is the two-bedroom. In the three-bedroom—let me give you those while I am at it—there were 130 three-bedroom units there, and they accommodated from $5,000 to $6,000 one, from $6,000 to $7,000 two, from $7,000 to $8,000 11, from $8,000 to $9,000 34, from $9,000 to $10,000 33, from $10,000 to $11,000 23, $11,000 to $12,000 seven, $12,000 to $13,000 six, $13,000 to $14,000 three, $14,000 to $15,000 two, and $15,000 and over seven.

Mrs. M. Renwick: So really, Mr. Chairman, it appealed mostly to the families with $9,000 to $11,000 incomes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: It is a well-balanced community in different categories of income. This is what will happen in Chapel Glen.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I think my colleague from Windsor would like to ask a question on Chapel Glen before we finish?

Mr. Peacock: You caught me on my way out.

Mr. Chairman: Do you have a question?

Mr. Peacock: I have a question, Mr. Chairman. The minister said just a few moments ago—

Mr. Chairman: Is it on the same point?

Mr. Peacock: Right on this matter of Chapel Glen and Parkway Forest and the purchase of condominiums. He said, "What do you want us to do, come up with a new formula?" I wanted to ask the minister the other evening, in his discussion of how the costs for Chapel Glen had risen and how in his view, apparently, incomes had risen, whether he was really talking about the same group of people? Secondly, whether or not under such a new formula, he could not have devised a means of excluding that increase in cost that was experienced in the intervening period from the time of the announcement in October, 1967, until the present sod-turning which took place in the last day or so because the rise in eligible income for, I think it was the largest unit, five-bedroom, was $10,099 to something over $12,000 or around $12,000.

I just want to point out to the minister that surely the corporation could have found some way of trying to market the units to the very same income group that he spoke of in October, 1967, because while it is true that a good number of people in that income group may have won wage or salary increases, I think the statistics produced in the discussion about the Benson white paper have shown that by and large that is a pretty constant middle-income group that middle third. You do not have a great deal of movement into or out of it. There is certainly a lot less movement upward out of the middle third than you have moving from the bottom third into the middle third. How much would it have cost the corporation to absorb those increased costs between October, 1967, and the present time?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let me be specific. The HOME programme is for middle-income people. There is no subsidy involved. The only way you could bring that down is to either write off the cost increase to the taxpayer or go back to 3,700 or 3,800 units. Then we are talking about increased density which would not be permitted in North York. So you have two choices, either write it off or increase the density and spread the cost over more units.

We were caught in two areas. We were caught not only in the delays that we experienced through no fault of our own, but we were caught in a shortage of acreage providing the amenities required today whenever anybody is talking about amenities. You have to pay something for these amenities. I think it is a better project than when we started because the amenities are there. You have to pay for those amenities. It has to be included in the price. I am quite certain nobody can show me where housing for the same price is going up in any urban area anywhere in Ontario. At these prices, it is still a good buy. You must also consider the fact that the province is prepared to guarantee 9.5 per cent mortgage money with 95 per cent of the mortgage taken care of by the province. I do not know how these people can lose.

To me it is a good deal, regardless of the fact that the land cost—as I said earlier the building cost has not increased—the land cost has gone up. The land itself has not increased in value. It was sold to us at the price we agreed on, but the expenses of maintaining the land for that length of time, the giveaway of acreage for the amenities, all adds to the cost. And I think the hon. member being an accountant recognizes it has got to come out of the end price unless you make up your mind that you are going to subsidize the HOME programme. That is not the intention of this government so far. Maybe the policy one of these days will change, but at the moment what we are trying to do is help these people. We do not want them to drop back on the public purse and have to be subsidized.

Mr. Peacock: Yet in other land developments under the HOME programme you are prepared to absorb some of the costs. You have said you have.

Hon. Mr. Randall: No. We do not have to absorb any land costs with other developments, because this land is being sold at our cost—and the same with the other areas I talked about, Malvern or Saltfleet. Those land costs will be at our costs, the same as this one here.

Mr. Peacock: Your final costs.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Sure.

Mr. Peacock: Whatever it costs you with respect to interest, or—

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right.

Mr. Peacock: —other payments to maintain the land until it is complete, until the development is complete?

Hon. Mr. Randall: That is right.

Mr. Peacock: You will add them on to the final price.

Hon. Mr. Randall: What I am saying is the sooner we can get this cow pasture into production the lower the price is going to be. When we run into the difficulties that we did not foresee in this situation—and nobody else did—this adds to our cost. There is nothing you can do about it. It is all right to sit and criticize—and I am prepared to be criticized—but all I say is we are still coming up with 3,200 family units that cannot be touched.

Mr. Peacock: Granted that they have all these advantages that the minister speaks of and granted that certain costs were unforeseeable, does it not remain that one of the elements of the HOME programme is to remove the cost of land from housing—not to remove the cost, but to achieve as much control over that cost as possible? Aside from the addition of certain amenities which may have been required, would the additional cost which is now added to the final purchase price for maintenance of the land itself, have been a significant share of the overall increase that we now have before us?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The additional cost to hold the land?

Mr. Peacock: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, I think it adds considerably to it. I think primarily the main increase in the cost is the reduction of 70 acres to 60.5 and is one of the difficulties—

Mr. W. Hodgson: Mr. Chairman, we discussed this all a couple of days ago.

Hon. Mr. Randall: —and a reduction of the density.

Mr. Peacock: I just want to—

Mr. W. Hodgson: Why go over it all again?

Mr. Peacock: I am not going back over it, but as long as this question has not been asked before, I want to be clear about why the corporation could not have absorbed those increasing costs so that exactly the same income group could be served.

Hon. Mr. Randall: You would have to write it off at the taxpayer's expense. I do not think you are prepared to do that.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to discuss with the minister the—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Can I answer one question before the hon. member for Windsor goes? I think you asked me a question this afternoon—was it you who asked me about legal fees? Did you get it? All right, thank you.

Mr. W. Hodgson: Is everything in order?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Do not let him confuse you —

Mrs. M. Renwick: I was always under the illusion that those were friends and colleagues.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would just like —

Mr. W. Hodgson: We sit here all night, and you only come in once in a while.

Mr. Chairman: I might just mention —

Mrs. M. Renwick: I have been here for days.

Mr. Chairman: I might just mention —

Mrs. M. Renwick: I have been here for three days without saying a word, can you imagine?

Mr. W. Hodgson: You come in once in a while and you lost your turn three or four times because you were not here.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I had an appointment.

Mr. Chairman: I would just like to mention as chairman there is no member of the opposition at all on the committee. The hon. member is not on the committee. There is no member here, but —

Mr. W. Hodgson: Is Mrs. Renwick not on the committee?

Mr. Chairman: Not even the substitute. But just to show what kind of fellows we are we would like to give her an opportunity.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: You promised me you would not be too long.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I make no promises whatsoever. I would like to say that it must be very frustrating to be a backbencher in a government that is really —

Mr. Chairman: This has got nothing to do with this at all. Nothing to do with the estimates at all. It must be frustrating to try to be a member of the government which you will never be, too. Anyway, go ahead.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, there is a housing scale going to become effective July 1. I wonder if any of you chaps managed to get hold of a copy of the new housing standards.

Mr. Chairman: Direct your questions to the chair, if you please.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if any of the men who are so upset at the moment are so because a woman has the floor and they have to sit and look —

Interjections by hon. members.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member must not have been here the first three days. Is the new housing scale, which will become effective, the minister has said, July —

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, we expect it to become effective July 1 and if it is not, I understand from my colleagues that it will be dated back to July 1.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Very good. I believe the minister was kind enough to table for the member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick) the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation's commentary to Mr. Suters on May 11, on the new revisions to CMHC arrangements. Everything was included in that package deal, Mr. Chairman, except for the new housing scale, which was the first item on the list — furtherance on the proposed modified rents or income scale. I finally managed to get hold of a copy from other sources, Mr. Chairman.

I would just like to ask the minister, is this all that is going to take place in the change of the housing scale, effective July 1? Families who pay $35 a month rent because their income is $200 a month, get a $1 lower rent of $34. Families whose income is $240 a month pay $48 on the old scale; they will fall now into a $47-a-month bracket.

Then it changes suddenly and I do not understand this change, Mr. Chairman — if the minister would elaborate. Families earning $320 a month who paid $76 on the old scale, will pay $73. Families earning $368 a month who paid $92 a month on the old scale, will pay $89. It goes through a period of four areas then, Mr. Chairman, where the lowering of the rent scale is $3. The last two are, if you earn $392 a month you paid $100 a month rent; it is now down to $97. And if you earn $416 a month, on the old scale it was $108 and it is now down to $105.

Then we take a considerable leap. Once again, then that have, get, Mr. Chairman. If you earn $472, when you paid $128 on the old scale, you will pay $122; $6 less. If you earn $496, you paid $136, and you will pay $128 on the new scale; $8 less. If you earn $520, you paid $124 and you now pay $134; $10 less. If you earn $560 a month, the old scale was $168, you now pay $144; $24 a month less.

How is the system devised, Mr. Chairman? There will be $2 per child, Mr. Chairman, that can be deducted from that, but this is the basic scale which, of course, is based without taking children into consideration.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Chairman, does the hon. member want any comment now?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Yes, I think—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Riggs, will you?

Mrs. M. Renwick: They stretch from—is it 16.7? Is that the first one? Is it a stretch from there to 25 per cent maybe? Is that—

Hon. Mr. Randall: Let Mr. Riggs comment. I think we can—

Mr. R. W. Riggs (Ontario Housing Corporation): The scale now goes from approximately 14.7 per cent—

Mrs. M. Renwick: It has got 16.7 on here —14.7?

Mr. Riggs: —14.7 approximately—there is still a variation here—to 25 per cent. I might also mention that in the comparisons that you mentioned, starting at approximately $215 monthly income, where your present monthly rent is $40, the proper scale for that particular figure would be $35 under the new scale, going down and picking a figure of $310, which I think you mentioned.

Mrs. M. Renwick: $320.

Mr. Riggs: Three hundred and twenty dollars, thank you. The present monthly rental is $76 and the new monthly rental, according to Central Mortgage's proposed guidelines, would be $69.

Going down, which was your next figure—after that figure?

Mrs. M. Renwick: $368, $92 and $89.

Mr. Riggs: At $368, $92 and $85. Similarly, you had one, I think, about $451.

Mrs. M. Renwick: $392.

Mr. Riggs: At $392 the present rental is $100; the proposed rental would be $93. At that point in income it is approximately 23.7 per cent of the gross income.

Your next figure?

Mrs. M. Renwick: $416.

Mr. Riggs: At $416 the present rental is $108. It reduces down to $101, which is 22.2 per cent of gross income.

After that?

Mrs. M. Renwick: $472.

Mr. Riggs: At $472 the present rental is $128 which, on the old scale, was 27.1 per cent. Under the new scale it is $118, which is the maximum figure of 25 per cent. All figures above this figure—in fact, the 25 per cent is intersective at $461 and that is gross income. All percentages above that would be 25 per cent.

You also mentioned about the reduction of $2 per child. Under the present CHMC or federal guidelines, the minimal rental, regardless of children or income, would be $28. It now rents below that figure.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. You say that my secret source of supply—that they were figures that were just recommendations?

An. hon. member: They are antiquated.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Well, hardly.

Mr. Chairman: Why do you not just ask the hon. minister for all the information? He would be glad to give it to you right now.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I think we should have that information by now. What is it, a month from now that they are going into effect?

I think you are right Mr. Chairman. The first of the month of June, people have to be informed surely as to what is going to happen on July 1—what is going to happen with the new rentals.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We can table a copy, we were working on it. You asked a question the other day and I do not know where you get your figures from. We were preparing a new table, showing the old table against the new. We would be glad to send you a copy, get a copy of the table for you, but—

Mrs. M. Renwick: You mean to say you do not have it now?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, I will give you mine if you like.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I think that it is very important that we get that information, Mr. Chairman. I think all the hon. members who have OHC units in their ridings would want that information now, not just me.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They will get it just as soon as we can get it out to them, but we have been sitting here for three weeks—or going on to three weeks. I have not even got my Christmas shopping done yet—and I might say also, our board of directors had to approve it, as you recall, when we got the information from Ottawa.

We wanted to discuss a few things with Ottawa that they did not put in it. We tried to pressure them a little bit to go ahead and put in some things we had recommended, which was not done and that is another reason for the discussion. The minute you read it in the newspaper does not necessarily—

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, why do we not settle for the information except what the minister wants approved by the board of directors?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Pardon?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Why do we not settle for all the information except the small part that you want to get approved by the board of directors.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have approval now as I understand it. June 3 we get approval from the board of directors and we do not think there will be any difficulty so we are giving it to you before the board of directors.

Mr. Chairman: Are there any other questions; can we get off this vote?

Mrs. M. Renwick: No, you cannot get off this vote.

Mr. Chairman: Have you anything else? Anything new to add? We have been over a week on this very vote right now.

Mrs. M. Renwick: There is nothing newer than the new rental scale, I do not think. It is not even out yet. I mean, talk about being repetitious, it is something new.

Mr. Chairman: As long as you are not repetitious. But I am afraid once you get over a week on two votes you are going to be repetitious. You cannot help it.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, then I would ask you to say to every member who speaks the same thing you have said to me.

Mr. Chairman: I have said the same thing today. I have said this to one of our own hon. members, the member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. J. R. Smith). I said today that he was repetitious and that the matter was already discussed a few days ago.

Mrs. M. Renwick: There is nothing repetitious, Mr. Chairman, about a brand new rental scale. It was not discussed two or three days ago. I will demand some order in a minute, Mr. Chairman, if you do not make sure that the trained seals on the other side of the room be quiet.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I would like to ask the minister what the financial arrangement is between the Ontario Housing Corporation and Montreal Trust. The minister was kind enough to table an agreement between them. What is the cost per unit that the government pays to Montreal Trust for maintenance in Flemingdon Park?

Hon. Mr. Randall: You mean the part they are now operating? On the 524 suites in Flemingdon Park the annual fee is $33,800 from May 1, 1969, to April 31, 1972.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Is that on a per-unit basis?

Hon. Mr. Randall: I would think it would be. Yes.

Mrs. M. Renwick: 524 units, how much per unit?

Hon. Mr. Randall: 524 into $33,800, what is that? $60?

Mrs. M. Renwick: Five dollars per month, Mr. Minister, per unit.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Roughly, I think, yes.

Mrs. M. Renwick: What sort of arrangement does the corporation have with the housing authorities for the same sort of care?

Hon. Mr. Randall: A similar agreement; similar figures.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Could I have the exact figures, Mr. Chairman? I believe it goes according to the size of the project.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We do not have them here. We would be glad to table all our agreements with the housing authorities for you.

Mrs. M. Renwick: All right, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have worked out an agreement with the trust companies on the basis of what we were already paying on the understanding, in many cases, they could do two things that perhaps could provide more efficient management under this basis at the same cost, or less. What we were getting on this unit here would be pretty well what you would see when we table the housing authority's agreement.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Did the minister get some sort of special arrangement drawn up in order that the rents of family benefits and general welfare recipients could be payable to Montreal Trust according to how they are filed under the Act rather than any rent geared to income scale?

Hon. Mr. Randall: The answer is no. We do not have any. Did you say, can we get them?

Mrs. M. Renwick: No, did you have to make a special agreement?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Does Montreal Trust collect the rents and you charge them a fee for maintenance? Is there any resident maintenance there at all in that project?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, there is.

Mrs. M. Renwick: There is now? Is that recent, could I ask?

Mr. Riggs: In the last six months.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Fine, because there has not been and it has been a severe problem. Can you tell me about the project at O'Connor and whether the backing up of the toilets there over the last couple of years has been fixed. Regarding the $30,000 that was allotted to do that, has the money changed hands and the work been done, or where do we stand on that problem?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Where is that building?

Mrs. M. Renwick: The O'Connor development.

Mr. Riggs: We do not have it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: I could not tell you, we would have to look into that.

Mrs. M. Renwick: The minister said before supper hour that Birchmount and Finch was bought by OHC?

Mr. P. R. Goyette (Ontario Housing Corporation): I think we are probably caught up in the semantics of it. The Ontario Housing Corporation bought the project from a developer although it was developed from scratch from the plans.

Mrs. M. Renwick: From the plans?

Mr. Goyette: It was not an existing building already up. We purchased it from the developer and bought it off him from the plans. He built it and we paid off the developer.

Mrs. M. Renwick: The release, Mr. Chairman, comes out as if it were an OHC project. The release says: "June 26, 1968. Two Ontario Housing Corporation projects will provide 460 units of housing in Scarborough." This is the project, the $5,625,803 development at Finch and Birchmount for 239 units in a 12-storey apartment building and 120 units of rowhousing.

Hon. Mr. Randall: They are all projects.

Mrs. M. Renwick: But it was not an OHC project. It was one that you bought from Gaza Investments after they had planned it.

Hon. Mr. Randall: The plans are presented—

Mrs. M. Renwick: They did not plan it for you, but you bought from their plans?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We felt their plans were satisfactory. We bought from their plans and it was approved by Central Mortgage and Housing also.

Mrs. M. Renwick: What about recreation in that area, Mr. Chairman. Could I ask the minister what he is relying on there besides the church that is functioning?

Mr. Goyette: I suspect the little store would be a basis of recreation. There is a park within about 1½ blocks going into the old established subdivision. I do not have it memorized from the plans.

Mrs. M. Renwick: It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that in that area the schools and the churches are taking on what really, for that many people, should be a planned recreation of the development because there just are not the facilities in the community there, more so than some other areas of Scarborough.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Too bad the churches will not take on a little more.

Mrs. M. Renwick: They are trying to, Mr. Chairman, in many areas, at least I notice from things that I go to. I think in this case there is just one church expected to do quite a lot and I just have a feeling that a 240-unit apartment building and a lot for small children to play in is going to be a severe problem. There is lots of open land there, Mr. Minister. If the minister would even look at acquiring some of the land in that area; you are in that area, and you might get some land reasonably for—

Hon. Mr. Randall: I am just suggesting to my colleagues that there are not sufficient recreation spaces. They should look at land that is available and we will do that.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Thank you, Mr. Minister. It is very nice to hear.

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey South): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister, if the religious groups participate in housing, either generally speaking or specifically, maybe within their own area—

Hon. Mr. Randall: The church organizations are very active with senior citizens particularly, but not so much in public housing as they are with senior citizens.

Mr. Winkler: How do they participate in such programmes?

Hon. Mr. Randall: They primarily participate in looking after the amenities in the recreation facilities, and things like that. There is the odd religious organization—for instance, the United Church at the corner of Dearbourne and Broadview Avenue was torn down and they have built a senior citizens' unit in there. The church itself has built it and it was financed through NHA and Central Mortgage and Housing and they got their so-much-per-suite rent.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, has the minister announced costs and when the first housing will be available in Malvern. Are the prices set for that housing yet?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No, the prices have not been set for Malvern. We hope to have some houses started in 1971.

Mrs. M. Renwick: But no prices set yet?

Hon. Mr. Randall: No prices, but the ones we have built in Malvern will be under the HOME guidelines of $15,000, $16,000 and $17,000 and the land sold at our cost.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Would the minister state why there is not a Toronto housing authority? How many housing authorities has the minister got in the province—140?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We have 41 and there has not been any created since 1965.

Mrs. M. Renwick: Would the minister not see that perhaps Toronto or Metro Toronto should perhaps be operating as a housing authority?

Hon. Mr. Randall: We were asked, of course, to take it over in the city here because of the multitude of problems they have been running into. I do not think appointing a housing authority here is the answer to solving some of the local problems. I think we could solve them better from main office than we can by having a housing authority.

Mrs. M. Renwick: I realize, Mr. Chairman, that the minister was quite right and the way it worked out was that the city of Toronto did, in fact, ask OHC to take over housing in the area. But since then it has become fairly evident that the problem of maintenance, the problem of getting units filled, the problems of recreation and so on are all going on at University Avenue without the municipality involved.

I realize that prior to the Ontario Housing Corporation taking over the Toronto housing authority that there were many criticisms coming out of the authority about shortage of housing and so on. But I wonder if the minister is aware—he probably is and I would be interested in his remarks—of the fact that the special committee on poverty of the city of Toronto has requested the city to return to the field of housing and that members of the Toronto housing authority were reappointed by city council on March 4, 1970, to administer a nonexistent stock of housing.

Mr. Chairman: I would like to say to the minister—I will not read all of this brief, but I think it is a brief that almost everyone should read if they could. It is the brief of Robert Bradley in March, 1970, who goes through the growth of housing in Toronto. He goes through the area of how it was first placed with the Regent Park development, the limited dividend development of Moss Park, with the transfer over.

I think, Mr. Chairman, I will put this brief on the record and then I think I will wind up my remarks for this particular time.

Mr. Chairman: Why do you not just table it?

Mrs. M. Renwick: No, I think, Mr. Chairman, this is something that people should realize has happened here and should take an interest in. March 31, 1970:

TORONTO'S CHANGING ROLE IN HOUSING:

The city of Toronto has played a major and historic role in the development of urban renewal and public housing programmes in Canada. Regent Park North was first given serious consideration as an area for redevelopment in March, 1934, when the Honourable Dr. H. A. Bruce, then Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, in speaking at the centennial celebration of Toronto, warned the city that it had acquired "inevitable slum districts—areas of misery and degradation which exert unhappy environmental influence on many of our citizens."

Arising from these remarks, a committee was set up to inquire into housing conditions in several areas of the city with special reference to:

1. The quality of accommodation.
2. Rental paid by tenants.
3. The environmental conditions.

The report of this committee (popularly called the Bruce report) laid bare, over 36 years ago this month, the facts of urban life, particularly as related to housing and community planning.

Although this report provided great momentum to the activities of civic-minded groups whose goal had long been a redevelopment of substandard residential areas, their educational campaign bore little fruit until 1943 when a master plan for Toronto was prepared by the city planning board. The annual report of the 1943 planning board recommended that the area now known as Regent Park North, being that section of the city from Dundas Street to Gerrard Street East, between Parliament Street and River Street, as the first specific areas to be redeveloped.

Although the Dominion government had endeavoured to relieve the acute housing situation by construction of wartime houses and by assisting municipalities in the conversion of large houses and other buildings to multi-unit houses, it was not until 1944 that legislation was passed which permitted its participation in a project such as Regent Park North. In that year, The National Housing Act was approved by Parliament to set in motion Canada's first urban renewal programme, Regent Park North.

With the provisions thus being made for assistance from the federal government, the citizen groups redoubled their efforts for a redevelopment programme, studies were made, a housing committee appointed by the city of Toronto council and the newly constituted Toronto city planning board, like its predecessor, fully aware of the urgent need for rental housing, explored the situation thoroughly.

The matter of participation in urban renewal and housing was presented formally to the city council for consideration on November 25, 1946. Council passed bylaw 16763 to provide for the question of clearance and rehabilitation of the area of Regent Park North to a vote of the electors at municipal election. On January 1, 1947, by a vote of five to three, the electors of the city of Toronto decided that the redevelopment should proceed. Special legislation was applied for to set up the housing authority of Toronto to administer and maintain the first public housing programme in Canada.

Toronto became a leader in the field of public housing, introducing many innovative programmes, such as a housing registry for applications for rental accommodation, rent supplement programme, emergency housing hostels, diminishing family housing as single-unit accommodation for older parents, when children have left the family and the parents must seek other accommodation on a limited income, senior citizen housing in the community and limited dividend housing.

The city of Toronto is responsible for the renewal of Moss Park area in 1963 and set up the Toronto limited dividend housing corporation to administer and maintain the Moss Park project, which is the largest limited dividend project in Canada, (903 units), as well as seven other projects throughout the city of Toronto.

The housing shortage in the city of Toronto became fairly evident in the early 1960s and reached crisis proportions in 1967 and 1968. During 1967, the housing authority of Toronto was required to set up a family hostel in an officers' mess at 87 Richmond Street East to cope with the number of families rendered homeless through evictions, private renewal and transients entering the city looking for employment. The city of Toronto council decided they wanted to get out of the housing programme in November of 1968 and relinquished their responsibilities to a willing taker in the Ontario Housing Corporation. The takeover of the Toronto housing authority caused considerable attention during the last month of 1968, which was climaxed by a protest march of hundreds of Regent Park North residents to city hall with a petition containing 1,500 names, requesting the city to maintain its interest in housing.

The city council, however, approved the takeover by the OHC in November of 1968, thus terminating 20 years of leadership in the field of public housing and transferring their responsibilities in housing onto the senior level of government, OHC.

The tenants of the Toronto housing authority have encountered problems with the administration of the OHC and have voiced their dissatisfaction on many occasions to the local city council who can now say, "We are not responsible for housing any longer, please contact the OHC."

A march was made recently to the OHC office to protest the lack of maintenance and further demonstrations are being considered to bring to the attention of the OHC their concern for the community they consider their home. It is interesting to read this week, that a recommendation from the special committee on poverty of city council, requests the city to return to the field of housing. Members of the Toronto housing authority were reappointed by city council on March 4, 1970, to administer a non-existing stock of housing.

It is very difficult to reconstruct a housing programme that took the city of Toronto 20 years to build up and to regain its position of responsibility for housing in the community.

I support the recommendation of the poverty committee that the city should have a role in housing for low-income families, but maybe this role could be played in a different way and would achieve the same goal. The present administration of public housing in the Metro Toronto area is being carried out by the Ontario Housing Corporation. The Metro Toronto area is the only large urban city in North America that does not have a housing authority to carry out the administration and maintenance of their local public housing units.

Why has the Metro Toronto area been overlooked in this very vital and important function of the public housing programme? The reason could be that the re-establishment of a Metro Toronto housing authority, similar to the Metro housing authority of 1962, could reduce the power and control of the OHC in the Metro Toronto area. The rationale for dissolving the Metro Toronto housing authority in 1962, when they were becoming a very influential agency in housing and also outspoken about the lack of housing in Metro Toronto was, according to the provincial government, the fact that the Ontario Housing Corporation board of governors were based in Metro Toronto so they could take over the required duties of administering the Metro Toronto units—approximately 12,000—along with their duties to the other 44 housing authorities in Ontario.
